Ceylon	0	9	to	1	2
Fine Pale	1	4	to	1	6	Common Coffee	0	10
Rich Fine	1	10	to	1	14	Very good and strong	1	2
Jamaica	1	6	to	1	8	Very strong & Full-flavoured	1	4
Mocha	1	8	to	1	10	Rich & fine-flavoured coffee	1	6
Ceylon	1	5	to	1	10	Particularly choice coffee	1	8
Mocha	1	12	to	2	0	Rich & fine-flavoured coffee	1	10

The above are also supplied in 2lb. boxes, which bottles are charged 2d. each, and the same is allowed for them when returned.

The following sorts are supplied in sealed bottles containing two pounds each, and no charge is made for the bottle:—

Two pounds of good second coffee, in a sealed bottle ... 2s. 6d.
Two pounds of strong and fine-flavoured coffee, in a sealed bottle ... 3s. 6d.
Two pounds of very choice and unusually rich coffee, in a sealed bottle ... 3s. 6d.
Two pounds of the finest and most delicate coffee, in a sealed bottle ... 4s. 0d.

DAKIN and COMPANY, Patentees, NUMBER ONE, ST PAUL'S CHURCH-YARD.

Being aware of the many spurious imitations of DAKIN'S ROYAL PATENT COFFEE, and of the attempts which have been made to copy the machinery and apparatus employed in the roasting of Dakin's Royal Patent Coffee, they have to caution the public against such attempts, as the warehouses of Dakin and Co., in Shoemaker-row, within a stone's-throw of "Number One," where an assistant is in waiting to accompany visitors to the warehouses, and to explain the whole of the ROYAL PATENT PROCESS for roasting and preparing coffee.

PUBLICATIONS, &c.

LEIGH HUNT'S ACCOUNT OF LONDON.
Just ready, in 2 vols post 8vo, with Forty-five Illustrations, price 24s cloth, embossed cloth,
THE TOWN: Its Memorable Characters and Events (From St. Paul's to St. James's). By LEIGH HUNT. London: SMITH, ELDER, and Co., 65, Cornhill.

PIANISTA, No 98, contains the Admired opera, as Fanc Soon, price 2s Also, "Les Huguenots," in Nos. 96 and 97, 2s. each "Semiramide," in Nos. 94 and 95, 2s. each "Figlia," and all the other operas, 2s. each. By post, 30 stamps. Catalogues gratis. Ancient Subscriptions, &c.

NEW BALLAD.—Just Published, "I Love," but Thou alone, composed expressly for, and sung by, Mr. HOCKEY, Collection to Mrs HENCKLES MACDONNELL, poetry by H. M. SPENCER, Esq., music by EMILY A. of MARKE.—Publishing of the Address, 19, Marshall street, Regent-street; and may be had at all the principal music-sellers and libraries.

NEW SONG.—"DEAREST, THEN I'LL LOVE YOU MORE," price 3s. (post postage free).—This is an answer to "Will you love me then, as now?" one of the most successful songs of the season, and is the composition of the present Ballad equally interesting and beautiful as the former, and will no doubt obtain a similar share of popularity.
London: DUFF and HODGSON 65 Oxford street

FLOTOW'S OPERA of LEOLINE.—The beautiful Romance, "My boyhood, a love, enchanting theme, Sung by Miss Lucombe, first time on Monday evening at the Princess's Theatre, is now published, price 2s. "Kingly Wine, sung by Mr Weiss, forms a Duet all the other Vocal Music Select Airs for the Pianoforte, as solos and Duets, arranged by W. H. Callcott. Quadrilles, by Jullien, on the Scotch and Irish Melodies. Overtures are in course of publication.—DUFF and HODGSON, 65, Oxford-street; new Lazarus and Co., 76, Strand.

JULLIEN'S ALBUM for 1849.—Just Published, this very favourite Annual, beautifully illuminated by Brandard, and containing, amongst numerous other Illustrations in Colours, Portraits of Her Majesty and the Prince Consort, Royal Yacht, with Portraits of Madame Grisi, Mallo. Alboni, Madame Viardot Garcia, and Signor Mario. The Musical contents comprise all the most popular Dance Music of the season by Jullien, Koenig, &c. &c., together with Overtures, Airs, &c., by Balfe, Glover, Macfarren, Henry Leslie, Auber, &c. &c. Price, in elegantly illuminated covers, 18s.; or handsomely bound in morocco, 21s.
JULLIEN and Co.'s Musical Presentation Library, 214, Regent-street

PORTRAIT of ALBERT BARNES, the American Commentator, India Proofs, 5s. 6d. Prints, 4s., 2s. 6d. Memoir and Portrait, 1s. Life and Portrait, 2s. 6d. Portrait in handsome frame, with glass, 10s. Prints, ditto, 6s.
LORRIMER'S Splendid Edition of BARNES' NEW TESTAMENT, in 2 vols., demy 4to., with Maps, Engravings, and Portrait, 1ls. each, or 10 vols., 12mo., 22s. 6d. CLEAR LITTLE PRINT, square, 3s. 6d.
London: PARTRIDGE and OAKEY, Paternoster-row.

This day, cloth, One Shilling,
PRINCIPLES of PROTESTANTISM, considered with a view to Unity. By the Author of "Lectures on the Church of Christ."
Contents:—1. Allegiance. 2. Weidenau—Wycliffe. 3. Luther. 4. Calvin. 5. Foxe. 6. Wesley (On Choice.)
"The grasp of the mind in its elements and combination."—Church and State Gazette.
"His works merit an attentive perusal."—The Watchman
"There is no such man in impressive, interesting, and suggestive in this pamphlet, that it will well repay perusal."—The Critic
JAMES DARLING, Lytic Queen-street, London, Lower-mall-fields.

Just Published, Price Threepence,
THE EMIGRANTS' ALMANACK for 1849.
Every person who is about to emigrate, or interested in the subject of emigration, should consult this Almanack. Besides the matter usually found in Almanacks, it contains valuable information on important subjects.—Fields for emigration, North America, Australia, Cape of Good Hope, Canada, &c.—Persons who should not emigrate.—Colony First steps to be taken—Embarkation—Conduct on board—Provisions, &c.—Regulations to be observed by emigrants—Cost of passage to the various colonies—Rate of passage—and a fund of interesting miscellaneous matter.
London: G. GILPIN, 5, Bishopsgate-street Without; B. L. GREEN, Paternoster-row.

MR. COLBURN'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.
I.
The CASTLEREAGH MEMOIRS and CORRESPONDENCE. 2 vols. 8vo., bound.
II.
Mrs. TROLLOPE'S NEW NOVEL, "The YOUNG COUNTESS." 3 vols
III.
MEMOIRS of CHATEAUBRIAND. Written by himself. Translated from the French Part I., small vo., price 8s. 6d. (Immediately.)
IV.
The CHILDREN of LONDON a Tale of Parisian Life By HAMILTON MURRAY. 3 vols
V.
LIVES of the QUEENS of ENGLAND. Complete in 12 vols. The latter volumes may be had separately, to complete sets.
VI.
MR. ROSS'S VOYAGE TO NORWAY, DENMARK, AND SWEDEN, in Lord Rodney's Cutter, the "Iris." 2 vols. 8vo.
A SECOND EDITION OF ZOOLOGICAL RECREATIONS. By W. J. HUDSKIPP, Esq., F.R.S. 6s. 6d bound.
HENRY COLBURN, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

COMPLETION OF THE WORK.
Now ready, price 2s. 6d.,
PART IV. OF
THE HISTORY and ART of WOOD ENGRAVING, CONTAINING AN INTERESTING HISTORY OF THE ART OF WOOD ENGRAVING FROM THE EARLIEST PERIOD.
BY W. A. CHATTO.
With Fac-similes of various Specimens of Ancient Wood Engraving; Also, the Engraving Subjects, which have been selected from
THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.
And exhibit in various stages the Progress of Wood Engraving:—
Drayton Manor (3 Diotos.) | View near Possessions (Chita)
Bevois Castle | A Tale of the Wars (J. J. Jenkins)
Le Fete de Mariage (F. Goodall) | A King
Portrait of Rembrandt | Garden Scene (Wattean)
Burgesses (Frith) | Trudy Claudia (Stratford-on-Avon (Duncan)
Hampton Court Palace (W. L. Leitch) | Cheriton Hall—Anne Hathaway's Cottage
Colony and Rhenanbaldenlen (from Sketches by Mr. Prince Albert) | Ely Cathedral (W. Harvey)
Irish Courtship (A. Fripp) | Vale Work is graded in the most complete manner, from the earliest to the latest period.
Also, a Fac-simile of a Wood Block, Engraved in the Fifteenth Century, and Printed in Colours by the Ancient Method

THE SOUTH WALES TRAINING COLLEGE, AT CARMARTHEN

OPENING OF THE SOUTH WALES TRAINING COLLEGE.

THIS Institution has originated with the Welsh Education Committee of the National Society, for Promoting the Education of the Poor in the Principles of the Church of England.

One of the first objects of the Committee, in furtherance of the great object of Church Education in Wales, was the establishment of an Institution for the Training of Schoolmasters. For this purpose was secured a desirable site close to the town of Carmarthen, comprising ten acres and a half of land, upon which has been erected the picturesque structure shown in our Illustration. The outlay for the land, building, fittings, and furniture will amount to £8000, which has been in part met by grants from the Committee of Council on Education, the National Society, and the Welsh Education Fund.

The opening of the New College took place on Tuesday week, and was an event of considerable importance in the town of Carmarthen and its neighbourhood. At about a quarter to eleven o'clock, a procession was formed of the Mayor and Corporation, the Welsh Education Committee, the Officers of the College, and a numerous body of clergy, and of the gentry and inhabitants of the town, who advanced to St. Peter's Church, where divine service was performed. The Venerable Archdeacon Bevan, M.A., read the lessons of the day; after which, the Right Reverend Prelate delivered a most admirable discourse, taking for his text the 6th, 7th, and 8th verses of the 12th chapter of the Epistle to the Romans. After the sermon a collection was made, amounting to £67 17s 6d. At the conclusion of the service, a collation was served in the dining-room of the College, at which were present the élite of Carmarthen and the adjoining counties, numbering about 250 persons, among whom were the Lord Bishop of t David's, Viscount Emlyn and Lady Emlyn, Hon. Colonel Trevor, M.P., Sir Thomas Phillips, the Dean of St. David's and Mrs. Llewellin, the Dean of Llandaff, D. A. S. Davies, Esq., M.P., and D. S. Davies, jun., Colonel Wood and lady, the Venerable Archdeacon Venables, D.D., Howel Gwyn, Esq., M.P., D. Morris, Esq., M.P., the Mayor of Carmarthen, D. Pugh, Esq., R. G. Thomas, Esq., and lady, the Misses Thomas, and R. G. Thomas, Esq., jun., &c.

SILVER CRADLE, PRESENTED TO THE MAYORESS OF LIVERPOOL.

The chair was occupied by the Lord Bishop of St. David's, who also said grace before and after partaking of the collation. Coffee having been served, the Chairman proposed the health of her Majesty, and the customary loyal toasts, which were drunk with enthusiasm.

Colonel Trevor then, in an eloquent address, proposed the health of his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishops of the four Welsh Sees, the Clergy of those dioceses, and of the county of Monmouth.

The Bishop of St. David's responded to the toast; and in so doing reviewed the circumstance of the location of the College, in a lordship observing, "the proposal of the Church Union Society to erect Model Schools in this town was the occasion which drew the attention of our friends in England, who had an interest in Wales, to the wants of this portion of the Principality; this led to the formation of the Welsh Education Committee, and to the glorious results that followed in the erection of this and other buildings.

Sir Thomas Phillips then rose, and was received with loud applause; and in an address detailing the origin and progress of the Institution, proposed "Prosperity and Longevity to the South Wales Training College." The Rev. W. Reed, Principal of the College, responded to the toast, and was received with loud applause.

The Dean of Llandaff then proposed the health of the Founders of the Exhibitions, and of the English Contributors to the Welsh Educational Fund." Viscount Emlyn, in first in reply, and was received with loud acclamations.

Colonel Trevor proposed "the ladies," a numerous assemblage of whom were present, and the company then dispersed. This, however, is but an imperfect notice of the day's proceedings, the report of which fills seven columns of the Carmarthen Journal.

THE COLLEGE.

The building consists of a school-room, library, dining-hall, suits of rooms for the vice-principal and assistant-master, together with dormitories for sixty pupils, and domestic offices. The plan comprises a centre and two wings, the wings having a slight projection in advance of the centre, and in the rear extending a considerable distance beyond the central range, and thus forming with it a court-yard of considerable area for exercise, around three sides of which is a covered promenade or cloister. At one extremity of the plan is a small but comfortable house for the principal, and at the other a chapel. The whole building together gives a frontage to the beautiful vale of Towy of 200 feet. The arrangement of so great a number of rooms as is required for such an institution, so as to give facility of commun cation and supervision, each pupil having a separate dormitory, is no easy task; and the success with which this has been accomplished reflects great credit on the architect, Mr. Henry Clutton.

The architecture is of several distinct characters, all belonging to the late periods of English Gothic; and the details (which are executed in Caen stone) show that the architect is a thorough master of the spirit and principles of Gothic architecture. The Institution stands in the middle of a very commanding plot of ground, and looks out upon a view of unrivalled beauty. The ground is 10 acres in extent, and all of it will be devoted to the purposes of the Institution. Great credit is due to the spirited and obliging contractor, Mr. W. P. James, who has, in a comparatively short time, erected a structure of such large dimensions, in such a substantial manner, and with so much fidelity to the plans of the architect, as to be an ornament to the Principality.

We should add, that, in order to enable the Welsh Education Committee to meet the annual expenses of the Institution, some special assistance, in the shape of exhibitions, has been promised by the Committee of Council on Education, and some aid has been given by the National Society. But, in addition to these and other means at their disposal for the support of this Institution, the Welsh Education Committee earnestly solicit from the friends of education in Wales donations or subscriptions guaranteed for a period of five years from Michaelmas, 1848, in order to enable them to found a certain number of Exhibitions of £10, £15, and £20 a year each, for the support of deserving young men whose character and attainments point them out as fit persons to undertake the office of teacher, but whose resources will not enable them to defray their expenses whilst at the College, although the terms of admission have been fixed by the Committee at the unusually low rate of twenty guineas a year. A fund is now in course of subscription for this purpose; to which £100 has been given by his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, and a sum of £50 by her Majesty the Queen Dowager.

The Committee have awarded exhibitions to a considerable number of masters and mistresses, out of the grant of £1,000 placed at their disposal by the National Society for that purpose. These teachers have been trained respectively at the National Society's Institutions at Westminster; St. Mark's College, Chelsea; Battersea; and Whitelands, Chelsea. The larger number of these are now engaged in schools in the Principality; while the remainder continue at the Institutions, to complete their period of training.

Another object to which the funds of the Welsh Education Committee have been applied, is that of organising schools. Two masters have for some time past been engaged in this work—one in North Wales, and the other in South Wales.

With a view to the establishment of a training institution in North Wales for 30 pupils, the Committee have invested a sum of £1500 in the public funds, which will be available for that purpose when the plans can be matured and carried into effect.

PRESENTATION OF A SILVER CRADLE TO THE MAYORESS OF LIVERPOOL.

THE burgesses of Liverpool have just commemorated a "felicitous event" in the Mayor's year of office, by the presentation of the accompanying elegant tribute to the Mayoress; in accordance with a tradition that it has been customary, on the occurrence of an accession to the family of an approved Mayor of Liverpool, during the term of his official duties, for the burgesses to present his wife with a silver cradle, not only as a mark of compliment, but as a permanent memorial of the event.

The present Mayoress of Liverpool, Mrs. Horsfall, has just received this testimonial, purchased by subscription; and the ceremony of presentation took place on Saturday last, at the residence of the Mayor, at Mill Bank, West Derby. A deputation of the subscribers having been introduced, the elegant model Cradle was presented by the Secretary, after a congratulatory address, to which the Mayoress replied with much good sense, gracefulness, and self-possession. The Mayor added a few words; and the company then adjourned to the dining-room, and were most hospitably entertained.

We subjoin a description of the Cradle, which was designed by Mr. Solomon Gibson, brother to the celebrated sculptor. It was beautifully executed in silver, by Mr Mayer, of Lord-street.

The general form of the body is that of the nautilus shell, on one side of which is chased, in high relief, a group of figures, representing a mother paddling in the arms of its father their new-born child. Supporting the medallion on which the figures are placed are two angels with expanded wings: and issuing from beneath them, and under the medallion, are scrolls of poppies and lilies—emblems of Sleep and Peace. On the other side, the group consists of three figures, in which the father is seated; beside him stands the mother, and before them their daughter, to whom he is giving a book, typifying the care he takes of their child by offering it instruction. On the top of the scroll or arch of the cradle sits the Genius of Liverpool, with her well-known attributes, (the prow of a vessel supporting her right hand, in which she holds the wreath awarded to her as the great "City of ships," and "Queen of the world's commerce,") benignantly looking towards the bed of the cradle, and watching over the interests of her adopted child. At the foot of the cradle stands the Liver, the ancient bearing in the arms of the town.

The cot rests at each end on axles, so as to allow it to rock. These are passed through the stems of two large sea-weeds or lavers, as they are locally called, from which it is thought Leverpoole or Liverpool formerly derived its name, the banks of the pool or harbour at the first formation of the port being much covered with that plant. At the bottom of their stems are two sea-fish, resting on a richly-chased ground or shore, strewed over with shells, coralines, fuci, and other marine plants and objects; and at the base of the whole, which is of an oval and indented form, on one side is written the following, which is

YE SPIRIT OF YE LEGENDE.

O'f Leverpoles good maior sᵈ sweete bee
Maie fatherre vme hys yere off maioralte,
Thesse aal be gyfen, bye yᵉ inwomenne fro',
Ane silverre cradle tov hys faire ladye.

On the other side is engraved this dedication:—

This silver cradle is presented, by a number of the burgesses of Liverpool, to Mary, wife of the Worshipful THOMAS BERRY HORSFALL, Esq., Mayor, to commemorate, according to an ancient legend of the town, the happy event of an accession to his Worship's family, in the year of his Mayoralty, by the birth of his daughter, Mary Cox, on the 11th of January, 1848, and the opportunity is taken of hereon recording the universal approbation of his Worship's conduct during a period of great national peril. JOHN HOLMES, Chairman. R. C. GARDNER, Treasurer; JOHN SMITH, Secretary. Given at the Bank House, October 28th, 1848.

On the back of the canopy are enchased the arms of Liverpool, with its supporters and significant motto—"Deus nobis hæc otia fecit," underneath which are emblazoned the impaled arms of Horsfall and Cox.

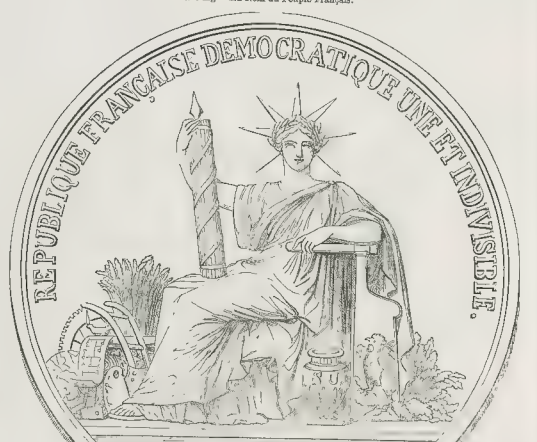
In the interior of the cradle are a mattress and pillow, of exquisitely-finished filagram work.

This beautiful work is of the value of £190; and, placed under a glass shade, it is a very tasteful drawingroom ornament.

SEAL OF THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.

We have engraved the obverse, or principal design, of the State or Great Seal just adopted by the French Government. Our representation is of the actual size of the original. The artist is M. Barré, engraver to the Mint of France. The personification of the Republic is classically characteristic. She bears the Roman fasces, as the emblem of unity, "une et indivisible," according to the legend: at her feet are grouped the Gallic cock, and the insignia of agriculture, mechanics, and the fine arts.

The reverse, or opposite side of the Seal, bears the legend, "Egalité, Fraternité, Liberté," and a wreath of oak and laurel, united with a wheat-sheaf, and encircling "Au Nom du Peuple Français."



SEAL OF THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.

LONDON: Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1848.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 343.—Vol. XIII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1848. [Sixpence.

EDUCATIONAL MOVEMENTS.

We notice with pleasure the simultaneous occurrence of movements in favour of Education in different parts of the country, by bodies very differently circumstanced, and of very various degrees of power and influence. Three of these movements are of especial importance, and will operate, each in its own sphere, no inconsiderable amount of usefulness. The first, and by far the most striking of the three, is the extension—long advocated and long postponed—of the plan of academical study at the University of Cambridge; the second is the commencement of negotiations between the authorities at the Horse Guards and the trustees of King's College, London, for the purpose of adding to that institution a department for military education; and the third is the growth and progress of the Lancashire Public School Association, for the purpose of affording the means of elementary instruction to all the children of the district, and of raising the necessary funds by a rate upon the inhabitants, as is done for the support of the poor.

The proposed reform in the University of Cambridge claims our first attention. It was, it seems, suggested by the Prince Consort soon after his election to the Chancellorship. It reflects high credit upon the sagacity of his Royal Highness, if the case were so, and will earn for him the gratitude as well as the admiration of all who desire that our great educational institutions should not lag behind the intelligence of the age. It has long been felt as a grievance by parents having sons at Cambridge, and by the alumni themselves, both while in the University, and after they had quitted it for the active pursuits of life, that mathematical proficiency should be the only medium by which the honours and the prizes of the University were to be obtained; and that, for mathematics, noble and useful as their study is, all other branches of knowledge should be either uncultivated or considered as secondary and of no account. Six months ago the governing body of the University debated on the suggestion of Prince Albert, and proposed an extension of the course of study, by which the University, taking cognisance of the intellectual and scientific progress of the age, should open its coveted honours to the young men whom taste, predilection, or organisation had not made exclusively mathematical. This plan was proposed in the Senate last week, and carried by a majority of two to one, both of the resident and non-resident members of the University. We unfeignedly rejoice at this result. It is a striking and most gratifying proof that the upper classes of this country will not, from any unreasoning veneration for the past merely because it is past, allow the magnificent seminaries where their youth are educated to be surpassed in usefulness by more modern and plebeian institutions that have no such princely or even assured means of support as the beneficence of former ages has secured to Oxford and Cambridge. It is likely, too, that the example of Cambridge will be contagious at Oxford; and that well-considered and wise reform of acknowledged and proved evils will silence the tongues of those who now complain that too obstinate an adherence to old ways has diminished the efficiency of that great national and richly-endowed seminary.

The negotiations for annexing to King's College a department for the military education of youth who are destined hereafter to be the commissioned officers of the British army, is equally significant. The reform at Cambridge is happily to be considered a fait accompli. The proposal with reference to the military class at King's College is yet in the embryo state. We can but hope that no difficulties will arise on either side to prevent its consummation. Public attention was first drawn to the subject by the Quarterly Review, a periodical which no one will accuse of advocating change for the mere sake of changing, or of being over-zealous in the recommendation of reforms. The insufficiency of the present seminaries for the education of youths destined for the army being conceded, the danger to be feared was the erection of a military University to be maintained at a very considerable cost, out of the public taxes, "in bad imitation," as the Quarterly observed, "of the military schools of France, Prussia, and Holland." Such a project, however, is not entertained, nor would it be likely to meet with favour either from the authorities of the Horse Guards or from the country. The offer made by the trustees of King's College shows how easily and inexpensively the needful reform can be effected, provided the project receive the approbation of the Commander-in-Chief and the Secretary at War. These functionaries are almost irresponsible in the matter—but are well inclined, it is believed, to exercise their power in the direction indicated. Should the negotiation commenced by King's College meet with a favourable hearing, it is probable that Harrow, Eton, Rugby, and other seminaries of equal importance will make similar offers; and that, without a farthing of expense to the nation, facilities hitherto unknown will be accorded for the education of the men who are destined hereafter to serve their country in the higher ranks of the military profession. As long as soldiers are necessary (and until the whole civilized world shall not only agree upon the beauty of peace, but learn to practise it amongst one another, we do not see how armies are altogether to be dispensed with) so long will it be desirable in the highest degree that Education should ennoble the officer and humanize the soldier. The better the officer understands all the details of his profession, the more skilfully and, therefore, the more mercifully will he exercise it; and the less bloodshed will result from the operations which it may be his duty to direct. In this, and indeed in all other respects, the officers of the British army have been a model to the world. But if they have attained this high character, the greater the credit that is due to them; for they have attained it without such efficient aid in the prosecution of their military studies as the Government ought to have afforded them. Their high sense of honour is their own. No Government can give them that; but proper facilities for the complete study of their t are within its power. . . bestow. Whatever may be the immediate result in the pres... instance, there can, we think, be no doubt that even the public discussion of the subject will be useful; and that, sooner or later, the necessary reform will find favour with the men who administer the affairs of the army—to the great advantage, we believe, both of the army and the nation.

THE CITY OF VIENNA, AND THE GLACIS.—(SEE PAGE 292)

The movement made by the Public School Association of Lancashire is of a very different kind. The difficulties in the way of the establishment of a complete system of National Education, if not insuperable, are very considerable. If the zealous friends of Education folded their arms and waited until these difficulties were removed, the probability, if not the certainty, would be, that a new generation of the children of the poor would grow up to maturity in an ignorance as dense and a great deal more dangerous than that of their predecessors. To elevate the mob into a people, is the duty no less than the interest of every wise community. The only means to accomplish so noble an end is Education. The people of this country are an educated people in the truest sense of the term. They are educated morally, intellectually, politically, and religiously. Underneath the people—far lower down—lies a numerous, ill-fed, and dangerous mob, without education, either moral, intellectual, political, or religious. It cannot be neglected with safety. The children of the mob are costly to us in a thousand ways, and more costly the longer they are suffered to remain without instruction. Every one admits this truth. By constant effort much has been done to lessen the amount of the evil. No scheme that is not national will, we conscientiously believe, ever be found of sufficient potency to eradicate it, and to provide for all the children of the mob the instruction which shall elevate them into the ranks of the people. But, nevertheless, while such a scheme is growing in favour with thinking men, and fructifying in the minds of the general community—awaiting its development at some distant day—every partial and local effort in the good cause deserves the support and encouragement of the friends of Education. Of such a kind is the Lancashire Public School Association. We have already spoken of this new Society; we approve highly of its efforts as far as they go, although several of its warmest supporters are men who denounce any more comprehensive scheme to be propounded by the Government or the State as a tyrannical interference with parental rights. All that this Association asks of the Legislature is, to "empower the people to form themselves into school districts, and to levy rates upon themselves for the support of schools to be governed by themselves." In an excellent paper upon the subject, by Mr. Gardner, late M.P. for Leicester, and read by that gentleman at a recent meeting of the Association in Manchester, he stated that—

"In his own observation of what he had seen in countries where public education flourished, he was prepared to say that the state of education in Eu... taken as a whole, was disgraceful to the rank and civilisation of the country. With regard to what he had witnessed in the New England States, he had had then illustrated to him what could be done to elevate the masses, by the judicious and systematic efforts of a society which neither trusted the precious charge to the uncertain hands of private charity, nor to the paralysing influence of a central authority. There he was made to blush, not merely for the ignorance of the masses of his countrymen, but even for his own; for he found that the zeal of devoted men had introduced into these humble academies the proved methods for acquiring knowledge, which had not yet found their way into the public schools of England. He had since visited some scores of primary schools in New England; and, without going out of his way to make out a case, but taking them just as they came, leaving out normal and model schools, and speaking only of the rank and file of primary schools, the result was this: he had only seen one very good school which left nothing to desire, and where the results, he thought, could not be surpassed under any system whatever. Another school, connected with a manufactory, but not in this district, also stood out in his mind as a model establishment of the kind. He might have seen half-a-dozen more here and there, where fair and substantial results were obtained; but of the rest he could only predicate degrees of excessive badness.

Mr. Gardner is not alone in these opinions. He is supported by every intelligent foreign traveller, and by every native writer who has examined the subject for himself with impartiality and diligence. We believe that a scheme of the kind put forward by the Lancashire Association would be of benefit in some degree, provided always (and here is the great difficulty the State encounters), that the various religious bodies of the district would agree upon the kind of instruction to be afforded to the children out of the funds to which all the religious denominations of the district would contribute as rate-payers. But even on this supposition it would be but partially successful. It could employ no effectual means to educate the teacher himself, and to elevate his social position; and it would be altogether powerless in the case of large portions of mob, who know not the advantages of knowledge, and who will not allow their children to go to school, even if the means of instruction are gratuitously provided for them. Herein lies another and very serious difficulty, which no voluntary association can ever be expected to overcome. The law punishes the father who starves his child to death; but what can any voluntary association do with the equally guilty father who will not allow his child to be educated? Nevertheless, every voluntary effort is an effort for good, and we hail it as a proof that the thinking minds of the country are aware of the peril, and anxious to combat it by such means as may be at their command, with the certainty that if they cannot remove, they may, at all events, diminish the evil. We therefore wish all success to this and every other educational movement; and trust that the greatness of the danger will lead to efforts more systematic, and to the employment of machinery more calculated to effect the object in view, than all the isolated exertions of men acting upon the voluntary principle can ever be expected to accomplish.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

OXFORD. Nov. 7.

Convocation was holden this afternoon, for the purpose of electing a successor to the late Rev. John W. Miller, M.A. The candidates were . . . two only, viz. W. W. Harrison, B.A., Hulme's Exhibitioner, of Brasenose, and R. Blyth, B.A., organist of Magdalen, when the former was elected by a majority of 85; the numbers being—for Mr. Harrison, 117; Mr. Blyth, 31: non-contents, 86.

CAMBRIDGE. Nov. 7.

THE NORRISIAN PRIZE. The Norrisian Professor has given notice that the . . . year for the English prose essay on, "The internal evidence . . . the historical Books of the Old Testament that the several . . . of them were inspired by the Holy Ghost." Those who have examined the essay of a candidate for this prize, contrary (in the estimation of the appointed judges) to those Articles of the Church of England which relate to our Saviour's divinity, and the personality of the Holy Spirit, is disqualified.

THE DEAN OF CARLISLE'S INSTALLATION. Dr. Hinds, the new Dean of Carlisle was installed with the usual ceremonial, on Wednesday (last week). At . . . o'clock the Rev. Doctor entered the Cathedral, with the Rev. Canons . . . and Harcourt, the Rev. W. Rees, the Rev. Precentors Vaughan and Brown, the Rev. H. Lonsdale, Minor Canon, and the Rev. Thomas Wilkinson, Vicar of Stanwix, &c. The form of installation was then gone through in the usual manner.

BENEFICENCE OF THE QUEEN DOWAGER.—Her Majesty Queen Adelaide has, during the last few days, forwarded to the Rev. Thomas Dale, the Vicar of St. . . . , the munificent sum of £200 in aid of the fund now raising by the parishioners for the erection of two new churches in that immense district. This truly Royal contribution is enhanced in value by the fact that her Majesty had previously sent contributions for the separate funds of two or more of the . . . in course of erection.

THE Vicarage of Pentridge, near Woodyates, in the diocese of Salisbury, has become vacant by the resignation of the Rev. E. Nicholson, M.A. The benefice, which is of the annual value of £700, is in the gift of the Lord Chancellor.

DR. HIGBE, Dean of the Castle Royal (Dublin Castle), will, it is said, be named to the vacant bishopric of Down.

THE Queen has appointed Mr. H. Halford Vaughan, M.A., of the Inner Temple, to be the Regius Professor of Modern History in the University of Oxford.

THE Bishop of Oxford has instituted the Rev. George Carter, M.A., incumbent of Binley and Wykan, Warwickshire, to the Rectory of Compton Beauchamp, near Great Faringdon, Berkshire, rendered vacant by the death of the Rev. E. Wentz, M.A., on the nomination of the Earl Craven.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Speculators transact in Paris on the question of the Presidential election, now that the discussions on the Constitution have ceased, and that the contest has been ascertained to be virtually between General Cavaignac and Louis Napoleon Bonaparte. The chances of success inclines to the latter.

The Constitution, in its ensemble, was voted on Saturday in the National Assembly, there being only thirty dissentients, amongst whom were Red Republicans, Legitimists, and Orleanists; and in the evening, between six and seven o'clock, 101 cannon shots were fired to announce to the inhabitants that the new Constitution had been voted by the Assembly. The streets were soon filled with people anxious to learn what had happened to require the firing of cannon at such an unusual hour. The cause having been explained, the city resumed its usual tranquillity.

The Assembly has decided that the ceremony of the promulgation of the Constitution should take place on Sunday next, on the Place de la Concorde, in presence of the National Assembly, the members of the Executive Government, the great corps of the State, deputations of the National Guard, and the army and the entire population. A credit of 100,000 francs is to be opened in the Ministry of the Interior to defray the expenses of the ceremony, and a sum of 500,000 francs is to be distributed on the same day among the indigent classes in Paris and the departments. The Constitution is to be proclaimed throughout all France on the Sunday following.

The commissioners appointed to revise the sentences pronounced by the military conseils against the insurgents of June have recommended to mercy 991, who were to be immediately liberated. The commissioners have left Paris, and that measure into effect, and were authorised by the Government to restore to liberty any others who, by their repentance and good conduct since their confinement, should have entitled themselves to indulgence.

A banquet, under the title of "The Confederation of the People of Europe," brought together about 800 operatives, at the barrier Mont Parnasse, on Sunday last. The attendance was ill, not much. M. Ledru-Rollin, who was expected would have presided, did not make his appearance, and his absence caused great disappointment and clamour. There was no member of the National Assembly present, and M. Lachambaudie was called to the chair. The object of the banquet was expressed in the following terms:—"A confederation of all nations in the completion of the French revolution in Europe. The present fraternal banquet is intended to carry this object into execution." But few foreigners, however, responded to this appeal, and the meeting was composed of French workmen. The following toasts were then drunk:—"The abolition of wages." The democratic and social Republic." The Lombardo-Venetian people, and success to its glorious enterprise." "To the heroism of the democrats of Vienna." "Universal fraternity." M. Saint Just proposed the following blasphemous toast:—"To the most strong, courageous, and valiant in the cause of humanity. To Christ whose names serve as a guide, a support, and an example to the degenerate babies to all those whom history calls heroes! . . . . To Brutus, to Cabbine, to Jesus Christ, to Joan the Arcadian, to Attila! . . . To all the Thunkers of the middle ages! . . . To unfortunate thinkers! . . . To Jean Jacques Rousseau, and his pupil, Maximilian Robespierre!" This enumeration of names was received with a triple salvo of applause, and was followed with which request M. Saint Just complied. The banquet concluded with the "Marseillaise" and the "Chant du Départ," sung by the entire company.

The Presse gives a melancholy description of the distress existing among the population of the city of Paris. It shows, from the report of the Committee appointed by the National Assembly to examine a decree proposed by the Government for a grant of 9,000,000f. (£360,000), for the indigent poor of the department of the Seine, that "it will be necessary to feed at the public expense 263,000 persons during the present month, 285,000 during the month of December, 300,000 during the month of January, 310,000 during the month of February, 300,000 during the month of March, and 290,000 during the month of April next; and that the sum granted by the Assembly will not suffice to feed a hundred more than 12 centimes (4d. and 9-10ths) per day each to each person. At the same time the revenue of the city of Paris has fallen off by a sum of 16,000,000 f. (£640,000), which must be made good by an addition to the assessed taxes of more than 50 per cent."

The National Assembly was engaged during the week in discussing the various items of the Budget. On Tuesday M. Bouvet put some questions to M. Bastide on the subject of foreign affairs. Bastide replied that what the Republic wished for was European order. The negotiations with respect to the affairs of Italy had been opened—thanks to the firmness and loyalty of England—who had further recalled her consul at Naples. He added, that the place where the negotiators should meet would be settled in a few days. After this explanation the subject was allowed to drop. The question of the organisation of the army was then brought forward. M. Marchal proposed that the Assembly should adjourn from the 14th of the present month to the 14th of December, "to take the repose of which it had so much need." General Cavaignac opposed, on the part of the Government, that an end to which his colleagues desired to be strictly neutral on this question. The Assembly then divided, when the motion of M. Marchal was rejected by a large majority.

SPAIN.

The advices this week convey nothing but the usual accounts of various parties of marauders, under the titles of Carlists, Progressistas, &c., roaming about through the country, carrying desolation and bloodshed wherever they go.

BELGIUM.

The session of the Legislative Chambers was opened at Brussels on Monday last, without a Royal speech. M. Anspach, the senior member, took the chair. The Assembly proceeded at once to the formation of their bureaux; the retiring members were unanimously elected.

The Minister of Finance ascended the tribune and presented the budgets for 1849 in a speech giving a summary of the financial state of Belgium. The economies made by the Government amount to 4,000,000 francs.

The ordinary session of the Senate was also opened under the presidence of M. Zoude, the senior member. The retiring members were re-elected for the ensuing year with the exception of Baron de Waha, who is replaced as Secretary by Baron de Royer.

M. Dumon-Dumortier, in resuming his seat as President, expressed his thanks for this renewed mark of confidence, and the sitting then adjourned.

HOLLAND.

The Fundamental Pact, or new Constitution, was solemnly proclaimed on the 3rd instant throughout the Netherlands.

ITALIAN STATES.

LOMBARDY AND PIEDMONT.—A project of electoral law for the convocation of the Italian Constituent Assembly was published in Turin on the 4th instant, according to which that Assembly is to prepare a federal compact, which, re... the ex stence of the different states and their form of Government, shall tend to ensure the liberty, union, and independence of Italy. All the states are to return an equal number of representatives; and the latter, 300 in number, are to be elected by the respective Chambers of Deputies. The Assembly is to meet at Rome a month after the approval of the present project by the three Italian Parliaments. The deputies of Lombardy are to be chosen by the Lombard Consulta; and those of the Venetian provinces, by the Committees and the Assembly of Venice. Those of Modena and Reggio are to be elected by the Modenese Chamber of Deputies. The confederation is to consist of the Kingdom of Upper Italy, the Grand Duchy of Tuscany, the Pontifical dominions, the Kingdom of Naples, and the Sicilian republic; and is to have an army, a fleet, a treasury, and a diplomatic representation abroad. Its central authority is to be composed of a legislative Congress and a permanent Executive power. The Congress is to be composed of a chamber, in which each state is to be equally represented; and in the other, the representation is to be proportioned to the population. Both are to be elective. The members of the first are to be elected by the ministerial powers of each state, and those of the second by the people. The executive power is to be formed of a responsible President, and a Council of Ministers, equally responsible. The President is appointed, for a limited period, by the Legislative Council, and the Ministers by the President. The Congress is to deliberate on all matters of general interest for the confederation; to interfere in cases of a collision between the Italian and foreign countries, or of a difference arising between confederate states, &c.; all custom duties on goods passing from one state to another are to be abolished, and the foreign tariff is to be based on a uniform system of moderate duties.

The insurrection under Muzzini, in the Valtelline district of Lombardy, had been completely suppressed by the Austrian troops.

At Venice, on the 27th ult., the prison effected a sortie, in which they killed and wounded 200 Austrians, and captured 600 not, however, without experiencing a serious loss. Fourteen Sardinian ships of war were then in the harbour of Venice.

ROME.—The Jews' quarter of the city has been late the theatre of some bloody encounters between the Jews and a portion of the citizens. The disturbances had been suppressed by the military force.

NAPLES. There is no news of any interest this week; matters remain pretty much as they were at the date of preceding advices. Reports were prevalent that the French and English squadrons were to be broken up; three of the French large ships had left the bay for Toulon.

GERMAN STATES.

FRANKFORT.—In the sitting of the German Parliament on the 3rd inst., the motion of the Committee on Austrian affairs was carried, to the following effect:—"The National Assembly resolves to call upon the Imperial Ministry to take all possible care—1. That the Imperial Commissaries make a point of obtaining full consideration and recognition for the German power in all quarters. 2. That everywhere in Austria they may endeavour to protect the interests of Germany. 3. That they may exert the whole of their influence to disengage the complexities of Austria to proceed by way and without bloodshed. And last finally, whatever this dénouement may result in, they may take under protection and defend from every attack the rights and liberties accorded to the Austro-German races in the months of March and May.

PRUSSIA.

Some disturbances took place at Berlin on the 31st ult. Large crowds assembled on the Gensdarmen-Markt, in front of the place of meeting of the National Assembly. The mob wanted to influence the decisions of the Assembly as to the conduct to be adopted respecting the condition of Vienna. Some deputies were ill-treated when leaving the house, but order was restored in the evening by the Civic Guard. Some persons were severely wounded.

Another Ministerial crisis. The President of the Prussian Ministry, M. Von Pfuel, having tendered his resignation, on account of "the state of his health," the King accepted it, and entrusted Count Brandenburg, who is looked upon as an advocate of reaction, with the formation of a new Cabinet. The National Assembly immediately drew up an address to the King, containing a vote of want of confidence in the intended Ministry. Brandenburg, to whom address his Majesty, on the 3rd instant, returned an answer, positively refusing to yield to the request of that body, to withdraw his commission to the Count von Brandenburg to form a new Ministry. It was known in the Assembly, however, that the obnoxious Count had himself petitioned the King to the same effect; and it was expected that the Deputy Grabow would be entrusted with the formation of a new Cabinet.

The accounts from Posen are not favourable. The German inhabitants of the . . . have appealed from the decision of the Berlin Assembly (viz. that the Grand Duchy of Posen should not be divided into two parts, German and Polish) to the National Assembly of Frankfort. In their address to the latter, they accuse the Berlin Parliament of having transgressed the limits of its competence.

The Poles, on the other hand, continue to assume a menacing attitude with respect to the Germans, so that a fresh civil war is anything but improbable.

DENMARK AND THE DUCHIES.

The Danes are not satisfied with the state of things in Schleswig since the establishment of peace, and they demand a renewal of the war. The latest accounts say that addresses were pouring in from all quarters not merely from the Danish Islands, but also from Jutland and North Schleswig demanding a renewal of hostilities in imperative terms.

UNITED STATES.

We have intelligence this week from the States, but the political news is not of much interest.

The resignation of Governor of the state of Ohio was still in doubt.

WEST INDIES.

The Royal Mail Steam-packet Company's ship Avon, Lieutenant Philip Hast, R.N., Commander, arrived at Southampton on Wednesday with West Indian mails, by which we learn that there was every prospect of good sugar crops throughout the West Indies, the rains having fallen

Don Francisco Castelon was a passenger in the Avon from San Juan de Nicaragua to Jamaica, and would proceed to the United States previous to his visiting England as Commissioner, invested with full powers by the Government of Nicaragua to manifest that of her Britannic Majesty on the question of the Mosquito boundary, and to enter into commercial and other treaties with Great Britain.

At Port-au-Prince, since the return of the President Soloyne from the south of the island on Sept. 21, both political and commercial interests had assumed a more encouraging aspect, confidence was daily increasing, and no further executions had taken place.

There had been a slight misunderstanding in the city of Aux Cayes, but no outbreak ensued.

From Jamaica we learn that Admiral the Hon. Sir Chas Grey, the Governor, and Lady Grey, were to leave that island on the 1st inst.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

LOSS OF THE "NETLEY." ORDNANCE SLOOP. No accounts whatever have been received as to the fate of this unfortunate vessel, which left Devonport on the 23d ult. for Woolwich, with a cargo of shot and guns. She is supposed to have been lost off Spithead, and to have foundered in one of the late gales through the shifting of her cargo. As the imperative orders of all the captains are to communicate with the superintendent of ordnance shipping, in case anything causes their detention, there is now no hope for the safety of the unfortunate crew. A number of boats' oars and other gear, apparently belonging to a vessel of the Netley's size, have been picked up on the coast between Portland and Corfe Castle, Dorset.

DISTRIBUTION OF PRIZE MONEY.—The distribution of the prize-money of the navy generally has been delayed to accommodate the officers of Sir Jas. Graham's Leone neglecting to acknowledge the receipt of the proclamation of 1846. The Admiralty, however, have decided upon allowing the distribution to take place immediately under the new delivery of shares.

SMOKING IN GUARD-ROOMS OF THE ROYAL ARTILLERY.—Extract from Garrison Orders, Oct. 18:—"The prohibition of smoking in guard-rooms has been removed from all parts of the garrison, for the distribution to the officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates engaged in the actions in the Peninsula during the period from 1808 to 1814.

OFFICERS PROCEEDING ON LEAVE. By an order, dated Horse Guards, Oct. 31, 1848, it is directed that leave of absence may commence as soon as the half-yearly inspection shall have taken place, but that no leave can in future exceed the 30th of March next, when all officers and soldiers are to be present with their respective regiments. One field officer, one-half of the captains, and one-half of the subaltern officers, are always to be present with their regiments. No officer (except in the performance of duty, or for the purpose of joining his regiment) is to quit the United Kingdom without having first received her Majesty's special permission.

PAYING OFF SHIPS. The Portsmouth correspondent of the Times correctly observes:—"The practice of paying off ships at the time that they are in the very highest state of efficiency, and ready for sea, we are glad to see giving way to a more sensible and economical arrangement. There is more money wasted in materials destroyed in the premature dismantling and laying off her Majesty's ships, than any other department of the navy, or indeed in all the other departments put together. The Superb, 80, Captain Corry, is, according to an official report made to the Admiralty by Sir William Parker, after 365 days' manned service, as fit for any service she ever was, and in excellent condition in every respect that she is fit for another commission without being previously dismantled. The Rosamond, steam-sloop, Commander Foote, just returned from two years' foreign service, is also ready to be kept in commission. And why not all ships longer than three years, the usual term? It is a well-admitted fact that, on a ship's return from three years' service, if properly officered, she is in the finest state of preservation—every man and everything well accustomed to his and its place. The ship, on arrival at the nore-head, is even painted and decorated as if in full dress going out. She is inspected, her crew turned up and paid off, and then comes the work and destruction spoken of by the Irishman Chantrell of Deputies. The confederation is to consist of the Kingdom of . . . sloughing down, spars stripped with ruthless carelessness, all in haste, and as it were regardless of materials, to get the craft quickly stripped and paid off; and if quickly, that is called 'smart.' The ship undergoes an expensive barring to pieces, to see if she is sound, which entails an expensive process of readjustment; and then, after other overhaulings, too various and too numerous to mention here, after a few months or a few years, to be again brought to the dockyard, again overhauled and probed, and ultimately again commissioned, to undergo the whole of the above process when sent to sea, and when again paid off. It is to such masters of dockyards' and Commissioners' of Residence' should direct their attention and inquiries, and not to how many men they can reduce and throw upon the parish."

RAILWAY INTELLIGENCE.

THE BLACKWALL RAILWAY EXTENSION TO THE EASTERN COUNTIES.—Much interest is excited in the engineering circles by the construction of the two suspension iron bridges of the Blackwall Railway Extension, over the Commercial-road and Regent's Canal. They are erected on a new principle, and in point of extent are the largest railway bridges to be found in the vicinity of the metropolis. This branch, which was expected to have been opened for the service of the month, will, it is said, be completed on the 1st of January next year. It is about two miles in length, and is formed on brick arches. It joins the Eastern Counties line at Bow. The gauge on the Blackwall Railway is being altered to admit of locomotive traffic.

LOCKWOOD BRANCH OF THE SOUTH-EASTERN.—The South-Eastern Railway Company, who work the Greenwich line, have dismissed, from motives of economy, several of the employés who for many years have managed the traffic of the line. Boys in some instances supply their places; and the police, with one or two exceptions, are discontinued at the intermediate stations.

RAILWAY PRESSURE. During the past week, 600 labourers have been discharged from that portion of the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway which is in course of construction near Sheffield. Difficulty in getting in the calls, and of obtaining loans, is assigned as the cause of this reduction. The intended line this season is to be proceeded with; and operations are commenced for the re-erection of the 22 arches of the Rother viaduct, which recently fell.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR MAKING RAILWAYS. The Gazette of Tuesday night contains the formal certificate of the Railway Commissioners, in favour of the Cornwall Railway, and of the Delabole and Look Railway, for an extension of time in carrying the same into effect. By an act passed last session, entitled "An Act to give further time for making certain railways," this important power is conferred on the Commissioners; and the specific object of the Act is to relieve the pressure on the money market, occasioned by calls on railway shares, and likewise to put the railway companies in possession of a more expeditious and less expensive mode of proceeding than is involved in a direct application to Parliament. A large number of railway companies have availed themselves of this relief. 120 applications have been received and considered: of these 121 have been entertained, and in most cases the applications for the extension of time asked for has been granted for the full additional term of two years allowed by the Act: four applications were refused, on the ground that there were special provisions in the Act making the completion of the railway compulsory.

THE FRIENDLY DEFIANCE.

Throw shalt not rob me, thievish Time,
Of all my blessings, all my joy;
I have some jewels in my heart,
Which thou art powerless to destroy.

Thou may'st denude mine arm of strength,
And leave my temples seam'd and bare;
Deprive mine eyes of passion's light,
And scatter silver o'er my hair;

But never, while a book remains,
And breathes a woman or a child,
Shalt thou deprive me, whilst I live,
Of feelings fresh and undefiled.

No, never while the Earth is fair,
And reason keeps its dial bright,
Whate'er thy robberies, O Time,
Shall I be bankrupt of delight.

Whate'er thy victories on my frame;
Thou canst not cheat me of this truth—
That though the limbs may faint and fail,
The spirit can renew its youth.

So, thievish Time, I fear thee not;—
Thou'rt powerless on this heart of mine:
My jewels shall belong to me;
'Tis but the settings that are thine.

CHARLES MACKAY.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

GEORGE-ALAN BRODRICK, VISCOUNT MIDLETON.

The death of his Lordship, by his own hand, while in a state of temporary insanity, occurred on the 1st inst., at his seat, Peppor Harrow Park, near Guildford. The unfortunate nobleman had completed his forty-second year. He married, 14th May, 1833, Ellen, daughter of Mr. Griffiths, but had separated from her Ladyship about a twelvemonth since. The first of the family raised to the Peerage was Alan Brodrick, an eminent member of the bar, who, having filled the chair of the House of Commons in Ireland, and the offices of Solicitor and Attorney-General, was appointed Lord Chancellor, and created Baron Brodrick and Viscount Midleton in 1717. The Peer who deceases we record, was only son of George, fourth Viscount, and great-great-grandson of the learned lawyer just referred to.

THE RIGHT REV. RICHARD MANT, D.D., BISHOP OF DOWN AND CONNOR, AND DROMORE.

This lamented Prelate, whose death took place at the Rectory House, Ballymoney, county Antrim, on the 2nd instant, was the eldest son of Dr. Richard Mant, Rector of All Saints, Southampton, and descended in a direct line from the learned Joseph Bingham, Rector of Havant, author of the "Ecclesiastical Antiquities." He was born 12th Feb., 1776, and had, consequently, completed his 72nd year. He received his education at Winchester School and Trinity College, Oxford, and, in 1798, was elected a Fellow of Oriel. In 1812 he became Bampton Lecturer in the University, and the following year was appointed Chaplain to Dr Manners Sutton, Archbishop of Canterbury, which office he continued to hold till 1820. During this period he co-operated with Archdeacon, Dr. D'Oyly, in editing the Holy Bible with a selection of notes, for the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge; and, in 1818, he received from Dr. Howley, then Bishop of London, the Rectory of Bishopsgate Without. In 1820 he was consecrated Bishop of Killaloe and Kilfenora; and in the spring of 1823 was translated to the see of Down and Connor, over which he presided for more than 25 years and a half. In 1842 the charge of the diocese of Dromore also devolved upon him, under the provisions of the Irish Church Temporalities Act, on the decease of Dr. James Saurin.

The writings of his Lordship are voluminous, chiefly on theological subjects, evincing great power and acumen of mind, deep piety, sound learning, and underating attachment to the Church, of which he was a distinguished ornament.

Dr. Mant married, in 1804, Miss Elizabeth Woods, daughter of a gentleman of Sussex, and by her, who died in 1846, has left three children a daughter, married to the Rev. Dr. Martin, Rector of Kilrashandra, county Cavan; and two sons, of whom the elder is Archdeacon of Down, and the younger, Rector of Armoy, in the diocese of Connor.

CAPTAIN M. L. DOSTAL, OF THE NETHERLANDS ARMY.

This gentleman was the son of Captain J. F. Dostal, of the Artillery, and born at Sourabaya, on the island of Java, on the 19th Nov., 1813, during the time of the English administration on that island. He entered, in his 15th year, into his Netherlandish Majesty's military service as Cadet-Fusileer; and, after having gone through the different grades of cadet, non-commissioned officer, received his commission as Second Lieutenant of Infantry on the 3rd of April, 1833. He distinguished himself during the whole of the insurrection in Java, from 1825 to 1830, for which his Netherlands Majesty honoured him with the Java medal. He also served with much credit in most all the actions that have taken place on the island of Sumatra; and, on one occasion, his meritorious services were rewarded by promotion to the rank of First Lieutenant, on the 8th of March, 1838. His brave conduct in an expedition against Baripee, a fortification also on the island of Sumatra, was highly approved of by a Royal decree of his Netherlands Majesty of the 24th of February, 1843. His continued serving in his last rank he obtained his Captaincy on the 8th of March, 1843, by seniority.

On the 9th of March, 1848, he was appointed from the 14th to join the 3rd battalion of infantry, destined for an expedition to Bally, which left Sourabaya in three ships, on the 19th of May; and, after having rendezvoused at Besoeke, arrived at Bally on the 4th of June, and on the 5th the whole of the troops disembarked, and commenced operations against the enemy, encumping for the night near one of the enemy's fortifications at Djagga Raga. Early on the 9th of June he was armed with his company for the occupation of one of the enemy's redoubts, to accomplish which he made three different attempts; twice was he repulsed, and the third time succeeded in gaining it. Shortly after he was overwhelmed by superior numbers of the enemy, and received a severe contusion on the head and breast in falling from the heights of the redoubt, which caused his death within an hour after the attack. His loss is deeply deplored by his family and his numerous friends and acquaintances. He married, 23rd September, 1847, Miss W. A. Nash.

MRS. ELIZABETH STARKE.

This lady died on the 30th ult., at her residence, Langharne Castle, after a long illness, aged 71. She was the relict of Lieut.-Colonel Starke, of Epsom, Surrey, formerly of the 2nd Life Guards, and only child of Co. Ravenscroft, of Langharne, and of Fredham, Cheshire. The Castle of Langharne, with its beautiful grounds, was bequeathed to deceased by her grandfather, Penoyre Watkins, Esq., and grandfather of Lloyd V. Watkins, Esq., M.P., and Lord-Lieutenant of the County of Brecon. She is succeeded by her only son, Lieut.-Colonel Starke, Esq.; having left, besides, one daughter, married to R. Fitz-Gerald, Esq.

THE CHARTIST PETITION.—At a meeting at Aberdeen, the other day, to hear a lecture from Mr. Feargus O'Connor, the representative from that city to the National Convention (Mr Sharpey) entered upon a number of charges against Mr. O'Connor and his "creatures" in the "National Convention. Among other things he was the following: Mr. Cuffey was present in the Land Office when Mr. O'Connor came in to ask what number of names were at the Nat onal Chartist Petition. The reply was, that the signatures were "less than two millions." On hearing which, Mr. O'Connor said, "By God, I have stated to the country that there will be five millions of signatures at it, and I'll declare it yet! They will never count the signatures they did not do so in the case of Duncombe's and you all know that that petition contained less than three millions, which was the number that it was represented to the country to contain." Mr. Cuffey made this statement in the assembly, in presence of Dixon and M'Grath, two of Feargus's agents. Mr. Barron made other charges against Mr. O'Connor, to which that gentleman assayed to reply, but he never answered one single word. Aberdeen Herald.

MAILS FROM MARSEILLES.—The following notice has been given by the Director of the Post-office. "The public is informed that the Post office packets for carrying the mails and passengers between Marseilles, Alexandria, and Beyrout, will henceforth, instead of the 10th and 25th of each month, start from Marseilles on the 2nd and 21st of each month, at eight in the morning, for Malta, each day at Malta, and Alexandria. The packets which leave Marseilles on the 2nd will arrive at Malta on the 8th, at Alexandria on the 12th, and at Beyrout on the 15th. They will start again from Beyrout on the 16th, at twelve o'clock, reach Alexandria on the 18th, Malta on the 22nd, and Marseilles on the 28th. The packets which have Marseilles on the 22nd will arrive at Malta on the 28th, Alexandria on the 30th, and Beyrout on the 2nd of the next month. They will leave Beyrout again on the 3rd, at twelve o'clock, and reach Alexandria on the 9th, Malta on the 11th, and Marseilles on the 14th."

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"A Constant Reader" should never leave "queen up" on Enigma so simple. The solution is:—1. Kt to K B 3rd; 2. Kt to K 5th; 3. Kt to Q B 4th (ch); 4. B mates.

"Senex." See our notice in last week's Number.

"S. L."—Too easy.

"M M" Your former communication was destroyed upon being answered.

"Inquisitor." There appears to be no difficulty, whatever, in disposing the White men that the Black King shall occupy no square without going into check. We have received several proposed methods of effecting the object, but have not space to give them.

"D. R. R." and "J. F. L." are thanked.

"Carlo Fidero."—The position is right enough. Whites first move is to Castle; the rest you will easily discover.

"W. H. C." All all terms most welcome.

"A. A." It shall have due attention.

"H. E. B."—We shall find space for it ere long.

"R. F.," Cardiff.—The game is only another version of the hackneyed position erroneously called "Philidor's Legacy." Very pretty, certainly, but too well known by everybody to need re-printing.

"G. S. J.," Oxford.—It is true there is no rule to prevent a player moving a piece over various squares while he retains his hold of that piece: the practice, nevertheless, is most unfair, and we should hesitate to play a second time with any one who adopted it. Letters are not sent to the correspondents of our Problems, they must be carefully written out on diagrams; as none such, they are quite illegible.

"Rex Mann." We are sure, will understand that our expression of opinion regarding his Problems has reference only to their suitability for publication. Many ingenuities in Chess, which form agreeable topics for gossip over the board, are ill adapted for the miscellaneous reader of a public paper. The last three positions shall be attentively examined.

"F. T. G."—The limited space allotted to this department renders the insertion of your long communication impossible. Your should forward it to the editor of the Chess-Players' Chronicle.

"Delta." A new edition of the "Chess-Players' Handbook" has just been published, to which all the corrections you suggest, and many others, have been made.

"H. J. C. A."—Your former letter only reached us this week.

"Argus."—See the notice above, to "Delta." The work can be got through any bookseller in Europe.

"J. P.," Glasgow. Both 354 and 371 are correct, and can be solved in the stipulated number of moves. The latter you have copied inaccurately. No. 246 is also quite right.

"H. E. F." Mr. Kling is not a teacher of Chess, but a professor and composer of music, and has capabilities which promise some day to render him as distinguished in that science as he has become in the construction of stratagems in Chess.

"Joseph."—1. Play the game over again, and you will find it perfectly correct. 2. In the position mentioned you could not Castle, as there is an express law which prohibits the capture of a piece in the act of Castling. The other subjects shall be considered.

"Both Inn." Try both 380 and 382 again. In the first you are quite abroad.

"Bogle."—Next week.

"M. Udloff."—The Key move is Q to E 6th.

"Beta." St. Neot's, is thanked for his reply to "Inquisitor's" question.

"W. S." Stalemate makes a drawn game.

"R. H. A."—You have failed in No. 380. The other is correct.

"T. P."—The small diagrams alluded to are printed from moveable type, the exclusive property of the publisher, Mr. Bohn.

Solutions by "Perseverance," "J. S. K. V.," "Peto," "B. V.," "A. A.," "Inquisitor," "Otho," "H. V." "A. A. L." "A. W. B." "F. G. R.," "T. P.," "Sheppey," "Perseus," "F. B.," "G. S. S." "J. W." "Carlo Fidero," "Rev. A. C. N." "W. B. C." "Alpha," "W. L. Jun." "M. E. R." "G. S. J.," "H. E." "M. Udloff," "H. T. T." "J. B." "C. A. M. E." "Alfa," "Dicer," "Kegna," are correct. Those by "Mila," "W. B.," are wrong.

The answers to several communications are unavoidably deferred until our next.

 The account of Mr. Harwitz's exhibition of playing Chess without seeing the board, together with the two interesting games which he conducted simultaneously on the occasion, reached us too late for insertion this week, but shall appear in the next Number.

Amateurs in the neighbourhood of Peckham and Camberwell are informed that the first meeting of the Peckham Chess Club was held at the Lecture-room, Hill-street, Peckham, on Friday, the 3rd ult., and that the room will be open for play every following Friday during the season. For particulars, apply to the Secretary.

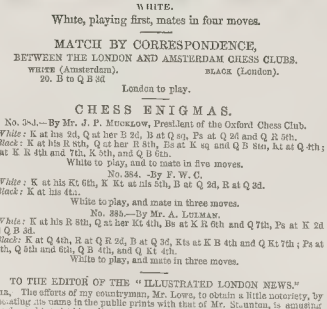
SOLUTION TO PROBLEM NO. 250.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. K to Kt 6th	K to R 6th	3. Kt to K B sq (ch)	K to R 6th
2. B to Kt 6th	K to R 7th	4. Kt to B 4th—Mate

PROBLEM NO. 251.

By MESSRS. KLING and HORWITZ.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White, playing first, mates in four moves.

MATCH BY CORRESPONDENCE,

BETWEEN THE LONDON AND AMSTERDAM CHESS CLUBS.

WHITE (Amsterdam).	BLACK (London).
20. B to Q B 3rd

London to play.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 383.—By Mr. J. P. MUCKLOW, President of the Oxford Chess Club.

White: K at his 2d, Q at her B 2d, B at Q 8th, Ps at Q 2d and Q R 5th.
Black: K at his R 8th, Q at her R 8th, Bs at K sq and Q B 8th, Kt at Q 8th; Ps at K K 4th and 7th, K 5th, and Q 6th.

White to play, and to mate in five moves.

No. 384.—By F. W. C.

White: K at his Kt 6th, K Kt at his 5th, B at Q 2d, R at Q 3d.
Black: K at his 4th.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

No. 385.—By Mr. A. LUEMAN.

White: K at his R 8th, Q at her Kt 4th, Bs at K R 6th and Q 7th, Ps at K 2d and Q B 3d.
Black: K at Q 4th, R at Q R 2d, B at Q 3d, Kts at K B 4th and Q Kt 7th; Ps at K 4th, Q 5th and 6th, Q B 4th, and Q Kt 4th.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS."

SIR,—The efforts of my countryman, Mr. Lowe, to obtain a little notoriety, by associating his name in the public prints with that of Mr. Staunton, is amusing enough, and irresistably calls to mind the old fable of "The Frog and the Ox." As some proof that the opinion you have expressed as to Mr Lowe's capabilities is not only that of the best players here, but is participated in by those of his own country, I beg to say that I shall have much pleasure in engaging in a match with Mr. Lowe, giving him the Pawn and two moves for seven games; the Pawn and move for seven games, and play him seven games even, for any reasonable stake upon the result of each event.

I have the honour to subscribe myself, yours, obediently,

BERNARD HORWITZ.

London Chess Club, November 8, 1848.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

On Thursday, last week, a large and respectable meeting, consisting principally of artisans of her Majesty's Dockyard, was held in the Town Hall, Plymouth, for the purpose of adopting a petition to the Lords of the Admiralty, praying them not to make any reduction in the Government yards, by discharge or general superannuation. The Mayor, J. Beer, Esq., presided.

The Lords of the Privy Council have appointed to meet in the Exchequer Chamber on Monday next, the 13th inst., to settle the roll of Sheriffs for the ensuing year.

Some time ago two packages of gunpowder were found on a shelf containing books in the Library of the National Assembly. On the opposite shelf four other packages of gunpowder, exactly similar to the first, and appearing to have been placed at the same time, that is, during or just after the journées of June, have also been discovered.

A considerable body of troops is about to be assembled at Versailles, near Paris. The Minister of War has ordered the great stables of the Château to be prepared for the lodging of as many men as possible.

Twenty-two miles below Cincinnati there is a field of corn covering six thousand acres, the crop of which is valued at £100,000, the field producing 75,000 quarters!

A supplement to the London Gazette appeared on Saturday, containing the directions and regulations of the Board of Health (published in our paper of last week), and giving a schedule of the names of towns and parishes to which the directions apply. Special clauses authorise the poor-law guardians of Hamilton, Dudley, Gateshead, Jarrow, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Sunderland, Wolverhampton, and York, to provide "rooms, or places of refuge," to which necessitous persons attacked by cholera, and who cannot be properly treated at their own houses, may be removed.

The Earl of Ellesmere has just given instructions to Mr. Barry to design and construct a staircase to the picture gallery at his new mansion, Bridgewater House, especially for the purpose of admitting the public to the Bridgewater collection, without any other restriction or condition than being attired in decent apparel.

A beautiful new steeple has recently been added to the ancient church of Melmerby, and the church itself, at the same time, undergone a thorough repairation. The whole of the work has been done at the expense of the worthy patron, and executed by Mr. William Hodgson, of Penrith.

The bodies of the whole of the individuals who were deprived of life by the falling of the sugar-works in Alston-street, Glasgow (noticed last week), have been recovered from amongst the ruins. Fourteen is the number killed, and five dangerously injured by the accident. A subscription for the relief of the families left destitute by this melancholy accident has been originated by the Glasgow Town Council, at a meeting of which, on Thursday, £34 10s. was given by the members.

The examiners have fixed the Michaelmas Term examination of persons applying to be admitted attorneys for Tuesday, the 14th inst., at the hall of the Incorporated Law Society, Chancery-lane. The number of candidates who have given notice of admission for this term is 597, and of these 45 have been already examined.

The Mayoralty of Bristol, according to the local papers, goes a-begging again this year. Several gentlemen, well suited for the office, who have been applied to, have expressed their determination to pay the fine (£100) rather than take it.

A short time since, an inconsiderate order of the Admiralty gave permission to two officers of the Swedish Royal Navy to inspect our dockyards, and to make drawings and notes of what they saw there. This order has since been rescinded.

The Governors of Queen Elizabeth's Free Grammar-School, Southwark, have awarded a gratuity of £50 a year, for three years and a half, to W. R. Randolph, a former pupil, who has just obtained a Bible clerkship at New College, Oxford. This is the third exhibition of the same amount which has been granted this year to pupils of this school. The former successful applicants were W. H. Davies and J. F. Hall, who have been entered respectively at Jesus and Emmanuel College, Cambridge.

A fatal accident on the South-Western Railway occurred on the Farnborough station on Friday night week. A gentleman who had been out shooting with a party of friends approached one of the trains, when he slipped and fell headforemost into the narrow space between the wheels and the wall of the platform. The unfortunate gentleman got out, but the injuries he had sustained were so severe, that he had expired before he was extricated.

Mr. Adderley, M.P., has given land and a donation for the erection of a training college for schoolmasters, at Saltley, near Birmingham, in connexion with the Diocesan Board of Education. It is to be commenced immediately, within a short distance of the church about to be erected at the same place, mainly at the cost of, and endowed by, Mr. Adderley. The funds necessary for the building are nearly provided, and the college is to receive a Royal charter.

The Chandos testimonial from the farmers of Bucks, disposed of at the recent sale at Stowe, was purchased privately of Messrs. Christie and Manson, with the view of re-presenting it to the Duke of Buckingham. The subscription now covers the amount of the purchase, and the members of the committee are about to meet to decide on the best mode of proceeding relative to the presentation to the Duke.

Lord Palmerston has just concluded a treaty of peace and alliance with the president of Liberia, who is now in London. The mission of the president in Europe is for the purpose of forming treaties of amity with Great Britain and France, and the recognition of the independence of the new Republic of Liberia. The treaty with Great Britain is on the footing of the most favoured nations.

On Monday night, the Britannia, of 600 tons, left the London Docks with a large number of emigrants, English, French, German, and Irish, for Australia. There is almost a fleet of vessels lying off the jetty, and in the basin, preparing to start for that colony.

The Royal Mersey Yacht Club, on Monday, presented to their Commodore, Thomas Littledale, Esq., a massive gold snuff-box, as a memorial of the admiration of his gallantry and humanity he displayed on board his yacht Queen of the Ocean, in saving, under circumstances of great difficulty, the lives of thirty-two of the crew and passengers of the emigrant ship Ocean Monarch.

On Saturday, the 6th instant, a general meeting of the Academicians was held at the Royal Academy of Arts in Trafalgar-square, when Mr. Robert Thorburn and Mr. Augustus Leopold Egg were duly elected associates of that institution.

The Great Western Railway Company have been assessed in the sum of £1100 instead of £2600, as previously, for that portion of the railway which passes through the town of Cheltenham; their total contribution to the poor-rate of which place is now £1900 per annum.

Viscount Oliver d'Arcbiac, son-in-law of the French Marshal Gérard, lost his life within the last few days by the following accident:—Being out shooting near Meaume, he was giving his dogs some bread, when, in their struggles for the morsels, one of them touched the trigger of his fowling-piece and set it off, lodging the charge in his head.

A few days ago, as a dragoon was passing over Mount St. Gothard, an avalanche fell upon it, and one of the passengers was killed.

Mr. Gavan Duffy, in a letter to the Dublin Freeman's Journal, explains the circumstance of his bankruptcy, which was, he says, caused by a creditor who would not be satisfied with the arrangement vesting his property in trustees, though these will pay all his debts in full.

On Thursday, the Court of Common Pleas appointed, under the 6th Vic., cap. 18, sittings to be held on the 13th, 16th, and 20th instant, to hear and determine all appeals against decisions of the revising barristers under the above Act. There are only six cases set down for argument; the first of which, an appeal from the decision of the revising barrister for the borough of Newport, Isle of Wight, is fixed for the 13th instant.

The Sheffield Times says the burgess roll of that borough exhibits the startling decrease of 1935 burgesses during the current municipal year.

On Monday, the Francis Ridley, of 850 tons burden, received 310 persons on board, destined to settle at Port Philip, South Australia. They consisted of 210 adults and 80 children.

A communication has taken place between the authorities at the Horse Guards and the trustees of King's College, with the view of adding to that institution a department for military education.

On Tuesday, about four o'clock, at Green's shooting-gallery, Leicester-square, a man named Macloughlin, brother to the celebrated jockey of the name, entered and asked for two pistols to be loaded, which having been given to him, he immediately shot himself through the head. Pecuniary embarrassment is stated to be the cause of deceased's committing the rash act.

James M'Wheelan, who was lately executed at Ayr, in Scotland, for murder, made a dying confession, implicating another man as the actual murderer, while he himself participated only in the robbery. The individual in question, named Edward Stewart Hill, has been apprehended, and conveyed to Ayr for examination.

Mr. Lumsden, the late Lord Provost of Glasgow, has commenced the erection in that city of dwellings for the working classes.

The Commissioners of London Improvements Commissioners have obtained possession of nearly the whole of the houses on the north side of Bow-street, Long-hill, and on the east side of Cannon-street, extending to Turnbull-street. The whole of which are forthwith to be pulled down to widen the thoroughfare of Cannon-street, and form a new street from the end of Walbrook into the Poultry street, southwark-bridge.

The treasure lost overboard from the Penguin packet at Falmouth, consisting in cash, and amounting to about 9000 dollars, has been recovered. One of the Admiralty divers went down repeatedly for some days in search of cash, and found it on Monday.

According to a notification published on the 24th ult., the Minister of Foreign Affairs informs skippers and traders that a fair will be held on the Parades Wetingen, near the Parade-Markt, Brussels, which will be opened every night from sunset to daybreak, during from the 1st inst.

The inhabitants of Bethnal-green, on Monday, presented Inspector Waller with a handsome sword, in acknowledgment of that officer's coherent services during the Chartist disturbances on Kennington Common. The sum remaining after the purchase of the sword was divided among the men who served under the inspector on the occasion referred to.

HUNGARIAN NOBLE AND PEASANT.

AUSTRIA.

Vienna, after a partial bombardment, and several days' hard fighting between the insurgents and the Imperial troops, surrendered on the 31st ult. to Prince Windischgrätz. From the German papers, we learn that "on the 28th the most violent cannonade was raging from 10 o'clock A.M. till midnight. The inhabitants of the suburbs fought with the greatest bravery; on the other hand, the courage of the military did not yield to theirs. In consequence of a very lively skirmish, the troops began to storm the lines on several points. Those of Jellachich particularly distinguished themselves, as they stormed thirty barricades within three hours. At seven o'clock in the evening again four different parts of the suburbs were on fire, especially in the faubourg Wieden and in the Landstrasse, where between thirty and forty houses were burnt down. At 11 o'clock at night nothing as yet was decided, beyond the victorious advance of the troops. The inhabitants of the city itself were said to have raised white flags of truce as early as the previous evening, which, however, were torn down by the operatives. Messenhauser, the Commander of the National Guard, had proclaimed martial law, and threatened with capital punishment all those who should shut their houses. On the other hand, Prince Windischgrätz had threatened with the same fate all those who should not shut their doors and windows. The deputies sent into the camp thought fit not to communicate this proclamation to the city. Only a few shells were thrown on the evening of the 28th, as a means to inspire terror. They were directed against the University, but a great number of rockets and shrapnells were thrown on the following day.

On the 29th, at midday, the troops were already on the glacis, at a distance of only 200 to 400 steps from the wall of the inner city.—(See the Engraving upon the front page.)

On the morning of the 30th, a deputation of the Communal Council repaired to the head-quarters, in order to induce the General-in-Chief to desist from his resolution of putting the city in a state of siege even after its capitulation. The Prince, however, refused to comply with the proposal, and demanded unconditional submission. He nevertheless promised that he would not fire any more on the city throughout the whole of that day, in order that the inhabitants might have time for reflection.

In the evening, the Communal Council assembled in consequence of the Prince's reply, and summoned the Commander-in-Chief, and all the other officers of the National Guard, in order to deliberate whether the city could be any longer defended, and whether it would be advisable to continue the resistance.

The Council, after much deliberation, passed a resolution to submit by a majority of two-thirds of the members. On the same evening a deputation repaired to the Prince to inform him of their submission, and a proclamation announcing the fact to the citizens was immediately posted about the streets. In consequence of this declaration hostilities ceased.

The terms imposed by Prince Windischgrätz were to the following effect:—

1. A large Imperial Austrian flag shall be raised on the tower of St. Stephen, and white flags are to be raised at the city gates as a sign of pacific submission.

2. The General of Artillery, Baron Recsey, and all the other prisoners are to be conducted to Hetzendorf with all the honours.

3. All the cannon in the possession of the insurgents is to be transported to the artillery barracks of the Palace of Schönbrunn. All the other arms are to be deposited in the Arsenal.

4. All the money in the possession of the National Guards and of the armed corps is to be handed over without delay to the Municipal Council.

5. Those of the National Guards whom the Municipal Council shall propose as guards over the public buildings are to remain armed.

6. All these stipulations are to be carried into effect before 8 o'clock on the afternoon of the 30th, otherwise the military operations shall be resumed.

On the 31st ult. the Municipal Council announced that it accepted those terms, and that the preliminary measures for disarming the population had been adopted.

On the 30th the Imperial troops attacked the Hungarians, who had made a forward movement, and, after some severe fighting, drove them back.

On the 31st the Imperial troops proceeded to enter the inner city, after they had taken all the suburbs. The white standards, according to the conditions, had been placed on all the bastions. The troops approached them, but were treacherously received by a sharp fire of grape and canister, which they immediately returned with shells and rockets. At the same moment the Imperial Library and the castle were observed to be on fire. The bombardment was continued for some time, and the city was compelled to surrender in the evening. The troops immediately occupied the castle, the Kärnthner-Strasse, and the Stephansplatz, where the people continued for some time firing upon them from the windows.

On the 1st inst. the entire city, except a few isolated points, was taken possession of by the Imperial troops before 3 P.M. The insurgents cast away their arms, and sought safety in flight, so that when the Croats stormed the Aula, where the last defence was vigorously made, instead of finding it garrisoned by the students, they only encountered a hundred or more armed populace, many of whom, fighting desperately and refusing to surrender, were cut down or hanged. The streets were strewed with arms, and the most active leaders sought safety in all directions; but a severe search was ordered, and the gates, walls, and suburbs were strictly guarded to prevent escape. The most violent resistance was made at the Salzgries barracks. In consequence of the treachery by which the troops had suffered on the 31st ult., the field-marshal ordered the utmost vigilance to be observed both in the city and suburbs, whilst a strong body of cavalry, consisting of 5000 horse, were despatched toward the Hungarian frontier, and numerous patroles were directed to scour the cross-roads and paths that intersect the vicinity of the city.

Vienna has suffered considerably. The palace, the library, and several public edifices and churches were on fire; but, with the exception of the Augustine and Capucine churches, the fires that menaced the rest were extinguished without committing ravages to any extent. The invaluable contents of the public library have not been injured. The sufferings of the inhabitants during the siege were intense. Bem, Messenhauser, and other leaders of the armed people and National Guards, compelled those who were suspected of lukewarmness to fight in the front ranks; and thus these persons, many of whom were among the fallen, were exposed to death in front and in the rear. It is understood that none of the Legations have suffered except that of Prussia, which was fired by a shell that wounded one of the persons attached to the Embassy. On the 2nd the disarming was carried on without further interruption, and all conflict having ceased, the Imperial troops were tranquil masters of the whole city.

All accounts concur in stating that the damage done to the city is comparatively trifling. The fires at the Palace and Library were extinguished without injuring any of their valuable contents. The Church of the Augustins has suffered severely, but Canova's statue has escaped, and the collection of natural history has not suffered. Some private habitations have been burned and others injured; but the loss, considering the circumstances, is less than could have been anticipated. In the suburbs, however, it is otherwise; there the destruction has been great, in proportion to the desperate nature of the resistance, and long duration of the combat. The whole of the arms in the hands of the populace, students, &c., have been nearly recovered, and deposited in the specified depôts. The students have disappeared, and General Bem also, it is said, has succeeded in escaping. It was understood that although the conditions of the state of siege and of Windischgrätz's proclamation would be strictly maintained, it would not weigh upon the general liberties of the land, and that the people would not be deprived of any of the advantages obtained by them in March. As soon as the ringleaders were punished, a general amnesty would be proclaimed. Prince Windischgrätz and Baron Jellachich had established their quarters in the Imperial Palace. The leader of the Academic Legion had been arrested, together with an aide-de-camp of General Messenhauser. General Cordon had been appointed Governor of the city.

Prince Windischgrätz on the 2nd, published a proclamation, by which he declares the conditions previously laid down to be null, owing to the rupture of the capitulation. He established new ones, among which are the complete dissolution of the Academic Legion, the dissolution of the National Guard for an undetermined period, the suspension of all journals and associations, forbidding more than ten persons to assemble in the streets, domiciliary visits to be made, to discover dépôts of arms and individuals not belonging to the city. The Diet had been prorogued by the Emperor for fifteen days. The German Deputies wished to assemble, but Prince Windischgrätz declared that the members present at Vienna formed only a portion of the Diet, and that the only legal place of meeting was that of Kremsier, a little town in Moravia, which had been fixed by his Majesty. The Deputies, however, continued to hold a sitting. Prince Felix Schwarzenberg surrounded the place of sitting, closed the doors, and occupied all the outlets. The Diet, therefore, held a secret sitting.

HUNGARIAN GUARD ON THE BORDERS OF THE DANUBE.

The new Ministry is composed as follows:—Wessenberg, President, without a portfolio; Prince Schwarzenberg, Foreign Affairs; Bach, Home Department; Buchner, War; Heifert, Public Instruction; Bruch, Commerce.

Messenhauser, chief of the National Guard of Vienna, who was accused of inciting the treacherous order to violate the truce, and to recommence the combat, whilst white flags were waving from the bastions, has published the following denial —

"The undersigned, Commander-in-Chief of the Vienna National Guard, hereby solemnly protests against the imputation that he, upon the 31st of October, sanctioned the attack renewed by some of the moveable corps upon the Imperial troops. He calls upon the Town Council to prove that he, on the contrary, was occupied from daybreak in disarming the Guards; and that, at the risk of his own life, he succeeded in conveying several pieces of cannon to the bastions, and exerted all his energies for the restoration of peace and tranquillity. He again most energetically protests hereby against the imputation of his having in any way encouraged or ordered a breach of the capitulation.

(Signed) "MESSENHAUSER.

"Vienna, October 31."

On the 3rd the capital was completely restored to comparative tranquillity. Several houses had been plundered by the soldiery. It is said that in most instances it was impossible to prevent them, as the aggression generally came from those houses which were forcibly entered, and, as a natural consequence, robbed of their contents. Wherever houses were entered for the mere purpose of plunder, it is stated that the culprits were immediately shot.

The battle between the Hungarians and Austrians on the 30th, which ended in the repulse of the former, was very sanguinary. It was supposed that the Hungarian army had proceeded against General Simonitch, who, though once beaten, had reappeared with 10,000 Austrians in Hungary, coming from Galicia.

Accounts from Presburg state that active preparations were being made by the Hungarians to defend that town.

Attempts had been made at Brunn, in Moravia, by the workmen, excited by a proclamation of the Democratic Association, to get up an insurrection in favour of the insurgents of Vienna; but after a fight in the streets, in which the National Guards acted with the troops, the rioters were completely subdued, without much bloodshed.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

The first Engraving illustrates the comparative condition of the Hungarian Nobleman and Peasant. There is a certain degree of picturesqueness in the costume of both ranks: the noble in his furred and embroidered uniform, and the peasant with his spencer jacket and pointed beard. The dolfed hat and bare head mark the standard of respect paid to the luxurious upper classes.

The second Illustration is a night scene on the borders of the Danube, with the Hungarian Guard Keeping Watch.

The accompanying Portrait of the Emperor of Austria, is engraved from a large picture at the mansion of the Austrian Embassy, in Chandos-street, Cavendish-square. His Majesty is gorgeously robed, and decorated with splendid orders; whilst upon the table are grouped the insignia of imperial dignity.

In our Journal for October 2, 1847, we engraved a smaller portrait of the Emperor, to which was prefixed a memoir of his Imperial Majesty, with some interesting details of his lineage from the House of Hapsburg. We quote the style and title of the present representative:—Ferdinand (I.)-Charles-Leopold-Joseph-Francis-Marcellin, Emperor of Austria, King of Hungary and of Bohemia, King of Lombardy and of Venice, of Dalmatia, Croatia, Sclavonia, Galicia, Lodomeria, and Illyria. He is son of the late Emperor Francis I., by his second Empress, Maria-Theresa-Caroline-Josephine, daughter of the late Ferdinand I., King of the Two Sicilies; and was born the 19th of April, 1793. He was crowned King of Hungary, September 28, 1830; King of Bohemia, September 7, 1836; King of Lombardy and Venice, September 6, 1838; and succeeded his father on the Imperial Throne, March 2, 1835. Married, February 27, 1831, Maria-Anna-Carolina-Pia (born September 19, 1803), daughter of the late Victor-Emmanuel, King of Sardinia.

Vienna, seen from across the Glacis, is represented upon the front page of the present Number. Mention of the locality occurs in the news of the late Siege. We have already given some details of the City itself. The ancient fortifications having become, from the extension of the suburbs, nearly useless, Joseph II., in 1781, caused roads and walks to be formed through the entire Glacis, and the whole to be planted with limes, chesnuts, and acacias, thus forming a most agreeable park round the whole city. A portion of the Glacis is shewn in our Illustration, with its fine trees and verdant lawns, intersected by the Wien. Across the Glacis lies the old Bourg, or city, the cathedral nearby in the centre, on the highest ground, proudly presenting its rich Gothic tower far above the surrounding mass of buildings. Facing the Glacis, and within the ancient walls, is the wide façade of the Imperial Palace, with the Emperor's garden, and the extensive grounds of the Volksgarten in front, and a long line of fine houses facing the ramparts; behind, is one dense mass of buildings, churches, vast palaces, and immense public edifices, so closely built, that the streets dividing them can scarcely be defined. Towards the left, are seen several of the largest suburbs; and the view is closed by the lofty Kahlenberg and other mountains, forming part of a vast chain covered by forests and vineyards, that stretch far towards the south until they fade in the distance.

We may here, with advantage to the reader, direct his attention to some admirable Views of Vienna, with descriptive details, in Dr. Beattie's "Danube Illustrated;" the clever engravings from drawings by W. H. Bartlett.

THE EMPEROR OF AUSTRIA.—DRAWN FROM A PICTURE AT THE AUSTRIAN EMBASSY, IN LONDON.

ABD-EL-KADER.—This ill-fated Prince was removed on Thursday (last week) from the Château at Pau (Basses Pyrenees), where he has resided since his arrival in France, to the residence selected for him by the Republic—Amboise on the Loire, about midway between Blois and Tours. Shortly after noon the Emir left the château in an open carriage; he wore his usual white costume, and appeared pale and melancholy, nothing but little the salutations and marks of respect paid him by the spectators. He was accompanied by no military escort, but the carriage was surrounded by a troop of gensdarmes. The women, children, and suite of the fallen Emir followed in three diligences. During his residence at Pau Abd-el-Kader has scarcely stirred out of his room. Easy of access, and affable to those who had real occasion to see him, he chafed at being made an object of idle curiosity.

ANOTHER convoy of 326 insurgent families, consisting of 853 individuals, left Paris on Saturday last for Algiers.

COMMUNICATION WITH BELGIUM.—On and after the 12th inst. the mail-boats will leave Ostend every night between the hours of 10.30 P.M. and 3 A.M., so that letters will arrive in London at half-past ten on the morning following their departure from Brussels. On and after the 1st of November the steamers will leave Dover every night between the hours of 11.15 P.M. and 3 A.M. So that the mails which leave London at eight o'clock in the evening will arrive at Brussels and Antwerp in ordinary weather at noon next day, and letters for Germany can arrive at Cologne in the same day.

ON THE WEATHER DURING THE QUARTER ENDING 1848, SEPTEMBER 30.

To the Report of the Registrar-General upon the state of the public health of the past quarter is appended a more than usually well analysed account of the meteorology of the seasons, deduced from the observations of competent observers residing in different parts of the country, and discussed with great labour and care by Mr. Glaisher. We have looked over these reports with increased interest, and find that the particulars of the weather are well described and classified, and we regret that our space will not permit us to copy all we could wish from these reports; but we strongly urge all gentlemen interested in these pursuits to see the report itself, accompanied, as it is, with well-arranged tables of all the subjects of research. The report says that, with the exception of a few days in July, and the period between the 9th and 23rd of September, the weather was wet, with very little sunshine. The month of August was extremely wet; and, in many places, the falls of rain, both in July and September, were unusually great. So much rain falling in a period immediately following the previous bad weather renders the season and the year very remarkable. On July 1 the mean temperature of the air was 8° 4′ below the average value of the same day in the seven preceding years; and on the 6th it was 12° 2′ in excess above the average: on the former day the mean temperature was 46° 7′, and on the latter day it was 74°. On the 9th it was 3° below the average, and on the 14th it was 9° 4′ above the average; and on the 15th it was again below the average. These changes were great and abrupt. From July 11 to September 19 the temperature of the air was almost always below the average value, and particularly so between the 11th and 16th of September; on the 12th the departure from the average was 12° 6′. From the 20th of September to the end of the quarter the temperature of the air ranged somewhat above the average values.

The mean temperature of the air for July was 61° 5′, for August was 58° 5′, and for September was 53° 8′, and for the quarter was 58° 6′, which is 1° 2′ below the average value for seven years.

The mean temperature of the dew point in July was 54° 6′, in August was 5[illegible]′, in September was 50° 9′, and for the quarter was 52° 8′

[illegible]r the quarter the mean weight of water in a cubic foot of air was 4¼ grains; the degree of humidity was 765, complete saturation being 1000; the mean elastic force of vapour was 0.411 inch; and the mean reading of the barometer was [illegible]·797 inches, the last-mentioned value being the same as that of the average of the seven preceding years.

The rain in the quarter amounted to 9 inches at Greenwich. The average fall of rain during this quarter, as derived from the observations since the year 1815, is 7 inches. In the year 1824 the fall of rain in this quarter was 9 inches; in 1826 it was 12½ inches; in 1829 it was 11 inches; and in 1839 it was 10½ inches. The total fall this year till September 30 was 24½ inches; in the years 1841 to 1847 the amounts were 21, 14, 17¾, 16, 16¾, 17¾, and 11¾ inches respectively. The excess of the fall of rain this year over the average for the seven preceding years is 7¾ inches

In the years 1824 and 1826 the depth of rain fallen to the end of September exceeded 23 inches; and in the years 1829 and 1839, the amount collected exceeded 20 inches. So large a fall as 24½ inches within the first nine months of the year has probably not been exceeded within this century.

At Stonyhurst the fall within the past quarter was 15 inches; at Hereford it was 13 inches; at Beckington it was 12½ inches; at Leeds it was 12½ inches; at Torquay it was 10¾ inches; and at all other places it was less—more particularly on the eastern coast and at Durham and Newcastle. Rain fell on nearly every day in August, and on the average it fell on two out of three days during the quarter. On July 14th, rain to the depth of half an inch fell in half an hour; at Thwaite, on Sept. 24, it fell so heavily that more than two inches fell within five hours. On the 28th, 29th, and 30th of Sept. rain was falling, with slight exceptions, continuously all over the country; and the amount was 2½ inches at most places

There were five exhibitions of the aurora borealis during the quarter, which occurred on July 11th, August 28th, Sept. 4th, 8th, and 18th.

Thunder storms occurred on July 14th, 26th, August 1st, 3d, 4th 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 22d, 23d, 31st, and Sept. 5th; and lightning, unaccompanied by thunder, was seen on July 24th, August 23d, 24th, 25th, Sept. 22d and 29th

Gales of wind took place all over the country on Aug. 20th, 21st, and 22d, but more particularly on the 21st; at many places trees were blown down, and a great deal of injury was done. Coasting vessels and fishing-boats generally suffered very much.

The following remarks are added, relative to agriculture. The great prevalence of rain during the quarter, together with the very short periods of sunshine, has harassed the farmer in gathering in the crops. The month of July was about its usual character, but the constant rain in August impeded the farmer in his operations, and in many of the southern counties injured the crops considerably, causing the corn to sprout, and seed leaves to appear of fully an inch in length by the middle of August. The greater coldness of the northern counties prevented the sprouting of the corn, but it otherwise was seriously injured. There are agricultural reports from different places, and the concluding remarks are:—The recent heavy rains (now Oct. 6) excite fresh anxiety with respect to seed-time. On wet lands a great deal is needed to be done to prepare them for sowing, which operation must be late, and, therefore, to a certain extent, more precarious than if performed under the more favourable circumstances of a good seed season

The publication of these reports cannot fail greatly to improve our knowledge, not only upon meteorology itself, but also upon its bearing upon the public health, agriculture, &c. The debt of gratitude already due to the Registrar-General is much increased by the facilities thus given by him to the useful application of these various meteorological observations, as thus examined and discussed by Mr. Glaisher.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR AND THE BAR.—On Saturday, a numerous meeting of the members of the equity bar was held at the Old Hall, Lincoln's-inn-fields, for the purpose of taking into consideration the propriety of petitioning the Lord Chancellor to render the sittings of the courts at Lincoln's-inn more convenient. Shortly before four o'clock the chair was taken by Mr. S. Lovett. There were at the time about forty gentlemen, including the Solicitor-General, present. The chairman, in opening the proceedings, said that although he was generally in favour of publicity, he thought it would not be an act of respect to the Lord Chancellor to sanction any report of the meeting to go before the public. He therefore hoped that if any gentlemen present were attending as reporters, they would withdraw. The reporters present then withdrew. Mr. Malins, at the rising of the Vice-Chancellor of England's Court on Saturday, requested the postponement of a cause in order that he might attend the meeting of the bar respecting the proposed alteration of the sittings of the court, and at the same time expressed a hope that his Honor was favourable to the wishes of the bar in desiring that the sittings might be held as long as possible at Lincoln's-inn for the convenience of the junior bar. The Vice-Chancellor said he was decidedly of opinion that the new regulation for holding the sittings at Westminster during the session of Parliament was the most salutary that could be come to. He thought, moreover, that the juniors did not do themselves justice. This expression of his Honor's (says a correspondent of the Times) was supposed to mean that the junior barristers did not rise early enough to get through their business. An application was subsequently made to the Lord Chancellor, on the part of the deputation of the junior bar, which terminated in an assurance that the sittings for the present and Hilary Terms were an experiment; and that the question with respect to the sittings at Westminster after the other terms was still open to consideration.

THE ALLEGED LOSS OF THE EMIGRANT-SHIP "THETIS."—We have received the following communication from Lloyd's:—"The report of an account having been received at Lloyd's of the loss of the emigrant-ship Thetis, is incorrect. The Thetis, Captain Case, sailed from Plymouth on the 7th February last, and arrived at Sydney on the 27th May. After landing her passengers she sailed on the 1st July for Launceston, Van Diemen's Land. In the report alluded to of the loss of this vessel, it is stated that she was wrecked on the 26th June, being several days prior to her leaving Sydney for Launceston. The Thetis, Captain Maitland, arrived at Plymouth on the 13th October last. The Thetis, Captain Dodds, sailed from Plymouth on the 19th October last for Port Philip." It is understood that the Thetis lost belonged to Sydney, Captain Collins, master and part-owner.]

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING,

THE ILLUSTRATED

LONDON ALMANACK

FOR 1849,

Being the Fifth Annual Issue of this most beautifully embellished and useful Almanack. Illustrated by RICHARD DOYLE, B. FOSTER, &c.; and finely engraved by DALZIEL, VIZETELLY, &c. Country Scenes, by THOMAS MILLER; besides a variety of useful Tables usually published in Almanacks. The Astronomical Department by JAMES GLAISHER, Esq., F.R.A.S., and of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich.

Published by WILLIAM LITTLER, 198, Strand, London.

 Country orders supplied for cash only.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK

SUNDAY, Nov. 12.—Twenty-first Sunday after Trinity. Cambridge Term divides at midnight

MONDAY, 13.—Britain

TUESDAY, 14.—Uranus south at 9h. 36m. P.M.

WEDNESDAY, 15.—Michaelmas.

THURSDAY, 16.—Jupiter south at 5h. 56m. A.M.

FRIDAY, 17.—Hugh, Bishop of Lincoln. The Moon enters her last Quarter at 6h. 47m. P.M.

SATURDAY, 18. The Sun rises at 7h. 25m., and sets at 4h. 5m.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING NOVEMBER 18.

For Day	Monday		Tuesday		Wednesday		Thursday		Friday		Saturday
M.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.
2	2	20	3	43	4	28	5	14	6	0	6	50
A.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.
14	30		15	15	15	58	16	40	17	20	17	56
M.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.
3	7	35	8	20	9	5	9	50	10	36	11	25
A.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.
15	0		15	40	16	20	17	0	17	40	18	20
M.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.
4	12	20	13	15	14	10	15	5	15	55	16	50
A.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.
16	0		16	40	17	20	18	0	18	40	19	20
M.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.
5	17	50	18	50	19	50	20	50	21	50	22	50
A.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.	h.	m.
17	0		17	40	18	20	19	0	19	40	20	20

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"H. H. H." The Tree Kangaroo, engraved in our Journal of October 28, is darkish shaky brown above; the under parts and tail, yellowish gray. It was originally observed by Miller, in Outer part wore on the Dutch Indian Colonies. An account of his observations, with some additional particulars, will appear in the "Proceedings of the Zoological Society," before the end of the year. The specimen we figured was brought to this country in the Dædalus, by Captain M'Quhae.

"S. Snider"—Apply to a music seller.

"J. H."—Malton. We believe the statement to be in the main correct.

"Tatton" should apply to a shop-keeper.

"C. C. L."—As your recollection seems to be at fault, you had better pay the demand than dispute it.

"H. S. B."—See Lempriere's "Classical Dictionary."

"A Governess," Bromley, is recommended to consult one of the professional persons who undertake to cure di fficulties.

"Fretwork."—Church is not exempted as such by the law of England until they are consecrated by a bishop.

"A Constant Subscriber at Barton" is thanked; but we have already engraved the view in question.

"T. T. R.," Winchester.—Inquiry of one of the corporals would, doubtless, solve the question: we cannot.

"D. S. S." The Shakspere Society print MSS., or reprint works of the time of Shakspere: the annual subscription is One Guinea.

"F. G."—Not a formal call, upon a united day.

"Anna M.," Kennington.—We believe there to be a wood-engraving class at the Government School of Design, Somerset House.

"G. W. C.," Birmingham. We regret that we cannot find room for the Cute.

"Monenas." The person in question will not be liable to the penalty, unless not being game

"Honeyon," and "H. B." –Received.

"A Constant Subscriber." Mr Erasmus Wilson, Charlotte-street, Fitzroy-square, author of a work on skin diseases.

A. B." Dublin.—Taylor's "Short-hand," improved by Hardwy

E. B.," University College, Durham.—Thanks.

"D.," Launceston.—We have not room for the verses

S. M. H."—Dublin's "Sunday Library" is in six volumes

"Reflection."—The Royal Exchange Chimes play the "Hundredth Psalm," "God save the Queen," "Rule Britannia," and "The Roast Beef of Old England.' The bells were not part of the contract of Mr. Dent, who supplied the clock

"Flautist."—Hamilton's "Catechisms" and "Musical Grammar" are excellent There are also the works of Mesers. Moberya, Vogler, Berche, Turbil, Czerny, Callcott, Choron, Dr. Crotch, Pain, Kramer, Pinsford, &c.

"G. B."—Inquire of Jullien and Co and of Wessell and Co.

"J. D."—The [illegible] question especially referred to in this day's notice was Henry the Seventh. We are quite of his opinion

"J. B."—Mr. Warburton's statement in "Bells and his Rose" is quite correct. By right of birth Queen Victoria is not entitled to quarter the Plantagenet arms, being descended from Elizabeth Woodville, wife of Edward IV., and never did become, as heiress. The Duke of Modena, on the contrary, has the honour of being the heir general of the Royal Houses of Plantagenet, Tudor, and Stuart, being the representative of our King Charles I., through his Majesty's daughter, Henrietta, Duchess of Orleans.

"W. C.," Dublin The late Chief Justice Tindal was not, we believe, able to prove any connexion with Tyndal the Martyr. We cannot solve the authorship.

"Sub ab Initio."—Lozenges, as our Correspondent suggests, should be substituted for the 3rd

"E. M. P."—The daughter of a Commoner, when married to the younger son of a Peer, becomes entitled to the courtesy prefix of "Honourable."

"C. M. H."—The Duke of Wellington has no son in the Church

"Chevron." A cup of nourishment, or coronet, cannot be substituted, ad libitum, for the wreath.

"S. S. S.," Weymouth, is thanked; but the subject is scarcely of interest enough to warrant a special journey.

"Query," Leeds—Pronounced "Sick"

"Eaton-place."—The Public Nuisances Act, passed last session, may provide you a remedy

"S. H.," Boston—We have not room

"Virginia," Chester, is correct in his interpretation.

"J. L." near Leeds, is thanked, but the large pig has too long a tale.

"E. E." Leek, Staffordshire Address at the office of the British Southern Whale Fishery Company, 5, Crosby-square, City

"H. B. C."—Dagger a dagger is a mark of reference.

"W. L." Wrotham At the Amaranth.

"Bastogne," Guernsey.—Lacer, or Lecer, was the name of a bird said to frequent the sea of the town of Lecer-land. We cannot solve the authorship.

"A Constant Reader," St. Leonard's. The omission was a [illegible]

"A Subscriber," Huddersfield, may [illegible] by post the Literary edition of our Journal on Saturday morning. [illegible] Shoeing

"N.," Stockport. A Treatise on "Pus" may be had of Groombridge, Paternoster-row

"Sportsman," Ireland, can claim to the extent [illegible]

"A Looker-on."—We cannot find room for the supplement as to th. Sea-Serpent

"C. W." [illegible] to the Consumption Hospital, at Brompton, apply on Thursdays.

"Wren."—By interest at Court The Journal can be had for 6d.

"C. P. L." For the price of Bells, &c., apply to Messrs. Mears, Foundry, Whitechapel.

"Isis." A lobster is an articulated animal of the class Crustacea.

"Lucy."—Replies to your questions would be unparliamentary.

"Bianche." Mr. Thomas Moore is, we believe, in good health

"[illegible]" [illegible] consult a solicitor

"[illegible]" The wife of a Brevet Colonel in the Army, and the wife of a Postmaster in the Navy, have the same precedence

"A Subscriber." "The Last Cavalier" "Sir Richard Hotspur. Bart."

"[illegible]" We have no clue to the origin of the family of Sentred, or Southern

"[illegible]" [illegible] My family, although [illegible] of whom a memoir appeared in our Journal of the 21st inst. [illegible] must remain unknown

"G. W. H. W." The inscription on the Column of Falconstone is not yet to be [illegible] and the Trinity passage still remains undecided. The claims of the Duke and Duchess of [illegible] were not forgotten by many to before the House of Lords, and Rear-Admiral Worthy Tracey, Esq., Lieutenant, R.N., now, also, before the same tribunal The 3rd part of the "Illuminated Heraldic Illustrations" will be published by Mr. Charnock, next week

"Lucubro Dek" [illegible] Marshal Soult, who is very aged, has retired from public life, and is resident on his estate in the country

"Cognomen" [illegible] entitled to quarter his mother's arms, was to marry a lady not on his estate, he would simply impale her wife's arms with his own quarterers

BOOKS, &c., RECEIVED DURING THE WEEK.

Mr. Hawaiin's Letter to the Marquis of Lansdowne.—Linley on Cookery.—The History of Ireland.—Lays [illegible]

The Violet of the Valley.—Oh, sigh not my Lute.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1848

VIENNA does at length been occupied by the Imperial troops, after a siege which will rank as one of the most memorable in history. The negotiations were conducted with great firmness, yet with great moderation, by Prince Windischgrätz; and the final result, after negotiation had failed, was obtained with far less destruction both of life and property than might have been expected in a struggle so protracted. Let us hope that Prince Windischgrätz and the advisers of the Emperor will act with equal prudence and moderation, now that they are once again the masters of the Austrian capital. We may blame the conduct of the Viennese people as much as we will; we may abhor the murder of Latour; we may condemn the breach of faith of which the excited insurgents were guilty, when from the high tower of St. Stephen's the watchers announced that the Hungarians were approaching; we may deplore the excesses of the ignorant mob; we may regret, for every possible reason, the commotion among the German population of Austria; but we must, nevertheless, remember that all the blame of these events is not justly attributable to the people. Even the few statesmen of the old school still left in Austria must confess, and, indeed, have confessed, that the system pursued for more than thirty years under the auspices of Prince Metternich was founded upon an error. Any attempt to return to that system would be the most fearful mistake that the reigning family could commit. It would be, indeed, a proof of signal incapacity on the part of the advisers of the Emperor—whether they be constitutional Ministers, or an irresponsible Camarilla—to believe, because the Germans have not, in the very infancy of their political liberty, known how to use it with the wisdom of men who had long been accustomed to free institutions, that they were utterly unfit to be entrusted with them. The ignorance of rulers and the ignorance of mobs are equally deplorable. The political education of a people is not attainable in a day. To embark in a reactionary policy would only assuredly lead to further and more dreadful evils. It should be the great object of all the true friends of Austria to prepare the people by slow and cautious, but strictly progressive and liberal steps, for the quiet, sober, and rational exercise of the constitutional liberty, of which, England, two centuries ago, began to set an example to the nations, and which must, sooner or later, extend over all Europe. Were Prince Windischgrätz as wise in policy as he is great in strategy—could he rule with as much moderation and good sense as he has exhibited in the capacity of a leader of armies—and were he supported by the statesmanship and intellect of the country, there might be much reason to believe that the worst was over; and that the future struggles of Germans, Sclavonians, Magyars, and Italians, to attain the liberty they severally desire, might be unattended with mutual hatred and exasperation, and unstained with the blood of one another. We must confess that such a result is scarcely to be hoped for. Much, however, will depend upon the manner in which the victory over the Viennese shall be turned to account. Vienna cannot continue to be occupied by Croats. Unless German Austria be ruled by Germans, the old animosities will be produced and re-produced in miserable perpetuity, and the rational desire for free institutions of the various populations will be superseded by the unreasonable and brutal hatreds of race against race, and nationality against nationality. The turbulent mob has received a signal discomfiture. It is now the time for the Emperor to conciliate the powerful classes immediately above the mob: the classes that have something to gain from order accompanied by rational liberty, and that have everything to lose from disorder. These classes must be crushed and become a mob themselves under the heel of anarchy. It is the duty of the men who now wield power to prevent such a consummation. They have taken one step towards it by restoring order. The next step is to secure it upon the basis of true liberty.

THE French Constitution—Organic Laws included—has been finally voted by the National Assembly. A hundred salvos of artillery from the Invalides announced the important fact to the affrighted Parisians; who, previously unaware of, and caring little for the circumstance, imagined that a new insurrection of the Red Republicans had taken place, and that the guns of Cavaignac were once again pointed at those terrible and ever-discontented faubourgs. In the faubourgs themselves a similar idea prevailed; and in some of the districts the Communists and Red Republican workmen actually commenced, at the first sound of the artillery, the erection of new barricades a significant fact, which General Cavaignac, M. Louis Napoleon Bonaparte, or whoever the new President may be, would do well to bear in memory, as showing the constant readiness of a section of the population to try the chances of insurrection on behalf of their ideas.

It has been resolved that the passing of the Constitution shall be celebrated as a national fête; and that one of those imposing and poetical ceremonials, so dear to the imagination of the French people, which ornamented the first Revolution, and which were revived by the Gallic genius of M. Ledru-Rollin in the palmy days of the Provisional Government, shall take place to-morrow (Sunday). A lofty tribune is to be erected in front of the gate of the Tuileries Gardens, looking towards the Obelisk and the pumps Elysées. The Constitution is to be formally read by the President of the Assembly, the members of which, as well as those of all the great bodies of the State, are to be present. The area of the Place is to be occupied by the National Guard of Paris and deputations from those of the departments; and the sum of 600,000 francs is to be distributed among the poor. On the succeeding Sunday the Constitution is to be formally read by the Ministers of the Executive Power of France, in a public place. We miss in this ceremonial the gorgeousness which characterised the earlier fêtes of the Revolution: but funds are not quite so plentiful at present as they were then; and the cost of previous fêtes has somewhat soured the spirits and drained the pockets of the tax-paying community. The present fête will, nevertheless, be sufficiently expensive; and the mere contemplation of the bill which Lucullus Ledru-Rollin and his colleagues will be, by the enthusiasm which in all crowds is contagious, will lead it a magnificence to which the gilded cars and heathen personifications of the earlier fêtes could have added little or nothing.

The Assembly, although it has done its work, has refused to adjourn. It is evidently afraid, that, once separated, it would never meet again a very likely result in the present temper of the Parisian population. A motion for adjournment until the day after the Presidential election was decated by a majority of 507 against 214; but, notwithstanding this vote, the applications of members for leave to visit their families are so numerous, that fears are entertained that there will not remain in Paris a sufficient number of representatives to form a quorum.

In the meantime there is a perfect panic in the Money Market. The recent exposition of the financial state of the Republic, than which nothing could well be worse, has thrown the Bourse into a confusion which has not been paralleled since the Revolution. Generals Changarnier, and Bedeau, and Bugeaud the hero of the Algerine razzias—have severally declared to stand for the Presidency, so that there are now but two real candidates in the field—General Cavaignac and M. Louis Napoleon Bonaparte. It is generally considered that the chances of General Cavaignac have decreased.

GOVERNMENT EMIGRATION.—On Wednesday, her Majesty's Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners appointed nine vessels for the conveyance of emigrants [illegible] to carry not less than 2,5.0 to New South Wales [illegible] the ensuing month of December. On the 15th, for Port Phillip, [illegible] 14th, and 21st for Adelaide, and to embark at Plymouth; and on the 25th for Sydney, and to embark at Plymouth; and on [illegible] for Adelaide, from London; 7th, for Port Phillip, from Deptford; 8th, part from Plymouth, 11th, for Port Phillip, and [illegible] The total number of persons to be conveyed by these ships [illegible]

POSTSCRIPT.

SCOTCH BANKING IN LONDON.—A preliminary meeting, consisting of several influential gentlemen belonging to the City, was held on Wednesday, to consider the expediency of establishing, under the title of the British Bank, a new joint stock establishment on the Scotch system. John M'Gregor, Esq., M.P. for Glasgow, and late Secretary to the Board of Trade, was called to the chair; and after an able statement from him, explanatory of the objects sought to be obtained by the proposed bank, resolutions were passed, appointing a committee of three gentlemen present, including Mr M'Gregor, who were authorised to take all steps requisite for the formation of the bank, and to report the result to an adjourned meeting

AMALGAMATION OF THE BOARD OF STAMPS AND TAXES WITH THE EXCISE DEPARTMENT.—It is understood that the long-contemplated union of the Excise and the Stamps and Taxes departments will shortly be carried into effect, the preliminaries for that purpose having been arranged

Sir Robert Gardiner has been appointed Governor of Gibraltar, in the place of Sir Robert Wilson, whose period of service has expired. The new governor is an Artillery officer, who served with much distinction throughout the Peninsular war, and at Waterloo

ELECTION OF MAYOR OF LIVERPOOL.—On Thursday, Mr J. B. Moore, the chairman of the dock trustees, was elected Mayor of Liverpool by a majority of 2. Mr Alderman John Holmes was nominated by the party in council favourable to the ruling of the dock estate. The numbers were respectively 30 to 28.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

AUSTRIA.

Our latest news from Vienna is to the 5th instant. Prince Windischgrätz was vigorously putting Vienna in a state of siege. His troops were bivouacking in all the public streets and thoroughfares. Jellachich had just marched in triumph through the streets at the head of twenty-five of his Croats in their red cloaks. The aspect of these soldiers has created great sensation in Vienna. No one is now allowed to leave the place: even the deputies have not been allowed passports. The Diet had dissolved itself, only sixty members being present in the capital. The head-quarters of Windischgrätz were still at Schönbrunn, but which had taken up his quarters in the Palace of Archduke Maximilian's Est.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT WINDSOR.

On Sunday morning the Queen and the Royal Family and household attended Divine Service in the private chapel of the Castle. The prayers were read by the Hon. and Rev. C. L. Courtenay, domestic chaplain to the Queen; the sermon being preached by the Rev. Dr. Philpott.

On Wednesday afternoon the Queen Dowager and suite arrived at the Castle at half-past one o'clock from Marlborough House in carriages and four, with outriders. The Queen Dowager was received at the grand entrance by her Majesty and the Royal Children, the Princess Royal, the Princess of Hohenlohe-Langenburg, &c. The Queen Dowager's household, the ladies in waiting, the maids of honour, &c., in attendance. It was expected that the Queen Dowager would prolong her visit to the Castle until Saturday (this day)

On Thursday the birth-day of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales was celebrated. The troops in garrison at Windsor assembled in the Home Park, and passed in review before her Majesty and the Royal family, after which they fired a feu de joie. In the evening there was a Royal banquet in the Waterloo Chamber, at which a number of the nobility were present.

THE Queen of the Belgians left Claremont on Saturday, and proceeded by the South-Western Railway to Dover, where her Majesty was received by the Duke of Wellington. The Queen embarked immediately on board the Garland for Ostend.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

PRINTERS' PENSION SOCIETY.—On Tuesday evening a general meeting of the committee and subscribers to this society was held at the London Tavern; Mr. Henry Fly, of Bangor house printing establishment, in the chair. The report for the past year was read, and was stated to be of most satisfactory character. Although at the close of the last election there were 55 pensioners on the funds (5 beyond the original number contemplated), the annual subscriptions had been more than sufficient to meet the expenditure, which was partly attributable to the unusual mortality which had occurred amongst the pensioners, no fewer than 12 having died within the year, all at an advanced age, the length of time they had been upon the society ranging from 6 months to 19 years, making an average of 9 years each. A further addition of £430 6s. 10d. had, in the last year, been made to the funded property of the society, making a total amount of £5061 4s. 6d. The number of pensioners, including the Whittingham pensioner, is 52; and since the formation of the society upwards of 180 aged and infirm members of the trade have been relieved. The total amount of receipts for the last year, from all sources, was £1378 3s. 9d.; leaving £117 12s. 9d. balance in hand.

BASINGSTOKE CANAL COMPANY.—This company held their half-yearly general meeting at the Gray's-Inn Coffee-house, on Monday. The minutes of the last general meeting were read and confirmed, as also was the statement of the receipts and expenditure of the Company for the past year. On the motion of Mr. Labouchere, proprietor, it was agreed that the sum of £1000, now invested in Exchequer Bills, should be sold out, and that at present invested in debentures of one of the great railway companies. A committee of three was at the same time nominated, for the purpose of watching the railway company in whose debentures the investment should be made. After some other formal business had been transacted, the meeting separated

WESLEY AN MISSIONS.—On Monday evening, the annual meeting of the Southwark branch of the Wesleyan Missionary Society was held at the Southwark Chapel, in Long-lane; W. Atherton, Esq., in the chair. The report stated that the total income of the parent society for the past year was £106,513 11s. 1d., while the expenditure during the same period amounted to £114,606 17s. 6d., leaving a balance of £5093 5s. 5d. due to the treasurers. The income of this branch during the past year had amounted to £435 1s. 9d., showing a falling off of nearly £40, as compared with the previous year. The report concluded with an earnest appeal to the meeting not to allow the missionary cause to decline through apathy or want of funds.

FREE BATHS AND WASH-HOUSES.—On Monday the committee made a special report, accompanied by an appeal for assistance, in support of the institution in Goulston-square, East Whitechapel, for the cleanliness amongst the poor, by baths, wash-houses, and cleansing and purifying their dwellings, without a farthing of expense to close and resort to its advantages. During the last twelve months 30,360 had bathed, 34,843 washed and dried, and 1,640 had froned. The receipts of the Baths and Wash-houses for the past year were £274 6s., while the expenditure amounted to £367 3s. 11d

THE LONDON COFFEE AND EATING-HOUSE KEEPERS' ASSOCIATION.—On Monday a meeting of the committee of management, and others interested in the welfare of the society, was held at the Freemason's Tavern, for the transaction of general business; Mr. William French, President, in the chair. The report stated that the institution was established in 1837, having for its objects the relief of aged members, and annuities to widows and orphans; that for the past year the funded property had been augmented to £1969 8s. 10d.; and that there was a balance in hand of £69 11s. 11d. There are now five pensioners on the funds, who receive 5s. per annum, being within £9 3s. 4d. of the yearly interest on the capital invested. The report concluded with an appeal to their brother tradesmen, to enable the committee to extend the benefits of the institution.

EARLY CLOSING ASSOCIATION.—On Tuesday a very large and respectably-attended meeting of the members and friends of this association was held at the City of London Literary and Scientific Institution, Aldersgate-street. The Lord Mayor took the chair, and was attended by several influential gentlemen and friends of the metropolis. The proceedings were opened by a short address from the Lord Mayor, who stated in accordance with the views of the association for putting an end to the late hours of business. His Lordship further remarked that the meeting that he had presided over a similar one at Exeter Hall in March last, and, as on that occasion, he could not but devote the last evening of his year of office to a better purpose than that which had called them together. The secretary (Mr Littell) then read several letters from ladies, merchants, and others, who had expressed their approbation of the objects of the association. Amongst them were letters from the Bishop of London, Baron Rothschild, Mr. Masterman, M.P., and Mr. Mechi, of Leadenhall-street. Mr. Reed, a gentleman who had been a member of the shopkeeping classes and explanatory of the manner of vindicating those rights, were then put by the Rev. Mr. Brenth, Drs Lankester and Guy, and several other gentlemen, whose addresses in support of the different resolutions were highly applauded by the audience. The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

INFANT ORPHAN ASYLUM, WANSTEAD.—On Monday morning, at 11 o'clock, the annual general court of the governors and subscribers to this institution, which was established in 1827, and incorporated in 1843, was held at the London Tavern, for the purpose of electing 40 children out of a list of 155 candidates on the funds of the asylum. Charles Pearson, Esq., vice-president, presided; and shortly after three o'clock, when the poll closed, he announced the names of the successful candidates. From a report which was submitted to the meeting, it appeared that the institution was founded with a view of clothing, nursing, and educating on the principles of the Church of England orphan children of either sex, who remained within its walls until the completion of their eighth year, when they were found for reception into more advanced establishments. The charity was designed more especially for such as were respectably descended, and it had continued many orphans of clergymen, of army and navy officers and others; some, however, were admitted whose parents had married themselves by honest industry, independent of parochial aid. The building was adapted to the accommodation of 400 children, and the present election made the number of children admitted within the last two years 195, nearly completing the number for which the asylum was designed. Upwards of 1,00 children had been admitted into the charity since its establishment; nevertheless, want of funds [illegible] compelled them sometimes very much the extent of [illegible] An urgent appeal, therefore, was made for increased donations

GENERAL BENEVOLENT FUND. A meeting of the members of this association was held on Wednesday, at the Lyceum; Mr Worrell in the chair. From the last annual report it appeared that the funded capital of the institution exceeded £4000, and that the members had been enabled to make an addition of £6 per annum to each of the annuitants of £25, elected in 1846. Her Majesty had become an annual subscriber of 100 guineas. Among other patrons of the drama, who are warm supporters of the fund (which admits members of the profession not eligible for the funds of Covent-Garden or Drury-Lane Theatres), may be mentioned the Duke of Devonshire, the Earls Ellesmere and Ellesmere, Sir Bellingham Graham, Bart., Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton, Bart., Hon. T. Hope, Mr. [illegible] Mr. Charles Kemble, and many others. Several gentlemen were elected, thanks were voted to the secretary.

THE REFUGE FOR YOUNG CRIMINALS DISCHARGED FROM PRISON.—On Wednesday, a meeting of governors and committee of this institution was held at the board-room of the institution of the male establishment in Hatton-garden. The meeting was called that the old building in the [illegible] and having long been found inadequate for the wants of its inmates, a resolution had been passed that a freehold piece of ground, situate at Battersea, a most salubrious spot, extending over three acres, should be purchased for a new erection. The land would cost £3000, and would [illegible] hundred and fifty males and females had, during the last year, been [illegible] of above 7000. The boys are employed in shoemaking, tailoring, and netting; the girls in laundry, needle, and household work. In addition to which they undergo a course of religious and intellectual training. The former are provided for by apprenticeship and emigration, the latter by servitude.

CHURCH ESTABLISHMENTS.—A meeting of the British Anti-State-Church Association was held on Wednesday evening, at the Horns Tavern, Kennington, Mr. [illegible] M.P., in the chair. The Rev. Mr. Townsend moved the first resolution, declaring that the existence of a state church is injurious to the best interests of Christianity, and incompatible with the full enjoyment of religious liberty.—Agreed to. The second resolution, moved by the Rev. Mr. Green, pledged the meeting to offer them most determined opposition to the scheme for the endowment of the Roman Catholic clergy for Ireland, which, it is supposed, will be brought forward in the next session of Parliament. A Mr. Jones explained the plan of agitation against the Established Church which the association has determined upon, by sending a corps of lecturers to various quarters to institute a provincial agitation during the ensuing winter. This resolution was also agreed to, and the meeting separated.

THE PROTECTION OF TRADE.—On Tuesday a special general meeting of the London Association for the Protection of Trade was held at Exeter-Hall, called by the solicitor, Mr. Cottam, on the requisition of three members, requiring to receive and consider a report from a provisional committee of subscribers, relative to the proceedings recently adopted by the committee of management of the association in having voted the amalgamation of the association with another society, without the concurrence of the association, in discharging all the officers of the association, suspending the business of the association, and in disowning themselves as committee, without having given notice of either of those intentions in the summons for the meeting at which the important proceedings were adopted, and also in contravention of an existing by-law of the committee of management, and also to pass such resolutions as the meeting might deem expedient. Mr. Cottam having been called to the chair, recalled to the meeting the purposes for which the Protection of Trade Association had been formed, among which was the suppression of solicitors, who, after receiving applications by the secretary of the association for the payment of debts due to members, was to apply professionally for the debts so unpaid. Between the months of June and September, 1848, the association, by its own applications, had collected £2156 of debts; and in the same period, the solicitor had further collected the sum of £1664 14s. 9d., having further given advice to members on many matters in 200 cases—his salary for these and all other duties being £100 a year. But certain differences which had arisen between the secretary of the association and the solicitor had given opportunity for a scheme, on the part of eight of the committee, for special reasons, to amalgamate with the City of London Trade Protection Society, the objects of which were wholly different from those of the West-End association, and then to throw overboard those who, satisfied with the past course of the West-End association, wished to continue it on the same footing as heretofore. A resolution, declaring the amalgamation void, was passed, and a new committee of management was appointed; and Mr Cottam was nominated President, in the room of Alderman Copeland, M.P., resigned, which closed the proceedings.

ABOLITION OF CHRISTMAS BOXES.—On Tuesday evening, a meeting of deputations of the tradesmen of all trades from St. Luke's, Islington, Mile-end, St. Pancras, Clare-market, Southwark, &c., representing several associations in those neighbourhoods was held at the London Coffee-house, Snowhill, "for the purpose of affording tradesmen of the above districts the opportunity of expressing their opinion for uniting firmly in suppressing the custom at the ensuing Christmas, and to adopt measures to carry that object into effect." A long conversation took place on the best plan to be pursued, when a resolution was agreed to unanimously, "that the custom of giving Christmas boxes is unjust in principle, injurious in practice, and entails such a heavy tax upon tradesmen that it ought to be abolished."

TRIAL BY JURY.—On Tuesday the 54th anniversary of the triumph of trial by jury, as exemplified in the acquittal of Thomas Hardy, John Horne Tooke, John Thelwall, John Augustus Hodgson, and other members of the London Corresponding Society, who, in 1794, were tried for high treason, was celebrated at Radley's Hotel, Blackfriars. Nearly 100 gentlemen sat down to dinner, Mr. Parry, the barrister, occupying the chair. Mr. Hume, Mr. Wakley, M.P., Mr. Duncombe, M.P., and other gentlemen who have taken a prominent part in the progress of reform, being present. Amongst the toasts given were "The Sovereignty of the people," "Hardy, Horne Tooke, Thelwall, &c.," "The Scottish martyrs, Muir, Gerrald, &c."

THE COURT FOR THE TRIAL OF CRIMINAL APPEALS.—The new court under the act mentioned in the last week's Gazette for trying appeals against decisions of the circuits and sessions has appointed Saturday (this day), at two o'clock, for its first sitting. The court will, in pursuance of the provisions of the statute, consist of the chief baron and Justices Patteson, Coleridge, Erle, and Maule.

SALE OF THE REGENT-STREET COLONNADE.—On Tuesday, the elegant fluted cast-iron columns which form the colonnade in the Regent-street Quadrant were brought to the hammer of Mr. Horne, at the Auction Mart, in the City. Paris, Vine-street, by order of Mr. Kelk, the contractor for the Quadrant improvement. The sale was well attended, and the columns, which are of the Roman Doric order, and are 25 feet 3 inches high, including the plinth, are in six, four, and two each, at prices from £7 8s. to £7 10s. per column. The large granite plinths upon which the pillars rest were also sold, and realised 22s. to 24s. each. By one of the conditions of sale, the whole of the colonnade is to be cleared away within twelve days.

BATHS AND WASHHOUSES FOR THE LABOURING CLASSES.—An official report of the commencement of management of the baths and washhouses for the labouring classes in the north western district of London has been published, from which it appears that the total number of bathers, from the opening up to the 8th of October last, amounted to 281,418; the number of bath washers, dryers, rubbers, &c., to 13,430; and the number of persons washed for, &c., to 378,729. The number of baths during the four weeks ending the 8th of October, 1848, amounted to 8209, against 6408 in 1834; the number of washers and dryers to 477, against 3303, in 1847, and the number of individuals washed for, &c., to 19,108, against 13,320 in 1847. A report from the department for cleansing, purifying, and ventilating the dwellings of the poor, from the opening on the 2d of January to the 8th of October, 1848, shows that during that period there were cleansed and lime-washed, and otherwise purified, 320 rooms, 180 staircases, 271 closets, 184 passages, 112 areas. The receipts of the institution, up to the 8th of October last, amounted to £4825, and the expenditure to £4125; whilst a sum of £3702 has been paid off in reduction of the debt.

NECESSITY FOR VEHICLE OBSTRUCTIONS IN THE METROPOLIS.—An inquest was held on Tuesday, before Mr. Mills, at the Builders' Arms, Compton-street, Brunswick-square, on the body of [illegible] who was accidentally knocked down by a Chelsea omnibus, while coming up Whitcomb-street, Leicester-square, at a speed of between six and seven miles an hour, by which his right leg was fractured. In a few days, disease of the chest manifested itself, of which disease he died on the 27th of October. The witnesses swore that the driver might have prevented the accident, if he had only stopped a minute, and that omnibuses went up Whitcomb-street in a reckless and dangerous manner. Deceased's son observed that the inhabitants informed him that they were every day in danger of their lives by the omnibuses.—The Coroner remarked that it was a great thoroughfare, and that he thought the Commissioners of Woods and Forests should pave it so as to have it wider the street.—Verdict—"That the deceased died from a disease of the chest; that the Jury are of opinion that the street in which the said accident happened is a dangerous and unsafe thoroughfare for carriages, which daily pass therein, and that we recommend that some means should be adopted to prevent omnibuses and other vehicles from travelling along that street as they at present accustomed to do."—Mr. Mills suggested to the inhabitants living in the street, then in the [illegible]-room, to memorialise the Commissioners of Police for them to place a policeman there on duty, for the purpose of checking the speed of the omnibuses.

BIRTHS, DEATHS, &c.—The number of deaths registered in the returns of the Registrar General for the week ending Saturday last in the metropolis amounts to 1118; being, notwithstanding the long continuance of wet weather, and the reported increase of the cholera, 89 below the weekly average for 1847 and the four preceding years. The greater number of deaths have arisen from zymotic diseases, the number being 493, the average of deaths in former years from these diseases was only 370. The deaths from tubercular diseases are 161; being 26 below the average of former years. From diseases of the lungs the deaths for the last week were 126, being 57 below the average. From small-pox, 36; being above the average. On scarlatina, 3; being in the return of the average. From cholera, 5; [illegible] in former years, the average per week was one; and [illegible] phus, 77, the average number being 50. From phthisis, 101; being 21 below the average. The proportion of the deaths of males and females is almost even; those of males being 565, and those of females 550. The total number of births registered during the same week was —of males, 734 (of females, 727, being 346 births above the number of deaths

"THE DANDY BROADWAY SWELL."—The New York Tribune says: "If there's a peculiar hat both and worn in Bond-street, London, a new revolutionary blouse in Paris, an extraordinary pair of trousers in Berlin, a special style of beard among the Persians, Russian whiskers or Roman moustache, look for it in Broadway, and you'll find it."

FIRE AND LOSS OF PROPERTY.—On Friday night week, Mr. Chadwick's wool mill, at Villafield, Aberdeen, was reduced to ashes. The building was a three-storied one, and contained with a large and valuable stock of wool and worsted [illegible]. It is [illegible] that the building was insured, but not the goods.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

THE PIRATED ROYAL ETCHINGS.

(Before Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce.)

On Monday, the Solicitor-General, Mr. Sergeant Talfourd, and Mr. W. M. Kime, moved ex parte on behalf of the Attorney-General (representing her Majesty), for an injunction against [illegible] and others, restraining them from publishing circumstances, as appeared from the affidavits filed in support of the motion. The defendant, William Strange, a printer and publisher in Paternoster-row, had published a pamphlet, entitled "A Descriptive Catalogue of the Royal Victoria and Albert Gallery of Etchings," the introduction to which contained the following:—

The great interest which every loyal and affectionate subject of her Majesty cannot fail to feel in all the relics to works of art executed by her Majesty and the Royal Husband, Prince Albert, has induced the proprietor of this portfolio, unless otherwise a decision of etchings to submit them to public exhibition, and thus enable the whole nation to form an opinion of the [illegible] Majesty and the Prince Consort's [illegible] of the fine arts, as well as of it has been admitted it is so difficult to exec [illegible], or even to [illegible] and his Royal Highness Prince Albert) contains portraits of the Prince Consort, the Prince of Wales (the Queen being at the head of the other members of the Royal family and personages of the day), many of which were drawn by her Majesty from life, as likewise the transfer to copper was most admirably effected by the Queen and his Royal Highness. The collection also contains portraits of the favourite dogs of the Queen and Prince Albert, taken by the Royal artists while alive, many [illegible] to old and dear departed friends by the possession of her Majesty, several, from the originals, designs of the Queen and his Royal Highness, representing events in the journals of the Queen's and Prince Albert's domestic life, and a variety of interesting works (some from fictional drawings by Landseer and other eminent artists), the whole being of a character which cannot fail to interest all classes."

The case came before the Court upon an information as regarded the etchings of her Majesty, and upon a bill filed by Prince Albert as regarded those of his Royal Highness. The relief sought was, that the defendant Strange might be ordered to deliver up all impressions and copies of the etchings, and might be restrained by injunction from exhibiting them, or from making any copies of the same, or from in any manner publishing them, and from publishing the descriptive catalogue. Various passages from the catalogue were set out in the pleadings, and which were comments and criticisms on the various etchings (53 in number) described in it. The original motion for an injunction was made during the session, upon affidavits, and a motion was made by Prince Albert.

An injunction was granted on this application; but it had been since discovered that a person named Jasper Tomsett Judge, and his son, Jasper A. T. Judge, of Windsor, were connected with the intended publication, and Lucy having been made defendants to the suits, by amendment, the present motion was made to extend the injunction to them.

In support of the application, Mr. John Burgiss Brown, of Windsor, printer, deposed that he was entrusted by her Majesty and the Prince with the printing of impressions from the etchings in question, and always faithfully returned to [illegible] Palace all the perfect impressions which were made; that he employed in the work a pressman, whom he had always considered as a confidential servant, but was, now believes, careful as to the quantity of print paper which he gave out, and in seeing that it was all returned. A printer, named Whittington, who worked for Mr. Brown, deposed that a few days after the 20th of May he had surreptitiously took off impressions of the etchings for himself on card or common paper, and that the deponent had himself about 13 of those impressions which were produced and given him, but that the deponent had not delivered any one of those impressions except his wife. He had met the defendant Jasper Tomsett Judge in the street, who accosted him in such a manner as evidently showed he knew that the deponent had some of the prints, and the defendant Judge said he could make it worth the deponent's while, if the deponent wished to dispose of them; but the deponent declined the offer, and did not meet the defendant Judge as what he had got.

A gentleman named John Farrow Lawrence, of Albert-terrace, Windsor, also deposed that he knew the defendant Jasper Tomsett Judge: that he recollected hearing a conversation between the defendant and his son Jasper Tomsett Judge had a collection of prints and etchings made by her Majesty and Prince Albert; and he afterwards met the said Jasper Tomsett Judge, and he said to him in substance that he had some drawings of the Queen's and the Prince's, to which the said Jasper Tomsett Judge replied, "Oh, you are quite welcome to see them and that about a month after such conversation he called at the house of the defendant Judge, who then produced to him a portfolio, from which he took it, and told him they had been engraved by the Prince and Queen, and that he observed the names of the Queen and Prince Albert on them, and he noticed that they were executed in the manner as appeared now produced.

The Vice-Chancellor asked if there was evidence of an intention to publ

The Solicitor General read the affidavits to indicate the intention.

The Vice-Chancellor: Then let the injunction be extended to those defendants.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS COURT.

IN RE DION DE BOURCICAULT, DRAMATIC AUTHOR.—(Before Mr Commissioner Law.) This insolvent, the dramatic writer, author of "Used up," &c., applied on Wednesday, under the Protection Act. From the insolvent's examination, it appeared that he had, in June last, appeal to the Court of Bankruptcy, under the Debtor and Creditor Private Arrangement Act, as to the learned Commissioner termed it, "The Clandestine Bankruptcy Act," and his petition had been dismissed. On being asked what countryman he was, he said he was an Irishman, but his father was a Yorkshireman, and his mother was Bourcicault, and when in France he had passed as Viscount de Bourcicault, to which title he had a [illegible]. He had pleaded to an action for some Bradford dresses, a plea of infancy, by the name of John Dion Bourcicault. He was interested in a new opera, entitled "Esmeralda," for which M. Jullien had offered him £300, and Mr. Addison, the stage manager, £292. He had written Jealous Wives, and Mr. Benedict composed the music. Mr. Nichols put the manuscript of the opera into the hands of the registrar of the Court, saying that if he was given up to the creditors, the opera would be lost. In answer to further questions, the insolvent and he was author of "Used Up," performed at the Haymarket Theatre, for which he received £30; and, on account of his success, Mr. Webster had given him £100. He said also that in

LORD MAYOR'S DAY.

NEW DECORATIONS AT GUILDHALL.

YEAR by year have we illustrated the pageant splendour of the great Civic Festival—the memorable 9th of November—when what would have been called in times of yore the Installation Feast of London's Lord, takes place in the Guildhall of the City. The out-door Pageant, and the in-door Banquet, have annually been pictured in our pages; and our Artists have even travelled many centuries back, to pourtray the ceremonial in all its antique grotesqueness, compared with which the Show of the present day is but a quiet affair.

In the fittings of the Guildhall and the adjoining apartments, there has been, from time to time, a considerable advance of ingenuity and taste. Improved modes of lighting—gas, for example—have greatly heightened the brilliancy of the scene. And, within these few years, there has been a good deal of very meritorious exertion on the part of the superintendents of the entertainment to provide highly artistic gratification for the company—an elegant species of exhibition peculiarly fitted to succeed the Banquet itself. The reader is, doubtless, aware that upon this occasion the Courts adjoining the Guildhall are used as reception and promenade rooms. In the Council-Chamber, a sort of levee is held by the Lord and Lady Mayoress before dinner, and after, this spacious room is devoted to dancing. In a corridor adjoining was exhibited, for the first time, on Thursday night, the fine transparent model we have here engraved. The subject is the famed Rialto, at Venice, built in 1589-91, by Da Ponte, and consisting of a single arch, 98 feet span. The model is cleverly constructed, and painted by Mr. F. Fenton, under the superintendence of Mr. J. B. Bunning, Clerk of the Works to the City of London. It is a very effective piece of set scene-work, lighted after the improved method now adopted in our theatres.

The Insignia, which we have also engraved, were placed over the Lord Mayor's Table in the Guildhall. The group consists of the gigantic insignia of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, the feathers being nine feet high, and made of spun glass. Beneath are the civic emblems.

A new entrance has also been constructed for the exterior of the Guildhall. It consists of a large central arch, flanked with canopies, surmounted with pinnacles—the whole decorated with flags, and emblazoned with arms. At night, when the light of a large gas star was thrown upon the screen and the Hall front, the effect was very brilliant, especially when seen from the end of King-street.

ROYAL AND CIVIC INSIGNIA, AT GUILDHALL.

SWEARING-IN OF THE LORD MAYOR.

THIS ceremony took place in the Guildhall on Wednesday, after the members of the Company to which the Lord Mayor belongs, the late Lord Mayor (he being virtually out of office), several of the Aldermen, the Sheriffs, and a number of the civic authorities, had partaken of a sumptuous breakfast at the Mansion-house. Shortly after two o'clock, the civic procession reached Guildhall, and advanced in the first instance, to the new Council Chamber, and then into the hall, when Sir James Duke took the various oaths of allegiance and supremacy. The Lord Mayor entered the chamber on the arm of his brother Aldermen, and was conducted by his predecessor into the civic chair; when the Chamberlain delivered to his Lordship the purse, and to the mace-bearer and sword-bearer their respective badges of office, which his Lordship restored to the present bearers, expressing a hope that they may long continue to enjoy their office. After the usual forms and ceremonies, the Lord Mayor and the members of the Corporation returned to the Mansion-house.

NEW PICTURE-MODEL AT GUILDHALL.—THE RIALTO, AT VENICE.

ORDER OF THE PROCESSION ON LORD MAYOR'S DAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1848.

Police Constables to clear the way.
Boys belonging to the Royal Marine Society, with Banners.
Six Police Constables.
Band of the Royal Artillery.
Royal Standard. The Arms of the Grocers' Company
The Arms of the Right Hon. William Pitt. The Arms of the Marquis Cornwallis.
Saint Anthony. Arms of Sir John Hopkins.
The Arms of the City of London. The Union Flag.
The Barge Master, Watermen.
The Beadle.
The Clerk of the Company in a Chariot.
The Gentlemen of the Livery in Carriages.
Gentlemen of the Court of Assistants in Carriages.
The Wardens of the Company in a Carriage.
The Master in a Chariot, accompanied by his Chaplain.
A Military Band.
Watermen, bearing the following Banners:—
Streamers of the Company's Arms. Streamer of the Arms of the City of London.
Royal Standard.
Arms of the late Alderman Sanatary. The Arms of Mr. Sheriff Finnis.
Arms of the City of London. The Union Jack.
The Arms of the Worshipful Company of Bowyers.
The Clerk of the Company in his Chariot.
The Gentlemen of the Court of Assistants in their Carriages.
The Wardens of the Company.
The Master in his Chariot.
Under Beadle of the Worshipful Company of Vintners.
Three Watermen of the Vintners Company in their Uniforms. Three Watermen Company in their Uniforms with cockades.
Full Dress.
Vintners' Dress.
Full Uniform
The Worshipful Company of Vintners
Watermen in Liveries.
Banner of St. Martin.
Bacchus drawn by Leopards.
Banner of M
The Grand Streamer, supported by Three M
the Vessels borne by Two Pages.
Two Watermen in Liveries, Two Watermen in Liveries to roll
Mayor's Sa
The Master in his Chariot, accompanied by
The Beadle of the Worshipful Company of S
The Barge Master,
Watermen, the following Banners
2. The Banner of St
4. The Arms of the late Alderman
5. The Arms of William Clarke
6. The Arms of John Lidson.
9. The Arms of Ja
10. The Arms of H
12. The A
13. The Arms
14. The Arms
15. The Arms of the Upper W John Skeswright, Esq
16. The Arms of the Ri Marquis of Downshire
17. The Arms of the Mas Hon. the Lord Mayor.
18. The Arms of Key
19. The Arms
Banner of
The Junior Master
The Clerk of the Company in his Chariot.
The Court of Assistants in their Carriages.
The Wardens of the Company in their Carriages.
The Lord Mayor's Beadle
FULLY RIGGED MANNED
on a Car drawn by Six Horses.
The Lord Mayor's Barge Master in his State Dress.
The Bargemen bearing the various Colours.
The Pages
The Captain of the Thames Barge.
The Principal Assistant Water Bailiff
The Watermen with Colours.
A Grand Military Band.

The Two Under-Sheriffs.
The City Solicitor,
The Remembrancer
The Comptroller,
The Two Secondaries
The Four Common Pleaders.
The Judge of the Sher ffs' Court.
The Town Clerk
The Common Sergeant.
The Chamberlain.
Assistants
He staid in a Tavern with the Aldermen, England and Flamed, Kettle Drums. Guard on Horseback.
Guard on Horseback. Trumpeter on Horseback.
Trumpeter on Horseback.
Guard on Horseback. Guard on Horseback.
Standard-Bearer, in Half-Armour, bearing the Banner of his Knight.
Esquire, in Half-Armour, bearing the Sword.
Yeoman of the Guard.
ANCIENT KNIGHT,
Mounted on a Charger, armed Cap-a-pie, in a suit of Polished Armour, and Plumed.
Armourer
HARI
Trumpeter on Horseback.
Guard on Horseback. Guard on Horseback.
Standard-Bearer, in Half-Armour, bearing the Banner of his Knight bearing the Sh eld
Esquire, in Half-Armour, bearing the Sword.
ANCIENT KNIGHT, Yeoman of the Guard.
Mounted on a Charger, armed Cap-a-pie, in a suit of Burnished Brass Scale Armour, Armourer, and Plumed. Armourer. Guard.
Guard on Horseback. Guard on Horseback.
Mr. SHERIFF FINNIS, in his State Chariot.
The Aldermen who have not passed the Chair.
The Recorder.
The Ald rmen who have passed the Chair.
THE LATE LORD MAYOR.
Trumpeter on Hors trumpeter on Horseback
trumpeter on Horseback.
Guard on Horseback.
Armour, bearing the Banner of h i Knight
Squires in Half-Armour, Guard
ANCIENT KNI pie, in a suit of Polished
Armour Armourer on Horseback drawn by Six Horses, joined the on its return from Westminster back. Trumpeter on Horseback.
trumpeter on Horseback
the Banner of his Shield
Sword.
Lieutenant of the Guard.
ANCIENT KNIGHT,
Cap-a-pie, in a suit of Burnished
Armour, and Plumed
Armourer
Guard on Horseback.
the Liveries.

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE LORD MAYOR
In his State Carriage drawn by Six Horses,
Attended by the Chaplain, Sword Bearer, Common Crier, and the Water Bailiff Guard of Honour on Horseback

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE LORD MAYOR, SIR JAMES DUKE, M.P.

THE LORD MAYOR—SIR JAMES DUKE.

SIR JAMES DUKE, the present Lord Mayor, is the son of a merchant of Montrose: he entered the civil department of the naval service at an early age, and brings to his civic office the experience of a wider sphere of observation in his youth than most of his predecessors.

He first served under Captain Sir Peter

MALCENIO (WHITWORTH). LOREDANO (REEVES). DOMENICO (CORRI) HAYDEE (MISS LUCOMBE) RAFAELLA (MISS MESSENT). ANDREA (MR. HERBERTE).

SCENE FROM THE OPERA OF "HAYDEE," AT COVENT-GARDEN THEATRE.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

Parker, and was with Lord Exmouth when Commander of the Mediterranean station. He was also secretary to the late Admiral Sir John Gore, at the end of the war. On the establishment of peace, he engaged in commercial pursuits in London, where he was established in 1819. The next public event in his career was his being chosen Sheriff of Middlesex, in 1836 : in the previous year he had been appointed magistrate for the county. In 1840 he was elected Alderman for the Ward of Bridge Without. He represents the borough of Boston in Parliament, for which place he was first returned in 1837. He is a Liberal, and has generally voted with the Whigs, though on some points he is rather in advance of the majority in that party. He received the honour of Knighthood from William the Fourth.

The accompanying Portrait of the Lord Mayor is from a Daguerréotype, by Beard, of King William-street, City.

LORD MAYOR'S DAY.

THURSDAY was a brilliant day for the Show, though not quite so genial as last year's Ninth of November. Two fine Lord Mayor's Days in successive years is a meteorological occurrence of great rarity. On Thursday the sun shone resplendently, and there was but little for upon the river to obscure the water pageant. The people came forth in the streets to see the Show ; and the line of streets through which it passed was crowded with spectators.

Early in the morning, the Lord Mayor entertained his predecessor in office, with several Aldermen and personal friends, at the Mansion-house, at breakfast. Hitherto, a public breakfast was given on this day in Guildhall ; this year it has been abolished, in consequence of its materially interfering with the arrangements for the banquet in the evening

The Lord Mayor and party having attended the Church of St. Lawrence, as usual, he proceeded to the Guildhall. The procession started at 12 o'clock precisely.

His Lordship on entering the state carriage was much cheered ; so also was the late Lord Mayor. The procession left in the order given upon the preceding page

The procession passed along King-street, Cheapside, Newgate-street, Skinner-street, Farringdon-street, and New Bridge-street, to Blackfriars-bridge thus grazing a great portion of the inhabitants of the Lord Mayor's Ward (Farringdon Without) with a sight of the pageant : in the fine broad line of Farringdon-street, it was seen to great advantage.

His Lordship, who looked extremely well, was loudly cheered, and flags were hung from several houses in the Ward.

At Blackfriars-bridge the civic party "took water" Then the gilt barges went pleashing on the river, their emblazoned banners gaily fluttering in the wind and the share of partners were crowded with spectators ; and as the gay flotilla passed through the arches, the applause was gone al

THE PRESENTATION AT WESTMINSTER

On reaching Westminster-bridge, the party landed, and walked in procession to the Court of Exchequer, which they entered at two o'clock. Their arrival having been announced to the Judges, their Lordships immediately made their ar ance on the bench in full costume. The Lord Mayor, the late Lord Mayor, the Recorder, the City Remembrancer, and other civic functionaries entered the Court, and having taken up their position in the front row, respectively bowed to the bench

His Recorder then delivered an eloquent address to their Lordships, stating, that he had the honour to present to them the Right Hon. Sir James Duke, who had been chosen by the citizens of the city of London to fill the office of Lord Mayor for the ensuing year. It was with the perfect concurrence of both branches of the Corporation, the Livery and the Court of Aldermen, that this distinction had been conferred upon him, viz. being chosen the chief magistrate of their ancient city ; the advancement of Sir James Duke attracted the attention of his fellow-citizens. He became a Common Councilman, and in 1840 an Alderman of the city of London, having previously been elected to the office of Sheriff, in 1836, in the course of which year he received the honour of Knighthood ; and on the termination of his year of office he was presented by the Corporation with a valuable piece of plate, as a token of their esteem and approbation of the manner in which he had lately called forth the loyalty of the citizens of London, he concluded by stating, that, should any period of difficulty and danger arise, they would confidently rely upon the zeal and stability of his character to meet it, being particularly reminded of the services rendered by his eminent predecessor, the late Lord Mayor, in anticipating the emergency to which he had alluded. "In conclusion," added the Recorder, "nor is this the only instance and example of praise and panegyric on which the citizens of London might be tempted to dwell and enlarge. Following the late Lord Mayor into the retirement and privacy of social life, his domestic progress was signalized in the most amiable light ; and in the assemblies of the Corporation, in the justice-room and the Mansion House, he has left a deep impression of his superior aptitude for business, of the kindliness and affability of his nature, of the sagacious of purpose, sagacity, and good sense, that never failed to mark his public deportment throughout the mayoralty."

The Chief Baron congratulated Sir James upon the high and distinguished honour which had been conferred upon him.

The form of swearing-in was then gone through ; after which the Recorder, as usual, invited the Judges to the banquet at Guildhall.

The Lord Mayor, attended as before, then left the court and proceeded in procession to the Court of Queen's Bench, the Court of Common Pleas, and the Courts of Chancery, where the invitation to the banquet was also given. The civil party then returned, and re-embarked for Blackfriars-bridge.

RETURN OF THE PROCESSION

The civic procession having re-formed, returned by Bridge-street At Whitehall Obelisk it was joined by H. Ambassador, her Majesty's Ministers, the nobility, Judges, Members of Parliament, and other guests for the banquet.

The streets were densely crowded, and the Lord Mayor, as well as his personal escort, was warmly cheered The procession in its line of costumes of all ages, and vehicles of various build, from the gilt coach of the last century to the state carriages of yesterday, its assemblage of horses of old and of to-day, its martial bands and emblems of peace, is mock en valry, and alternations of theatric taste and real civic state—appeared to be longer than usual. The Companies came out in stronger muster than last year : we had, for instance, the Bowyers' Company, carrying back to a far-distant age. The distinctive and great point of attraction was a large model of a ship of war, drawn upon a car, with "streamers waving in the wind," &c. &c. The model was manned by a living crew ; and this emblem of our "wooden walls" was loudly cheered. The Fishmongers had a happy reference to the Lord Mayor's early services. If we remember rightly, Alderman Sir John Pirie introduced the ship in their procession.s, both these Lord Mayors being connected with the mercantile marine.

THE DINNER

In the evening, the Lord Mayor gave the customary entertainment in the Guildhall. Among the numerous guests present were, on the right of the Lord Mayor, Alderman Hooper, late Lord Mayor, the Marquis of Londonderry, Lord Lyndhurst, Lord Campbell, Sir G. Grey, Mr. Sheriff Finnis and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Duke and Duchess of Northumberland, &c. On the left were the Lady Mayoress, the Lady Mayoress, Lord Denman, Mr Baron Parke, Mr Justice Patteson, Mr. Baron Alderson, Mr. Sheriff Goodhart and lady, Mr. Justice Coltman, Mr. Justice Coleridge, Mr. Attorney-General, Mr. Solicitor-General.

Lord John Russell was prevented being present by indisposition.

Grace was said by the Rev. Mr. Cutley, Chaplain to the Lord Mayor.

After the cloth was withdrawn and the wine cup had passed round,

The Lord Mayor said : I congratulate myself that the first act of my official career is to invite you to pay a mark of respect and enthusiasm to our beloved Sovereign (loud cheers) ; and amidst the mighty changes which have occurred, elsewhere, it is matter of rejoicing that we can still bear testimony to the loyalty of the City of London, and of the inhabitants of the kingdom at large. (Cheers.) But we may be the changes occurring elsewhere, we have the satisfaction of feeling that the country remains firmly united together in attachment to our most gracious Queen, and in obedience to the law. With these observations, I beg you will join me in drinking the health of our most gracious Queen, and a long and happy reign to her.

The toast having been received most enthusiastically, with all the honours, Air. Sheriff Johnson proposed "Prince Albert, Albert Prince of Wales, and the rest of the Royal Family."

His Lordship next proposed in laudatory terms "The Army and Navy," which was suitably responded to by Lord Hardinge

Admiral Dundas shortly returned thanks on behalf of the Navy

The next toast, "the late Lord Mayor," was acknowledged by Mr. Alderman Hooper.

The Lord Mayor, in proposing "Her Majesty's Ministers," expressed his deep regret at the temporary indisposition which caused the absence of the Prime Minister on the present occasion, and then went on to observe—Though it is well known what are my opinions with regard to the present Government, and that I am always happy to give them my humble support, yet I think I shall not be suspected of making any party observations when I say, that our best thanks are due to them on the present occasion It must at all times be matter of gratification to the citizens of London, that the Government that citizens of London will always be happy to set an example of loyalty to the Sovereign, and of obedience to the law. I have much pleasure in proposing the health of the Marquis of Lansdowne, and the other members of her Majesty's Government. (Cheers.)

The Marquis of Lansdowne, on rising to acknowledge the toast, was received with loud cheers. He said, I beg leave, on behalf of my colleagues here present, to return you our hearty thanks for the honour which you have done us. I cannot do so without at the same time, expressing great regret that my noble friend, the noble Lord at the head of the Treasury, and who is also one of your representatives in Parliament, is unable, from indisposition, to attend here this day. It is matter of peculiar regret for him : because never was there a moment at which all persons, whether invested with authority or without it, might be more proud to render respect to this city of London, and to partake of its hospitality, than at the close of this eventful year—a year which, I say, has placed the city of London in the most advantageous point of view, as compared with any other city in the world, because, after the events of the year, however we may sympathise with the feelings, and however we may desire the triumph of the sword which has been drawn in the cause of order, and in defence of society—it is, nevertheless, matter of great satisfaction, and will be, to our dying day, that, during the whole of this eventful year, this great city has remained in peace, and that it required nothing more than that peace, but the exercise of the civil power. That is a reflection which we shall always carry with us—which must also be a source of satisfaction to us; for neither the Government nor the people of this country are likely to forget that the peace and the tranquillity of the City was preserved, and all apprehensions of danger were allayed, through the exertions of the citizens themselves, and in an especial manner through the exertions of the gentlemen who sits at my right hand (cheers), whose zealous, steady, and successful discharge of his duties as Lord Mayor last year has left the city of London as he has left the constitution of the country, in a happier, prouder, and safer condition than ever it was in before (loud cheers). He then proposed the health of the Lord Mayor elect, and prosperity to the city of London.

The Lord Mayor shortly returned thanks, and then, in a complimentary address, proposed the health of M. de Beaumont, Minister of France, and the Foreign ambassadors.

The French Ambassador, in acknowledging the compliment, offered the best thanks of his colleagues for the cordial hospitality which of late had been so kindly bestowed upon a gentleman of the name of Orleal, visit to the country (Cheers). The land of England was a land of liberty, and of hospitality for all foreigners: it was a bond of friendship for Frenchmen. England had opened her arms as well as her frontiers to Frenchmen. She did right in doing so : she did right for her own interest. A noble country like England, in order to be admired and beloved, wanted only to be known. The best answer she could make to still existing, though every day vanishing prejudices, was to show herself to every eye. "Let us, my Lord," said his Excellency, "enjoy—let Europe, let all the people of Europe enjoy—the blessing and the benefit of that mutual good understanding which is and ever will be, the best security for the maintenance of the peace of the world. We no more entertain, neither in England nor France, that false opinion, that the prosperity of one country is founded upon the misery of another. (Cheers.) We think, on the contrary, that the best guarantee of their happiness is the happiness of all. (Continued cheering.)

Allow me in conclusion, and in apologising for bad English (laughter and cheers), to tell you that it will be for my countrymen a most happy and delightful day when a visit as very desired visit of Englishmen to Paris, will afford the Parisians an opportunity of expressing, better than I can do by words, the feelings of kindness and of sympathy which they entertain for all England, particularly for the City of London." (Great cheering.)

Several toasts followed, including "The Bar," "The Sheriffs, &c.; and the company separated at a late hour, after a most agreeable evening.

The dinner was excellently served by Messrs. Younghusband and Son, of Gerard's-hall-chambers, Basinghall-street.

Among the improvements at Guildhall should be mentioned the facilities for the ingress and egress of visitors, instead of the single entrance in the centre porch, by side entrances, through the hall and lobbies of the law courts, into excellent clock and waiting-rooms. These new entrances and lobbies are fitted up with the large plate-glass doors of the most magnificent gas chandeliers, and the arrangements are so perfect that the cold draughts of wind hitherto complained of have been prevented to a considerable extent.

THE STATE LIVERIES, which are in superb taste, were made by Messrs. Wade and Fowler, Holborn-hill. The coats are of Waterloo blue, the other garments of white kerseymere ; the whole profusely embroidered with gold in oak leaves interspersed with roses, the emblem of Sir James Duke's native town Montrose : the ladies, his crest, a griffin rampant holding a wreath of roses in the fore paws. The hats, by Messrs. Lincoln and Bennett, are decorated in the same costly style The wools of the embroidery has been executed by Messrs Wilson, of Lombard street ; this being the first time these eight years that the liveries have been entirely executed within the City of London.

MUSIC.

M. JULLIEN'S PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The scene at the opening concert at Drury-Lane Theatre, on the 3rd instant, has formed the topic of universal conversation. The oldest play-goers do not recollect such a spectacle. The display of loyal enthusiasm at the execution of the National Anthem. It was not merely the assemblage of the regular orchestra, with an additional phalanx of four military bands, the whole surmounted by a colossal drum ; nor was it the combination of the most powerful instruments and voices of the combined band of two hundred executants, but it was the co-operation of the assembled thousands in the theatre, heart and soul, in the cause which rendered this performance of "God save the Queen" such a remarkable event. Upwards of five thousand persons were packed almost upon each other in the interior. From the upper gallery to the very rear of the theatre, fitted up as a ready-room, where the Chinese fashions and the illustrations of the World in the Illustrated London News might be seen, there was one continuous and dense mass of spectators, who seemed divided into waving black lines, like the swell of the ocean. The undulating movement of the parts on the platform had the most curious effect. That there were factious fights amongst such a multitude, may be concluded ; but the dispositions for order had been excellent, and the police did their duty firmly, but with discretion. In the majority of instances, the audience adopted a summary Lynch law, after their own fashion, a little rough sometimes, but bestowed with much good-humor.

The finale during the last part was accompanied with the sensations experienced when the bands executed the anthem. The cries of "Hats off !" were followed by the exhibition of a series of spasmodic and quivering hats at the ends of sticks from the pittes, whilst the women waved handkerchiefs, bonnets, and even shawls, from the boxes and galleries. Three cheers were given for the performers, and the bands retired ; but this was not enough. The masses insisted upon their return ; and for a quarter of an hour the anthem was sung in sections, with an under-current of "Rule Britannia." The mixture of majors and minors, and occasional fierce yells —of frenzied imitations of animals and birds of screams and shrieks of laughter and of roaring—formed an ensemble of sounds impossible to afford any notion of. Say that Jullien's band, with the same capacity, on the last night, by Barret, Maycock, and Prospere, and the "Ratapian," by Koenig, first-rate The crescendo of the Bombardon of the Pogmadis is well brought out ; and Jullien's shake of the stick at his favorite Grunia, highly impressive and St. Bartholomewish

Miss Miran is the vocalist for the year She has been very well received in her songs. The company of which she now works, is enough to produce a good Italian Opera, is enormous. The "Pif paf," on the opheoleide, by Collinet, is marvellously done ; Baumann's bit on the bassoon, "In mistress' eyebrow is true and beauty," is done with the same capacity, in the last act, by Barret, Maycock, and Prospere, and the "Ratapian," by Koenig, first-rate The crescendo of the Bombardon of the Pogmadis is well brought out ; and Jullien's shake of the stick at his favorite Grunia, highly impressive and St. Bartholomewish

Miss Miran is the vocalist for the year She has been very well received in her songs. The company of which she now works, is enough to produce a good Italian Opera, is enormous. The "Pif paf," on the opheoleide, by Collinet, is marvellously done ; Baumann's bit on the bassoon, "In mistress' eyebrow is true and beauty," is done with the same capacity, in the last act, by Barret, Maycock, and Prospere, and the "Ratapian," by Koenig, first-rate The crescendo of the Bombardon of the Pogmadis is well brought out ; and Jullien's shake of the stick at his favorite Grunia, highly impressive and St. Bartholomewish

Philharmonic Society. -At the yearly meeting on Monday last, the nights of the concerts for the season 1849 were fixed for Mondays, March 12th and 26th, April 16th and 30th, May 14th and 28th, June 11th and 25th. The directors are Sir H. R. Bishop, Messrs Anderson, Griesbach, Howell, Lucas, Neate, and Surte. Mr. G. Budd is secretary and librarian ; Mr. Anderson, honorary treasurer; and Mr. Cusk, conductor of the orchestra.

Sacred Harmonic Society. -The second performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" will take place on Friday next at Exeter Hall, conducted by Costa, when Misses Birch, Dolby, A. Williams, and Duval, Messrs Lockey, A. Novello, and Phillips, as principal singers

Society of British Musicians. -The first concert for the season will be given on Monday next

Western Madrigal Society. -There was a full attendance of members at the first meeting of the society, last Saturday night, at the rooms in Lisle-street, J. Evans, Esq., the President, in the chair. Mr. Turle conducted the madrigals

Miss Linn's Tour. Two operatic performances at the theatre, and one concert at the Town Hall, were given at Brighton, last week. On Friday week, this tour, so far as records exists, terminated : M. Reger being obliged to return to Paris to fulfil his engagement at the Théâtre de la Nation (French Grand Opera-House) on Monday next Mdlle. Lind was at Covent Garden, listening to "Haydn :" we also noticed in the house Thalberg, who had a narrow escape from the Vicenzo revolutionists ; Balfe, Regar, Siemon, F. Labiache, Balatti, &c. On Wednesday, the 8th, a morning concert was given at the Victoria Rooms, Southampton, which were filled but not crowded, the prices (a guinea and a half, two guineas, and half a guinea) being considered too high. The band played the "Oberon" and "Gazza Ladra" overtures. Mdlle. Lind, who was enthusiastically received, sang an air from Weber's "Der Freyschutz," "Non piangete" from Mazzet's "Flauto Magico" (encored), the trio for voice and two flutes from Meyerbeer's "Camp of Silesia," (encored), and "Ah! non giunge" from Bellini's "Sonnambula" (also encored), with Signor Balletti, the duo, "Per pieroce," from Rossini's "Turco ;" and with Signor F. Labiache, Fiorvante's "Singing Lesson." The remainder of the scheme was filled up with singing by F. Labiache and Balletti, and instrumental [illegible] quatuors on themes from "Norma." played by [illegible] Piatti (violoncello), Anglois (contra-basso), Amplini (bassoon), and Zoss (cornet-à-pistons). Mr. Balfe was the conductor

Royal Academy of Music. We are requested by the committee of this institution to state, that, notwithstanding M. Sainton has accepted the post of Professor of the Violin at the Royal Academy of Music, and the duties of which he has fulfilled for many years, with much credit to himself and to the institution. We willingly give place to this rectification of announcement ; and we are gratified to learn that the Royal Academy is not to lose the services of such a valuable professor, who, we may anticipate, will found what was long wanting—a grand and legitimate school of violin playing in this country.

French Opera in London.—Mr. Mitchell is actively engaged in organising a company for French comic operas, to begin in December next, at the St. James's Theatre. Mdlle. Cuarton, Mdlle. Darcier, and M. Coudere are already mentioned amongst the engagements.

Foreign Musical News.—The concert given at the Palace of Versailles, under the direction of Berlioz, in aid of the funds of the "Association des Artistes-Musiciens," was brilliantly attended. The English (horn), Remusat (flute), and Signor [illegible] quatuors on themes from "Norma." played [illegible] Piatti (violoncello), Anglois (contra-basso), Amplini (bassoon), and Zoss (cornet-à-pistons). Mr. Balfe was the conductor

Royal Academy of Music. We are requested by the committee of this institution to state, that, notwithstanding M. Sainton has accepted the post of Professor of the Violin at the Royal Academy of Music, and the duties of which he has fulfilled for many years, with much credit to himself and to the institution. We willingly give place to this rectification of announcement ; and we are gratified to learn that the Royal Academy is not to lose the services of such a valuable professor, who, we may anticipate, will found what was long wanting—a grand and legitimate school of violin playing in this country.

French Opera in London.—Mr. Mitchell is actively engaged in organising a company for French comic operas, to begin in December next, at the St. James's Theatre. Mdlle. Cuarton, Mdlle. Darcier, and M. Coudere are already mentioned amongst the engagements.

Foreign Musical News.—The concert given at the Palace of Versailles, under the direction of Berlioz, in aid of the funds of the "Association des Artistes-Musiciens," was brilliantly attended. The English concert took place in the theatre, brilliantly lighted up, the effect of which was magnificent. This salle [illegible] was not constructed in the time of Louis the Fourteenth, as erroneously stated, but was only finished a few years so late as 1770, having been begun in 1753 ; and the first fete was on the occasion of the marriage of Louis the Sixteenth with the Archduchess Antoinette, in 1781, at a fete in honour of the Dauphin, Marie Antoinette dancing a minuet with a private of the body guard. It was in this saloon, in 1789, that the unfortunate Queen excited the fatal enthusiasm of these guards. It was dispelled during the Revolution, but Louis Philippe restored the theatre to its former grandeur, and it was re-opened in May, 1837. M. Marrast, the President of the National Assembly, was present, and Carafa conducted, applauding with all his force ; but a critic complains of the toilettes of some of the lady performers, who appeared with fanchons, des marmottes, des jupes de laine brune, &c., little in harmony with the gilded saloon The band played the Beethoven "Leonora" and Rossini's "Gazza Ladra" overtures, Berlioz's "Hungarian March," a movement from his "Romeo and [illegible] symphony, and Weber's "Invitation à la Valse ;" in the latter [illegible] eighteen harps. The chorus-singers sang the "Ave verum" of Mozart, and [illegible] scenes from Gluck's "Armida." Madame Meyerbeer, Mdlle. Dorus Gras, Madame Widemann (the contralto, and M. Alexis Dupont the tenor. Madame Dorus sang the "Et vau Perigne," from Meyerbeer's "Robert le Diable," and the palaces from the "Puritani." Madame Widemann gave the "Captive" of Berlioz, and [illegible] vatine from "Semiramide ;" and M. Dupont Beethoven's song of "Adelaide," with the chorus of executants, and the receipts were 6000 francs.—On the report of the Minister of the Interior, M. Dufaure, General [illegible] was to [illegible] three nominating a permanent commission for the [illegible] which is to [illegible] Minister in all questions concerning their administration and legislation, to carry out the existing laws and decrees on things theatrical. M. Bixio is named as President of this commission, and M Lanoue some time ago appointed head examiner already in the Dramatic Office of the Ministry. The members, besides are MM. Barroche, Altaroche, Chorton, and Gerard, who are representatives of the people in the Assembly ; MM. Scribe, Jules Gerard, Mennes, and Halévy, of the Institute, MM. Delsvigne (G.), de Longfré, Gonbaux, Ed. Monnais (Auteurs de lettres) and M. Perrot, as compisé at the bureau des théâtres in the Ministry of the Interior. An energetic proposal for considerable reductions in the Budget in the grants for fine arts and literature has been addressed to the Assembly, by the Mixed Committee of the "Association des Lettres et des Arts." The document is signed by the names of the eminent painters, musicians, sculptors, actors, singers, hommes de lettres, publishers, &c. Mdlle. Masson, who sang in Clapisson's new opera of "Jeanne la Folle," at the Théâtre de la Nation, recently visited a mad-doctor on the score of beauty, in order to do better prepared for her part, had a narrow escape from the attack of a frolicsome woman, who threw two large ladles of hot soup in the face of her mother-in-law, who is entitled "Tartan," in a ruinated fit. Gothic and St. Leon, in which the latter will play the violin.—At the fourth Gewandhaus concert at Leipzic, a MS. overture, by Mendelssohn, was played. -The Stuttgard and Frankfort Opera-Houses have been attended of late.—Mdlle. Cruvelli has been singing with success, as Norma, in Berlin ; where Lucile Grahn is dancing.—M. Musset's management at the Opera-House, in Brussels, is triumphing over its difficulties ; the pieces in the grand genre, and M. Garcia the tenor The singing of Calzolari, the tenor, at the Italian Opera, in Brussels, is praised in "Lucrezia Borgia," which was sustained by Madame Severs, as Lucrezia (Alboni's part). Madame Rossi-Caccia.—Letters from St. Petersburgh announce that the popular contralto, Signora Angri, has recovered from her attack of cholera ; for three days her life was despaired of.—Accounts from Italy describe the extraordinary success of the English prima donna, Miss Hayes

THE THEATRES.

COVENT-GARDEN.

Auber's opera of "Haydée, or the Secret," was produced on Saturday night, and repeated on Monday and Wednesday. This work was originally produced in Paris, at the Théatre de l'Opéra Comique, on the 28th of December, 1847. In the Illustrated London News of January 8 of this year was published a long and careful notice and analysis of the opera of "Haydée," but, although the English adaptation follows the French version very closely, we must not trust to the memory of our musical readers, and shall, therefore, rapidly again refer to the principal situations and musical images.

It should be premised, that, prior to the opening of the drama, Loredano, a Venetian nobleman, when a mere youth, had been a dissipated prodigal and gambler, and, in a moment of desperation, after having lost all his fortune, cheated at dice his friend Donato, the Avogador. In consequence of the latter having died at his wealth, he committed suicide, leaving a niece, Rafaela, and a son, Andrés, without resources. The latter disappears ; but Loredano, overwhelmed with remorse, adopts Rafaela as his ward, bequeaths the fortune he had then spent at play to the son, Andrés, whenever he can be found, and then by numerous acts of charity and benevolence, endeavours to seek death, but does not succeed ; on the contrary, his brave, intrepid, and skilful conduct in the Venetian wars subsequently raises him to the rank of Admiral, and he acquires greater and greater riches, all of which, at his death, enter the Donato family first by his own marriage with Rafaela, but more love, but in order to atone for the loss of her uncle.

Thus stand matters at the rising of the curtain, which displays a rich saloon, the palace of the Governor of Zara, in Dalmatia, at the period of the action a Venetian colony. Here Loredano is discovered drinking with his comrades in arms, amongst whom is Malpero, a Neapolitan, who is not here, a captain of bombardiers in the pay of the Council of Ten, as a spy on their own admiral A pen picture of Loredano by day discovers the horror of Loredano at gaming ; and an offer on the part of the former to marry the admiral's ward, and the admiral's refusal, still further increases the animosity of the Venetian spy, who insultingly declines the proffered services of Loredano by day discovers the horror of Loredano at gaming ; and an offer on the part of the former to marry the admiral's ward, and the admiral's refusal, still further increases the animosity of the Venetian spy, who insultingly declines the proffered services of Loredano, and in a drunken swagger, but who, at the intercession of Haydée, is enlisted into the admiral's staff. This Haydée is a Greek slave, bought by Malpero, and sold by him to Loredano, for whom she soon finds that her sympathies become a passion, and she watches by night on the watch to discover Loredano's actions and the scenes of his continued melancholy, overhears him in a fit of somnambulism tell the tale of his own dishonour. In his nocturnal delirium, Loredano goes through the scene of winning his friend in early life, and Malpero is enabled to take from the admiral's convalescent hands, the will, avowing his crime. This incident ends the first act.

In the second act we are introduced to the three masted ship of war of the Venetian admiral, who has just defeated the Ottoman fleet. After the victory, Donnemo, a devoted sailor and attendant of Loredano, proposes to play for a sack of rice taken from the enemy, but the admiral again intervenes, to show his detestation of gambling. Malpero then malignantly hands Loredano with the motives for the hatred, and menaces him with exposure if he will not consent to the union of Andrés with Rafaela. Andrés then joins semble is effective; but to those who witnessed its performance at Paris it is not likely to be over-gratifying. A passage in our former notice (see ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS of January 8) will explain the reason. We then remarked, "Auber's 'Haydée' is certainly a magnificent production of an opera which he developed the charm and grace of exquisite orchestration in a higher degree; his airs are haunting, and his concerted pieces broad and effective. But Scribe, the author, has committed one fault, which may, perhaps, prevent 'Haydée' from being Icard everywhere. He has created such a difficult part in the Admiral, that we do not think there is any artist in Europe who would attempt it after Roger. The latter, in addition to the charm of his voice, and fine song, combines the qualities of a great tragedian. Loredano is a part for a Macready or a Phelps. It is stated that Jullien intends to give 'Haydée' at Drury-Lane. This seems impossible without altering the construction of the Admiral, for the interest of the opera as a drama is centered in him; and if the artist who is the representative be not up to the mark, the piece must inevitably fall."

We hope we shall prove to be bad prophets, but must certainly think the Loredano of Reeves affords no guarantee for the permanent popularity of "Haydée." He has never been seen nor heard to less advantage, although here and there his fine voice redeemed the coldness and pointless style of his acting. But as a song-singer this brilliant triumph of Miss Lucombe to record. Albeit her first appearance on any stage, this charming vocalist, so popular formerly in the concert-room, displayed as simple earnestness and marked intelligence in her acting, as well as the most accomplished school of vocalisation, that she fairly absorbed the interest of the representation, and may, perhaps, ensure the success of the opera. Miss Lucombe's figure is low and slight, and her organ of moderate volume and power, to state that nature has been bountiful in gifts to her. What qualities she possesses she owes to intellect and cultivation; but we recollect no English singer who has ever approached her in the finished execution of florid passages. She may be called the Dorus Gras of the English stage, only that she has more animation as an actress, and less brilliancy as a vocalist than her French rival. Miss Lucombe has a romance, "He tells me in language pure," a charming composition in the first act, in which the archness of her acting tells well. In the second act she has an air. "The breeze," a very pretty translation of the French words, "C'est la corvette." This ballad is rapturously encored every evening. The reprise of the chorus is not so cleverly managed as in Paris, where the action is more ideal in describing the breeze filling the sails of the vessel; but here it is, perhaps, more real. In the third act, Miss Lucombe has a grand scena, "I am here in the palaces," terminating with a series of bravura passages, superbly articulated, which is also always encored. She has three duos—one with Miss Messent (Gulnare), "Oh! calmly o'er the waves," in the first act; and two in the second act, with Malgeno (Mr. Whitworth) and Loredano, in the last act: both the latter a-e full of dramatic power.

Reserving a nice eatable in the quattror in the first act, besides his grand scena of somnambulism, in which there is a delicious bavarola, "Oh! how the balmy night." In the concerted music of the second act he has much to do, besides a duo with Whitworth. In the passage, "It is to thee," he sings a bit of pathetic ardour, Mr. Reeves was encored. The romance, "Farewell, thou city of my fathers," was too coldly delivered, considering it is descriptive of Loredano's despair just prior to his supposed suicide. Mr. Hobday, who has the animated air, "Ah! let me rove," the subject of which is sung by Loredano in the second act, and who ought to have sung the gem of the opera, a barcarole, "O'ilde dong, good barque," completely failed. Travers or Barker could not ought to have sustained the part.

One of the loveliest melodies in the opera is the air of Rafaela, "By ties of blood united." The theme is the oboe bit in the beginning of the overture, which contains, also, the subject of the finale of the second act. The ballad, "With that voice whose breathing," is another elegant melody, but it was a little too high in the latter portion for Whitworth, whose rich bass notes told well in the concerted pieces.

It would have been, perhaps, better to have curtailed the dialogue considerably and converted it into recitative. It is true that at the Opéra Comique there is speaking, but the French actors delivered Scribe's rapid and natural dialogue with point and emphasis. Who would have recognised, in Charles Kean's correct speaking of Domenico, the hearty, frank, bluff, and jovial sailor of Regnier, an ensemble who always keeps an audience in good-humour?

Schira, the conductor, has improved considerably upon the reading of the first night, but there is room for greater improvement still. He hurries the time too much, and the delicate instrumentation of Auber is not sufficiently developed, whilst the forces are too numerous.

The mounting, under the able superintendence of Mr. Ellis, is admirable: the scene of the deck of the ship of war is alone worth seeing; and the incident of Andrevet announcing to Loredano to the command of a ship, has been selected by our Artist for illustration.

On Tuesday night Mdlle. Nissen, the "Swedish Flute," made her début in Norma, Mr. Bunn and King standing for the first time as Adalgisa. The two artistes made decided hits; the enthusiasm of the audience was, in fact, unbounded. Mdlle. Nissen's antecedents have been auspicious. Like Jenny Lind, she is a native of Stockholm, and the two Swedish singers were at the same time the pupils, in Paris, of Manuel Garcia, the brother of Malibran and Viardot, and one of the most famed singing masters of modern times, who has given to the world a most valuable work on the art of vocalisation. Mdlle. Nissen made her début in the French capital, some years since, as Adalgisa, in "Norma." Her subsequent career has been chiefly in St. Petersburgh and in Italy. In Rome, her Norma, Lucrezia Borgia, and Semiramide are said to have been her best parts. In this country only as a concert singer prior to Tuesday. Her figure is slight, but she is exceedingly easy and graceful; and, if her face be not handsome, when lighted up it has a very pleasing effect. Her acting was that of an intelligently but not commandingly given. The holding note at its termination was well sustained. The andante of the cavatina, "Casta Diva" (Cenzie Goddess), was given in a very elaborate style; but her use of the chromatic scale and of the shake proved that she was a singer of no ordinary stamp, and it was encored. She declined the compliment; and in the cabaletta, "Deh! bello a me ritorna" (To Norma's arms returning), poured forth a torrent of florid cadences very brilliantly, in some of her ornaments resorting to the staccato ones with the most artistical finish. She thus, in the first scene, stamped herself as a most accomplished vocalist, and the audience was, accordingly, increased in her first duo with Adalgisa, "Sola furiva." In the terzette, "Oh! di qual sel," she delivered the passage, "Tremble," with great effect, and was encored with fervour.

It was here that the audience were enabled to draw their conclusions as to Mdlle. Nissen's histrionic and vocal attributes for the part of Norma, and highly favourable were the conclusions. Her voice is certainly not of the finest order of organs, it is very much in the medium notes, and not particularly full in the lower portion of the register, and her upper notes are at times thin; but there is such marked intelligence in all she sings, such exquisite taste in the management of her powers, that such passages as, sometimes, shall be impossible not to be interested; and she has always a moment when she will provoke enthusiasm.

In the second act, the duo, "Ah! cos'ho," with Adalgisa, produced quite a furore. The finale, "Si fino all' ore" ("Yes, we together will live"), was demanded twice and thrice, but the artistes bowed their thanks on the third occasion. With the songs to the Druid priestesses, Mr. Bunn and King, the wife of the tenor of that name, who made her début at the Surrey Theatre, under Mr. Bunn's management. By many amateurs, and we of the number, it was thought that Mr. King's triumph was even greater than that of the Norma. The tenor's exit was owing not so much to the scientific acquirements of the English singer by the side of the Swedish vocalist, but to the possession of one of the sweetest and most pathetic mezzo soprano voices we have ever heard. So rich and so unctuous were the tones, that the audience frequently broke forth in cheers of admiration as she was warbling her sweet strains.

After the Minuet had been danced at the fall of the curtain, Mrs. Donald King received a similar compliment, a proof that although Ada-ipsa is not alone at scene, her memory was uppermost in the minds of the audience. Mr. Harrison was the Pollio, and Mr. Bertram was the Oroveso, both parts displaying good singing and energy; and the former character was sustained in a manner to show how the finest voice may be destroyed by a vicious style. The chorus and orchestra were decidedly a word of praise, and possess immense advantage over the Italian Opera schooling and resources was clearly proved.

The director has reason to be satisfied with his week's successes; three such artistes as Mdlle. Nissen, Miss Lucombe, and Mrs. Donald King are an honour to any lyric establishment. "Ecco," with Mdlle. Nissen, and Miss Romer, is announced for next week. Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night," and Schira's new opera of "Knallworth," are to be produced forthwith. This is the right policy: novelty should be the order of the day, and then no invidious comparisons can be drawn.

DRURY-LANE.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kean returned to this theatre on Monday evening, after an extended provincial tour, throughout which they have everywhere been greeted with the warmest approbation. They may now be considered as permanent members of the stock company at the Haymarket, rather than "stars." We cannot too highly commend this position. The throwing up of certain names in the bills in larger letters than those of the general company has always depreciated the value of the general assistance of a theatre; and, when this practice, we expect that the lessee will find a profitable result. Mr. and Mrs. Kean reappeared in the ever-welcome "Wife's Secret," and, as usual, received the liveliest plaudits. We have so frequently noticed their performance in this cover play, that further criticism is superfluous. Sir Walter and Lady Evelyn are, to our thinking, their best characters.

MARYLEBONE.

A very smart little piece, called "Which is the King," brought out here on Monday evening, gives Miss Villars a capital opportunity of sustaining the part of Henry IV. (of France) with a great spirit and effect. It is admirably mounted, played throughout with general correctness, and, as a matter of course, entirely successful. "Poor Jack" has been revived for Mr. T. P. Cooke, who finishes his [illegible] at this evening's performance. The [illegible] Mr. Rae play the characters formerly enacted [illegible] Farren, with an effect and truthfulness that leaves [illegible] to fear or comparison. The [illegible] have been excellent, not only in regard to numbers, but the quality of the visitors.

SADLER'S WELLS

The production of "Richelieu" has proved, as we expected, a most satisfactory step on the part of the management of this theatre. There are several reasons for this. First, the chief character is admirably suited to Mr. Phelps; secondly, the whole working company of Sadler's Wells is brought into play most effectively, in the cast; and, lastly, the drama, for such we may call it, is in the highest degree interesting, and likely, above very many others, to command the presence and attention of a general audience. Since Mrs Warner threw up the reins of management, Sadler's Wells may be regarded as the chief "legitimate" stronghold amongst the metropolitan theatres—a position it would never have gained but for the untiring exertions and keen judgment of Mr. Phelps. Whatever we may understand by the term, we may rest confident in seeing done well, whatever it be a character in the hands of the lessee himself, or of the humblest performer, who only gives a message, in the company.

STRAND.

The popular ballad of "Jeannette and Jeannot" has afforded a subject for a little operatic musical piece of the same name, brought out on Monday, the principal being personated by Miss Rebecca Isaacs, and the hero by Mr. H. Webb. The piece itself is the merest trifle, but is a very good vehicle for the three well-known "Songs of a Country"—one of which has had a more extended barrel-organ popularity, which is, after all, the aim of most composers—than any other song in late times, apart from an opera. These airs very effectively given by Miss Isaacs and Mr. Webb; the young lady getting a hearty encore. We think that Mr. H. Webb is the best low comedian of the "minors" in London.

Some nice scenery has been painted by Mr. Brunning, and the house has been decorated in a light and agreeable style.

Mr. Leigh Murray having recovered from his late indisposition, returned to his post at the Queen's on Monday, in the elegant little drama of "Borrowing," and was warmly received. On the same evening, a farce called the "Row! Sugar Boy" was produced with entire success. Preparations are making already for great doings in and after Christmas, the season is now drawing to the present time having been very great.

Mr Brough's burlesque on "The Tempest," so successful at Liverpool and Manchester, will be produced at this theatre on the 20th instant, and with considerable splendour. Mr. O. Smith will be Prospero; Mr. Paul Bedford, Alonzo; and Mr. Wright, Caliban. Miss Woolgar will, of course, be the Ariel; and, from the character in her hands, much humbugging may be expected, as the "dainty spirit" is made a sort of hybrid between Prospero's original familiar and a modern "boy in buttons."

The Christy Minstrel troupe are performing to crowded houses at Liverpool. They will remain there until Christmas, when they will commence their London engagement at DRURY-LANE. All the favourites of last year are in the company, and a new clown named Mahomet is spoken of as a very wonderful personage.

COUNTRY NEWS.

DISGRACEFUL RIOT IN A CHURCH.—On Sunday, the 29th ult., the Church of St. Sidwell, in the city of Exeter, was the scene of a disgraceful riot during the time of the evening service, in consequence of the Rev. J. Ingle, who officiated as the lecturer, entering the pulpit in his surplice. It appears that Mr. Ingle, who is a young man, has created a great deal of excitement by evincing the dislike of the parishioners to such proceedings, and notwithstanding the pastoral directions of the Bishop of the diocese some time back, in consequence of the same practice in the office. Mr. Ingle still persisted to read his text, but was quite inaudible, and the row increased, some of the congregation waving their hats, standing on the seats, jumping over the seats, bawling, roaring, and gesticulating, like a mob at an election. The reverend gentleman, in the midst of the confusion, despatched a messenger to the mayor, requesting his assistance; and whilst the messenger was gone on his errand, a rush was made in three open doors, and the church was filled with a mob, whilst a mob outside besieged the doors of the building. A cry of "Fire!" was raised, followed by an announcement that the church doors were closed, and a reward

"SAINTS."—PAINTED BY TADDEO GADDI.

THE NATIONAL GALLERY.

PICTURES BY TADDEO GADDI.

THE present century, among the various changes it has produced in matters of art and taste, exhibits one very striking and important feature, which clearly distinguishes it from other ages, in its pertinacity for looking back as an assistance in the act of progression. All works of the Middle Ages were, a hundred years ago, alike neglected and despised as relics of a period clouded by ignorance and stained with barbarism; and it was considered that nothing in painting, sculpture, or architecture could be worthy of imitation, or even of notice, which did not belong to the days of the classical Greeks and Romans, or to a date since the "revival" of the 16th century. Our forefathers carried this feeling to such an extent, that, as it is well known, the "restoration" of an ancient Gothic edifice, ecclesiastical or secular, if required, was by them carried out in a style completely at variance with the original; but, as they imagined, in a purer and a better taste. There have, however, since been discovered, in these mediæval monuments, beauties which were then misunderstood and unappreciated; and the style which they have handed down to us has formed the type of four-fifths of the churches erected in the nineteenth century.

The paintings of the Middle Ages are now also regarded in a new light. Ancient diptychs and triptychs are no longer converted into gaudy cupboards, or destined for a more destructive fate; nor are pictures from the giant pencil of Giotto any longer classed with the efforts of South-Sea Islanders, and so handed over to the shop of the insignificant broker

We now see in the early school of painting the germ of all the light and life and loveliness which was so refulgent under Raffaelle and Titian; we enjoy tracing, step by step, the dawn of anatomy—light and shade and perspective—in these quaint works upon gold backgrounds; we admire them as the fathers of an heroic race, and we treasure them as historical documents. Exactly in such a view must be regarded the two pictures by Taddeo Gaddi, the pupil and successor of Giotto, lately presented to the nation by the liberality of Mr. Coningham, and deposited in the National Gallery, which has lately been re-opened to the public after the usual recess.

"TOMBS OF PAUL AND VIRGINIA."

We present to our readers an Engraving of one of these works, perhaps the more artistic of the two. It pourtrays a group of saints: the centre in the lower line is St. John, and the three above are St. George between St. Peter and St. Barbara. It is painted in bright colours, on a background of gold, richly engraved, according to the custom of the period, with mantles and ornamental patterns.

The pictures are in a fine state of preservation, and, as the representatives of a school, are a valuable, if not an absolutely necessary, accession to the walls of our National Gallery.

"THE TOMBS OF PAUL AND VIRGINIA."

Oh! gentle story of the Indian Isle!
I loved thee in my lonely childhood well,
On the sea-shore, when day's last purple smile
Slept on the waters, and their hollow swell
And dying cadence lent a deeper spell
Unto thine ocean pictures. Midst thy palms
And strange bright birds my fancy joy'd to dwell,
And watch the southern Cross through midnight calms,
And trace the spicy woods. Yet more I bless'd
Thy vision of sweet love—kind, trustful, true—
Lighting the citron-groves—a heavenly guest—
With such pure smiles as Paradise once knew
Even thou my young heart wept o'er this world's power,
To reach and blight that holiest Eden flower.

Mrs. Hemans, on reading "Paul and Virginia" in childhood

This delicious retreat in the island of Mauritius, in the Indian Ocean, possesses extraordinary attraction for junior Lieutenants and Midshipmen, and others of the age of romance. If they can only get on shore for a few hours, they hire or borrow horses, and proceed with all speed to this interesting scene. On reaching the spot to which they are directed, they enter a pretty garden, and are conducted along a walk bordered with rose-bushes, with a stream of clear water flowing on each side. At the end of this walk the visitor sees a vase upon a pedestal, which, he is told, is the tomb of Virginia; and, at the termination of a similar avenue, on the opposite side of the gardens, appears another monument, the counterpart of the first, which is the tomb of Paul. Unfortunately, the whole affair turns out to be a piece of misinformation, of which the author of the work entitled "Recollections of the Mauritius" thus endeavours to disabuse the visitor:—

"After having allowed his imagination to depict the shades of Paul and Virginia hovering about the spot where their remains repose—after having pleased himself with the idea that he had seen these celebrated tombs, and given a sigh to the memory of those faithful lovers, separated in life, but in death united—after all this waste of sympathy, he learns at last that he has been under a delusion the whole time—that no Virginia was there interred—and that it is a matter of doubt whether there ever existed such a person as Paul! What a pleasing illusion is then dispelled! How many romantic dreams, inscired by the perusal of St. Pierre's tale, are doomed to vanish when the truth is ascertained! The fact is, that these tombs have been built to gratify the eager desire which the English have always evinced to behold such interesting mementoes. Formerly only one was erected; but the proprietor of the place, finding that all the English visitors, on being conducted to this, as the tomb of Virginia, always asked to see that of Paul also, determined on building a similar one, to which he gave that appellation. Many have been the visitors who have been gratified, consequently, by the conviction that they had looked on the actual burial-place of that unfortunate pair.—These 'tombs' are scribbled over with the names of the various persons who have visited them, together with verses and pathetic ejaculations, and sentimental remarks. St. Pierre's story of the lovers is very prettily written, and his description of the scenic beauties of the island are correct, although not even his pen can do full justice to them; but there is little truth in the tale. It is said, that there was indeed a young lady sent from the Mauritius to France, for education, during the time that Monsieur de la Bourdonnais was governor of the colony—that her name was Virginia, and that she was shipwrecked in the St. Geran. I heard something of a young man being attached to her, and dying of grief for her loss; but that part of the story is very doubtful. The 'Bay of the Tomb,' the 'Point of Endeavour,' the 'Isle of Amber,' and the 'Cape of Misfortune,' still bear the same names, and are pointed out as the memorable spots mentioned by St. Pierre."

BUST OF LORD GEORGE BENTINCK.

SHORTLY after the lamented death of Lord George Bentinck, there was expressed on the part of his admirers a desire to erect a statue of his Lordship, as a testimonial commemorative of the high respect entertained for his public and private worth. It was proposed, therefore, to carry the same into effect by subscriptions, limited to five guineas each; and in the list of subscribers to this fund we find the names of the Duke of Cleveland, Earl Stanhope, the Earl of Malmesbury, the Earl of Eglinton, the Earl of Southampton, Viscount Melville, Lord Feversham, Lord Burghley, Sir John Tyrrell, Bart., and several members of the House of Commons.

The Bust, which we have engraved, has been modelled for the proposed Statue, by Mr. James Wyatt, the sculptor, and may be viewed at No. 25, Charles-street, St. James's. It is in the antique manner, with the chlamys; and the face is admirably suited for this classic treatment. The likeness is considered to be remarkably striking.

BUST OF LORD GEORGE BENTINCK.—BY JAMES WYATT.

A bust of Lord George Bentinck has also been modelled by the Count D'Orsay, and is regarded as very successful. Of this work we intend to present our readers with an Engraving next week.

A SUBJECT FOR ANTIQUARIAN SPECULATION.—On Thursday (last week), at Glasgow, the workmen of Mr. Brownlie, the contractor for the erection of the new quay on the south side of the river, made a discovery while engaged in excavating the ground fronting the Clyde there, which we doubt not will open a field of interesting inquiry to antiquaries, geologists, and others. About 300 feet from the margin of the present channel of the river, they came upon a canoe imbedded in fine sand, at least 20 feet from the surface. The boat, when measured, was found to be 10 feet in length by 2½ deep, and 2½ feet wide. It has a sharp prow and square stern, and has been cut out of the solid oak. From the length and other appearances, it would seem to be adapted for six oars. The wood is in pretty good preservation considering the position in which it was found, but part of it was unfortunately broken by the workmen digging it out; but the piece broken off will be preserved, along with the rest of the ancient-looking structure.

THE ARTISTS' BENEVOLENT FUND.—A report which has been published of a meeting of the contributors to this fund shows wretched mismanagement. The late secretary, Mr. Edward Wyon, had been reinstated after having been a defaulter to the amount of £85, his sureties having paid the money. Mr. Wyon was re-elected secretary to retrieve his character by being put a second time into this office of trust, and the result has been a second defalcation of £826 18s.

JEROME PATUROT.—ILLUSTRATED BY GAVARNI.

JEROME CONFESSES HIS REPUBLICANISM TO HIS WIFE.

JEROME PATUROT
IN SEARCH OF THE BEST REPUBLIC.

TRANSLATED AND ABRIDGED FROM THE FRENCH,
BY JULIETTE BAUER.

[EVERY one acquainted with modern French literature has read and enjoyed the "Adventures of Jerome Paturot in Search of a Social Position;" and admired the quiet satire, the gentle yet genial wit, and the amusing delineations of character in which it abounds. The success of that work, and of a sequel to it published before the fall of Louis Philippe, have induced the author, M. Reybaud, to exhibit his favourite hero in the new circumstances of the Revolution. The risk was great, that the world would grow weary even of M. Paturot, that choice specimen of the Parisian, and of the charming and piquante Malvina, his wife. Continuations and supplements of this kind are proverbially disappointing to the reader and prejudicial to the fame of a writer. The critical public are always prone to accuse of poverty of invention the author who introduces the same character, however racy and original he may be, into a second work. But M. Reybaud was nothing daunted by the failure of other authors in this respect. Jerome Paturot had been the medium for exposing the vices of French society under the Monarchy of Louis Philippe and his functionaries; and he was equally available for laying bare, in the same effective and quiet way, the vices, the follies, the pretensions, and the absurdities of the Republicans, whether of the red or the tricolor standard, whether of the "eve" or of "the day after." The result has been the exhibition of Jerome in the guise of a hunter for place under the new régime of Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity; a result which has shown that M. Reybaud judged his readers correctly, and that he was fully conscious of his own powers of amusing them. In this new work, M. and Madame Paturot have acquired a new lease of popularity. In their names M. Reybaud has told the present Government of the French Republic some truths which it would have been unsafe for real and more serious personages to have uttered. As the licensed court fools in olden times spoke truths unharmed and even complimented, which it might have cost the unprivileged their heads even to have hinted at, so Jerome Paturot speaks of the men who either made the Revolution or have since figured in it, with a severity greater than that which cost M. Emile de Girardin his personal liberty and the suppression of his journal. Independently, moreover, of its merits as a political satire of contemporary events, the work has higher attractions as a faithful picture of modern manners in France. We have, therefore, thought that a translation of it would prove acceptable to our readers at a time when the social habits and condition of the French and the characters of the men who, either in the front or secondary rank, rule the destinies of that nation, are of so much importance to Europe and the world. We have judged, moreover, that, illustrated by the admirable pencil of Gavarni—an artist thoroughly at home on the subject—the work would be additionally acceptable to the English public. We this day present the opening chapter (somewhat abridged) to our readers, accompanied by M. Gavarni's Illustrations.]

CHAPTER I.
THE TWO COMMISSARIES

My political fortunes had been entirely destroyed, and I was reduced to a very humble Government situation in the provinces. I belong-d to that class of employés who look down upon the Government, and I was enraged at being obliged to serve it; I could not, without blushing, think of the badge I wore, and of the salary which was inflicted upon me. I had not words harsh enough for a power based on gross appetites; and the more I accepted from it, the more I defied it to corrupt me. Under the influence of this feeling, my opposition daily increased. New griefs were added to the old ones, and, by justifying my anger, only sharpened it. Thus, by an invincible attraction, I was separated first from the men, then from the system, then from the forms of the Government. Monarchy was yet standing, apparently invincible; reigning, by favour, over an enervated bourgeoisie, when, in my eyes, it was already condemned and lost, without a chance of safety. I ignored the hour of its fall, but I doubted not that the finger of fate had marked it in the book of ages.

The force of events hurried me on. To the wrongs of Government I soon had to add those of society. I began to doubt whether this world, with its imperfections and contrasts, satisfactorily filled the purposes of Providence. Looking at it without prejudice, it was impossible to see aught but an unshapen excrescence, scarcely worthy of the infancy of art. It seemed to me that I could easily combine something less incomprehensible and more harmonious. This thought inspired me. I felt the pride of Prometheus in his struggle with the gods! What glory to steal a ray from above, and enlighten with brightness a dark civilisation! No part could be more attractive; and after it any other ambition would have seemed little.

This was my starting point; from it I could proceed to a terrestrial paradise of my taste and my invention. Who has not, in these times, formed his little elysium? Who has not in his hand a better composed world than the one in which we have the weakness to live—a society purer than ours of imperfect men? My ideas on this point were of vast range. With the simplest effort I had succeeded in making of the earth a garden, and of each mortal a visitor from celestial spheres. But this was only the beginning, and was capable of a thousand improvements. As spur and example, I had before me the masters in this branch, who reform the universe in fifteen volumes; and, before exposing myself to the applause of the people, I would be second to them in nothing, neither in depth nor extent.

This work occupied me in my retirement. I drew from it a deeper hatred of the politics of the time, and a more positive contempt of the litteness used by these ephemeral régimes. In my hours of enthusiasm when I had added a new chapter to the destinies of the world, I could not find words violent enough against the social laws which intervened between me and the future. I sent them all to Jericho, civilisation and government, and in such terms that my wife was sometimes alarmed.

"What is the matter with you, child?" she said to me. "You will ruin us!"

"I shall save you," I replied, strong in the importance of my mission.

"You will take the bread from our mouths, Jerome; think what you do."

"It is better to die of hunger than of shame, Malvina."

"And our children; what will become of them?"

"Men!" I added, with a pathos worthy of antiquity.

Our discussions were frequently renewed, and my enthusiasm was at last obliged to compromise with this vulgar prudence. None of the sacrifices I had made to the peace of my family cost me so much as this, and I frequently transgressed by unforeseen outbursts. My wife was bewildered; she could not understand me. Whence came these recent sudden outbursts of independence? To what could she attribute these infractions of deep-rooted habit? Malvina could not resolve the problem. In vain she endeavoured to read my thoughts. I was mysterious as the Theban granite. In vain she overwhelmed me with questions; nothing could shake me. But one day I was conquered: my secret escaped. My wife had been cross-examining me with the patience and skill of an inquisitor. I was impenetrable; when, at the end of the questioning, she had recourse to a terrible question. "Oh! Jerome," she said, "perhaps you are a Republican?"

The question was dreadful; I was obliged to confess my faith or be perjured. Before the executioner's axe I should have done it without hesitation; before Malvina I could not refrain from a slight alarm. But duty had the upper hand, my answer was peremptory. "I hope I am, Madame Paturot," I said firmly.

Now, when the Republic counts its adherents by millions, and when new ones are formed all over the world, such a confession seems neither rash nor singular. But at the time when this decisive confession passed my lips it was not so. In the calm province where we dwelt all agreed that a Republican was a being possessed of mischievous qualities and criminal tastes. This was the opinion, and Malvina could not but share it. Therefore, at this formal declaration she had but one feeling, that of stupor. I expected an explosion, a scene, but I was relieved. She merely joined her hands in an expressive gesture, and, raising her eyes to Heaven as if to call upon it to witness my madness,

"A Republican!" she exclaimed, "a Republican! a man who eats at the table of the Government! Is it possible?"

Then she left the room with a significant shrug of the shoulders. What would it have been had she known the whole extent of my revolt—if she had known that I not only went with the Republic, but before it—that I looked upon it less as an end than as amears—and that my thoughts were most bent upon a social regeneration? The Republic, for the Republic's sake? Oh! no. One might as well say art for art's sake. The steps to the temple are not the sanctuary.

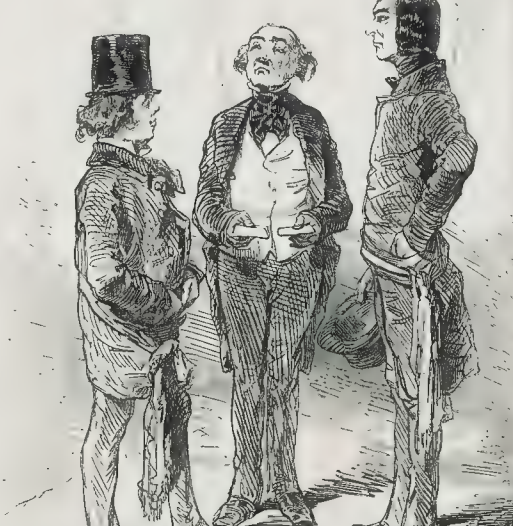
I feared that this sudden declaration of my principles might cause some domestic storms; as a true believer, I was ready to submit to them, but I was not put to the trial. Malvina seemed even to forgo all opportunities for recurring to the subject; and when the course of events introduced it, she turned the conversation with marvellous skill. I was awaiting my martyrdom, but it did not come. She evidently treated me as one treats an invalid. At the same time she was on the defensive, and took all necessary precautions. The least slip might compromise me; and my wife, who did not share my creed, remembered only that she had two children to bring up. This ignoble feeling ruled her conduct.

Among the persons who came to the house there were two from whose scruples it was necessary to conceal my political rashness. One was my principal, the second my clerk. My superior belonged to the school of the Empire. He was straight as a rush and lusty as an oak. His clothes were of that scrupulous neatness which is the ornament of old men. His linen was as bright as a glass, his beard fresh, his dress faultless. Added to this, gallant manners, and the fondness, like a moth, of burning himself at all the bright eyes of the town. My wife had fathomed him at their first meeting; she laid her nets, and the old lion fell into them. Once taken, she cut his claws, that is the old tale. On this side, therefore, we enjoyed perfect security. The thunder might threaten we were sheltered.

The intimacy of my subordinate was more dangerous. He was in the same office, and, therefore, constantly under his surveillance. Malvina tried to captivate him; but he was of a refractory, cunning nature. He could forgive his superiors nothing. He saw in them an obstacle to his advancement, and a living witness to his dependence. This feeling caused a threatening hatred, veiled by apparent submission. I had an enemy and a spy about me. In vain did Malvina redouble her favours, she could not tame this rebel; the lion had been vanquished, the bear did not give way.

From the first, my clerk had surmised the tempests which raged within me and my unconquerable hatred of the reigning Institution. It was a weapon between me, and he seized it. His tactics consisted in leading me on to a political discussion. I tried to escape; he knew how to force me: sincerely or feignedly, he professed for monarchy a boundless admiration, which put me beside myself, and drew involuntary protestations from me. To him there was nothing more beautiful than this régime, the object of my hatred and contempt. It was perfection on earth. Corruption, abuse of power, prostitution of conscience, he accused all for the sake of order, the basis of society. All means seemed to him good, provided this object was attained.

It may be imagined what feelings such a topic excited in me. In the eagerness of my conviction I spared nothing, neither King nor ministers. Indignation silenced the voice of the commonest prudence within me. The danger was great. Malvina felt it, and tried to annul it. As she could, neither charm nor disarm the venemous animal, she sought to prevent the effects of his bite. The more I had to fear from my subordinate, the more she influenced the mind of my superior, and insinuated herself into his good graces. Thus we lived on; I destroying my position, she repairing it. Sometimes she became impatient and upbraided me. But I kept up; and Heaven knows what exertions I made to keep intact my Republican faith among these household storms.



THE TWO COMMISSARIES.

The noise of events came to our calm and retired province only as a feeble echo. We certainly heard of the laborious campaign where the play of forks was mingled with the charms of eloquence; but, except myself, no one saw in it a serious danger for the monarchy. One may judge, then, of the astonishment manifested in our town when the news, at first vague, but gradually more precise arrived, announcing step by step a change of ministry, an abdication, a regency, and, at last, a Republic! No one knew whence came these details, but they seemed to float in the air—they were spread from street to street, from house to house, with electric speed. The cafés were filled with questioners; the high-road was covered by a restless and anxious crowd. A thousand contradictory opinions were canvassed in these groups. In one place everything was confirmed, in another denied. Many persons had questioned the prefect; he was impenetrable.

This anxiety was prolonged for two days; we did not know what to hope or to fear; the news was confirmed and denied twenty times a day. The appearance of the town was changed. At five, the inhabitants felt merely curiosity; later, it was agitation. Matters were in this state when a speedy solution arrived after all stormy debates. The cracking of a whip was heard, a post-chaise traversed the town, and drove towards the hotel of the prefecture. Two circular flags ornamented the doors, and formed a demarcation which it was impossible to misunderstand. The crowd hastened after it, and I followed. The prefect was standing on the step ready to do the honours of the official residence to his successor. His bearing was calm and dignified, his eye firm and even rather scornful. The post-chaise stopped, and a man of middle age descended from it, wearing a tri-coloured scarf. This scarf born in its folds a change of Government; the prefect felt it and bowed. Then the air has a strange passion, for the prefect introduces his unexpected guest into the official residence, when another voice attracted his attention and that of the crowd assembled round the hôtel. A second post-chaise arrived, flogged on the air—this was the former. The horses, put to their utmost speed, soon brought it to its destination; and from it descended a second person with the three colours, as tall and thin as the other was short and stout. All this had taken place so quickly that the two men met on the steps and assembled them together, the one on the right, the other on the left side

The prefect was in astonishment. On new alike was offered him a paper to which was attached the familiar seal. Whom could he believe? He verified the orders; they were of the same tenor, of the same date; the names only were different. He studied their physiognomy; both expressed the same confidence and the same good faith. Since Solomon, no man had ever been in a more embarrassing position. At last he said,

"Gentlemen, it is clear to me that I have only to pack up my things. It will be done immediately. When I am gone, you will settle the debate between you."

He was going, when one of the two persons advanced, and, placing his hand on his shoulder, very familiarly said,

"Citizen-ex-prefect!"

The disgraced functionary was not accustomed to this language; he winced his interlocutor returned to the charge.

"Citizen-ex-prefect," he said, "do not be alarmed at this accident. All will be arranged. There are only two Commissaries for one."

"As you say, sir," replied the prefect, coldly.

"Never mind," replied the Ambassador extraordinary; the evil is not so great. Pastillon, the other ambassador, is a classic colleague," he added, turning to the first arrival, "do not fear; I will put this department. I have four more in reserve."

"Many thanks," said the snubby-faced Commissary.

"And now," continued the thin one, "let us think of the interests of the country

Then addressing the crowd which filled the avenues of the prefecture, "Citizens," he said, "the Republic has triumphed, it has been solemnly proclaimed in Paris. "Vive la République!"

The crowd could not be heard; I could not hear it without feeling a sudden giddiness The dream of my life was realised; my idol breathed—the breath of the people had animated it. I hastened towards the step to assist the Republican magistrate, and, if necessary, to defend him. I believe so, and I cannot say how—one one had forestalled me on the steps of the hotel, and cried with all the strength of his lungs, "Vive la République!" I cast my eyes upon him; it was my uncle. Surprise silenced me

(To be continued.)

THE WEATHER.

THE weather during the week has been much finer than it has been for some time; the temperature of the air has not declined to the point of frost, and the average temperatures of Saturday, Sunday, and Wednesday were fully 10° below their average values. The following are some particulars of each day: Thursday, the day was fine, the sky frequently overcast during the day, and principally clear early in the morning, and again at night; the direction of the wind was S.W., and the average temperature of the air was 44°. Friday, the sky was mostly overcast; the direction of the wind was S.S.W., and the average temperature of the air was 42°. Saturday, the sky was overcast till the evening, when it became free from cloud; and the temperature descended to 30° by midnight; the average value of the day was 39°. The direction of the wind was N.N.W. Sunday, the morning was fine, but the air was exceedingly cold as value about 31. A.M. was 29°; the sky was nearly cloudless till noon, and it was mostly cloudless after noon; the direction of the wind was N., and afterwards S.S.W., and the average temperature of the air was 39°. Monday the sky was overcast; the direction of the wind was W.S.W., and the average temperature of the air was 47°. Tuesday the sky was fine for the most part, but the atmosphere was thick and hazy; the directions of the wind were W. and N.W., and the average temperature of the air was 44°. Wednesday the sky was principally cloudless; the direction of the wind was N., and the average temperature was 36°. And that for the week ending this day was 41° nearly.

Thursday	N.	the highest during the week	50
Friday	S.W.		50
Saturday	S.W.		39
Sunday	N.		41
Monday	S.W.		47
Tuesday	N.		44
Wednesday	N.W.		36
Blackheath, Thursday, Nov. 9, 1848			J. G.

POLISH BALL AND CONCERT, GUILDHALL, ON THURSDAY NEXT, THE 16TH INST. We are happy to hear that the exertions of the friends of Poland promise to be crowned with success. The arrangements for this annual entertainment are upon a scale of unusual splendour. A magnificent orchestra, richly lighted, and embellished with shrubs and ever greens, having been prepared, in addition to the other refreshment rooms. The concert, the first of the season, will be under the direction of Mr. Lindsay Sloper, forms of itself a great attraction, comprising the most eminent vocalists—Miss Poole, Mrs. Weiss, Miss Bassano, Miss Rainford, Miss Messent, the Misses A. and M. Williams, Miss Dolby, Miss Marsh, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. W. H. Harrison, Mr. Charles Braham, Mr Whitworth, Mr. Weiss, Signor Bardini, Mr. Wilsiam and Mr. Frank Bodda; and no small feature of this musical treat will consist in the performance of his own pianoforte concerto by Mr. Lindsay Sloper, which has never been heard before the public in London. Several distinguished persons have signified their intention to honour the ball with their presence; it will be given in the Guildhall, hung with flags and banners, brilliantly illuminated

ON Wednesday morning, in the school-room attached to the Church of the Holy Trinity, South Shore, was opened a Silver Testimonial, value about £40, was presented, by his congregation, to the Rev. C. Kean, M.A., late the respected incumbent of that place.

THE TRIGONOMETRICAL SURVEY OF LONDON. The last piece of scaffolding, built for the purpose of enabling the Sappers and Miners to make a trigonometrical survey of the metropolis and surrounding counties, was removed, at the close of last week, from the gallery and ball of St. Paul's Cathedral. A number of persons of the day carried away Although the scaffold was only up three months, the observations taken were between three and four thousand in which were included every division in Middlesex, the whole of Surrey, and portions of Kent, more or less as many as six times—none less than three or four. The utmost distance obtained was twenty-six miles in the circle, with the exception of the north-west point; here Highgate-hill repeated the observations, the crown of the hill being higher than the level from which the observations were taken With this single exception no difficulties presented themselves; and the survey, and the various stations chosen are of the most commanding and appropriate. In the language of the parties engaged, the metropolis and the surrounding counties may be considered nearly a level plain. Although below it was remarkably misty, the atmosphere was exceedingly clear above, which enabled the observers to extend repeatedly to obtain the utmost limit of their survey The extreme height of the scaffolding from the base to the crown upon which the observatory was built was 91 feet, and took between a fortnight and three weeks in raising. As the whole was bound together with ropes, about one ton and a half was used for the purpose. It may be gratifying to know that, in this perilous undertaking, not the slightest accident—not even the breaking of a single pane of glass—occurred, while only some of the corners of the planks were chipped off during the removal. The most dangerous part of the work was the fixing of the poles which supported the cradle, immediately beneath the central stage. These extend repeatedly [illegible] ation were required in fixing, as well as in removing them, for, had the slightest slip occurred, no power could have prevented them from falling through into the church. [illegible] to know that the [illegible] up was seven minutes [illegible] minutes were occupied in the descent. Some of the persons had to go up and down three or four times a day. During the period the scaffold was up the lead-work of the upper dome was repaired The expense of the survey is very small, as the materials were supplied by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests.

THE GOVERNMENT AND THE TURNPIKE TRUSTS It is stated that the Government is framing a bill, with a general question of turnpike [illegible] session of Parliament, and are endeavouring to obtain [illegible] to enable them to do so with effect. A circular has just been addressed to the [illegible] two different trusts, calling for various returns connected with the working of their local acts, and the management of highways in general. A particular account is required of the cost of collecting the tolls and maintaining the staff necessary for a turnpike board, which are enormous, compared with the amount actually laid out in the repair and support of the roads. In Essex, the trustees have come to the resolution of applying the funds in hand to the paying off the debts of the board and abolishing the trust, by the striking out their act from the Annual Turnpike Continuance Bill, leaving the roads to be repaired by the parishes.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

"DERBY SWEEPS."

NOTES AND QUERIES FOR THE TURF.

DURING the early part of the week the several daily papers had their columns loaded with the two mysterious-looking words prefixed to this article They have on their merits a claim to notice which must not be neglected; but their possible effect in a political point of view is, at a moment like the present, paramount to any other consideration With confusion prevailing over the whole continent of Europe, it is essential that not an hour should be lost in making known the true meaning of the expression to all those States with which we have an amicable understanding. Left in ignorance, is it not certain that the journalism of Austria, Russia, Prussia—of any country interested in the inquiry will set about canvassing the question? Having skimmed the cream of the London news, the foreign editor will thus proceed to deal with it in his leaders:—"We learn, from the English prints that the Government has issued a proclamation, prohibiting, under severe penalties, all those mad, ruinous, and other houses of public entertainment, from harbouring or otherwise countenancing "Derby Sweeps." The machinations so called are, in fact, the inhabitants of the great mining districts (and not Derby only), many of whom are occupied in the collieries, or caverns of fuel: hence the general soubriquet thus adopted. The enactment is promulgated in consequence of the frightful excesses of these compilators, are evidences, if any were wanting, that England is fully awake to the critical position of her domestic policy, and the difficulties which threaten her peace and prosperity." Such will be the views of our Continental brethren, by informing them that these Sweeps are simply the contrivances of patriotic individuals to furnish the middle classes with a refuge from competence and comfort.

But though less grave than political rebellion, this social revolution is pregnant with evil. The pertinacity with which it is pursued is proof enough of the [illegible] to professors in it. A general judgment pronounced by the R[illegible] licensed victualler who permits a racing lottery in his house is exposed to a fine, and, by the declaration of the licensing magistrates, to the forfeiture of his license. Yet, in the face of this, we have a numerous deputation in London or Westminster without a placard in its windows announcing sweeps upon all the current races and steeple chases. The Attorney-General announced the advertisement of such another from the country contractors for an oration in honour cut pops a handbill in blue and scarlet, informing you that Messrs. Bellile and Smoke have to submit for your acceptance the sum of £50,000 in May next, in consideration of a premium of £5 a ticket. Now this is like the usual progress of public interference, from bad to its sepulchre by this ingenuity not only is the public "done" but the miserable journalist too who pucks his own pocket and hands his paper to the reader. "Done, done, done!" A right and wrong system goes on, stimulated by the fact of its existence and popularity having been proclaimed by the great officer of the Crown. If the Attorney-General had received a special address from the Derby Sweep contractors for an oration in honour of their institutions, he could not have done them better service than by the course he has pursued.

To the authorities, who have stirred in this matter, intend to carry out their assurances or was all they said "wox et præterea nihil?" It is not good manners to ask Lord [illegible] except very common-place maxims, or we could quote a strong argument against his Lordship's proposition to unfold your morning paper, with so much energy. It may be lawful, however, to refer them to a short extract from the "Public Ledger," which they will find on the title-page of the "Edinburgh Review."

"ARTICLE II.

MONDAY. The betting this afternoon, although much below the average of the Derby season, was not inconsiderable without limit. The three leading favourites for the Liverpool Steeple Chase, Cossack for the Chester Cup, and [illegible] were backed" for the Derby, having been supported with considerable spirit. In general, however, the prices do not show much change

5 to 1 aget Proceed (t)	7 to 1 aget Alfred	20 to 1 aget Royston Gower, t
7 to 1 —— St. Leger (t)	20 to 1 —— Cossack (t)	20 to 1 —— Venom (t)

1000 to 15 aget Cossack (t) | 1000 to 15 aget War Eagle (t) | 1000 to 15 aget any other

1000 to 15 aget Scott's colt (t) | 7 to 1 aget Tadmor (t) | 20 to 1 aget [illegible]
9 to 2 —— Fly by Dutchman | 13 to 1 —— Newcastle | 20 to 1 —— Sweetmeat
| 15 to 1 —— Alfred | 1000 to 10 aget Bretby (t)

TUESDAY.—A little business was transacted this afternoon, at the undermentioned prices, which, except in the instance of Cossack, shows very little change.

LIVERPOOL STEEPLE CHASE.

7 to 2 aget Proceed | 5 to 1 aget St. Leger | 20 to 1 aget Royston Gower

ROYSTON AND HERTFORD STEEPLE CHASE

[illegible] Red Lancer

50 to 1 aget Cossack | 1000 to 15 aget If Pasoffe. | 1000 to 15 aget Fagloman
1000 to 15 —— War-Eagle | 1000 to 15 —— Bitcher | 1000 to 15 —— Great Western
1000 to 15 —— Venom | 1000 to 15 —— Tartar

5 to 1 aget Scott's lot | 40 to 1 aget The Knant | 1000 to 10 aget Glendower

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

Consols have fluctuated but little during the week, the extreme range of prices being from 85¼ to 86¼ to ¾. The state of the Continent still continues to create apprehension, neutralising the effect produced by the abundance of unemployed capital. Most India Bonds have receded slightly, and Exchequer Bills do not command quite such high rates as last week. The Market at the close was firm, at the following rates:—Reduced, 89 ; 3 per Cent. Consols, 86¼ ; New 3½ per Cent. Annuities, 86¾ ; India Stock, 259½ ; India Bonds, £1090, 3s pm. ; Ditto, under £1000, 3s pm. ; Consols for Account, 86¼ ; Exchequer Bills, £1000, March, 40 pm. ; Ditto, £1000, June, 40 pm ; Ditto, £500, June, 37 pm ; Ditto, Small, March, 40 pm ; Ditto, Small, June, 40 pm.

The business on the Foreign Market continued limited. Mexican has receded, but [illegible] other Stocks, in consequence of an additional remittance towards a dividend. The Peruvian Government Loan seems to be the means of the [illegible] replying to a request for an adjustment of the foreign debt, on the basis of that concluded with Chili, "that, inasmuch as there appeared no satisfactory prospect of effecting a settlement of the Foreign Loan, the Government were about to despatch a Minister Plenipotentiary to this country, to propose terms of settlement to the bondholders." Thus the arrangement is again to be settled here; and we, without doubt, to some months' hence again inform you that Peru, [illegible] business prices marked for Brazilian Bonds, Small, 73¾ ; Danish Bonds, 86¾ ; Three per Cent., 62 ; Mexican, Five per Cent., 1845, 20½ ; Peruvian Bonds, Six per Cent., 29¼ ; Portuguese, Four per Cent., 34 ; Spanish Three per Cents., 1840, 11 ; Ditto, Passive, 2¼ ; Ditto, Three per Cent., 23 ; Venezuela Bonds, Two-and-a-quarter per Cent., 19¾ ; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cent., 49¼ ; Ditto, 1 per Cent., 10¾

The absorbing topic of conversation in the Share Market is the proposed amalgamation of the three great companies—the North-Western, Great Western, and South Western. There appears to be but one opinion with regard to the measure, as far as the proprietary are concerned, of the relative value of the different stocks can be fairly arranged. The mere fact of lessening ruinous competition, both as regards the abandonment of new lines, and the [illegible] necessary works, and working harmoniously the old lines, must alone prove, both present and prospectively, of great advantage. A considerable amount of opposition, both without and within doors, will be raised by the many, however, conflicting expected. Fear for the public pocket, unless competition be encouraged, has long been a favourite cry with one branch of the Legislature while the other, in its admiration of monopoly, has invariably legislated to ruinously encourage it; and a [illegible] managing so many anticipated bargains, perhaps agreed to under the pressure of a Committee's recommendation to the company, "to retire and re-consider the terms offered." These difficulties, however, are formidable difficulty for eliminating A[illegible] present the proposed terms are not published, but it is hoped that they will be in the hands of the shareholders long previous to the days of meeting. The importance of this will be acknowledged, when it is remembered that the amalgamation [illegible] a loan and paid up capital, of £[illegible]. The company will [illegible] of the interests involved, nothing already 1000 miles. Until the terms are known, its effect upon the stock cannot be anticipated. The anxiety evinced is, however, fully commensurate to the magnitude of the interests involved; 23 ; Great North of England, Ditto, New, £30, 6½ ; Ditto, New, £15, 3½ ; Great Western, 23¾ ; Ditto, Shares, 17¾ ; Ditto, Fifths, 18 ; Lancashire and Yorkshire, Fifths, ; Ditto (Wakefield Branch), 14 ; Leeds and Bradford, 87¾ ; Leeds and Thirsk, 17 ; London and Blackwall, 4¾ ; London, Brighton, and South Coast, ; London and North Western, 117¾ ; Ditto, New, 8 ; Ditto, £5 0 (M. and), 8¾ ; London and South-Western, 40¾ ; Ditto, Thirds, 2¾ ; Midland, 8¾ ; Ditto, New, £50 shares, 2¾ ; Ditto, Consolidated Bristol and Birmingham, 2 per Cent., 113¾ ; North British, 15¾ ; Ditto, Halves, 6¾ ; Ditto, Quarters, 3¾ ; Ditto Thirds, 1¾ ; North Staffordshire, 9¾ ; Reading, Guildford, and Reigate, 8 ; Scottish Central, 23¾ ; Shrewsbury and Birmingham, 4 ; Ditto, Class 3, 4 ; South Eastern, 23¾ ; Ditto, No. 2, 9¾ ; Ditto, No. 4, Thirds, 6¾ ; Wear Valley, Six per Cent. Guaranteed, 95¾ ; York, Newcastle, and Berwick, 26 ; Ditto, Extension, No. 1, 13¾ ; Ditto, Ditto, No. 2, 13¾ ; Ditto, G.N.E. Preference, 6 ; York and North Midland, Preference, 8 ; Ditto, East and West Riding Extension, 2¾. Boulogne and Amiens, 5¾ ; Namur and Liege, 4¾ ; Orleans and Bordeaux, 1¾.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—A very limited quantity of English wheat has been received fresh up to our market this week. To-day the show of samples of both red and white was small, never before the demand for all descriptions—owing to the large foreign imports—was on a very sluggish state, and, in some instances. Monday's quotations were not supported Nearly 20,000 quarters of foreign wheat have come in. Norfolk and Lincoln malt, 70s to 80s; brown ditto, 60s to 54s Kingston and Ware, 58s to 60s. Chevalier, 60s to 62s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 18s to 22s; potato ditto, 21s to 24s; Tanghal and Cork, black, 18s to 19s; ditto, white, 21s to 23s. Oak beans, new, 32s to 36s; ditto, old,—to —; grey peas, 32s to 36s; maple, 36s to 41s; white, 34s to 36s; beans, 30s to 4.s per quarter Barley—Grinding feed, 40s to 42s; Suffolk, 37s to 42s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 32s to 36s per 20 Foreign: Baltic red wheat, 4 to —s, white, —s to —s; barley, —s to —s; oats, —s to —s, per quarter. Flour, American, 27s to 30s per barrel

Liverpool Market Next to nothing is doing in the market, and prices rule almost nominal

Bristol, English, sowing, 56s to 60s; Baltic, crushing, 42s to 45s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 42s to 45s. Rapeseed, 45s to 48s per quarter: Coriander, 10s to 20s per cwt. Bonanza beans, 30s to 32s; Egyptian, 28s to 30s; white ditto, 30s to 32s; malting ditto, 32s to 34s per bushel. English Rapeseed, £22 to £30 per last of ten quarters Linseed cakes, English, £11 10s to £12 10s; Baltic, foreign, £10 10s to £11 10s per 1,000. Linseed cakes, 14 10s to £5 5s per ton. Canary, 36s to 42s per quarter. English Clover-seed, red,—s to —s, extra, —s to —s, white, —s to —s; Foreign: Red, —s to —s; white, —s to —s; trefoil, —s to —s; extra, —s to —s; canary, —s to —s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 6d to 8½d; of household do. 6d to 7½d per 47lb.

Newcastle Weekly Average.—Wheat, 34s 2d; barley, 32s 10d; oats, 20s 7d; rye, 31s 1d; beans, 37s 1d; peas, 30s 7d

Hull Average.—Wheat, 34s 10d; barley, 33s 7d; oats, 20s 7d; rye, 31s 1d; beans, —s —d; peas, —s —d per qr.

Scotch Corn Average.—Wheat, 35s; barley, 2s 0d; oats, 2s 6d; rye, 2s 0d; beans, 2s 0d; peas, 2s 0d per qr.

Irish.—The market for most kinds of corn continues steady, at fully last week's quotations. Potatoes.—The supplies coming to the London market are moderate, the sale for which articles is [illegible] state, at but little alteration in prices

Cattle.—During the past week the arrivals of cattle coming to market fresh, have been limited, and [illegible] and inferior qualities comparatively little in demand. Carlow is selling at 8s to 8s 4d per 8lb; Kilkenny, 7s 8d to 8s; Tipperary, 7s 8d to 7s 10d; Cork, 7s 4d to 8s; Limerick, 7s 6d to 8s; and Tralee, 8s to 7½ per cwt. all landed. In foreign butter very [illegible] to the [illegible] Belgian butter a firm, at full rates of currency. The best parcels are quoted at 86s to 90s per cwt. Belgian butter a firm, at full rates of currency. Fine Dorset, 102s to 104s; Devon ditto, 98s to 100s; and fine, 94s to 96s per cwt. Fine Waterford, 90s. The trade for bacon is in a very depressed state, and the quotations are not supported. Prices range from 56s to 64s per cwt. American [illegible] 50s to 56s per cwt. for kegs. All descriptions have off shoy, at late rates.

Tallow.—Notwithstanding the heavy stock, and the large arrivals, the market is firm. 10s per cwt. for P. Y. C. on the spot, and 10s 3d for forty. Rough fat 2s per 8lb.

Seeds. The rain market is in a very sluggish state, at last week's quotations. Linseed, per last, for spring delivery, £[illegible]

Hay and Straw.—Old meadow hay, £2 8s to £3 15s; clover ditto, £3 10s to £5 5s and new, £1 15s to £2 5s per load

Hops (Friday).—The supplies of most kinds of hops on offer are reasonably extensive. For the most part persons of the growers have not yet made an offer to buy equal to those past last week. The middling and inferior kinds are a slow inquiry, at barely late rates Sussex and old Kents are in good request, at full prices. Very fine Weald of Kent ditto, £5 5s to £6 6s; Mid and East Kent ditto, £5 15s to £5 5s; Farnhams, £6 6s to £7 7s per cwt. Included in the above total

Coals (Friday).—Carr's Hartley, 16s 3d.; Holywell Main, 16s 6d; Ord's Redheugh, 15s 6d; Tanfield Moor, 15s 6d; Eden Main, 17s 6d; Lambton, 18s 6d; Stewart's, 18s per ton.

Smithfield (Friday).—Notwithstanding the fact of beasts on sale to day being about last moderate, and the weather very favourable for slaughtering, the beef trade, owing to the large supplies of meat in the dead markets, was in a very dull state at barely, but at nothing quotable beneath, Monday's prices. At the close of business a fair clearance was effected. Work shorthy, of which 2,400 were directly supplied; nevertheless, the demand for that description of stock was heavy, at prices barely equal to those obtained on last Monday day. The few calves on offer were in middling condition, and in general request at full prices. Sheep were in steady request at extreme currency. Milk cows, about 40 in number, sold at from £14 to £17 each. Included in the above total

Per 8lb to sink the offal.—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 8d to 3s 8d.; second quality ditto, 3s 10d to 4s; prime large ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; prime small ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 4d to 3s 8d; second quality ditto, 3s 8d to 4s 2d; prime coarse-woolled ditto, 4s 4d to 4s 8d; prime Southdown ditto, 4s 10d to 5s 0d; large coarse calves, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; prime small ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 6d; large hogs, 3s 10d to 4s 0d; neat small porkers, 4s 2d to 4s 4d. Suckling calves, 18s to 25s, and quarter old store pigs, 17s to 22s each Total supplies: Beasts, 956; cows, 146; sheep, 6,240; calves, 274; pigs, 220. Foreign supplies: Beasts, 281; sheep, 1060; calves, [illegible]

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—These markets were heavily supplied with cash last week, the demand for which was in a very sluggish state on the following terms:—

Per 8lb by the carcase:—Inferior beef, 2s 6d to 3s 0d; middling ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 6d; prime large ditto, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; prime small ditto, 4s 2d; large pork, 3s 6d to 4s 4d; inferior ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 8d; middling ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 2d; prime ditto, 4s 4d to 4s 8d; veal, 3s 4d to 4s 8d; small pork, 4s 6d to 5s 8d.

ROBERT HERBERT.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, NOV. 7

BANKRUPTS

J. KING, North Audley-street, tenement-agent, cooch-builder. H. SHEEN, Lower Marsh, Lambeth, potato merchant. J. C. CLARE, 2, Gt. Cross Mariborough-street, surgeon. G. ARNOLD, Bath, ironmonger. Green. W. WILSON, Twickenham, Middlesex, [illegible] chemist, apothecary. J. H. DAVIS, Windmill-street, Haymarket, livery-stable-keeper. J. J. WINGFIELD, King William-street, City. C. T. ASHFIELD, Barnet, coach-proprietor. J. WILTON, Coventry, baker. T. WRIGHT, Hanley, Staffordshire, tailor. T. R. HEARN, Hereford, linendraper. A. MARSHALL, Beverley, master cow-doctor. J. KIRK, Cawthorn, Nottinghamshire, licensed victualler. E. TAYLOR, Rockfield, Monmouthshire, [illegible]. J. WHITTAKER CALDER, Leeds, flax-spinner. J. and W. HOWARD, Wakefield, [illegible] and [illegible] manufacturers. G. HIGHLEY, Sowerby, Yorkshire, [illegible]. J. and J. SMITH Sheffield, common brewers. J. THOMPSON, Leeds, tea-dealer. W. M. PHILLIPS, Liverpool, Hollandfield-street, Kensington, [illegible] baker. H. L. EVANS, Liverpool, butcher. J. HEMSWORTH, Barkenhead, flour dealer. A. ARMSTRONG, Newcastle

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.

P. MARTIN, Glasgow, coal-heaver. A. DAVIDSON, Glasgow, wood merchant. D. ANDERSON, Kirkcaldy, flesher.

FRIDAY, OCT. 20

WAR-OFFICE, NOV. 10.

1st Regiment of Life Guards. Lieut. and Capt. Hon. H. Forester to be Captain and Lieut.-Colonel, vice Gordon, who retires upon half-pay. Cornet and Sub-Lieutenant, vice Burn

2nd Regiment of Life Guards. Lieut. F. Herrington to be Captain and Lieut.-Colonel. Cornet H. H. Lonsdale to be Lieutenant, vice Herrington. Basker, C. B. Pedder to be Cornet, vice Lonsdale

3rd Light Dragoons. Cornet C. Chaplin to be Lieutenant, vice Cavendish. G. Bunbury to be Cornet, vice Chaplin. 11th Regiment of Foot. Lieut. and Capt. Lumsdaine, vice Mornet; J. Miller to be Captain, vice Brierley.

12th Regiment of Foot. Lieut. and Capt. C. W. Strong to be Lieutenant and Captain, vice [illegible] Hamilton Bart

13th Regiment. Lieut. L. O. Shuter to be Lieut.-Colonel. [illegible]

Cuthbert 24th; Lieut. H. M. Burne to be Lieutenant, vice Dunn [illegible]

Mr. Hayter to be Lieutenant, vice Bishop; R. Mosset to be Ensign, vice M. Major resigned. Capt. Sir J. E. Harington, Bart. to be Captain, vice Strong. 36th J. A. Caulfield to be Lieutenant, vice Jebbett. 39th Lieut. Hon. A. Gordon to be Captain. 40th H. H. Vaughan to be Lieutenant, vice Burne. 46th Lieut. J. Vallis to be Lieutenant, vice Bowyer. 54th Lieut. and Adjt. J. Price to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice E. Maclaine [illegible] to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice Sir A. F. D. Estc, C.B. and W. L. Paxton to be Lieutenant-Colonel. 72nd Lieut. and Capt. C. Dalton, Knight of Wurgen, to be Major, vice Carmichael, who [illegible]. 79th Lieut. and Capt. Hon. F. Dundas to be Captain, vice Fitzgerald. 84th Lieut. and Adjt. A. Grant to be Major, vice Yeamans. 86th C. F. C. Seymour to be Captain, vice Grant. 91st Lieut. G. Wood to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice Lumsdaine, who retires upon half-pay. 92nd Gordon Kilts Regiment: Second Lieut. C. S. Stone to be First Lieutenant, vice Kingsmill. A. Campbell to be Second Lieutenant, vice Stone

BREVET.—Lieut.-Colonel Bearcroft, of the Rifle Brigade, Aubrey, deputy lieut. of the East India Company's Depôt at Warley, vice Sprigg, who retires upon the local and temporary rank of Lieutenant-Colonel while so employed

EXTRA GAZETTE, NOV. 14.

DECLARATION OF INSOLVENCY

J. THOMAN, Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square, licensed victualler-dealer.

BANKRUPTS.

T. J. CROGGON, Ingram-court, Fenchurch-street, commission-agent. W. BUTLER, Westbourne-grove, North, Paddington, builder. J. BRIDGES, Hemmenger. J. WALKER, Upper Somerset-street, Edgeware road, Paddington, hotel-keeper. A. T. RIDDELL, late Assistant-Surgeon, 3rd Dragoon Guards, Dublin. J. DOWNEY, Middlesex, Northamptonshire. A. HAIG, Strand-street, Jubilee-place, Stepney, and Essex-street, Cardiff. [illegible] Cambridge. W. SHARMAN, Bedford-row, Camden. [illegible] and [illegible] J. ASHWORTH, Birmingham, harnessmaker. W. HALL, Kington, Herefordshire, miller. W. H. MORGAN, Liverpool, [illegible] T. CROSSLEY, Halifax, [illegible] manufacturer. W. NORTON, Penzance, ironmonger. W. YCWLER, Crediton, Devonshire, [illegible] W. WILKINSON, Sheffield, [illegible] J. and J. SMITH, Lowlands, Chester, [illegible] J. [illegible] Liverpool, cook-merchant. J. DAVIES, Llanymynech, Montgomeryshire, [illegible] builder. J. ROBSON, Houghton-le-Spring, Durham, tailor. W. G. GILMAN,

[illegible]

[illegible] at the Grange, Bradford, Wilts, the lady of Captain Palairet, of a daughter. On the 10th, at Southampton, the lady of Capt. Mrs. W. A. Penhall, wife of the late Captain M. L. Penhall, of the 1st Regiment of the Bengal Native Infantry, of a son. On the 8th inst., at 3, Portsmouth-terrace, Bloomsbury, the wife of [illegible] of a daughter. On the 2nd inst., at the Rectory, Stoke Abbott, Dorset, the wife of the Rev. [illegible] Hughes, of a daughter. On the 1st inst., at Lady Roper, at a daughter. At Moore-side, the lady of the Rev. F. Lonsdale, [illegible] On the 27th ultimo, at Bengal, Mrs. Henry Rose, Captain 6th... Regiment N.I., of a daughter. In New Park-road, Clapham-park, the lady of W. Langston Chaffers, Esq., of a son.

MARRIAGES.

At St. Saviour's Church, Bath, Walter Lloyd, Esq., of Moreton, Dorset, eldest son of the late Commander Jameson, R.N., to his only daughter of Wm. [illegible] Esq., of Bath. At Bath, Captain Wm. Sheddon, 3rd Regiment Bengal Native Infantry, to Caroline Sarah, youngest daughter of James Parker, daughter of James Parker, Esq., of Bath. At St. Margaret's Church, Scarborough, At Mary Abbot Church, William Henry Newman, Esq., solicitor, son of the late Rev. [illegible] Newman, to Mary Ann, daughter of the late Captain William Bennett, R.N. At Shared's, Bath, John Scarlet, Esq., Assistant-Surgeon, 39th Regiment Bengal N.I., to Mary Anne, daughter of the late Rev. [illegible] Hall, of Bath. At the church of Saint [illegible] Stafford, Esq., of the Ordnance Office, Tower, to Rosa Anne, eldest daughter of [illegible] Esq., of Bath. On the 2nd inst., at the Parish Church, Bath, Edward Lovegrove, Esq., of Bath, to Caroline Louisa, second daughter of the late Rev. [illegible] Esq., Captain 41st Regiment, to Anne Maria Bowen, second daughter of the late Major-General Bowen. On the 8th instant, at Hillesdon, Wiltshire, Christopher Lippiat Bennett, Esq., of Eton College, near Bowdler, to Elizabeth Ann, second daughter of the late Edmund Wilcocks, Esq., of Hillesdon, near Chelsea, Surrey.

DEATHS.

At Park Cottage, Jersey, Mrs. Mary Ann Anyon, widow of the late Rev. [illegible] Anyon, minister of Park Independent Chapel, near Bury, aged 56. At Cottage-grove, Nine-elms, the Rev. H. Carwardine, of Worcester, aged 70. At Melville Hospital, Chelsea, the Rev. W. Lewis, aged 70. At Bath, Mrs. [illegible] Saunders, aged 78. At Bath, Mrs. [illegible] Hall, aged 68. At Bath, Mrs. [illegible] Saunders, aged 68

PUBLICATIONS, &c.

DEDICATED BY PERMISSION TO THE QUEEN.
Now ready, the 7th thousand, post 8vo., cribbed, gilt, with five illustrations, 8s.,
THE PEARL OF DAYS; or, the Advantages of the Sabbath in the Workday Times. With a Sketch of the Author's Life. By a Layman's Daughter. Lond.: PARTRIDGE and OAKEY, Glasgow: D. ROBERTSON, and all Booksellers.

LES HUGUENOTS.—A Second Edition of this splendid Opera is now ready in Numbers 9 s. 6d. 97 of the PIANISTA, price 3s. each. Also "Norma," "Somnambula," "Robert," "La Fille," and 20 others at 3s. each. Post free 30 stamps.

NEW SONG, "We Yet May Meet Again." Composed by E. L. HIME. Price 2s. Cost postage free. This charming ballad, sung by the composer, also by Mr. John Reeves, Mr. Hobbs, &c., with the great success, resembles in character "Then you'll remember me." The melody is remarkably fresh and interesting. Mr. Hime has imposed new words for the second verse, and in "They made me for repining," "I will return to thee," "I thought of thee," &c., &c. "We may meet again" will surpass them all in popularity. London: D. 'S and HODGSON, 65, Oxford-street.

NEW WORK ON TURNING.
Small 8vo. Price 7s 6d., cloth, gilt,
THE HAND-BOOK of TURNING.
Instructions in Concentric, Elliptic, and Eccentric Turning, &c. &c. With Directions for Cutting Tools and Instructions for using the Eccentric Cutting Frame, Ornamental Chucks, and Circular Rest, with Patterns and Instructions for working them.
By HALE and OLLEY. Publishers Conduit-street.

A New Edition, price 2s. 6d.
WADE'S HAND-BOOK to the PIANO-FORTE, comprising an easy Rudimental Introduction to the accompanying the voice of the most masters, exemplified in various Exercises, Solos, &c., in all the major and minor keys; and harmonies dispersed by relaxations from study, consisting of Popular Melodies and Romances, and selections from the Pianoforte Compositions of the most eminent masters; also a short article on Organ Construction, by Hornung and Walker.
London: D. 'S and HODGSON, 65, Oxford-street.

Now ready, in two vols., 21s. bound,
A YACHTING VOYAGE TO NORWAY, DENMARK, and SWEDEN.
By W. A. ROSS, Esq.
"Mr. Ross has here given us a very lively and intelligent picture of the incidents of a cruise to the Northern Ocean in company with Lord Radnor. The pictures of the pleasures and dangers of the yachting life are drawn from the life, and the sketches of the various countries after a stolen one, and the sound, sensible, the pleasures and dangers of the sea trips from place to place, it is very much to the credit of English, humble and sensible book, as the descriptions of the North, and the in excellent taste. Country Mr. Ross has passed a year or two, and has given us a picture of two of the most agreeable volumes published for a long time."—Post.
Post of Servants—quarterly.
HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

Third Thousand, price Sixpence.
ACCIDENTS and EMERGENCIES; a Guide for their Treatment. By ALFRED SMEE, F.R.S., Surgeon to the Bank of England, and Lecturer on Surgery. This short, comprehensive, and practical work should be in the hands of every person, as the information given is of the greatest use in the case of accidents, and may be the means of saving many valuable lives.
Published by MR. CHURCHILL, medical bookseller, 129, Princes-street.

In one thick vol., a new Edition, being the fourth, enlarged price 16s.,
OLLENDORFF'S METHOD of LEARNING to READ, WRITE, and SPEAK the LANGUAGE in six months. A KEY to the EXERCISES. Written expressly for the English by the AUTHOR and EDITOR.
Also, by the same,
A KEY to the ITALIAN. Written extremely for the English Student. By Dr. H. G. OLLENDORFF. In two parts. Part I., fifth edition, price 10s. 6d., cloth. Part II., second edition, price 12s. 6d., cloth.
KEY to the ITALIAN, FRENCH, and GERMAN EXERCISES, prepared by the Author. Price 7s extra, cloth.
It is necessary for those who desire to avail themselves of the present method, to notice that these are the only English editions sanctioned by Dr Ollendorff; and he deems any other totally inadequate for the purpose of English instruction, and unworthy of his name. The method so strongly recommended by Captain Basil Hall and other eminent writers. They should be ordered with the publisher's name, and London: WHITTAKER and Co., and DULAU and Co.; and to be had of any bookseller.

LONDON and COUNTY ECONOMIC INVESTMENT ASSOCIATION (No. 2) for purchase of Property and Investment of Savings. With a Branch for Nottingham, Hadenfield, and Welsley.
Office for General Business, 3, Brunswick-square.
Butterfield, Lucas, & Co., Bankers.
PRESIDENT—F. P. Welesby, Esq., Magistrate for the County, &c.
DIRECTORS—Geo. C. Scott and Co., Cavendish-square.
SURVEYOR—Mr. Arrowsmith, Adelaide Road North, Notting-hill
Messrs. Knapp, Judd-street, Brunswick-square.
Solicitors—Messrs. Whitehead and Co., Temple.
No Fines on Withdrawal: Five Per Cent. Interest.
Parties at Sea, Abroad, &c., may be allowed to act by Proxy.
Applications for Shares to be addressed to the Secretary, at the Office, 3, Brunswick-square, where Prospectuses and Forms of Application may be had, and shares received by Deposit.
By order of the Board,
J. RICHARDSON, Secretary.

BRITISH SOUTHERN WHALE FISHERIES.
PROSPECTUS.
Established on a "statement" (to be had on application at the undermentioned place) "explanatory of the necessity and means of re-
A proposal—
That a company be formed for re-establishing the British Southern Whale Fisheries.
That the deposits be £2 10s. per share; and that this be paid at the bankers of the company, Messrs. Prescott, Grote, and Co., Threadneedle-street.
That the deposits be applied to the purchase of ships, and the fitting out of the same, and that the remainder be called up from time to time, as may be required

THE GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY.

THE LINE AT SPALDING.

THE GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY.

In our Journal of the 28th ult. we recorded the opening of a portion of this Railway, and engraved views of the line at Boston, and the great timber bridge at Bardney. We now engrave the line at Spalding, and the Station there; with a View of the Bardney Station.

The festival on the occasion of the opening of the Railway was celebrated at Boston, on the 27th, with unusual éclat. The day was observed as a general holiday, and excursion trains started at intervals to Spalding, Peterborough, Louth, Lincoln, and Great Grimsby. A special train took the Mayor and Corporation, and a number of the gentry of Boston to Great Grimsby, 46 miles rom Boston, where a deep-water harbour, for the trade of the east coast and of the Baltic, is being constructed by Mr. Rendel, the engineer. The visitors went over the works, inspected the coffer-dam, &c., and returned to dinner at Boston at four o'clock.

SPALDING STATION.

Upwards of 400 sat down to a sumptuous banquet in the Theatre, which was boarded over to a level with the stage, and tastefully decorated. Besides the guests, there was a gallery full of the fair sex, Mr. John Noble, the Mayor of Boston, occupied the chair, supported by the Right Hon. the Earl of Yarborough, Hon. Octavius Duncombe, Sir James Duke (the new Lord Mayor of London), Lieutenant-Colonel Colquhoun, Mr. Denison, M.P. (chairman of the Great Northern), Mr. B. B. Cabbell, M.P. for Boston; Mr. Christopher, M.P., Captain Straubenzee, Mr. Peto, M.P., Alderman Wright, Rev. J. H. Oldrid, Captain Laws, R.N., Mr. Cubitt, C.E., the Mayors and Corporations of Louth and Great Grimsby, Mr. Fowler, C.E., Messrs. Mowatt, Bury, Betts, Chaplin, Ellison, Parker, Nurse, and other officers and directors of the Great Northern.

The customary loyal toasts were followed by "Prosperity to the Great Northern and East Lincolnshire Railways," and the day concluded with a ball in the Assembly-rooms.

The portion of the Great Northern Railway recently opened is remarkable in passing through the artificially-drained district known as the Fens, being principally below the level of high water at sea, and probably the richest and most productive land in the kingdom.

The works of the line present few striking features to the eye of the traveller, though possessing considerable interest to the engineer. The principal of them are the bridges which carry the line across the various rivers, both natural and artificial, which serve as outlets for the drainage upon which the district depends: the chief are those over the rivers Welland and Witham, and the artificial rivers known as the Forty Foot, Redstone Goit, Vernatts, South Drove, &c.; the largest and most remarkable of them being that over the Witham, at Horsley Deeps, near Bardney, which consists of one span of one hundred feet, and three smaller ones, of thirty feet each, and is in connexion with, and forms the middle portion of, a viaduct, about three-quarters of a mile in length. (See the Engraving on the front page of our Journal for Oct. 28.) The material of this, and most of the rest of these bridges, is timber; but, in one or two cases, as in the bridge over the river Witham, at Boston, and Vernatts, near Spalding, the line is carried by cast-iron girders on timber piers.

Great excellence has been aimed at in the construction of what is technically called the permanent way; which consists of the rails, chairs, and sleepers, and the ballast in which these last are imbedded: this point, on which the comfort and safety of the passengers, and economy of the stock of engines and carriages, materially depend, has been most sedulously attended to.

The station buildings appear small; they are, however, suitable and picturesque in appearance; and very little recourse has been had, in their construction, to any of the more costly kinds of material or workmanship.

The line has been executed by Mr. Joseph Cubitt; and the works have been under the immediate charge of his assistant-engineers, Mr. George Sherrard, of Tattershall; Mr. Brydone, of Spalding; and Mr. Breckedon, of Lincoln; and the stations designed by Mr. John Taylor, of Parliament-street, London. The contractors for the works are Messrs. Peto and Betts.

BARDNEY STATION.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, November 11, 1848.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 344.—Vol. XIII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1848. [Sixpence.

THE PRUSSIAN REVOLUTION.

The three Revolutions of 1848 are running their course. Every day either presents a new spectacle or a new actor in these great commotions; and, before we have had time even to be astonished at the magnitude of one event, in its immediate or in its prospective consequences, another occurs to throw it into the shade, and to monopolise our attention. France has proclaimed her Constitution amid a popular indifference, as great within her own boundaries as beyond them. Yet, although every one feels that the present Constitution is a mere nullity, having no one's love, we know that it will depend upon the next move in the mighty game whether a Bonaparte shall attempt to supersede it by a military despotism, or whether a Cavaignac, or some newer name, shall, by taking the "Mountain" for his adviser, bring about the "Social and Democratic Republic," and so strangle the new-born liberty of 1848 by another process.

But, all-important as the events of Paris have been, they have recently been dwarfed, in men's imaginations, by the more exciting drama of Vienna. A week ago the eyes of all Europe were directed upon that city. They watched the waning authority of the Emperor restored at the price of the partial destruction, and perhaps the total alienation, of his ancient capital; and men of all shades of political opinion speculated with painful anxiety on the position into which victory on the one hand, or defeat on the other, would lead his advisers. But no sooner has the victory been gained, than attention, fixed too long for these stirring times upon that one city, is called elsewhere to a course of events even more important—to the struggles between a King and his Parliament; to the resistance of the one, and to the encroachment of the other; far more momentous, both in their progress and their result, than the more vulgar conflicts of mobs and armies in the streets, and far more significant of the actual progress of constitutional liberty.

The state of Prussia is indeed precarious and peculiar. The question to be solved at Berlin has the merit of simplicity. It is not embarrassed, as in Austria, with considerations of race, language, or popular animosities of one district or province against the other. It is purely the elementary principle of a form of government, stripped of all extraneous circumstances, which is in debate. Its simplicity lends it grandeur. People who cannot disentangle the maze of Austrian or German politics generally, see what is meant in Prussia, and in this country especially, concentrate their attention upon events in Berlin—often with condemnation of the popular party, sometimes with sympathy, but always with a strong conviction that, for good or for evil, a mighty Revolution has been commenced, only to be compared to the great French Revolution of 1789 in its consequences, near or remote, upon the general fortunes of humanity.

The King of Prussia is evidently a well meaning man—as amiable as Charles I. or Louis XVI., but of more ability than either. Of a generous disposition, of a cultivated mind, of a courage to dare great things, and of a sagacity which, in ordinary times, would have rendered him illustrious amongst the Sovereigns of the earth, he has been placed in circumstances which have rendered all his fine qualities either of no account, or positively prejudicial to him. He is the victim of a procrastination which was not his own; and suffers, in his own person, as other Kings in past and present times, and as private individuals do, for the errors of his predecessors. With an excellent system of National Education, which should be the boast of a free people, the educated Prussians were denied all participation in the management of their own affairs. Educated in arts, sciences, and philosophy, the Prussians were not allowed to educate themselves in politics, but were promised, at some remote period, the advantages of a constitutional form of Government. That promise was often made by the late King, but always deferred, until even fifteen or twenty years ago the stolidity of the Prussians, in submitting to be tantalised and mocked without a murmur of complaint or remonstrance, became a by-word in Europe. At last the present King ascended the throne. He remembered the broken promises of his father, and gave the Prussians a Constitution. But though the promise was kept in appearance, the Constitution was so exceedingly small a one—the rights affirmed in the people were so trifling—the system was so mere a shadow of Constitutionalism, as the world was acquainted with it in England and in France—that the Prussians could not see enough to be grateful for, and gave the King no thanks for his tardy and ineffective condescension. Nevertheless, had his lot been cast in less troublous times, the Constitution given by the King might have proved his wisdom, and provided the means for the gradual extension of those civil and political privileges which so educated a people as the Prussians would have peaceably secured for themselves as necessity arose. But the French Revolution acting upon the minds of the Prussians—the idea of German unity acting upon the mind both of King and people—threw them both off the safe track. The people demanded their freedom by a speedier process; and the King, fired with a sudden ambition, endeavoured to turn to the account both of Prussia and himself the great German movement that was in progress. Both are now suffering from the error they committed. The people are involved in a violent revolution; and the King, whose necessity it is to combat it, is embarked in the conflict with a reputation damaged by the taint of his ambition—with the consciousness, moreover, that he aimed at great things and failed in them, and that the prestige of success does not envelope him.

DEMONSTRATION AT FLORENCE IN FAVOUR OF THE NEW MINISTRY.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

Hitherto the Prussian revolution has marched rapidly. A National or Constituent Assembly, with the entire concurrence of the King and under his authority, has been called together to form a Constitution worthy of an intelligent nation that has determined to be free, and that is at the same time quite satisfied with a Monarchical form of Government under the actual dynasty. Such were the relative positions of the French people and their Monarch from 1789 to 1792, with this additional item of similarity between the French in those years and the Prussians in 1848, that the financial difficulties of each country rendered the Monarch more disposed than he might otherwise have been, to look for aid from the representatives of the people. The march of events has been marvellously similar both in the good and in the evil. The King has been declared to rule not by the grace of God, but by the will of the people; the privileges and titles of the nobility have been abolished; agriculture has been freed from the exactions and oppressions of the proprietorial class; all the ancient landmarks of society have been thrown down; all the intermediates between the two poles of the political system, the mob and the chief magistrate, have been removed; and the kingly power has been invaded from day to day, until it has become evident to the whole of the Conservative body in Prussia, and to the King himself, that the Assembly has entered upon a policy inconsistent with a Monarchical form of Government. The King has therefore determined to show vigour in support of the authority still left to him, and to check the course of a revolution that threatens to involve Prussia in anarchy. But, unluckily, like the original grant of the Constitution, the step has been taken somewhat too late to be efficacious. The latest intelligence shows us the two great principles of the revolution and the reaction in open conflict—the King and the army on one side, the Assembly and the people on the other. Great faults have been committed by both, and both will have to expiate them. The appointment of the Brandenburg Ministry, which was the unhappy cause of the present dilemma of the Prussian Monarchy, was no doubt an injudicious, but it was by no means an unconstitutional step. The Assembly, in remonstrating against that appointment, and in fact threatening the King with the responsibility if he called such and such Ministers to his councils, was guilty of an unconstitutional act. Its course was to allow the Ministry to be appointed, and then in the usual way to vote it out again. The Assembly was too impatient for this, and not only outraged the King as a King, but as a gentleman, in the position it assumed towards him. Having taken that false step, neither King nor Assembly has been able to recede. The King, under the pretext—and it is evidently not an assumed one—that the deliberations of the Assembly at Berlin are not free, but that they are under the influence of an anarchical mob, has resorted to the bold course of removing the scene of its deliberations from Berlin to Brandenburg, and prorogued it in the meantime. The Assembly has refused either to separate or to remove. It urges that the King has no power; that it was called together by the will of the King and the nation to perform a certain task—the drawing up of a Constitution; and that, until that task be accomplished, the King has no power over it, either to prorogue or to dissolve. This was, of itself, a perilous position for both parties: perilous to the Assembly, lest the army should turn it out by main force, and the revolution be arrested by a coup d'état; and perilous to the Monarch, lest, in directing his army against the representatives of the people, the nation should not support him. There was, however, no possibility of receding. The Burgher Guard of Berlin was first called upon to prevent the violence of the Assembly. The Burgher Guard unanimously refused. It undertook to preserve order in the metropolis, but it would not act against the Assembly. The troops were then ordered to interfere: and General Wrangel marched at the head of his dragoons, cleared the Assembly, and, like Oliver Cromwell and Napoleon before him, put the key in his pocket. The Assembly has adjourned to a new place of meeting, the "Schutzen-Haus" or Jeu de Paume of the German Revolution; the Burgher Guard has been dissolved; Berlin has been declared in a state of siege, and is in the full possession of the military. The Assembly, nothing daunted, has appointed a commission of sixteen to draw up a full report of all that has occurred, that an authentic statement may be distributed to the country; another commission of eight is to report upon the expediency of impeaching the Ministers for high treason; and, if the Crown persist in its resolution, of stopping the supplies.

[illegible] events. It is impossible to overrate their importance! The populace of Berlin were a quiet and orderly population—if they trusted to the innate strength of ideas, and not to the brutal force of their arms, it would be safe to predict that the Assembly would ultimately come out as victor from this unfortunate strife, and that Frederick William would have to add one more fault or indiscretion to the many which, with the best intentions, and the most generous feeling, he has committed. The probability is, however, that the public peace of the capital will not be maintained; that the people will take the battle out of the Assembly into the streets, and be summarily defeated. The King of Prussia will then have breathing-time to look about him. His coup d'état will answer its purpose, and the final issue will be adjourned. We trust most fervently that the course of events will not preindice his cause. Without him, Prussia would be the prey of anarchy, or of any daring adventurer that, after years of sorrow and bloodshed, should vault into his throne. With him, and under his constitutional rule, Prussia has her sole chance of happiness and freedom.

DEMONSTRATION IN FAVOUR OF THE NEW MINISTRY AT FLORENCE.

THIS very animated display of popular feeling took place at Florence, on the 29th ult., to commemorate the appointment of the two democratic Ministers, Guerrazzi and Montanelli. They are thorough-going "men of the people," and have supplanted the Grand Duke's two Ministers, so that the enthusiasm of the people knows no bounds.

The scene we have engraved shows an incident which excited very great interest. The procession halted at the Colonna St. Trinita, or of Justice: two or three cars were tied together, and a man ascended with a flag, which he hailed at about half-way up the shaft, amidst the cheers of the multitude. There was a profusion of banners, inscribed "Viva Guerrazzi e Montanelli!" "Viva Italia e Democrazia!" The soldiers in the procession were the Civic Guards, and the banner-bearers were mostly volunteers against the Austrians: they wore a blouse with a cross on the breast, and blue trousers with a red stripe.

SHIPWRECK AND LOSS OF TEN LIVES.—It has been reported at Lloyd's, this week, that the barque Carmelita, of Bangor, Captain Cole, from Fayal, 9th Sept., for Rost , with a cargo of sperm oil, wines, &c., and 18 men passengers, was abandoned at sea on the 25th of September, in a sinking condition, having been boarded by a sea while scudding in a gale on the 23rd, in lat. 36° 40′ N., long. 30° W., which swept the decks and broached the vessel to. She was got before the wind again, leaking badly; soon became unmanageable, and had a second time, and capsized. Captain Cole, two mates, five seamen, and passengers succeeded in regaining the vessel; nine passengers, three of them females, and one seaman, were drowned. About one hour after the vessel righted, with mainmast, fore and mizen topsails gone, and full of water. She came to on the other tack, and lay on her beam-ends during the night. At daylight next morning the vessel was a complete wreck, the sea making a clear breach over her. Both mates were totally disabled, the crew wholly exhausted, and one passenger had a broken leg. The crew succeeded in clearing the wreck of broken spars, and saving a small quantity of beef and wine, on which they subsisted until the 29th, when they were taken off by the British barque Castries, Captain Hinds, from St. Lucia, bound to Dublin.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, November 15th, 1848.

You will, of course, expect to receive some account of the Fete de la Constitution. By five o'clock on Sunday morning one hundred thousand National Guards were donning their military costume. Before six o'clock all the inhabitants of Paris were awoke from their slumbers by the noisy drums, which did not even cease while some military bands attempted to be heard as they proceeded to the Place de la Concorde. About half-past ten, the National Guard of the banlieue reached the Faubourg St. Honoré, and turned into the Rue des Champs Elysées. For more than two hours the street was completely filled, and [illegible]. The severe cold rendered inaction painful, and between the intervals of crying "Vive la République!" (which phrase, by the by, in its repetition, becomes invariably shorn not only of its first two words, but of the first two syllables of the last, and nothing but Le-ske (lèque) is heard from the multitude) "Le Chant du Départ" was sung, which, being a war-song, seemed a singular choice, considering the occasion. Later, "Jamais les Anglais" sounded like a satire on the late fraternising with their neighbours outre mer. But all these apparent contradictions were thus explained by a person present. That the hour at which the banlieue had been assembled rendering breakfast impracticable, they had been taking, as often as a cabaret presented itself on their line of march, the goutte on empty stomachs which had occasioned "In vino veritas:" but I believe there are few who looked on all these fraternal hugs otherwise than as a scène de comédie plus ou mail bien jouée. About half past 12 the word was given, and a general rush took place. Ten minutes sooner they might have marched to their destination; now they ran. As the different battalions passed, I observed that many of their fusils were ornamented with bouquets of artificial flowers, while others had pieces of different-coloured paper, resembling the ornaments to be seen at the mayoralty de comestibles on the knuckle of a cold ham. A battalion of the Garde Mobile also passed along the street in which I was stationed, and displayed an air of military discipline which contrasted strangely with their laisser aller of the National, as they continued their march with a pipe in their mouths.

The scene displayed on the Place de la Concorde has been recorded officially, and I can tell you nothing more than you have doubtless already read. The weather was cruelly unpropitious, and did not welcome the new Constitution with kindly warmth. Its smile was a snow-wreath, rather resembling a winding-sheet than the bright and rosy mantle intended by a joyous birth. At the moment when M. Marrast, with the courage and devouement of a martyr, was reading bare-headed this charter of their liberties and their privileges to the shivering populace, the white flakes of snow which had been flitting through the air from day-break resolved themselves into a snow-storm, which in its fall became water, and gave occasion for some mechants to observe "Que la Constitution avait tombée dans l'eau." A considerable manœuvring covered the shoulders of the orator with a cloak; but not even the patriotism of M. Marrast could save him from a gros rhume de cerveau—not, however, so serious as to prevent his bestowing the day for the re-election of the Assemblée Nationale, and then accepting the office.

M. Marrast being again named President de la Chambre, the ball already meant discussion for the celebration of the Constitution will doubtless be shortly given at his hotel. A committee of coffeurs are in debate respecting the style in which Madame Marrast's hair is to be arranged on this occasion.

FRANCE.

Although the fête in honour of the promulgation of the Constitution, on Sunday last, passed off quietly, yet the apprehensions of an outbreak which filled the public mind during the previous week have not been removed. The absence of any violent demonstrations or attempts to disturb the peace is said to have been owing to the division which has taken place between the Socialists and the Ultra-Republicans on the question of a candidate for the Presidency, one fraction being for M. Raspail, the other for M. Ledru-Rollin. Up to a late hour on Saturday night the secret committees of the latter party were in the expectancy of an outbreak on Sunday, and it was not till near midnight that the idea was abandoned. The intended revolt, however, is understood to have been only [illegible].

The Government had been informed that the Clubs intended to make a counter manifestation on the Place de la Bastile, whilst the ceremony of the promulgation of the Constitution was proceeding in the Place de la Concorde; and had, in consequence, occupied, at an early hour, the place by two battalions of the 11th Regiment of the line, and the Chasseurs d'Afrique, two pieces of artillery, and a detachment of Dragoons. Visiteur were assumed in advance of the Police of [illegible] was allowed to approach it. At nine o'clock, however, not [illegible] made his appearance the leaders of the movement having contented themselves with a demonstration. Their object was to assemble round the pillar, and afterwards to repair in a body along the Boulevards to the Place de la Concorde. A member of the procession wearing a bouquet of funereal [illegible] proposed to the troops to [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] members, thereby [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] to constitute a house. On Friday the number of coupés granted was 156, and on Saturday they were increased to 200. On the hon. member proposing [illegible] but the proposition was rejected by 336 votes against 196, and the [illegible] [illegible] rest to were granted.

General Cavaignac has addressed a circular, addressed to all the civil and military functionaries in France, in which his opponents discover, under the guise of advice to the persons to whom it is addressed with respect to the contest which is taken from General Cavaignac, the approaching election of President. But, in reality, the sentiments expressed by General Cavaignac in this document are mild and conciliatory, and, if acted upon fairly, are calculated to do great good throughout poor distracted France.

The majority of the General's party and the Bonapartists has, however, arrived at such a pitch, that, in spite of the endeavours of the chiefs to preserve order, a collision is daily imminent. Had the review of Sunday been as great as it would have been if the weather had been propitious, a collision would have been inevitable. Each party attributes to the other the intention of having by force to farm the occasion to its profit, and the different newspapers have gone so far as to impute to the Government a project of taking advantage of the first fury of "Mon Generaux!" to seize upon Louis Napoleon, and send him out of the country under pretext of danger to the Republic. Whether there was any truth in the assertion, Louis Napoleon, it was generally understood, had thought it prudent to be out of the way of a surprise, and had accordingly quitted his [illegible] for the house of a friend.

M. [illegible] has been re-elected President of the National Assembly. The Assembly, as re-constituted, is the College of Finance, the Professorship, recently that of Political Economy, which had been abolished by the Provisional Government.

The fraternal banquet of the delegates of the Luxembourg took place at the Barrière du Maine, on Monday. Next to the rostrum were two vacant seats, those of Messrs Louis Blanc and Albert. The former had forwarded from London a speech, which was often interrupted by bursts of applause. He concluded by [illegible] toast—"To the Honest Republic, that is, the Democratic and Social Republic!" The dinner was prepared by an association of cooks, and the provisions were supplied by various manufacturers. Here, too, were representatives of the people attended. One of them, M. Dupont de Bussac, proposed a toast to "the Right to Labour;" but, having imprudently declared in his speech that he accepted the Constitution, he was silenced by the murmurs of the Assembly, and obliged to sit down without being allowed to conclude his address.

Three thousand labourers assembled in the Champ de Mars on Tuesday morning, and from these proceeded to the Hôtel de Ville, the Minister of Public Works, to demand of him to be allowed to assist in the works at present being executed in the Champ de Mars. A delegation was received by M. Trélat, who explained to them how much he regretted that he could not grant their requests, as the works in question were being executed by the Minister of War. The men then retired, without manifesting any displeasure, and separated peaceably.

M. Cabet, the chief of the Icarian Communists, was sentenced by the Court of Correctional Police of Paris, on Wednesday, to one month's imprisonment, for having had in his possession 14 muskets and a quantity of ammunition.

Admiral Bandon has proceeded to Tunis with two frigates, in consequence of the Bey of Tunis having refused to acknowledge the French Republic.

The Duchess of Orleans has refused to accept the dower of 300,000f. (£12,000) annuity, secured to her by the decree of the National Assembly, which restored the private property of the Orleans family. She has declared Let wish that the sum should be distributed amongst the indigent and unemployed operatives. The Duchess will only retain an annuity of 60,000f. (£2400) which she has purchased from her savings, and which constitutes the sole fortune of her second son, the Duke of Chartres.

SPAIN.

Accounts from Madrid of the 7th inst., announce that the Prince and Princess of Capua left for Andalusia on the preceding night. The captain of the brig Isabel II., having imprudently landed alone at the mouth of the Ebro, had been taken prisoner by the Carlist chief Rayo. The Chevalier Reymond, the Austrian [illegible] d'Affaires, had presented his credentials to the Minister for Foreign Affairs. A general amnesty was again spoken of.

The Carlists continue their predatory warfare against the Queen's troops in different parts of the country, Cabrera's energy being unbroken.

ITALIAN STATES.

NAPLES AND SICILY.—According to our latest accounts Naples was tranquil, though rumours of riots and coming disturbances were current. From Sicily we learn that Palermo and Messina were quiet, and that the armistice was honourably respected by both parties.

LOMBARDY AND PIEDMONT.—From Milan we learn that the municipal assembly [illegible] being unable to satisfy the rapacious demands of the Austrian hordes. The villages around Piacenza are all occupied by Austrian troops; and arrests and executions show that the insurrectionary movements of the people have been suppressed are pursued daily with relentless vigour.

SWITZERLAND.

Early on the morning of the 6th inst., a saint of 155 pieces of artillery announced to the inhabitants of Berne the arrival of the day fixed for the opening of the National and State Council. At nine o'clock a solemn service was performed in the churches, and in the evening a grand banquet was given in the theatre. The proceedings of the Council on the 7th were confined to the election of a President and the verification of powers.

The contest for the Presidency of the National Council terminated in the election of M. Ochsenbein.

PRUSSIA

The aspect of affairs in Berlin is menacing in the highest degree, and it is to be feared that, before long, a sanguinary outbreak will occur, in consequence of the measures which the new Prime Minister, Count Brandenburg, the King's natural brother, has been rash enough to have advised, or at least enabled, his Majesty to adopt.

On the 9th instant, the following constitution of the Ministry having been announced, viz. Count Brandenburg, President of the Council; Von Ladenberg, Education; General Major Von Strotha, War; and Von Manteuffel, Interior; Count Brandenburg assuming also the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, ad interim, and Manteuffel that of Agriculture, the subjoined Royal Message was communicated to the National Assembly:—

"We, Frederick William, by the grace of God King of Prussia, &c.—After individual members of the Assembly, convoked for the forming of the Constitution, have been repeatedly and personally ill-used, in consequence of their votes, the hall of session of this Assembly was, on the 31st of last month, forcibly occupied, and the emblems of a Republic being displayed, an attempt was made to intimidate the deputies by insurrectionary demonstrations. These lamentable occurrences prove but too clearly that the Assembly convoked for the purpose of forming the Constitution, from whose bosom the basis of true liberty, involving the general weal, is to emanate, is deprived of its own freedom, and that the members of this Assembly, in consequence of these frequently-recurring anarchical movements, which, to our deep sorrow, took place in our capital and residentiary city of Berlin, do not there find that protection which is indispensable to secure their deliberation from the appearance of intimidation. The accomplishment of our ardent desire, which is shared by the whole country—that the constitutional Administration be formed as speedily as possible—cannot, under such circumstances, take place, nor can it be made dependent on measures which are calculated to restore, in a legal manner, the order and peace of the capital. Therefore, we are induced to transfer the seat of the Assembly, convoked for the framing of the Constitution, from Berlin to Brandenburg, and have commissioned our Ministry of State to take the necessary preliminary measures with all speed, so that the sitting shall, after the 27th of this month, be held in the city of Brandenburg; until that day, the Assembly convoked for the framing of the Constitution is hereby prorogued Therefore, by these presents, we call upon that Assembly forthwith to break up the deliberation, and to assemble together for the continuation of the same, on on the 27th of this month, at Brandenburg.

"Given at Sans Souci, Nov. 8, 1848. (Signed) "FREDERIC WILLIAM."

The proclamation created the greatest ferment in the Assembly, and was read amidst violent uproar, and cries of "Never, never—We protest—We will not consent—We will perish sooner—It is unconstitutional." Count Brandenburg answered these protests by saying that they were of no avail, and then quitted the Assembly. Soon after the uproar somewhat subsided, the President (Unruh) rose, and declared that he was not justified in proroguing the Chamber without having first consulted the house, and he therefore put the question whether the house would or would not consent to the prorogation, which was rejected by at least two-thirds of the house. The following three resolutions were then passed almost unanimously:—

1. That the Assembly will continue its sittings at Berlin.

2. That the Assembly cannot be prorogued, removed, or dissolved by the King; and

3. That the Assembly holds those officers who had advised the King to issue this message to be unfit to administer the government, and guilty of a violation of their duties towards the King, the people, and the Assembly.

The National Assembly has thus declared itself permanent, and a committee of ten was appointed to remain in permanent sitting.

During the 10th the Chamber maintained the same attitude, and the Government announced its intention to employ force to expel the members. Count Brandenburg transmitted a formal protest to the President, declaring the measures of the Assembly illegal, and the Burgher Guard was called on by the police to dissolve the Assembly, but refused. In consequence of this refusal, a military force was applied for, and on the afternoon of the 10th 15,000 regular troops entered the city. General Wrangel entered the square, called the Gensdarmen Platz, at 9 o'clock, and sent an aide-de-camp to inform the President that he had orders to close the doors of the Sing Academy (where the Assembly meets). After some delay, an answer was returned to Wrangel that the Assembly would not yield to force. Wrangel replied that he would blockade the building for a week, if necessary. The greater number of deputies then left the Assembly, after drawing up a protest and a proclamation to the people.

The troops bivouacked on the night of the 10th in the streets and squares of Berlin, and General Wrangel himself took up his quarters in the palace. The railway stations were occupied by considerable bodies of troops. But nowhere was there the slightest symptom of disorder perceptible. On the morning of the 11th (Saturday) the members assembled near the National Assembly, and, finding the doors of the Sing Academy closed, proceeded, with the President at their head, and attended by large crowds of people, to the Hôtel de Russie, whence they issued several adjournments to the Hall of the Rifle Guild, and there they continued their deliberations undisturbed, when the following measures were resolved upon: 1st. To draw up a memorial of the events of the last few days: 2nd. To impeach the Ministry; and 3d. To refer the measure of the refusal of taxes (steuer-verweigerung) to a commission.

The National Assembly was protected, during its sitting, by the Burgher Guard. The people were most enthusiastic in their support and approval of the line of Lines which they regarded as their lawful representatives. When the sitting of Saturday was closed, the members were received with cries of "Long live the National Assembly!" "Long live the faithful Representatives!" The President, M. Von Unruh, thanked the people in these words:—"The representatives of the people intend to exhaust all legal means. Whatsoever may happen, they stand or fall with the cause of the people."

The members of the Left and the Centre were determined to continue their sittings in Berlin, in which resolution they were supported not only by the Burgher Guard, but also by the majority of the people.

On Sunday (the 12th) the Prussian State Gazette published a proclamation of the King to his people, dated Sans Souci, the 11th, and countersigned by Count Brandenburg, Von Ladenberg, Von Strotha, and Von Manteuffel, in which his Majesty endeavoured to justify his removal of the seat of government to Brandenburg, and the marching of the troops to Berlin, and gave a positive and unqualified assurance that the people should be secured of their constitutional liberties, but that it would be his holiest endeavour, with God's assistance, to be to them "a good constitutional King." A second proclamation of the same date dissolved the Burgher Guard of Berlin, in consequence of its support of the "illegal" National Assembly

According to the Berlin papers of Sunday's date, addresses were pouring into the National Assembly from Breslau, Stettin, and Magdeburg, declaring the entire and hearty adherence of the authorities and inhabitants of those places to the acts of the Assembly

On Monday (the 13th) a military detachment was stationed at the doors of the shooting-gallery, to prevent the further sitting of the Assembly, which had in the meantime resolved to publish the memorial drawn up by its Committee, and to recommend to the Saxon and other troops an abstinence to their duty. This Committee appointed to consider the expediency of withholding the taxes, had provisionally reported against the adoption of any such measure.

Berlin remained tranquil, and the period for the surrender of arms had been prolonged.

The accounts from the Rhenish provinces state that the attempt of the Brandenburg Ministry on the liberties of the people had provoked the greatest indignation amongst all classes of the population, whilst the courageous resistance of the Assembly was highly approved. The Commercial Council at Dusseldorf and at Treves, and other public bodies, had presented congratulatory addresses to Berlin; and at the former place the popular club had declared its sittings permanent.

The state of siege in which Berlin was declared on the 12th includes a radius of two miles round the town. General Wrangel had been appointed commander-in-chief of the troops.

DENMARK AND THE DUCHIES.

An address of the States relative to the affairs of Schelswig, and filled with the most warlike tendencies, has been published in Copenhagen.

The Danish Government is said to have insisted on the immediate dissolution of the newly-installed conjoint Government of Schelswig-Holstein. Sir Henry Wynn, the English Chargé d'Affaires at the Court of Copenhagen, had declared that he saw no means of extrication from the present complicated state of affairs; and a courier had been despatched from Copenhagen to London, for the purpose of receiving further instructions from Viscount Palmerston.

UNITED STATES.

Two arrivals this week from New York add little to the news previously received. The presidential canvass continued to engross public attention; and so much had the prospects of General Taylor improved, that his friends were very sanguine of success.

MEXICO.

Accounts from Mexico are unsatisfactory. Further revolutionary attempts had been made, but they were unsuccessful. News from California to the 15th August states that the gold fever there was on the increase.

Intelligence from Yucatan, relative to the slaughter by the Indians of 200 Mexican soldiers at Jaxacha, had been received and confirmed. The garrison of that place had been compelled to retreat to Sotuta. The garrison consisted of 400 men under the command of General Pasos. On the receipt of intelligence of this event the Government despatched a reinforcement of 200 troops from Merida. Great apprehensions are entertained that this reverse would be a prelude to further disasters.

BURIED ALIVE FOR TWO THOUSAND YEARS.—Lord Lindsay, in his travels, writes, that while wandering amid the pyramids of Egypt, he stumbled on a mummy, proved by its hieroglyphics to be at least 2000 years of age. In examining the mummy after it was unwrapped, he found in one of its closed hands a tuberous or bulbous root. He was interested in the question how long vegetable life would last, and he therefore took that tuberous root from the mummy's hand, planted it in a sunny soil, allowed the rains and dews of heaven to descend upon it, and in the course of a few weeks, to his astonishment and joy, the root burst forth and bloomed into a beautiful canna.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

CAMBRIDGE.

PROPOSED NEW PRIZE.—The Vice-Chancellor has laid before the senate the following statement respecting a new prize offered to the University: a large number of members of the civil service of India who were students at the East India College at Haileybury at various intervals during the last few years that the Rev. C. W. Le Bas, M.A., formerly Fellow of Trinity College, was connected with that institution, desirous of testifying their regard for Mr. Le Bas, and of perpetuating the memory of his services, have raised a fund amounting to about £1920 Three per Cent Consols, which they offer to the University of Cambridge for founding an annual prize, to be called, in honour of Mr. Le Bas, the Le Bas Prize, for the best English essay on a subject of general literature, such subject to be occasionally chosen with reference to the history, institutions, and probable destinies and prospects of the Anglo-Indian empire.

THE HULSEAN LECTURESHIP.—Notice has been given by the trustees of Mr. Hulse's benefaction, that the office of lecturer will be vacant at Christmas next, and that the trustees will then proceed to an election.

CROSSE SCHOLARSHIP.—There will be an examination for this scholarship on Tuesday, the 28th Nov. inst., and following days. Candidates must be "Bachelors of Arts in the first year of their degree."

CRANE'S CHARITY.—The trustees of the above-named charity for the relief of sick scholars will meet at St. Peter's Lodge, on Tuesday, the 21st inst., to consider and determine the claims of applicants for the benefit of the charity.

OXFORD.

EDUCATIONAL REFORM.—It is understood that the Board of Heads of Houses have in contemplation a most comprehensive measure of educational reform; it is one which will not only affect candidates for honours, but also the general mass of students. The plan is in such a state of preparation, that it is expected to be brought before Convocation early in the ensuing Lent term

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.—The annual general examination for the degrees of Bachelor of Arts and Doctor of Laws in this University commenced on Monday morning. The subjects of examination were Blackstone's Commentaries, or the last three volumes of Kent's Commentaries, Rutherfurth's Institutes of Natural Laws, or the two portions of Dumont's edition of Bentham's Morals and Legislation, which contain the principles of a civil code and the principles of a criminal code. The examination for honours took place immediately afterwards, the subjects being—Jurisprudence, Conveyancing, Law of the Courts of Equity, Law of the Courts of Common Law, Roman Law, Law of the Admiralty and Ecclesiastical Courts, and Colonial Law. For the degree of Doctor of Laws the subjects of examination were Common Law by printed papers. One of the four following subjects by printed papers:—1. Conveyancing, according to the Laws of England and Ireland; 2. Law of the Courts of Equity of England and Ireland; 3. Law of the Admiralty and Ecclesiastical Courts in England and Ireland; 4. Law of the English Colonies or dependencies. One of the seven following subjects by printed papers: 1. Roman Law—Science of Legislation, applied to; 2. International Law; 3 Civil Law; 4. Criminal Law; 5. Law of Evidence; 6. Judicial Organisation; 7. Procedure. The examination for the degree of Doctor of Medicine is appointed to commence on Monday, the 27th inst

PROPOSED ADDITION OF TEN BISHOPS AND ONE HUNDRED CLERGYMEN TO THE COLONIAL CHURCH.—The Right Rev. Dr. Tomlinson, Bishop of Gibraltar, who is at present in this country, has addressed a letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury, containing a scheme for a considerable extension of the episcopate and the clerical body in the colonies of the British Crown. The Bishop remarks, that, by the Act of Uniformity, passed in the 2nd of King Edward VI., A.D. 1548, it was ordered that the Book of Common Prayer and administration of the Sacraments, and other rites and ceremonies of the Church of England, which had been recently prepared "by the Archbishop of Canterbury and certain of the most learned and discreet Bishops and other learned men of this realm," should be used in all the churches throughout the King's dominions from and after the feast of Pentecost next ensuing, that is, in the year 1549. Consequently Whitsunday next, 1849, will be the three hundredth anniversary of the English Prayer-Book. The Bishop of Gibraltar suggests to the Archbishop that the approaching anniversary shall be made the occasion of a great, simultaneous, and universal effort on the part of the members of the Church of England for the wider extension of its ministry and services abroad. He proposes, therefore, that on Whitsunday next a collection should be made in every church and chapel throughout the country; that the clergy both at home and in the colonies should be requested by their diocesans to preach upon the subject, and to call upon every member of the church in their respective parishes to contribute; that the whole of the contributions should be paid into one common fund, and placed at the disposal of the committee of Archbishops and Bishops already established for the Colonial Bishops' fund, to be divided and applied as they shall see fit, to the two-fold object of providing additional Bishops and additional clergy for the church in the colonies, and as missionaries in foreign countries; the additional clergy to be appointed on the application of the Colonial Bishops through the medium of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, and of the Church Missionary Society. The Bishop suggests to the Archbishop of Canterbury the propriety of issuing a pastoral letter addressed to the clergy of his province, framed so as to explain the object of the movement to their respective congregations In the event of sufficient funds being raised, additional bishoprics will be erected in the northern and southern provinces of India, in Western Australia, Port Philip, and Sierra Leone. A bishopric will also be founded within the British possessions in the Chinese seas. Towards this bishopric upwards of £6,000 have already been contributed, about £4000 more have been wanted. The see will be fixed at Victoria, in the island of Hong Kong.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

THE RIGHT HON. LADY DE BLAQUIERE.

HARRIET, Baroness de Blaquiere, died on the 7th inst., at her residence, 3, Spring-hish-place, Manchester square, after a long and painful affliction. Her Ladyship had completed her 66th year. She was the fifth daughter of George, third Marquis Townshend, the celebrated General to whom Canada owes its conquest, and the death of the gallant Wolfe; and was descended, through her mother Anne, daughter and co-heir of Sir William Montgomery, Bart.—from the branch of the Eglinton family seated at Magbie Lee, in Dumfriesshire.

Her Ladyship was, besides, allied to many of our most distinguished houses. Her aunt married Charles, first Earl Cornwallis; her mother's half-sister was wife of the late George Byng, Esq., of Wrotham Park, the venerable and respected M.P. for the metropolitan county, and her own sister wedded, in 1797, the sixth Duke of Leeds.

Lady de Blaquiere married, 16th Sept., 1811, General the Hon. William de Blaquiere, who succeeded to the Peerage at the decease of his brother in 1844, and leaves, by him, two surviving sons, John and William Barnard.

THE HON. COLONEL GERALD DE COURCY.

THE death of this gentleman occurred at Florence on the 20th ult., after a few days' illness. Colonel de Courcy was last surviving son of John, 26th Lord Kinsale, by Susan, his wife, daughter of Conway Blennerhassett, Esq., of Castle Conway, county Kerry. He married in 1807 Elizabeth Carlyon, daughter of John Bishop, Esq., and has left one son and four daughters.

The chief of the noble family of De Courcy enjoys the singular privilege of wearing his hat in the Royal presence. On one occasion, Americus, 23d Lord Kingsale, appearing covered at the Court of William III., his Majesty expressed surprise, and enquired the reason. "Sire," replied the Baron, "my name is De Courcy; I am Lord of Kingsale, in your Majesty's kingdom of Ireland; and the reason of my appearing covered in your Majesty's presence is to exercise the ancient privilege of my family, granted to Sir John de Courcy, Earl of Ulster, and his heirs, by John, King of England." The King acknowledged the privilege, and giving the Baron his hand to kiss, his Lordship paid his obeisance, and continued covered.

ISAAC DONNITHORNE HARRIS, ESQ., OF HAYNE, DEVON.

To the brief memoir of this lamented gentleman, which we gave a short time since, the following details may be added:—Mr. Harris possessed considerable literary attainments, an elegant and highly cultivated mind, and a taste polished and refined by a long residence in Italy. He married his first cousin, Elizabeth, daughter and co-heir of Christopher Harris, Esq., of Hayne, by the direct descendant and representative of the learned John Harris, sergeant-at-law, temp. Henry VIII. and Elizabeth, son of William Harris, Esq., of Stone, by Thomasine, daughter and co-heir of Walter Hayne, Esq., of Hayne, Devon. In the great civil war, the Harrises were among the most ardent and unyielding of those whom Lord Clarendon terms "His Majesty's faithful adherents in the west," and the old mansion of Stone, traditionally related, had the honour of affording shelter to King Charles I. in the days of his misfortune.

Mr Harris bore originally the surname of Donnithorne, but assumed on his marriage that of the lady to whom he was united. He has left issue by her, two sons surviving; the latter are Christopher-Arthur and John-James. The family arms are—"Sa, within a bordure three crescents, or, a chief ermine, charged with a cross-crosslet fitchy, between two mullets pierced, gu." The crest—"An eagle rising regardant, beaked and spurred or"; and the motto, "Car Dieu Roys Pub Tra"—"God's grace gives everything."

FREDERICK WALPOLE ANSON, ESQ., MAJOR, 18TH BENGAL NATIVE INFANTRY.

THIS distinguished officer, who had served in India for twenty-six years, and participated in the glory of Moodkee, Ferozeshah, and Sobraon, died on the 12th inst., at the Royal Hospital, Chelsea. He was eldest surviving son of Sir George Anson, G.C.B., the gallant commander in the Peninsular War, and nephew of Thomas, first Viscount Anson. At the period of his decease he had completed his forty-second year. He married, in 1827, Miss Catherine Hanson, and had issue.

MELANCHOLY SUICIDE AT NOTTINGHAM.—The Rev. Wm. Browne, of St. John's, Oxford, and curate of St. Stephen's, Sneaton, Nottingham, committed suicide on Friday (last week). He was observed on that day, at his lodgings, to be in a state of the utmost excitement, after receiving a letter from the father of a young lady to whom he was attached; but who, as well as her father, declined encouraging his advances. He rushed from his lodging in a violent passion, proceeded soon after to a gunsmith's and purchased a pistol, powder, &c., and in a few hours after was found a lifeless corpse among the ruins of the old castle. He had fired the pistol into the centre of his forehead. It appeared from the evidence at the inquest, that the unfortunate deceased's disposition was such as was calculated to bring about a deranged state of mind under great disappointment. Verdict, "Temporary Insanity."

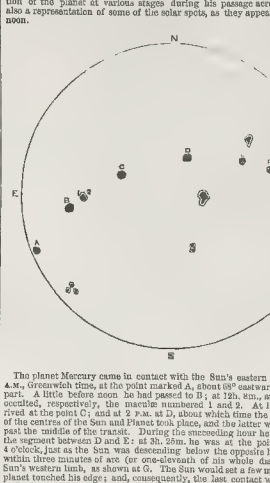
TRANSIT OF MERCURY ACROSS THE SUN, NOVEMBER 9, 1848.

The sky during the day was almost free from cloud at all places in England, and was partially so in the islands of Jersey and Guernsey. The time of the planet touching the Sun was calculated to be at 11h. 9m. A.M. (see the Illustrated London Almanack), and the time it actually did touch the Sun was about 11h. 5m A.M., being fully three minutes later than the predicted time. In all other respects, the observed phenomenon agreed precisely with that shown in the Almanack. The sun was more than usually covered by spots. The black spot on the sun caused by the interposition of the planet was perfectly round, and densely black, exhibiting a great contrast in its appearance in those respects to the solar spots themselves. At Brussels, in West Flanders, Mr. Fraser, F.R.A.S., observed the eclipse of one of the solar spots by the planet, and by this means he estimated its circumference to have been 30,000 miles.

At the meeting of the Royal Astronomic Society on Friday, Nov. 10, the Astronomer Royal said that, at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, eight telescopes were in use, the preceding day, devoted to the observation of the transit of Mercury, some of which were used by throwing the sun's image on a screen, and thus enabling any number of observers to view the phenomena; and that with one of the telescopes tins used the image of the planet was distorted on its entering on the sun, but that it was seen perfectly round by all the other telescopes.—J. G.

THE TRANSIT OF MERCURY, AS SEEN AT WHITEHAVEN, NOV. 9.

AGREEABLY to astronomical prediction, the long looked-for transit of Mercury across the Sun's disc took place this day; and the weather being favourable, almost to a wish, the phenomenon was seen to great advantage, even through telescopes of moderate size and power. The atmosphere was transparent, and the sky for the most part clear throughout the day; light cirrus clouds were passing occasionally. By means of a heliometer, I am enabled to give the position of the planet at various stages during his passage across the solar disc; also a representation of some of the solar spots, as they appeared a little before noon.



The planet Mercury came in contact with the Sun's eastern limb at 11h. 3m A.M., Greenwich time, at the point marked A, about 68° eastward from his lowest part. A little before noon he had passed to B; at 12h. 8m., and 12h. 12m., he occulted, respectively, the macules numbered 1 and 2. At 1 P.M. he had arrived at the point C; and at 2 P.M. at D, about which time the nearest approach of the centres of the Sun and Planet took place, and the latter was a few minutes past the middle of the transit. During the succeeding hour he passed through the segment between D and E: at 3h. 25m. he was at the point F; and about 4 o'clock, just as the Sun was descending below the opposite hill, Mercury was within three minutes of arc (or one-eleventh of his whole diameter) from the Sun's western limb, as shown at G. The Sun would set a few minutes before the planet touched his edge; and, consequently, the last contact would be invisible in England, except Cornwall. The heliometer, by the aid of which the above diagram was taken, magnified about 80 times, and eye pieces, with powers of 230 and 300, were also used for viewing the planet: with these high powers it presented a sharply defined jet black circular disc, 10 seconds in diameter, and apparently about the size of a shilling, or that of a "spade-ace" guinea. Probably there never was a transit seen under more favourable atmospheric circumstances, since the planet was distinctly visible from the moment of apparent contact, a minute or two of the Sun's disappearance below the visible horizon of this station to the W.S.W., which is very slightly elevated above the sea-level

This propitious state of the elements was the more welcome as it was wholly unlooked for, since large snow-flakes descended throughout the whole of the previous evening, and now cover the ground. The temperature, which was low for the season, only varied 4° during the period of the transit. At 11 A.M. the thermometer reading was 35° 5′, and at 3 P.M. it was at 34° 5′ the maximum for the day being 36° 5′. The barometer reading increased more than 1 inch during the previous night, but it remained nearly stationary throughout the day at 30·24 inches. The temperature of the dew point varied from 26° to 30°, being from 6° 5′ to 4° 5′ below that of the air

Mercury was first seen upon the solar disc by Gassendi, on the 7th of November, 1631. Schakerlaws made a voyage in 1651 to Surat, purposely to see one there; and that of the 8th of November, 1802, was seen by Lalande. A transit occurred on the 5th of May, 1832; but mists and clouds nearly precluded the phenomenon's being seen at all The last one took place on the 8th of May, 1845; and there will not be another until the morning of the 12th of November, 1861.

The diagram represents the solar disc and planet in transition, as it would appear through a telescope which does not invert; the observations, however, were made by means of two diagonals which do invert.

WM. THEAKEN, Nov. 9th, 1848. J. F. MILLER.

* See the diagram in the Illustrated London Almanack for 1848, showing the predicted path of the planet over the Sun

THE WEATHER.

The weather, during the past week, has been fine, but the temperature has been low, the average value for every day being below that for the season, and on some days the departure has been considerable. The whole mass of air during the week has passed from the N. The following are some particulars of each day: Thursday, the sky was almost cloudless; the direction of the wind was N.; the average temperature of the air was 36°. The day was fine, and the transit of Mercury this day was well seen. For particulars see another part of this paper. Friday, the sky was cloudless, till late in the evening; the direction of the wind was N., and the average temperature of the air was 36°. Saturday, the sky was mostly covered by cloud; the direction of the wind was N., and the average temperature of the air was 41°5. Sunday, a thin rain was falling almost throughout the day; the direction of the wind was N.W., and the average temperature of the air was 40°. Monday, the sky was mostly cloudy till after noon, and it was chiefly clear at night; the direction of the wind was N.W., and the average temperature of the air was 42°. Tuesday was fine, and the sky was for the most part cloudless; the direction of the wind was N., and the average temperature of the air was 40°. Wednesday, the sky was clear from cloud early in the morning, and the temperature descended to 34·5°; after this time the sky was covered with thin clouds till towards evening, when it was again free from clouds, but the air was misty; the temperature descended to 27° by midnight, and to 25° at one o'clock this morning; the direction was N., and the average temperature was 39·2°, and that for the week ending this day was 39·2°.

The extreme thermometrical readings for each day were

Thursday,	Nov. 9,	the highest during the day was 44	deg., and the lowest was 36	deg.
Friday,	Nov. 10,	.....	46	 36
Saturday,	Nov. 11,	.....	46	 34
Sunday,	Nov. 12,	.....	47	 40
Monday,	Nov. 13,	.....	47	 37
Tuesday,	Nov. 14,	.....	47	 34
Wednesday,	Nov. 15,	.....	45	 27

Blackheath, Thursday, November 16, 1848. J. G.

AN ACCOUNT OF THE DUTY ON HOPS of the growth of the year 1848, distinguishing the districts, and the old from the new duty: Barnstaple, £138 3s.; Bedford, £13 11s. 6d.; Cambridge, £45 9s. 11½d.; Canterbury, £76,137 4s. 10d.; Cornwall, £2 14s. 9d.; Derby, £269 5s. 9d.; Essex, 1058 18s. 4½d.; Farnham, £117 12s. 1½d.; Grantham, £62 6s. 9d.; Hants, £15,273 2s. 6d.; Hereford, £22,292 13s. 1½d.; Isle of Wight, £6116 14s. 10½d.; Lincoln, £1821 1s. 11½d.; Cornwall, £2 14s. 9d.; Derby, £269 5s. 9d.; Essex, 1058 18s. 4½d.; Farnham, £117 12s. 1½d.; Grantham, £62 6s. 9d.; Hants, £15,273 2s. 6d.; Hereford, £22,292 13s. 1½d.; Isle of Wight, £6116 14s. 10½d.; Lincoln, £1821 1s. 11½d.; Oxford, £20 15s. 9½d.; Reading, £68 16s. 10½.; Rochester, £194,081 7s. 7½.; Salisbury, £26 19s. 5½d.; Salop, £19 4s. 7½d.; Stourbridge, £1394 16s. 7½.; Suffolk, £914 15s. 10½d.; Surrey, £139 14s. 9d.; Sussex, £117,427 17s. 1½d.; Wales (middle), £83 2s. 1½d.; Worcester, £6369 10s. 6d.: Total, £387,857 18s. 7½d. Made up of: Old duty, at 1 12-20d. per lb., £212,416 5s. 1½ 5-20d.; new duty, at ⅞ 8-20d., £157,003 9s. 4½ 12-20d.; additional duty of 5 per cent., per Act 3 Vic., c. 17, £18,468 7s. 1½d.—L. S. LYNE, Accountant-General.—Excise office, London, Nov. 11, 1848.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The nomination of Sheriffs for the ensuing year took place before the Lords of her Majesty's most honourable Privy Council on Monday afternoon, in the Exchequer Chamber, Westminster. The Lords present were—Sir C. Wood, Bart., the Marquis of Lansdowne, Lord Cottenham, Lord Denman, Sir T. Wilde, Sir F. Pollock, Lord Campbell, and Sir J. Parke. The puisne judges (Coleridge, Rolfe, and Wightman) assisted in nominating three gentlemen for each of the different counties of England and Wales.

J. Stewart, Esq., is appointed Deputy Queen's Advocate at Ceylon; and Mr. Edward Palmer is appointed Solicitor-General for Prince Edward's Island.

W. Heathcote, Esq., of Lincoln's-inn, has been appointed secretary to Vice-Chancellor Wigram, in the room of C. R. M. Jackson, Esq., who has received the appointment of her Majesty's Advocate-General in India.

The Master of the Rolls has appointed Wednesday, the 22nd inst., at the Rolls Court, Chancery-lane, at a quarter past three in the afternoon, for swearing solicitors. Every person desirous of being sworn on the roll may, must have his common-law admission, or his certificate of practice for the current year, at the secretary's office, Rolls-yard, Chancery-lane, on or before Thursday, November, 21.

On Sunday last the new Lord Mayor, Sir James Duke, accompanied by the Aldermen, Sheriffs, and Common Council of the ward, attended divine service in the parish church of St. Bride's, Fleet-street, where a sermon was preached by the Rev. Charles Marshall, M.A., in behalf of the St. Bride's parochial national school

The indictment against Mr. Duffy, of the Nation, has been printed. Some idea may be formed of the extent of the written document, when, in the printed form, it measures about one hundred feet.

Major-General Sir Robert Gardiner, K.C.B., K.C.H., is appointed Governor of the important fortress of Gibraltar, in the room of General Sir Thomas Robert Wilson. Major-General Sir Robert Gardiner is a distinguished officer of the Royal Artillery, and was present at the principal engagements during the Peninsular War and at the battle of Waterloo.

On Saturday morning last a fire broke out between six and seven o'clock, in Marks' Auction Mart, 124, Oxford-street, and before it could be got under destroyed property of the value of £2000. Some of the adjoining houses were also slightly injured. Mr. Marks and the others are insured. Nothing is known as to the origin of the fire.

The following is the result of the registration for the southern division of Lancashire:—Conservatives struck off on objections, 1013; Liberals, ditto, 455; new claims (Liberals) sustained, 407; new claims (Conservatives) sustained, 336; total gain to Liberals, 629.

The number of visitors at Brighton is at the present time computed to be 35,000.

Of the 6100 sailors who man the American navy, there are only 900 native Americans—the rest are chiefly composed of Irish and English emigrants.

Nearly three thousand people from Essex were brought up by the excursion trains on the Eastern Counties Railway on Thursday se'nnight to witness the Lord Mayor's show, and returned the same night, without meeting with the slightest accident.

A Companionship of the Bath will, it is rumoured, be conferred upon Count Strelecki, in acknowledgment of his voluntary, but most arduous services in administering relief to the destitute Irish during the late famine. Count Strelecki is known to the scientific world by his valuable work on the geology of New South Wales, and other publications.

The City of Paris has ordered four large statues, destined to be placed on the pensyleys of the two façades of the Senate.

President Roberts, of Liberia, has left England in a Government steamer on his return to Africa.

Lieut. Munro, late of the Blues, who suffered 12 months' imprisonment for the fatal duel with Lieut.-Col. Fawcett, of the 59th Regiment, is, it is said, to be appointed riding-master of the 7th Hussars.

Another detachment of colonists left Paris on Sunday for Algeria.

M. Flandin, de Beli, charged with a scientific mission in Persia by the French Government, recently died at Ispahan, of a putrid fever.

On Saturday last notice was affixed to the entrance of the Royal Pavilion at Brighton, announcing the intention of the Commissioners of Woods and Forests to apply for power at the ensuing Parliamentary session to dispose of the Royal property and ground attached by public auction

Messrs. Thorburn and Egg have been named associates of the Royal Academy.

A valuable public testimonial, consisting of a dinner service of silver plate, with a beautiful centre-piece, was on Wednesday, last week, presented to Major-Gen. Peddinys, at a private dinner given to that gallant officer by the Mayor of Manchester, Mr. Edmund Armitage, as a mark of respect for the manner in which he had conducted himself while connected with the district as commandant between 1839 and 1847. The service included upwards of 20 pieces of plate, and its value is not much short probably of £2000

The Rev. Mr. Leahy, President of the Roman Catholic College of Thurles, has written to the journals to say that John O'Leary, arrested with some armed peasants in the county of Tipperary, is not, as has been asserted, and Lever had been, a student of that college. He is a student of Trinity College, Dublin, preparing for the bar.

The Bishop of London has issued a pastoral letter to the clergy of his diocese, calling upon them to do their utmost in their various localities, to remove the ascertained causes of the extension of cholera

The official journal of Palermo, of the 20th ult., contains a notice from the post-office department, stating that, by order of the French Republic, the Marseilles and Constantinople line of steamers will touch at Trapani during the outward voyage on the 4th, 14th, and 24th, and during the homeward voyage on the 3rd, 13th, and 23rd of every month.

The appeal to the Court of Cassation at Brussels of the prisoners in the "Riquet Vent" affair has been rejected. As the sentence now remains in full force, it is expected that a continuation of punishment by the Royal prerogative of mercy will very shortly take place.

Count Von Reigersberg, the President of the Bavarian Chamber is 80 years of age.

George Breary Jackson, late a clerk in the employ of Messrs. Pearson and Co., Marsden-square, Manchester, who a short time back absconded, taking with him upwards of £2000 belonging to his employers, has been arrested at Liverpool. A portion of the money (£200) was recovered, being found at his own house in Manchester.

A melancholy loss of life took place at Cellardyke, in Scotland, on Friday morning se'nnight, which was very stormy, the wind prevailing from the north-east. The crews of fishermen as usual proceeded to sea, but the storm increasing, they returned without attempting to work lines except one crew, which was lost a few miles east of the May Island. This dreadful calamity has thrown six widows and twenty-seven children on the care of the benevolent.

At Dudbridge Police Court, on Tuesday last, to which day the case of the Baroness St. Mary was adjourned with her valuable diamond rings from Sir John Hare, had been remanded, while the investigation was going on, a person in the crowd was robbed of his purse, containing £15 in notes and two sovereigns. The case of the Baroness was further remanded.

The General Board of Health sat on Monday at Gwydyr House, and received a deputation from Lancaster.

Scarlet fever is very prevalent in the city of Lincoln at the present time, and deaths are very frequent.

Information has been received by the Metropolitan Police, that two wheat sacks belonging to Mr. S. Bickley, Limal, Salop, had been set on fire and totally consumed; also, that the farm buildings of Mr. G. Briscoe, at Bunston, Cheshire, had been wilfully fired, and the barn and buildings and 100 thraves of beans and barley destroyed.

On Thursday week the grindstone of a Sheffield table-blade grinder, turned by steam, suddenly broke into several pieces, and one of the fragments striking his daughter, aged 12 years, who had just gone into the factory with her father's tea, killed her on the spot.

It has been reported at Lloyd's that the Hudson's Bay Company's barque Pancrasse was wrecked on the bar of the Columbia River on the 7th of May last. Her valuable cargo, consisting of English manufactures, was lost. The crew and passengers were all saved, and the ship and cargo are covered by insurance.

An order was issued at Cadiz on the 3rd instant, to prohibit the entrance into that port of any ship coming from a country in which the cholera prevails.

The Marquis of Exeter has presented the munificent sum of £500 to the Additional Curates' Society, in consequence of a statement to the effect that, unless a great increase takes place in the Society's income before Easter, 1849, the terminable grants, 46 in number, must all expire.

On Monday last, that parish of the Manchester General Cemetery which has not hitherto been used was consecrated for the benefit of members of the Established Church. The ceremony was performed by the Lord Bishop of Manchester

The Rev. W. J. Kennedy has resigned his post of Secretary to the National Society, he having been made a Government Inspector of Schools.

The revolutionary spirit in Germany exhibits its desolating effects in the want of confidence it creates among capitalists. The Royal Banks of Berlin and Breslau are depositing their reserves of gold and silver bullion at the fortress of Magdeburg, where they will be in greater safety in case of a surprise. The removals of cash are made by means of the night trains on the Berlin and Cologne Railway

On Wednesday, at a Court of the Company's Directors held at the East India House, Capt. Stephen Lushington, R.N., was appointed Superintendent of the Indian Navy.

The gallery of the British Institution was opened on Wednesday to the governors and subscribers, for the purpose of exhibiting to them the studies and copies of pictures made in the school of painting. The attendance was not very numerous, and the general character of the copies exhibited not above mediocrity.

Water property, latterly not a favourite form of investment in Edinburgh, is again coming into use. In some recent cases keen competitions for purchase have taken place.

BOHEMIAN [illegible] OF THE ARTILLERY. OFFICER OF INFANTRY. [illegible] OF THE IMPERIAL ORDER OF MARIA THERESA. [illegible]ER OF THE IMPERIAL GUARD. [illegible] CROATIAN INFANTRY.

AUSTRIA AND HUNGARY.

The accounts received this week concur in stating that "order reigns" at Vienna, purchased, however, by great sufferings on the part of the vanquished, the majority of whom are to be drafted as private soldiers into the various corps of the army, while their leaders had been condemned to death by courts-martial, and immediately shot. Amongst the more important victims of martial law are Messenhauser, the commander of the National Guard of Vienna, and Robert Blum, member to the central Diet at Frankfort for the city of Leipzig, who, with his colleague, Frobel, had gone with an address to the Diet of Vienna. [illegible] said that there was no proof of their having joined in the resistance of the Viennese, further than their having been found lodged in one of the hotels when the city was taken by the troops.

Those executions took place on the 9th. At six o'clock on that morning Blum was [illegible] replied that he expected it. A little before seven the prisoner arrived, in an open van, with a guard of cuirassiers, in the Brigittenau. Kneeling down, he tied the handker chief over his eyes with his own hands. [illegible] lead at the first discharge, two balls having entered his chest and one his [illegible]; but the captain who, on the 6th of [illegible] military hospital. During the day [illegible] ld out to [illegible] shot. It was thought that Gen[illegible]ho was in the Burgher [illegible] undergo the fate of Blum [illegible].

The state of siege which is still maintained in Vienna has been greatly mo[illegible] begun to m[illegible] flight are returning. The shops are gradua[illegible]pon[illegible]affic is being resumed; and, under the firm rule of Windischgratz, the [illegible] promises soon to return to its former state.

Lieutenant Field-Marshal Welden has been appointed Governor of Vienna, as Prince Windischgratz is to command the army against Hung[illegible]

His Majesty the Emperor has commanded that the trial b[illegible] court-martial o[illegible] the persons implicated in the late insurrection shall [illegible], and that they shall [illegible] [illegible] War Office, because he did not protect Count Latour[illegible] [illegible] s men, but gave him up to the fury of an exasperated mob, shall be brought before a court-martial.

The Ministry ha[illegible] [illegible] without a p[illegible] War; Kraus, Finance; Bo[illegible], Justice; [illegible]drust, Commerce; Hei[illegible], Ed[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] brola, and Helfert had declined to enter the Ministry.

In Kremsier all the preliminaries were being adopted for the mee[illegible] Diet. The Castle of Kremsier contains about 160 apartments completely f[illegible] plished. In the little city itself, also, there is no want of accommodation for the Diet. Three of the Ministers are always to be present at Kremsier.

MAGYAR DRAGOON. MAGNATE IN FULL [illegible] DRESS. HUNGARIAN HUSSAR. GRENADIER AND FUSILIER [illegible] INFANTRY.

PRINCE WINDISCHGRATZ.

The Emperor has decided on fixing his residence at Prague, in Bohemia, and the apartments in the Hradschin are being prepared for his Majesty. The large towns of Gratz, Brunn, and Lemberg have been declared to a state of siege. Presburg, in Hungary, has been entered by the Imperial troops without striking a blow. The Emperor has, in reply to the loyal addresses of the deputation of the Tyrol, reiterated the assurance that all the privileges guaranteed by him shall be faithfully adhered to.

The Communal Council of Vienna has issued a proclamation to the effect that during the present distress into which the inhabitants of the city have been plunged, it is the earnest desire of the Council to give assistance to poor persons of both sexes by providing them with work, for which each man is to be paid 15 kreutzers per diem, and every mother of a family 15 kreutzers per diem. Single persons are to receive 10 kreutzers per diem. This sum of 15 kreutzers will be granted if the committee are unable to provide full work.

The Hungarian ex-Under-Secretary of State, Pulsky, was arrested on the 7th, just as he was about to enter Hungary. He was at once taken to the head-quarters of Prince Windischgrätz. Pulsky was the agent of Kossuth at Vienna.

Letters had been received at Vienna from Pesth, announcing that General Philippowich had been tried by court-martial there and shot. His offence is not stated. The Austrian troops, on hearing that announcement, became furious against the Magyars, and declared that they would give them no quarter.

The accounts from Hungary indicate the approach of a sanguinary struggle. The Imperial forces which are marching under Windischgrätz against the Magyars amount to 100,000 men, in three divisions, including Jellachich's Croats. In addition to those, General Buchner is advancing from the southern provinces, and General Nigan from Styria, so that there are no less than 150,000 men actually in the field against Hungary. On the other hand, the Hungarians are not without an imposing force. Their army musters 80,000 men. Hostilities have already commenced, and so far the results have been in favour of the Magyars, for the Austrian General Simonich, who had entered Hungary from Gallicia, had been beaten by the Magyars, and retired into the Marchfeld at Goding, a village not far from Vienna. Simonich lost two cannon and several men. The Hungarian force halted on the frontier, but its commander declared that, in the event of an entry being made into the Hungarian territory, he would enter Moravia. The Ban Jellachich, with his force, had joined Simonich at Goding.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

Our Artist has here pourtrayed specimens of the Austrian, Bohemian, Hungarian, and Croatian troops, who have recently been waging the great struggle.

The Austrian army is composed of forty-eight regiments of the line—forty-three German, Gallician, and Italian, and fifteen Hungarian. These regiments are divided into 194 battalions of the line, and twenty battalions of grenadiers, forming a grand total of 235,451 men. To these regiments are joined the battalions of the 1st Landwehr, of the thirty-five German regiments of the hereditary states; each battalion reckons four companies, and the total includes 31,000 men: the so-called frontier infantry is composed of thirty-six battalions, and one Czarkist battalion—total 48,981 men. The chasseur regiments of the Tyrol, and twelve other battalions of chasseurs: the Tyrolese are divided into four battalions and twenty-four companies, including 15,336 men. The garrison battalions form a total of 6716 men. Thus, in a state of peace, the entire infantry of the empire consists of 283 battalions, and 1568 companies, presenting an effective force of 341,873 men. By forming divisions of reserve and second battalions of the Landwehr, this force may be increased, in time of war, to 460,000 men. The Austrian cavalry is divided into eight regiments of cuirassiers, seven of dragoons, seven of light horse, twelve of hussars, and four of lancers, forming 266 squadrons in time of peace, and 305 in time of war. The entire cavalry force in time of peace is 48,842 men, and 44,909 horses; and in time of war, 64,550 men, and 62,122 horses. The artillery of Austria is composed, besides the five regiments of campagn artillery, of the corps of bombardiers and artificers, and the garrison and arsenal artillery—total, 24,294 men, exclusive of the train.

In war time the five regiments of artillery furnish men to serve 200 batteries, of 1200 pieces of artillery. The special corps, the staff of the Quartermaster-General, the pioneers, the engineers, and the miners, yield an average force of 7000 men in time of peace. The train includes 4304 men, and 4701 horses. The gendarmerie in Lombardy amounts to 1030 men. Thus the total forces of Austria, including the Imperial Marine, present an effective, in time of peace, of 440,053 men. There are now only six Field-Marshals, amongst whom is the Duke of Wellington. In 1846 there were 25 Generals of artillery and cavalry, 90 Lieutenant Field-Marshals, and 123 Major-Generals in active service.

Of the Croatian troops we gave some details in a late Number of our Journal.

The military establishment of Hungary consists of twelve regiments of infantry, and ten complete regiments of hussars, all of whom are among the choicest troops of the army. The total is stated at 64,000 men. They are not kept up at their full complement in time of profound peace. In time of war an extraordinary levy, called the insurrectio, is made on a call from the Crown. Upon such occasions the total of infantry and cavalry has exceeded 85,000 men.

Prince Windischgratz (Ernest-Alfred), the General in command of the Austrian troops, is exceedingly rich, and descends, on the maternal side, from the celebrated Wallenstein. He is chivalrous and of the greatest bravery; and his devotion to the Imperial family is unlimited, although he has instituted a process against that family for the renewal of the name and restoration of the property of Wallenstein. At the head of the Grand Duke Constantine's regiment of cuirassiers, he greatly distinguished himself on several occasions in 1814; and was decorated with the cross of Maria Theresa for resisting successfully for three hours, in a pass, a force of quadruple strength. Windischgrätz is about sixty-two years of age.

GENERAL BEM.

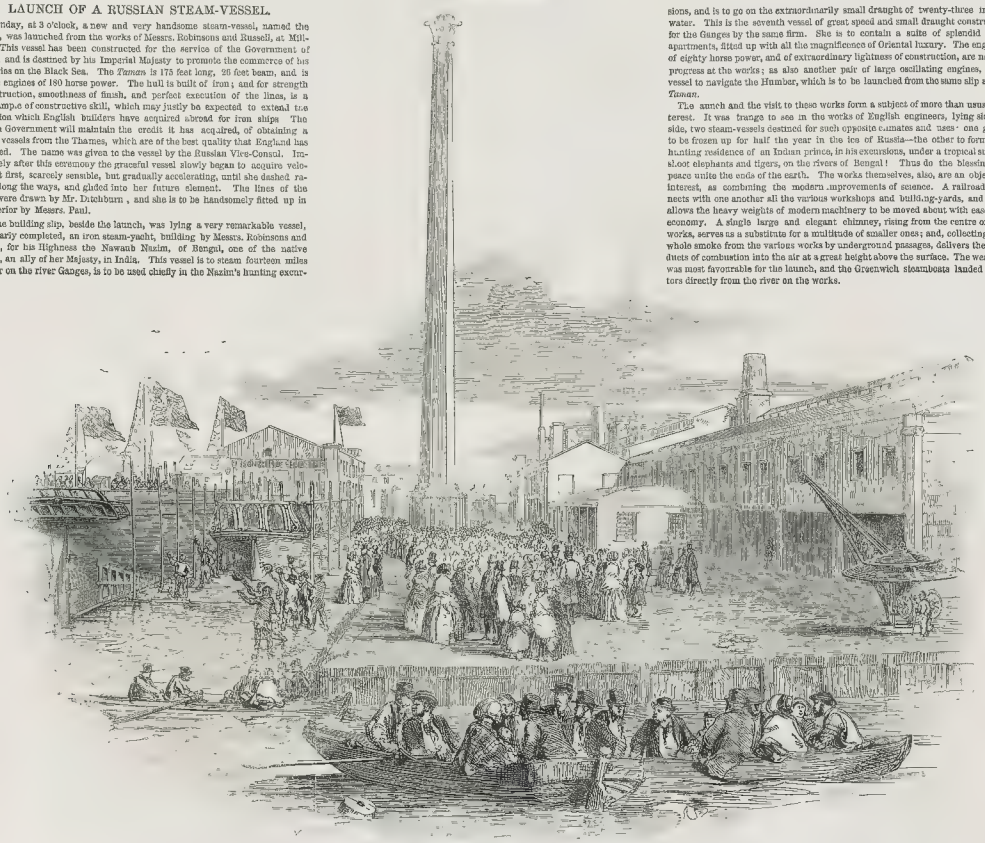
Joseph Bem is Commander-in-Chief of the insurgent troops at Vienna, and his perilous position is explained in the latest intelligence from Vienna.

LAUNCH OF A RUSSIAN STEAM-VESSEL.

On Monday, at 3 o'clock, a new and very handsome steam-vessel, named the Tzaran, was launched from the works of Messrs. Robinsons and Russell, at Millwall. This vessel has been constructed for the service of the Government of Russia, and is destined by his Imperial Majesty to promote the commerce of his territories on the Black Sea. The Tzaran is 175 feet long, 26 feet beam, and is to have engines of 180 horse power. The hull is built of iron; and for strength of construction, smoothness of finish, and perfect execution of the lines, is a good sample of constructive skill, which may justly be expected to extend the reputation which English builders have acquired abroad for iron ships. The Russian Government will maintain the credit it has acquired, of obtaining a fleet of vessels from the Thames, which are of the best quality that England has produced. The name was given to the vessel by the Russian Vice-Consul. Immediately after this ceremony the graceful vessel slowly began to acquire velocity; at first, scarcely sensible, but gradually accelerating, until she dashed rapidly along the ways, and glided into her future element. The lines of the vessel were drawn by Mr. Dutchburn, and she is to be handsomely fitted up in the interior by Messrs. Paul.

On the building slip, beside the launch, was lying a very remarkable vessel, now nearly completed, an iron steam-yacht, building by Messrs. Robinsons and Russell, for his Highness the Nawaub Nazim, of Bengal, one of the native princes, an ally of her Majesty, in India. This vessel is to steam fourteen miles an hour on the river Ganges, is to be used chiefly in the Nazim's hunting excursions, and is to go on the extraordinarily small draught of twenty-three inches water. This is the seventh vessel of great speed and small draught constructed for the Ganges by the same firm. She is to contain a suite of splendid state apartments, fitted up with all the magnificence of Oriental luxury. The engines of eighty horse power, and of extraordinary lightness of construction, are now in progress at the works; as also another pair of large oscillating engines, for a vessel to navigate the Humber, which is to be launched from the same slip as the Tzaran.

The launch and the visit to these works form a subject of more than usual interest. It was strange to see in the works of English engineers, lying side by side, two steam-vessels destined for such opposite climates and uses: one going to be frozen up for half the year in the Ice of Russia—the other to form the hunting residence of an Indian prince, in his excursions, under a tropical sun, to shoot elephants and tigers, on the rivers of Bengal! Thus do the blessings of peace unite the ends of the earth. The works themselves, also, are an object of interest, as combining the modern improvements of science. A railroad connects with one another all the various workshops and building-yards, and thus allows the heavy weights of modern machinery to be moved about with ease and economy. A single large and elegant chimney, rising from the centre of the works, serves as a substitute for a multitude of smaller ones; and, collecting the whole smoke from the various works by underground passages, delivers the products of combustion into the air at a great height above the surface. The weather was most favourable for the launch, and the Greenwich steamboats landed visitors directly from the river on the works.



LAUNCH OF THE "TZARAN," STEAM-VESSEL, OF 180 H.P. WATT, BUILT

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

THE ILLUSTRATED

LONDON ALMANACK

FOR 1849;

Being the Fifth Annual Issue of this most beautifully embellished and useful Almanack. Illustrated by RICHARD DOYLE, B. FOSTER, &c.; and finely engraved by DALZIEL, VIZETELLY, &c. Country Scenes, by THOMAS MILLER; besides a variety of useful Tables usually published in Almanacks. The Astronomical Department by JAMES GRAISHER, Esq. F.R.A.S., and of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich.

Published by WILLIAM LITTLE, 196, Strand, London.

 Country orders supplied for cash only.

☞ THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON ALMANACK is forwarded POST FREE on payment of an additional Sixpence.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, 19. Twenty-second Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 20.—Edmund King and Martyr.
TUESDAY, 21. Princess Royal born, 1840.
WEDNESDAY, 22.—St. Cecilia.
THURSDAY, 23. Clement. Old Martinmas Day.
FRIDAY, 24.—The Sun rises at 7h. 35m., and sets at 3h. 58m.
SATURDAY, 25. Catherine. Michaelmas Term ends. New Moon at 9h 30m. P M

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING NOVEMBER 25

Sunday	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday
h m h m	h m h m	h m h m	h m h m	h m h m	h m h m	h m h m
0 55 1 10	0 36 0 52	10 23 11 0	11 30	At noon	0 20 0 43	1 5 1 30

During Wednesday there will be no tide only, and which will take place at noon.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"H. H. G., Thetford.—There is no stamped edition of the Illustrated London Almanack: a copy, if sent by post, as a newspaper, is charged 1d.

"M. W."—The Vase found near Wimbourg, and engraved in our Journal of last week, is earthenware, not stone; and the interment is Roman. See a paper on Leaden Coffins, in Vol. 2 of the "Proceedings of the British Archæological Association."

"Camilla."—Dogberry is one of "the foolish officers," in "Much ado about Nothing." We have not space for more.

"Toby." Chandrigos. The watch cards, and scientific recreations requiring little apparatus, form the little work entitled "Parlour Magic," to be had of any bookseller

"A Constant Reader" will find an Engraving and description of the Chandos Portrait of Shakspere in our Journal for September 30.

"Ela."—To Mr. Webster, at the Haymarket Theatre; or to Mr. Maddox, Princess' Theatre

Harmoniums" The Guildhall Banquet, on November 9, is given at the joint expense of the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs. The cost cannot be less than two thousand pounds

"J. F. G. K." Galway, is thanked. Will the sketches illustrate news?

"J. H. K."—We fear not

"F. M. C." Peckham, will find the subject explained in the priced catalogue of the sale at Stowe to be published in a few days.

"W. B." Devonshire-street, is thanked.

"A mariner."—We think that the resemblance of the Sea-Serpent to a Saurian was first suggested during the recent resuscitation of the question

"A Subscriber," Harrington, and "A Country Reader."—Cowichouse is pronounced Kowtchy

"S. S." The Address of the Grosvenor Company is 19, Birchin-lane.

"R. B." is quoted in his interpretation

"Mary and Fiel," Nantwich.—We cannot

"C. C. W." Woolwich, should address his enquiry to the Doctor, at the hospital.

"A Beginner," Shepperton-cottages.—"Clark on Water-Colour," published by Orr and Co., Strand

"G. C." Dumfries, is thanked; though we have not room for the Illustrations

"B. F. P." Tamworth, is thanked for his suggestion. We can, however, only engrave ourselves as a branch of arts illustration

"Z. E. D." Strand, will be liable to the income tax

"An Old Subscriber" long and speculative letter on the cholera—we have not space for.

"Reyna." Ashford. The address of the Ecclesiastical History Society is in the Strand.

"H. W. S." The abbreviations on the coin, if translated as they placed, are: "of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King"

"T. C." Chester.—We had rather not advise as to the loan

"J. G. H." Apply at 445, West Strand, for the work on "Emigration to New Zealand."

"Pius"—We cannot

"An Old Subscriber" should apply to Sir Henry Ellis, at the British Museum, for admission to the Reading Room. The application should be accompanied by the testimonial of two respectable and well-known persons

"Cajun," York, may, perhaps, hear of the pamphlet at Messrs. Madden and Co., or Messrs. Allen and Co., London-street

"S. W." The law of Refraction in Optics was discovered by Snellius, about 1621; of Double Refraction, by Bartholinus, in 1669.

"J. S." Your letter to Gosden is received

"J. R." Bristol. Likely in Perch

"Marie."—We regret that we have not room.

"S. G." Sheffield. A stamped newspaper can be sent post free, beyond a week from its date.

"A Friend of Humanity." Bath. Received.

"H. E." The examination for a Lieutenancy in the Navy embraces, among other things, gunnery and trigonometry.

"D. H." Southampton. We do not remember any specific work on "Tanning."

"W. H." Torquay.—The agreement applies only to proprietorship.

"C. R." and "C. M."—Declined

"H. M." We cannot insert the letter on the Vernon Gallery—a subject intermediately suggested

"Mike Mahn," Worcester, should apply for his balance to the Secretary of the Savings Bank

"W. C." Coventry.—We do not know.

"Edgcare."—The address of the Shakspere Society is 9, Great Newport-street.

"St. Crispin."—Goliah is from the French Galeries.

"J. C." Lynn Regis, had better wait the opening of the Shakspere Exhibition, the nucleus of which will be the Chandos Portrait.

"H. B. M." The Admiralty.

"The Quadrant" and "E. N. T." We have not room

"A Constant Customer," Bruges, and "M." of Jersey, are thanked for their communications relative to the Trans of Mercury.

"A Letterer of Humbug." We do not know of Sloane Evans' "Art of Blazon" is ever likely to be finished. The system of issuing a work in parts, and not completing the issue, is very reprehensible

"A Friend." Any one using an heraldic device, whether registered or not, is liable to the tax on armorial bearings.

"A Subscriber" The Colonial Life Assurance Company derive considerable emolument from the supply of regimental clothing.

"Heraldry." No one is entitled to bear two crests, unless he has two surnames, or derives the right from some special grant. Many persons do use more than one crest, but in most cases uncorrectly.

"F. F." Refer to the Genealogy of the Royal House of Austria, in Mr. Burke's "Patrician."

"Sigma."—The children of an illegitimate daughter cannot quarter her father's arms. In fact, an illegitimate child has no heraldic bearings at all, unless by special grant, as Earl Marshal.

"Violino." Apply to Goodison, York-street, Covent-garden.

"Constant Reader." Trentham. We cannot aid you

"F. S. Webster" The prices of coins, &c., are given in Oliver and Boyd's Edinburgh Almanack

"A Whitstonian."—The gas hard in Daguerré

"D Arbuckle."—We believe, cheap translations have appeared.

"A Subscriber." See the "Government Colonisation Circular for Emigrants."

"J. R. T." Tipperary.—"Jerome Paturot" may be had, by order, of a foreign bookseller.

"W. H. B." Bradford.—Yes, by lane.

"Isaac."—The play of "The Lady of Lyons" is by Sir E. Bulwer Lytton.

"G. L." must use the amanuensis.

"P. S. A."—We have not room for the Lines.

"W. W." Harrow. Thanks.

"B. W." and "A Correspondent." We must decline replying to the coin inquiries.

"A Subscriber"—The Library of Allen and Mortimer is 11, Clifford's Inn, Fleet-street.

"R. L." Southampton.—We cannot find room.

"P. J." Thetford.—Drawing is taught in the Government School of Design. Apply to the Secretary

"A Foreign Subscriber." For seven years.

"J. N. B."—There are seven trios of Beethoven for piano, violin, and violoncello, of which the third is the most popular; the fifth, called Spohr; but Op. 70, in D, is an extraordinary work. The B flat, Op. 97, is full of genius, requiring a first-rate artiste to do it justice. The E flat trio, Op. 70, is also very fine. Out of the trios written by Mozart for piano, violin, and violoncello, it is difficult to choose, but the one in G and the one in C, composed in 1788, are both great. The second question of our Correspondent, as to the opinion of the musical world on the comparative estimate of the genius of Mozart and Beethoven, that whole range of comparison being taken, we cannot solve. For fecundity and universality of genius we should say Mozart; but for colossal conception and gigantic grandeur, Beethoven. In questions of taste and sensibility there will be always great difference; but if Mozart claims supremacy for symmetry of form and for melody, Beethoven in ideas and effects is his superior.

"T. K. L." Cheltenham.—Your impressions are from Panam pieces, coined for Madras, July, 1807

"G. W. H. R."—Apply to Lyal and Tapson, James-street, Covent-garden.

"T. M." Bishop's Waltham. Our information respecting Hogarth's "Midnight Modern Conversation" was from Nichols's "Anecdotes of Hogarth," last edit. 1833. The picture referred to by our Correspondent is now the property of Mr. Wollet, of Merly House, Dorset. Hogarth, undoubtedly, painted more than one picture of this subject.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1848.

No circumstance shows more clearly the want of confidence felt by the French nation in the stability of the Republic, than the strait to which it is reduced for want of a befitting candidate for the Presidentship. Between General Cavaignac, who typifies a Republic that is odious to the men who made it for not being democratic enough, and to the men who opposed it for being too democratic, and M. Louis Napoleon Bonaparte, who typifies a dynastic interest incompatible with a Republic under any shape at all, there is no choice. It must be either of these two. No other has any chance. The canvass has fairly begun. Upon the side of General Cavaignac all the governmental agencies are at work. Prefects and sub-prefects, and the Bishops and inferior clergy, have been enlisted into his service. The press, however, holds aloof. The editors of the provincial journals, at a grand congress of their body summoned for the purpose of debating the point, have declared against him; and the Constitutionnel, the organ of M. Thiers, has followed their example. The Journal des Débats, a newspaper of great influence, and the very last to acknowledge the Revolution, and which, when it did acknowledge it, did so with a very ill grace, has, however, after much trimming and wavering and skilful glossing over of previously recorded opinions, thrown itself into the scale in favour of the man who restored order in June, and now supports General Cavaignac with arguments precisely similar to those employed by the National. On the side of M. Bonaparte is ranged that large class of the people of the provinces who do not think, and to whom the name of Napoleon is a spell to dazzle and to blind. The army takes the same view of events, and concentrates its stupid admiration upon the hero of Boulogne and Strasburg. The Legitimist party—who were represented at one time as having determined to take no part in the contest—have now, it appears, commenced a canvass in favour of M. Bonaparte. Some of its leaders, in doing so, have avowed opinions by no means complimentary to their candidate. They state, with more truth than discretion, that, under General Cavaignac, the Republic would have a chance; but that, under M. Bonaparte—a man whose capacity, little as it is, they underrate—the Republic would have none at all; and that, sooner or later, the disgust of the nation would prompt a final and successful effort to cast him off, and establish the Duke of Bordeaux in his place. This, however, is a dangerous game to play; and we should hope the Legitimists, as a body, will repudiate such sentiments.

The National Assembly, on its part, does not seem disposed to delegate much power to the new President, whomsoever he may happen to be. In consenting to his election before the extent of his functions, privileges, and prerogatives has been defined, it has endeavoured to play a game equally as hazardous as that attributed to the Legitimists. The Committee to whom was entrusted the task of drawing up a report on the powers of the President has laid a proposition before it which is likely, it appears, to be adopted, and which will render the nominal chief of the Republic the merest doll, or rather shadow, that was ever set up in high places. If the President have no more power than the Assembly is willing to confide to him, he will be a President but in name only: the Assembly itself will rule, and he will be the scapegoat for its sins. If he be one to murmur at inability, he will be contemptible in the estimation of the people; and his office will become so degraded, that no man of independence of spirit will think it an object of honourable ambition to aspire to fill it. If, on the contrary, he be a man of genius and decision, a struggle between him and the Assembly will be the inevitable result, in which the bayonets of the National Guards or the troops of the line will sooner or later be the umpires. We cannot help thinking that a great mistake will be committed when the advice of the venerable Molé was rejected, and that the majority of the Assembly would have acted with more wisdom, if they had decreed the powers of the President before involving themselves and the country in the embarrassments of his election.

The intelligence from Austria is of the kind to be expected, after such events as those which have taken place at Vienna. Prince Windischgratz shows no mercy. He is a man who has suffered by revolutions. The melancholy fate of his wife at Prague—though he may not, to his knowledge, allow its remembrance to act upon his judgment in dealing with the instigators of revolt and massacre at Vienna—cannot but have some influence upon his character, and, consequently, upon his acts. He was firm before he took possession of Vienna. He is more now that he is its master. Messenhauser, the commander of the National Guards, has been captured and shot. Robert Blum, the representative of the city of Leipzig at the Frankfort Convention, or Central Diet of Germany, and who was appointed by the Radical or Republican section of that Assembly to proceed to Vienna in the capacity of a "sympathiser," has shared the fate of Messenhauser, although it is asserted that he took no part whatever in the operations of the insurgents. This execution—if such it is to be termed—will open a difficult question with the Frankfort Assembly, and will very much tend to the exasperation of the Prussians.

General Count Auersperg, who acted with Jellachich, under the orders of Windischgrätz, in the operations against Vienna, has resigned; for what reason is not stated. Windischgrätz and Jellachich remain at Vienna. The Court will not, in all probability, revisit the capital. The present residence if the Emperor is at Olmütz, a small, but strongly fortified town, of 19,000 inhabitants. Preparations have been made for the meeting of the Diet at Kremsier, in Moravia, a still smaller town, of 4000 inhabitants only, and at a greater distance from Vienna than Olmütz, which latter occupies a kind of mid-station between the two. Several of the Deputies have already proceeded to this town, and three Ministers are to reside there as long as the Diet shall continue its sittings.

GALVANISM FOR TESTING COAL-MINES.

To the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

MR EDITOR,—The recent deplorable accident at Bursley induces me to send you a simple suggestion for the prevention of loss of life in case of explosions of coal-mines. The application of galvanism for the explosion of gunpowder might probably be useful for testing the whole or any portion of a mine previous to the descent of the workmen—the result would be the same as though a number of points were instantaneously ignited in several parts of the mine, either of which being in contact with "fire damp" would occasion a comparatively harmless explosion. Should the application of galvanism for this purpose be not opposed by some natural obstacle, I conceive the certainty of its operation; and the small cost of the necessary arrangements of conducting wires and batteries might be an inducement to give it a trial. We have all seen the experiment of the electric pistol, when the barrel of a pistol is charged with a mixture of hydrogen gas and atmospheric air, and then discharged with the electric spark: this simple experiment illustrates, in some degree, my meaning. I hope, if there is any value in this suggestion, that it may meet the eye of some practical and scientific person who can give the subject attention. Yours very obediently,

NOV. 13, 1848. W. L.

POSTSCRIPT.

MANCHESTER ATHENÆUM.—The annual soiree of the Manchester Athenæum took place last night, Lord Viscount Mahon in the chair. On the platform were Mr T. M. Gibson, M.P.; Mr. Brotherton, M.P.; Mr. Bright, M.P., &c. Letters of apology for absence were read from the Archbishop of Dublin, Lord Nugent, Mr. Allison, and others. The room, capable of accommodating between 600 and 700, was crowded to excess with an enthusiastic audience. After the usual speeches, a vote of thanks was moved to Lord Mahon by Mr. M. Phillip, the Mayor of Manchester, in a highly eulogistic speech; after which dancing commenced, and was continued till a late hour.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

PRUSSIA.

Accounts from Berlin, dated Tuesday last (the 14th), state that the city was perfectly quiet in all quarters during the day. The National Assembly had met during the morning at the Town-hall, under the presidency of Unruh, and continued their sitting without interruption, until adjourned to the next day. Propositions for accusing the Government and military authorities with having again violated the rights of the Chamber and the personal liberty of its members, were proposed and referred to committees.

GERMAN STATES.

FRANKFORT.—Our advices, dated the 14th, mention that the execution of Robert Blum, and the dissolution of the Chamber at Berlin, were discussed with more than ordinary excitement in all political circles, as they were regarded as events of a nature to try the strength of the Imperial Parliament.

The Central Imperial Ministry is completely shaken by Austria's execution of Blum, which has thus openly disavowed submission to the resolutions of the National Assembly.

Mohl, the Minister of Justice, stated in the Assembly that the envoys of the Ministry had started at 3 P.M (on the 14th), for Vienna; that they had instructions to demand the surrender of all papers and correspondences referring to Blum's affair; and to send these, together with a full statement of all relative particulars, forthwith to Frankfort.

The impotence of the Central Government was becoming more palpable every day.

ITALIAN STATES

ROME.—Our latest advices mention that an important financial measure, which had long been in contemplation, had been at last decided upon, and brought into action. The clergy offered to the government a voluntary contribution of 4,000,000 of piastres, about 25,000,000 francs, payable by 15 annual instalments. The Pope, however, vetoed such a proposition. His Holiness had accepted the offer. On the 6th instant the Romans were apprized of the intelligence that the Pontifical troops, joining the garrison of the Marches upon the Austrian frontier, had broken out in open revolt, and pursued an attack on the fortress of Ferrara, still in possession of the Austrians, and had raised a cry of the Republic. We are supplied with no further details. General Zucchi, the Minister of War, had left for Bologna and Ferrara, and the ministry had resolved on prompt and extraordinary measures to raise immediately supplies by anticipating, by means of mortgage bonds, the future gifts of the clergy, giving to such bonds a forced circulation. The Chambers were to assemble on the 16th, and most of the members had already arrived.

TUSCANY.—The Tuscan Ministry has addressed a circular to its agents abroad, in which they are requested to ascertain the sentiments of the other Governments of Italy with regard to the convocation of an Italian constituent Assembly, "to provide for the necessities of the war of independence," and their opinions respecting the mode of electing such an Assembly. This circular ends by "postponing all questions of internal regulation until after the expulsion of the foreigners." It is signed by MM. Guarrazzi, Montanelli, d'Ayala, Franchini, Mazzani, and Adam.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

On Sunday the Queen and Court attended divine service in the private chapel of the Castle. The Hon. and Rev. C. L. Courtenay officiated.

On Tuesday the Princess and the Princesses Elize, Adelaide, and Feodore of Hohenlohe-Langenbourg took leave of her Majesty and left the Castle for the Continent. The Royal dinner party on that day was made in the evening included the Duchess of Kent, the Princess Amelie of Hohenlohe-Schillingsfurst, Sir G. and Lady Grey, Lady Anne Barnard, Baroness de Speth, and Sir G. Couper.

ROYAL VISIT TO BERKELEY PEERAGE.—Yesterday her Majesty and Prince Albert left Windsor Castle to pass a few days with the Queen Dowager at her present residence, Bentley Priory, near Stanmore. A great concourse of peasantry, principally of the neighbouring villages, assembled at the principal entrance to the park, and many of the scholars from Harrow School, and numerous gentry, were to be seen among those assembled to give her Majesty a hearty welcome to the district. Her Majesty reached Bentley Priory after 5 o'clock. The village of Stanmore was all bustle and excitement, in the evening the shopkeepers and principal inhabitants displaying their loyalty by illuminating their houses.

HER LIEGE LADY AND HIS LOYAL LIEGE.—ALBERT'S VISIT TO HARROW SCHOOL.—On Thursday forenoon the Queen and Her Royal Highness Prince Albert and suite honoured Harrow School with a visit. Her Majesty was received at the gates by the Head Master, Rev. Dr. C. J. Vaughan, and the other school authorities. The Queen and Prince Consort were at once conducted to the Speech Room, where they were received with warm acclamations by the boys (300 in number), who were assembling for prize boards, her Majesty directed that an extra week's holiday should be given to the boys at Midsummer next. The Royal party then went to the Old School, and were much interested with the celebrated names cut on the forms and panels. The Queen and party next proceeded to the Library, and examined the book containing a list of the speeches delivered between 1792 and 1838; her Majesty and Prince Albert inserted their autographs in this book. The new class rooms were next visited. The Royal party afterwards inspected the church—the principal object of attraction being what is called "Byron's Tomb." The illustrious party next made a few bows to Harrow. The inhabitants celebrated the visit by a public dinner in the evening.

A PURCHASE BY HER MAJESTY.—The Queen of England has made the purchase of the splendid piano of ivory, constructed by M. H. Pape, which excited so much admiration at the exhibition. This instrument, which combines within itself all the improvements in the arts of the pianoforte-maker, the mechanician, and the cabinet-maker, is completely veneered with ivory, in sheets of from 14 to 17 feet in length, and 30 inches and upwards in width, from a single elephant's tooth, by a spiral process peculiar to M. Pape. It is also mounted and ornamented with the rarest woods, forming original designs, and rendering it worthy its destined place in the new Palace of her Britannic Majesty. This circumstance is the more worthy of notice, as establishing the fact that her Majesty Queen Victoria is not so exclusive as has been represented, and that works of high merit by foreign artists find that favour with her Majesty which they have long enjoyed throughout great Britain.—Galignani's Messenger.

POLICE.

LAMBETH.

On Thursday, amongst the applicants for assistance to Mr. Norton, was the once celebrated Miss Ducrow, who, some years ago, had charmed the hearts of half the playgoing young men in the country by her extraordinary feats in horsemanship at the theatre of her brother, the late Andrew Ducrow. From the statement of the poor creature, it appeared that, thirteen years ago, she married Mr. Bacot, then her brother's property, who treated her with kindness until the death of her brother, but since that time his conduct towards her had been quite the reverse, and he ultimately left her to live with another female, for which, when he refused to give her any, and she was at that moment in the greatest destitution. In reply to the questions of the magistrate, the applicant said her brother had died possessed of considerable property, which he left to his wife, formerly Miss Woolford, but since his decease, again got married. He had, however, settled a weekly stipend on his mother of 30s., and the sum was paid to her every Monday morning. The last time the applicant heard of her husband she was stage-manager at a theatre in Glasgow, where he had, no doubt, a good salary. Mr. Norton directed that 10s. be at once given to the poor woman for her immediate relief, and that a communication should be made to the husband, with the view of compelling him to provide for her maintenance.

LORD ALFORD, a few days since, while out with the hounds in the neighbourhood of Castle Ashby, Northamptonshire, the residence of his Lordship's father-in-law, the Marquis of Northampton, met his horse was thrown from his horse, and broke his collar-bone. We are glad to say the bone has been set; but preferring to be attended by the family doctor in London, he at once left for his own residence, and under the care of Mr. Bacot, his Lordship is rapidly recovering.

NEW HAGGERSTON SCHOOL.—On Thursday night, a public meeting, to celebrate the opening of the ragged school under the Royal Infirmary for the Diseases of Children, in the Waterloo-road, was held at the York-road Episcopal Chapel, Lambeth. Mr. B. Hawes, M.P., took the chair, and observed that if the scope and object of ragged schools were better known, their object was quite the reverse. The ignorance, poverty, and destitution of vast masses of children in the metropolis called for the warmest sympathy and regard of a Christian public. Education, to be useful and profitable, must be brought down to the level of the most destitute classes. It was commonly supposed that the scholars in the ragged schools would be utterly unmanageable; but experience proved that these children of misery and vice were open to the best impressions. The secretary stated that the school would be opened on Sunday next, and on evenings during the week. In the course of a few weeks it will be opened as a regular day-school.—The Rev. Mr. Bishop moved, "That this meeting approves the principle of ragged schools, and rejoices in their extension, which was agreed to.—Mr. Hawes, M.P., having been elected president, and several routine resolutions adopted, the meeting separated.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

A SUPPLY OF GAS TO THE CITY.—A meeting of the Commissioners of Sewers was held on Tuesday at the Sewers Office, Guildhall, the Lord Mayor in the chair, "to receive a report from the committee of general purposes, in relation to the supply of gas to this city, and to recommend that the necessary notices be given of application to be made to Parliament for the ensuing session for the purpose of such application to be made to Parliament for the ensuing session for the purpose of such application." The report was as follows: "We consider that we have met and been attended by the city solicitor, who laid before us a statement which was read to us; and having considered the plans proposed thereby, we recommend to the court, as the only probable means of obtaining a reduction in the cost of gas, that ... be at once prepared and advertised as required; that your court will apply to Parliament for powers to erect gas works, and to lay down pipes and mains within the city and liberties, with power to purchase the works, pipes, and mains of the existing gas companies, or of any gas company hereafter to be established within the limits aforesaid; and that the day for giving such notice be the 15th of November, it is imperative that decision thereupon should be come to immediately." The city solicitor's statement was also read: it referred to the contracts which, thirty years ago, the Chartered Gas Company had entered into for the supply of gas for the City of London Gas Company had entered into for the supply of gas for the street-lights of the City of London, the Commissioners of Sewers having the power, under the Gas Acts, to purchase from the companies, at the termination of the contracts, the pipes, branches, and other material, at a fair valuation, or, at their option, to give notice for their removal. The two companies, avoiding competition with each other, partitioned out the city between them, an arrangement which, in many respects while advantageous to the companies, was convenient to the citizens. The inhabitants of the city, however, are entitled from their situation and the extent of their consumption to have a cheaper and better gas than the inhabitants of the metropolis scattered over a wider district can obtain, because they may be termed wholesale customers, and are entitled to have the commodity at a wholesale price. Within the city of London there are 20,000 houses, have derived a rental of upwards of £150,000 per annum, from a single ... mains not more than sixty miles in length, the returns thus averaging upwards of £2500 per mile, whereas the mains of the Chartered, the Imperial, the Equitable, the London, and other companies, traverse many hundreds of miles, sometimes two or three sets of mains in the same streets and roads, without dividing amongst them half such a rental. Gas was formerly sold to the consumer at 8s. per thousand, but now it is reduced to 6s.; the prime cost of the article, allowing for interest on capital expended in erecting, in the factory, and the expenses, and a liberal profit, does not exceed 2s. 6d. per thousand. The mains of several gas companies touch close upon the frontiers of the city in various parts; and if the corporation of London, or the Commissioners, acting under the provisions of the original act, were to purchase the mains and pipes of these companies, now in the ground, at a valuation, they would be entitled to the same articles at a price which would allow of its being sold to the inhabitants at 4s. per thousand cubic feet—a rate which, after making an adequate allowance for all expenses, and interest of capital in outlay for pipes, &c., would leave a considerable balance in aid of the sewers' rate, or to defray the cost of sanatory improvements, or any other local improvements that might be desired. If the existing city companies will reduce their charge to that amount per thousand, there could be no reason for a change. If a combination should be formed amongst the various gas companies to defeat the plan by refusing to tender, their object would not be obtained; for a person largely interested in gas works, and practically acquainted with all the working details of gas manufacturing, had offered to supply the whole quantity required, of the very best quality, as to purity and illuminating power, at two shillings and sixpence per thousand cubic feet. Purchasing at this price, the city authorities might dispense the gas at four shillings, and collect the rates through officers of the sewers commission, under the management of the commissioners, with a couple per cent profit in excess of the rates or other important public objects, the Commissioners of Sewers and the corporation giving their sanction to the city consumers to form a company to furnish a sufficient capital (£650,000, to lay down mains and pipes, and to contract for the requisite supply of the quantity required. The motion that the commission agree with the report of the committee, and that the city solicitor be instructed immediately to lodge the necessary notices, was carried unanimously.

AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.—On Monday, the first meeting for the season of the Society for Promoting the Amendment of the Law took place at the Jurist Rooms, Chancery-street; Mr. Serjeant Manning in the chair.—Mr. V. Neale brought forward, pursuant to notice, his motion for a committee of inquiry into the law of partnership, more especially as it affected partners in the case of bankrupts. The object he had in proposing the inquiry was to ascertain whether the system of partnership, as commanditée, would be applicable to the commercial transactions of this country. He moved that the question be referred to a committee.—Mr. C. Webster, in seconding the motion, said that he had been in several foreign countries in which partnerships as commandite were carried on, and had always found them satisfactory.—The motion was then put, and was that two or three selected partners were made liable to the whole amount of their fortunes to the liabilities of the concern, and the remainder only to the amount of their shares or capital invested. The principle was generally adopted in England—and its adoption might be desirable—it would be necessary to appoint official inspectors periodically to examine the books of the various concerns.—Dr. M'Cowan gave testimony to the satisfactory manner in which partnerships as commandite had worked in various foreign countries.—The Chairman said that the principle was already carried out in the mining districts, where shareholders in mines were only liable to the amount of their shares.—The motion was then put and agreed to. Question referred to a committee.—Mr. James Stuart proceeded to read the report of a committee appointed at the last meeting of the society to inquire into the state of the law respecting the confinement of lunatics, and suggest to be lunatics. The report stated that three classes of lunatics had been recognised by legislation, namely paupers, persons declared lunatics by a commission, and persons not so declared but under the care of the Court of Chancery. With the first two classes the committee had not interfered, but had directed their attention entirely to the third class. It appeared that the number of lunatics in England and Wales was at that moment upwards of 30,000, about 3 out of 100 being lunatics under the care of the Court of Chancery. The principal act for the protection of middle-class lunatics—that was to say, those whose property was not so small as to admit of commission, and not placed in private asylums—was the 8 and 9 Vic., c. 100, which prevented the reception of such lunatics in any other than licensed houses. The committee thought that that act might be improved, and called attention to two important points—first, the liberty of alleged lunatics; and secondly, their property. At present, the necessary preliminary to personal restraint was the certificate of a medical man, which might, under particular circumstances, be corruptly given, and therefore the committee proposed to add an examination by some person bearing a judicial character. When practicable, they recommended the masters in lunacy, and when these were not available, judges of county courts, or magistrates at sessions. With reference to property, the committee suggested that in all cases where it was too small an amount to bear the expense of a commission, a case for which at present there was no provision should be vested in the parochial committee, and administered for the benefit of the lunatic by the masters in lunacy. The committee had ascertained that it might be so administered at an expense not exceeding 1 per cent. With reference to the private asylums, the committee did not recommend their immediate abolition, but earnestly advised stricter inspection. One regulation they were most anxious to enforce, namely, a regular system of visitation by the clergy. Dr. Conolly had testified to its vast importance, and it might be easily carried out by the parochial clergy. If payment were required, the committee advised that it should be levied in such a manner as to prevent the establishment. The committee called attention to the fact that the asylums containing only one patient, commonly called "single patient houses," where wholly unprofessional persons had the charge of the great numbers of them about London, and it was suggested that the system of inspection should be extended to them. The last recommendation of the report was that persons employed in the capture of lunatics should be required to be registered, and that a coroner's inquest should be held on every death taking place in an asylum. After a short conversation the report was ordered to be printed for circulation among the members, and the meeting adjourned to December 11 next.

NATAL LAND AND EMIGRATION SOCIETY.—On Monday evening, at a public meeting of the members of this society, held at the society's temporary offices, 3, Cornhill-street, Chancery-lane, a memorial addressed to Earl Grey, as Secretary of State for the Colonial Department, was agreed to, praying for a relaxation in favour of the selected of the emigrations Commissioners as regards the age, sex, and occupation of emigrants approved of for the repayment of the head-money allowed upon landing from the colonial land fund; and that the whole of the money paid for the purchase of land in Natal by the society should be appropriated to purposes of emigration, instead of a portion being kept back for public works, as at present.

LECTURE OF ENGLAND YOUNG MEN'S SOCIETY FOR AIDING MISSIONS AT HOME AND ABROAD.—On Monday evening, a public meeting of the members and supporters of this religious association was held in Exeter Hall, for the purpose of bringing the Society more prominently before the notice of the public, and generally advancing the objects which it has in view. The Hon. Arthur Kinnaird occupied the chair. The proceedings having been opened by prayer, the chairman explained the first object of the Association was the furtherance of missions, and that its indirect object was the spiritual good of young men placed in different parts of the metropolis. It was true, their Society was at present a small one; still, it must be remembered that the Church Missionary Society, which had now its missions in every part of the globe, rose from an equally circumscribed commencement, he must say that his heart took courage, and that it resulted not, in the least degree, from Society take such root as to have enrolled amongst its members young men in all parts of the kingdom. He was glad to add, that the number of members who had joined in the course of the last year, and the number of branch associations which had been formed, held out great grounds for encouragement. (Hear.) No resolutions were submitted to the meeting, but the particular merits of the Society were ably and frequently advocated by the Rev. Henry Hughes, M.A., Incumbent of All Souls, Gordon-square, the Rev. W. W. Champneys, M.A.; the Rev. Hugh Allen, M.A., and other clergymen and gentlemen; and at the close of the proceedings a collection was entered into in aid of the funds of the Association.

ROYAL GENERAL ANNUITY SOCIETY.—On Tuesday a special general meeting of this society was held at the London Tavern, for the purpose of considering certain modifications in the rules to be proposed by the directors. The chair was taken, at one o'clock, by the Rev W. H. Jones, who observed that they were all aware of the disheartening scenes which occurred in the cases of candidates, who, in spite of all the exertions of their friends, were unable to succeed at a first election, and that in many cases the most worthy candidates retired in despair after one contest. In order to remedy this as much as possible, the directors proposed that for three successive elections all votes for the unsuccessful candidates should be carried to their credit at the election next following. The other alteration proposed by the directors was that there should be two elections each year, instead of one, as at present. Resolutions embodying these views were put and agreed to.

ST. PETER'S, VERE-STREET, AND THE ROMAN CATHOLICS.—On Wednesday a meeting of the vestry of St. Pancras took place at the new vestry-rooms, King's-road, Camden-town, to consider the position in which the vestry were placed in reference to the grant of a lease of the old vestry-room, in Vere-street, to the Right Rev. Dr. Wiseman and other Roman Catholics, for the purposes of a Roman Catholic grammar-school. The vestry clerk read a communication from Mr. Young, the secretary to his Grace the Duke of Bedford, enclosing certain protests which his Grace had received from a number of his tenants upon him to preserve to them quiet and peaceable possession of their ... and, in the event of the vestry persisting in the letting of the old vestry for such a purpose, to proceed to an ejectment of the vestry for breaches of covenants of their lease. This course the letter expressed the intention of his Grace the Duke to adopt. After some discussion, the vestry resolved that their solicitor be instructed to prepare a case for the opinion of counsel in the matter. A motion was also agreed to, directing that a deputation from the Dr. Wiseman accompanied by the solicitor be forthwith appointed to represent the difficulty which had arisen, and endeavour to induce him to a friendly withdrawal from the ... ment.

NEW CITY CLUB.—This body held its inauguration dinner on Wednesday, at the Club-house, in Basinghall-street. It has been instituted with the view of providing a medium association between the late Whig and Radical party and the Greeks, the first of which has abandoned its ground in the City, and the latter of which is rather too expensive to meet the purposes of the class for whom accommodation is particularly required. The new City Club is conducted on a limited extent, to be entitled to have some share in the management of the parochial affairs of Hackney, of which parish it is part, it was expedient to divide the said parish into wards, of which Kingsland should be one, and that immediate application be made to the poor-law commissioners to exert the power vested in them by the act of Parliament for the division of the parish of Hackney into wards, was unanimously adopted. A second resolution, declaratory of the opinion of the meeting that the increased charge for the police was extremely oppressive, and that it afforded another instance of the reckless manner in which the present Government squandered the people's money, was also agreed to.

GOVERNESS'S BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.—A general meeting of the members of, and subscribers to, this institution was held on Thursday at the Freemasons' Tavern Rooms. His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge took the chair; and the meeting was attended by a highly fashionable assemblage, a large majority of whom were ladies. After a few preliminary remarks from the chairman, the minutes of the last half-yearly meeting were read and confirmed. seven ladies, having been appointed for conducting the ballot, the subscribers present proceeded to the election of annuitants. There were nine candidates, of ages varying from 60 to 78 years. From this number four were elected, three as annuitants on the funds of the society, and one as an inmate of the "Aged Asylum." The meeting then adjourned.

POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—On Monday some experiments on steam propellers were exhibited in the presence of the Earl of Ad... officers connected with the steam branch of the naval service. The object in view was to test the power of a new application of the screw, the only consists in placing a propeller under each quarter, and not, as now, immediately below the rudder. Experience as well as theory have demonstrated that when the screw-propeller is placed in the centre of the vessel it works at a very great disadvantage. The vessel which is propelled by it displaces the whole body of water through which it moves, and, consequently, the screw has little or no resisting medium to work upon. The water has the tendency to rush into the vacuum created by the passage of the vessel so as to offer any resistance; and, moreover, the current flows with the ship, and not in a contrary direction, as it does under these two conditions the rate achieved by a screw propeller, as now applied, can never reach the maximum speed which public wheel steamers have attained. The objections to paddle-wheels are too well known to require ... here. Captain Carpenter, the inventor of this new application of propeller power, is a practical seaman, having served many years in the navy, five which he was in command of the Scout steamer, in the Mediterranean. His experiments on Monday gave great satisfaction to the Admiralty authorities present, and particularly elicited the approbation of Mr. Loyd, Mr. Ed... Captain Elliot, all of whom are practically connected with the steam department of the service.

THE NATIONAL SOCIETY FOR EDUCATION.—A report has been issued by the committee of this society, which shows that, during the last five years, 600 new foundation has been provided in national schools for 256,542 scholars; that the total expenditure in building schools and teachers' residences has been £765,000, of which about one-sixth is contributed by the society, and about two-seventh by the Committee of Council on Education; that, in five normal institutions, viz. three for schoolmasters and two for schoolmistresses, 1042 students have received proper training; and that, if the rate of the last two years should be sustained, the society will henceforth annually upwards of two hundred trained teachers; that national diocesan training institutions have been provided, with the advice and help of the society, at Chester, York, Durham, and various other places; and the report concludes with an earnest appeal to the public for support, the means at the disposal of the National society for the building and improving of schools in the country being entirely exhausted.

DERBY SWEEPS.—HOLDERN SESSIONS.—On Tuesday the magistrates for the Holbern division met to transfer licenses for the division. The chairman, previous to the applications being granted, told Inspector ... of the P... ... was anxious to ascertain, that it was the desire of the bench that every licensed victualler ... should be informed that the bench were ... to a house at which a Derby sweepstakes ... allowed. Notices would be forwarded to the police ... left with every licensed victualler, so that the ... ...

GRAND FETE OF THE CONSTITUTION, AT PARIS.

FETE OF THE CONSTITUTION AT PARIS.

THIS grand demonstration took place on Sunday. It proved a comparatively cheerless display, owing to the state of the weather—snow having fallen during the whole of the proceedings. In the Place de la Concorde, an altar was erected in front of the gates of the Tuileries. At half-past 8 the National Assembly, accompanied by the Executive Government, left the Chamber, and took their places on the platform erected for them at the right of the altar, amidst the roar of artillery. The platform on the left was occupied by the members of the diplomatic corps, of the Court of Cassation, the Council of State, and the other constituted bodies. Behind the platforms seats were placed on the terrace, for the accommodation of persons provided with tickets. At 9 o'clock, the clergy left the church of the Madeleine, and proceeded to take their places on the steps of the altar, at the foot of which was a platform, from whence the President of the National Assembly, surrounded by the Executive Government and the bureaux of the Chamber, read to the people the text of the Constitution; and immediately afterwards a "Te Deum" was chanted, during which the Archbishop of Paris, assisted by several prelates, celebrated mass. This being finished, the clergy again formed in procession and returned to the church of the Madeleine. The National Guards of Paris and of the departments, previously stationed according to the orders of the military authorities, and under the command of General Changarnier, then began to file off, marching round the Place, and passing the platform on which the National Assembly and the Executive Government were seated. After the filing off, the National Assembly, accompanied by the Executive Government, returned to the Chamber.

The principal object in the appearance of the Place was the altar where the clergy officiated. It was a lofty structure, covered with crimson velvet, and surmounted with a gilt cross. On each side above were, in gold letters, the words "Aimez-vous les uns les autres." Immediately opposite, inside the railings which surround the column of Luxor, was a statue of the Republic in plaster of Paris.

The defiling of the legions of the National Guard and the troops of the line before the altar occupied several hours. The first corps that appeared was the artillery of the National Guard of Paris, composed in great part of Red Republicans. This corps cried en masse "A bas les Prétendans!" and "Vive la République!" Some cried "Vive la République Démocratique!" and others added "et Sociale!" The National Guard of the banlieue, who are well known partisans of Louis Napoleon, kept the most complete silence. One battalion only cried "Vive la République Démocratique et Sociale!" This battalion belonged to the legion of which M. D'Alton Shee was lately Colonel. About 11 o'clock the National Guard of Arras and Calais drove from the Place de la Concorde some ouvriers who cried "Vive Napoleon!" The friends of M. Louis Bonaparte had recommended their partisans not to utter any "vivats" in honour of the Prince, so as not to compromise him. The cry of "Vive l'amnestie général" was uttered by one legion. The muskets of the National Guard had much fewer bouquets and drapeaux than they had at the fete of the Revolution, and the "Marseillaise" was heard much less frequently than the "Girondins."

During the ceremony guns were fired from the Invalides and from the detached forts in the environs of Paris, and the bands of the National Guards and troops played the "Marseillaise" and other patriotic airs.

The gathering to witness the ceremony was, on account of the state of the weather, very small, compared with what is usually seen at public fetes. The whole passed off without the slightest disorder. In the evening most of the public buildings were illuminated. In the course of the morning 149 insurgents, among those confined in the prisons of Paris, were liberated

THE GRAND ALTAR OR CHAPELLE IMPROVISEE.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

In the large Engraving is shown the ensemble of the fete, spectacled from the left [illegible] Place de la Concorde, on the [illegible] with the Chamber of Deputies, the Garde Meuble, and the Church of la Madeleine in the distance. The canopied altar, as already explained, was erected [illegible] the centre of the gardens of the [illegible] facing the Place. On each side were galleries for the vocal and instrumental performers; and on the terrace, within the railings, were tribunes for privileged spectators. Around the Place were nearly four Varied in point, [illegible] four towers [illegible] Place to the [illegible] which [illegible] was divided [illegible] on poles, flanked by [illegible] and between [illegible] and [illegible] the smaller poles were tripods for incense.

Besides the ensemble, we have engraved the altar, or Chapelle Improvisée, at which high mass was performed.

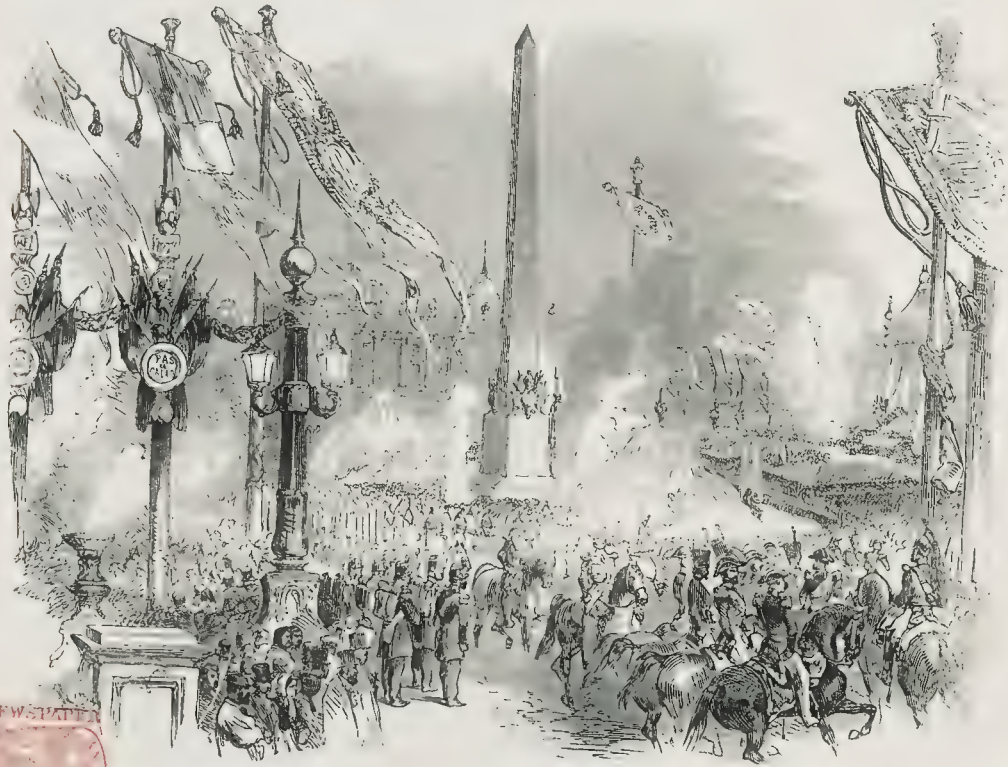
COUNT LEON, natural son of the Emperor Napoleon, has addressed a letter to the Paris journals stating, offering proof that the Emperor [illegible] will of which Gen. Montholon is executor, and which was duly registered before M. Tabourier, notary, at Paris, in which the [illegible] affecting the interests of Count Léon, and that such will has been hitherto suppressed. Count Leon announces that he is about to appeal to the tribunals to enforce its disclosure.



DEFILING OF TROOPS IN THE PLACE DE LA CONCORDE.

MEET OF HER MAJESTY'S STAG-HOUNDS AT HILLINGDON.

HER MAJESTY'S STAG-HOUNDS.

A MEET AT HILLINGDON

With the festiva of All Saints begins the season of the chase: some few establishments indeed announce their fixtures earlier, but hunting is not considered to be legitimately on the scene till November. This rule applies, whether the quarry be stag, fox, or hare. The period of its termination, however, is less definite. Formerly, some masters of hounds used to make it a practice to kill a May fox; harriers continue to hunt later on the downs than in the vale; and venison is considered fair game almost at any time that it may be met with among the moors of Devon. But such is not the relation in which your buck is regarded by the lowland sportsman. With him it is an animal of chase—but no more. The stag-hunter goes forth to his sylvan pastime with as little intention of killing the deer as of eating the whippers-in. The hart, the noblest wild animal extant in Great Britain, and hence the store set by it in relation to our rural sports. Deer-stalking is the privilege of princes, and stag-hunting is the aristocracy of the chase—the reader's cry of "Oh! oh!" and "Has he ever seen the Surrey?" to the contrary notwithstanding. We will not stop to investigate when hunting the hart was made an item of Royal pomp and circumstance, or when flying the hawk became obsolete as a custom of courtly recreation. Perhaps their present position comes of the policy of the times. How could the best [illegible] with an hereditary Grand Falconer [illegible] which of course alters the case; or how could a well-bred pack of stag-hounds be hunted in the middle of the nineteenth century, were not provision made to secure them a Whig or Tory leader, as the exigence of parties might demand? But let this pass. The Royal Hounds are before us; and since Nimrod the mighty, never was a society of the sort provided with a more efficient master of the ceremonies.

The scenes represented by the Artist are a meet of the Queen's—which occurred on Wednesday the 8th inst., on the lawn at Hillingdon, adjacent to the town of Uxbridge—and an "entapa," or running in view, over the open. They serve as characteristics of the establishment and sport to which they refer. It may, perhaps, be unnecessary to premise that a pack of hounds more admirable as regards the qualities of breeding and condition has rarely, if ever, been got together; or that, with a service of officials all perfect in their several capacities, the field practice is the ideal of consummate training and discipline. The stud is ample, and of a stamp that befits a stable of high mark. The appointments of the men are very handsome—scarlet frocks laced with gold, caps, and irreproachable boots and breeches, that is to say buckskins: the ensemble being as sporting a turn-out as if it had been born, bred, and brought up to "fox" through every phase of its seed and generation. Thus much for the stuff whereof it is compounded, and now for a word concerning its whereabouts.

The country hunted by her Majesty's Stag-hounds is a very various one, alternating between the cucumber beds of the metropolitan suburbs and that terra incognita called the New Forest, now, for the first time, being explored, at the instance of commissioners appointed for that purpose. They also make periodical excursions into the Vale of Aylesbury, where "the antlered monarch" is also pursued by the Baron Rothschild. Apropos of the market-gardeners south to say, is Hillingdon, which comes among the greengrocery districts

"FULL CRY."

The writer once assisted at the enlargement of a hind, at that meet, which, that is the fawn, heading as for Fall mall, was, at the end of a sporting run, captured in Paddington Churchyard. . . . . Speaking of the incident as something not common to the chase, one of the Sabbath mentioned an occasion on which a stalwart old stag was secured on the steps of a bull-door in Russell-square, the "whip" who "hobbled" him making use of a butcher's tray as a target in the onslaught. But don't concern, reader gracious, that there is any intent in these presents to throw a Cockney flavo r over stag hunting in general, or on that within easy reach of London city in particular. We have forgathered with the Galway "Buzers," and are familiar with feats found in half-acres of gor-se, and "turned up" at the end of fifteen minutes in parishes adjacent to Market Harbor ough; but our solemn convotion is, there never was an equestrian performance in . . . Hades, or Demonia, like to that which is the "custom of an afternoon" with a lady fair who hunts with the Queen's, and whom we encountered an hour ago cantering her palfrey on the margin of the Serpentine. . . . . .

In days when the wreck of empires is household gossip for the human family, it may not be with it a moral to hint at the social life of a colony occupying a little nook of this globe. Of its commerce and industry, its arts and sciences our province is not to speak: who, indeed, should that be named at all which is as common as the liberal air? But its basc associations, its commonwealths of good fellowship, haply, are less known: pity we plead an ignorance but now enlightened as to the extent and exactness of its hunting establishments. There are at this writing, in England, one hundred and seventy-three packs of hounds, public as regards the days of hunting, and open to the enjoyment of all classes. This estimate, indeed, is under the number; but it is given, that no possible misapprehension may be created. But three of these are subscription packs: the remainder are fox hounds, harriers, and other hounds. In Devonshire alone there are seven-and-twenty packs, wherewith gentle and simple may take their recreations. First in the goodly throng are the Queen's. The Earl of Sefton's borough is master: Charles Davis, the most courteous and complete of all the chorus of Diana, the huntsman. Their public days are Monday, Wednesday, and Friday; besides which they have generally a "bye" every week. They are within an hour of every breakfast table in the hills of morality—save when transported to that "undiscovered country" already alluded to. Is it not then so what the "giants of the green-wood" are in this degenerate age, go and join them on the first occasion that suits your convenience: if you are anxious to gauge your own properties for crossing a country with a spin alongside of them with Captain Vyse on your mare: do this, and if you do not return a wiser man, then are you more wide-awake than the majority of those who stand behind the counters of mantilliners. . . . . Vale.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Mr. Connolly's horse, Gabriel, would have been first in, but he stopped to eat his jockey. Whaley, when he fell. The race is to be run again on Friday.—Sporting Intelligence from an old Irish paper

Anthropophagy, according to the statement of some philosopher or other, is a natural instinct, varying in its properties, but identical in its principles. In the position of the negro man eating the raw meat of his enemy, in the comparative—the feudal state of cannibalism—he only eats and drinks the thews and sinews, that is, the animal power and produce of his fellow-creature; while, in the superlative degree, under the specious shelter of refinement, social cannibalism lays gins and snares for body and soul, and for anything that is, or was, or is to be. Upon this principle, assuming the incident copied from the Irish journal to be most allegorically, the condition of reading half-a-century ago was in the instinctive process.

A newspaper of a much more recent date, the 19th inst., thus observes:—

"Apropos of horse-racing—" If any proof were wanting to show how fallacious are the reasonings of praisers of the time past, we have only to recollect for a moment what occurred hardly a month since, when one good man and true was found to lay twelve thousand sovereigns to one thousand, in one bet, against the winner of the Cesarewitch; and, what would have surprised, above all, the speculators of old, was one of the very earliest at the post on the morning after the race, with the bank notes in his hand to pay the money!" . . . . In this figurative of the superlative degree? The question takes nothing upon doubt. "Where did the money come from," he asks, "and to what purpose was it appropriated?" In after days these questions of sporting literature may serve the philosopher's account: they are significant, if the trouble be taken to apply them.

The course is left for a season, and the cover side furnishes this: There is a natural sympathy between racing and hunting—they are especially parents of the equestrian order. A word for the SOMAL SCIENCE. These are who delight in tying a canister to a dog's tail—hand meus hic sermo. Every body has been helping the railways over the stile: the fox-hunter may do them a better office. "Tempora mutantur," reader mine—and so are you and I. Our grandfathers took pleasure in "dragging" for their foxes when the stars were setting: we can content ourselves with a brush at noon-day. Manners and habits have changed—and not for the worse—if Lord Percy be a faithful mirror of the reign of the second George, and our memory serve us as to the costume "when George the Fourth was King."

The chase is not what it was twenty years ago—neither was it then as Beckford portrays it. In the "crack" districts they now go faster over the country, and slower under the mahogany. Where there was one pack of foxhounds in John Warde's day there are now three. Then they might hunt then, fifty may do so now. Railways have done much that was not expected of them, both in an evil and a good sense Who ever dreamt that they would restore to the Cockney the delights of Acton Green, to the hind the field of his hope: the last accounts from Pekin state that a Deputy of the Ward of Port-sok ng was at a recent Celestial levee. The less ambitious may put in a good day, if the chase be there resorts to the hind. Before the Reform Bill, let him ascertain when the Vine or Lord Gifford's hounds the H. H— meet adjacent to the South-Wester Rail. The latter are always in the Sassennatic country on a Monday from Stockbridge, and to be reached from the Andover-road station These are cosey packs, with sporting provincial fields, and very negotiable countries. Why should not the fixtures of monday, generally, be announced, with a note how many minutes of breathing may be reached from the metropolis—with a hint, now and then, as to their characteristics? A practical essay, whether on the turf or the chase, cannot present too continually to the readers the allegory of the horse that ate his rider.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY. An unmistakeable feeling against St. Leger for the Liverpool Steeple Chase, and a tremendous rush to get on Cossack for the Chester Cup, were the "features" of a very dull afternoon. The market prices were as under.

WEWPORT PAGNEL STEEPLE CHASE

3 to 1 agst Red Lancer | 10 to 1 agst Jackie to Essex | 11 to 1 agst Bedlamite

LIVERPOOL STEEPLE CHASE.

10 to 8 agst Proceed	7 to 1 agst St. Leger	15 to 1 agst Wolverhampton
11 to 2 — Alfred (t)	12 to 1 — Bucksaw	15 to 1 — Venom

CHESTER CUP.

33 to 1 agst Cossack	1000 to 15 agst Vesta	1000 to 15 agst Knightwatch
1000 to 15 — War Eagle	1000 to 15 — Pilatoff colt	1000 to 16 — Bingo (t)

DERBY

6 to 1 agst Flying Dutchman | 40 to 1 agst Strongbow (t) | 40 to 1 agst The Knight (t)

THURSDAY. Nine-tenths of the members having left for Newport Pagnel, not ung was done.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY The "Messiah" is announced for performance at EXETER HALL on Friday next, the 24th inst. Mr Sims Reeves will sing in it for the first time in London, and Mr Costa will conduct for the first time at Handel's oratorios.

DESERTION OF THE PARIS THEATRES -The prevailing distress in Paris, the pre-occupation of the public mind with matters of more importance and more immediate interest, has woefully thinned the theatres of that capital. Of this we have an amusing account in a recent Feuilleton of M. Hector Berlioz, the musical critic of the Journal des Débats, in a review of M Clapisson's new opera of "La Jeune la Folle," produced at the Théâtre de la Nation on Monday last. M. Berlioz bitterly laments the sad contrast between the crowded houses of this "old times," and the half empty benches of the present. Before the Revolution, it appears that there was a regular system of intrigue practised by the amateurs, the ladies especially, to obtain tickets for the rehearsal of new operas, and on the "first night" the house was crowded with rank, beauty, and fas- hion. "But now," adds your Berlioz, "if you encounter a friend in the Rue Lepelletier, on your way to the French Opera, for the purpose of "seeing at" the performance of a new piece, an allusion to matters musical only provokes a shrug of insouciance, and your polite offer of a tickets of admission is met with the most chilling indifference." M. Clapisson's opera was successful, notwithstanding the thinness of the house. The absence of foreigners from Paris, and the indisposition of the residents towards public amusements, having lowered the subscription of the Italian Opera to a point which must entrepreneur and artistes to keep sharp, Government, rather than have it closed, is about to apply to the Assembly for a grant of 60,000 francs.

ACCOUNT OF TRADE AND NAVIGATION. The public accounts of trade and navigation, for the month ending the 10th of October, 1848, have just been published. These returns exhibit a very considerable improvement, in comparison with the declared monthly value of our exports for the last six or eight months. The aggregate amount of our exports for the month ending October 10, 1847, . . . £4,865,000; for the same month this year, £4,507,000, showing a deficiency of £263,000 only; whilst the deficit on the previous month, as compared with the same period last year, was no less than £538,000. These returns also show, on a comparison of the same months, an increase of £30,000 in the month ending October 10, 1847, with the same period of the present year, a decrease of £5,350,000.

LIFE "UPON MONARCH." We last week noticed that her Majesty's Government had presented Captain Joaquim Marquis Lisboa, commanding the Brazilian steam-frigate Affonso, with a gold chronometer. We have now the pleasure of stating that the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty have purchased a gold chronometer from Mr Dent, and presented the same to the Captain: it bears the following inscription: "Presented by the Lords of the Admiralty to Captain Marquis Lisboa, Commanding the Brazilian steam-frigate Affonso, for the humane and gallantly displayed by him in rescuing many British subjects from the burning wreck of the Ocean Monarch."

MUSIC.

M JULLIEN'S CONCERTS.

On Monday night, M. Vivier, the famed performer on the horn, made his first appearance at Drury-Lane Theatre. M. Vivier was in his country some years since, and performed at the Hanover-square Rooms. His instrument is not an especial favourite with the million, and, in a small room, playing a simple melody, or accompanying a singer it is tolerable: and no artist has turned it to better account in this way than Pauz Vivier is, however, an exceptional artist, quite out of the common run of horn-players. He has made new discoveries of new and curious acoustic effects, particularly the existence of low notes, which we must conceive to be in the nature of the horn, and in the capability of sustaining a melody, unheard and unthought of before: for these notes can be employed as the bass of the harmony in orchestral music in a greater degree than formerly remains to be shown. He played a cantabile of his own composition, introducing a cadenza, for display of his new notes and his executive ability. It was encored with enthusiasm; and the applause from the band was very strong. To the multitude, his playing has a great attraction; he produces a effect, quite out of the common run of horn-players. He has made new and when he abandons the melody to indulge in the dexterity of divisions, it is marvellous how neat and finished are his passages, how tasteful and elegant are his cadences. The only regret is that he had not some other performer upon the familiarity with which would have enabled the public to appreciate still more what eloquent and sympathetic tones he could produce from his instrument, and how perfect is his management of the various gradations of sound, from the strongest fortissimo to the most delicate pianissimo

M. Vivier enjoys the highest reputation amongst Continental musicians—many of the most distinguished of whom, in fact, look upon him as the rising composer of the day, attributing to him a fertile imagination as to melody, and a felicitous instinct for harmony. How far the expectations of him will be realised, we cannot at present pretend to say. We have had the opportunity of hearing his works; but we might quote eminent names for the high estimation of Vivier's talents. It would be singular, indeed, if the future symphonist, opera composer, and writer for the orchestra, were he not generally to be found selected such an instrument as the horn to play upon; but his countryman, Berlioz, who is only master of the guitar, has been equally remarkable in his musical eccentricity.

On the same evening, the first movement of Beethoven's Grand Sonata in F, scored by Nadaud (and duly scored), was played; but what Beethoven wrote as a sonata, we should prefer to call a symphony; and there is no lack of orchestral lumity in his symphonies and overtures to justify any "a rancement" of his other works. The ex- [illegible] ment was [illegible] instruments as [illegible] serted. A fantasia, and the themes from Mozart's "Don Giovanni," is promised for next week, a welcome announcement, but we trust it will not be scored by M Jullien with a view to the display of the British Army Quadrille, which is really too stunning—The houses have been well attended this week.

SOCIETY OF BRITISH MUSICIANS This society illustrates the "hope deferred which maketh the heart sick" Year after year we look in vain for some sign of spring from the native talent source, but dry and barren as the annual proceeds. Recently a record of the society's doings was the pretext for the Hanover-square Rooms are now the head-quarters—the [illegible] little to tempt criticism at the first chamber concert of the 16th season on Monday The scheme opened with Mendelssohn's Quintet in A, op. 18, for two viols (Watson and E. W. Thomas), two tenors (Weddicke and [illegible] violoncello (W. F. Reed). There was also [illegible] ode in B flat, op. 97, for piano, violin, and violoncello, executed by Miss Kate Loder, Messrs. E. W. Thomas and W. Lee; a MS Quartet in G, by Cipriani Potter, for two violins, tenors, and violoncello, were also executed; a MS Sonata, No. 2, for pianoforte and violin, played by Messrs. Lee and Watson. The vocal pieces were a song by Mr Morlow's words "Heaven rides past," sung by Miss M Williams, and composed by Miss Kate Loder, which was encored; a MS quartet for [illegible] and M. Williams, "Where bonnet roses, composed by Mr. J Calkin, brother of the singer of that name, and son of the violoncello player—two songs by Charles E. Horsley, with vocal obligato, well sung by Miss A. Williams; a song by Miss A. Williams and Masfarren's clever [illegible] the "Devil's Opera, and Nubit," ascribed in the printed bills to Beethoven—sung by the Misses Williams and Miss Thornton. Mr. G. Cooke presided at the pianoforte. The second concert will be on the 20th instant.

MUSICAL EVENTS. Mr. and Mrs Mellon, from Berlin, have commenced [illegible] at the Beaumont Hall, Stonecastle, under the direction of Signor [illegible]. Bochsa, the new members of the Philharmonic Society are [illegible] Schulz, Cruvelli, Dr. F. A. Walmesley, of Cambridge; Messrs. Lindley Sloper, Ferrari, [illegible] Horsley have been elected associates, as also [illegible] Mr. Hullah has been made [illegible] the Royal Academy of Music, to have [illegible] practices of music which will be conducted by Lucas, with [illegible] performance of Handel's Messiah, in Exeter Hall, on Friday next [illegible] the Sacred Harmonic Society, conducted by Costa. The same vocalists sang on the first occasion, save Mr. J. A. Novello, who was replaced by Mr Bodda Mme Jaholenc, Mr. Lucas, and Mr. Hullah conducted. Spohr's Last Judgment, Hausmann (violoncello), and John Parry, will find [illegible] Bath. The winding up of the accounts of the Worcester Musical Festival exhibits a loss of £609 18s. 6d.; of which £1,000 is due to the Stewards, £400 to the Dean and Chapter, £113 16s 6d; has come from the guarantees fund raised previously. The [illegible] the loss was £892 7s.; and in 1842, £1216 9s. 9d., so the festival is improving, and with the same [illegible] always supported it, and the [illegible] the charity To [illegible] greater interest to these [illegible] why not include [illegible] Hospitals and other charities of the country and town to participate in the results?

HANOVERIAN MUSICAL REMINISCENCES [illegible] Hanover [illegible] ing on Tuesday evening last, in the Royal Normal School-room. The performance consisted chiefly of selections from Handel, and evidently gave a great treat to the audience. The [illegible] and chief support of the president, the Rev. T. Alinger, rector of the parish, spoke in the most terms of the institution.

FOREIGN MUSICAL NEWS. Two new operas have been produced in Paris, the one at the Théâtre National de l'Opéra Comique, entitled "Le Val d'Andorre," in three acts, by Halévy, the libretto by M. de St Georges: the other at the Théâtre de la Nation, called "Le Jeune la Folie," in five acts, by Clapisson, the libretto by M. Scribe. The former is sustained by Mdlle Lavoye, Mdlle. Revilly, Mdlle Audran, Meelis, Bataille, and Jourdan, and the latter by Mdlle Masson, Mdlle Grimm, M. Gueymard (ten r) M Ernest, M. Brémond, and M. Portehaut (bass) Both productions were successful, but it is believed that the "Val d'Andorre" alone will draw. Halévy's music being admirably composed and performed. The story of the "Val d'Andorre" is merely a decoration, and as overcharged with elaborate and confusion, exhibiting more of contrived poultry than of broad massive effects The romance in the mise en scène are both much alike. The story of the "Valley of Andorre" is one of a love, a public existing between France and Spain, on that of a maiden, Rose de Mai, who, to prevent her lover (Stephen) from being enlisted for the army, robs her mistress of the sum of money necessary to purchase a substitute for his period of service. When we state rob, that is scarcely the word; the fact is, she takes the money only whilst she has to send to a neighbouring town for a little fortune she has left concealed, but before that arrives she is accused of the theft. Her mistress, however, turns out to be her mother The denouement is, of course, happy; but not before there are some touching dramatic situations The story of "Jeanne la Folle" is that of the daughter of the Queen Isabella of Castile, who goes mad, from loving her husband to distraction, and who claims that he (Philip) has carried off a Moorish maiden, Zizie, the scene of which is laid in [illegible] in which Don Fadrigue, the Queen's cousin, is made to love her, while he is his friend and confidant of her husband At the Italiens, Madle Cruvelli was to play Semiramide to Madame Stoltz's Arsace MDLLE. JENNY LIND will give her second and last concert this evening (Saturday), at Bristol.

THE POLISH BALL.

The Annual Grand Dress and Fancy Ball and Concert in aid of the funds of the Literary Association of the friends of Poland was held at Guildhal on Thursday; and, in spite of the strong, and we might almost say somewhat hostile, charitable, remarks of our contemporaries upon the subject, we were pleased to observe that the attendance on Thursday was not inferior to the average of that on former occasions. Amongst those who were early in the field, we observed the Lord and Lady Mayoress

The elegant decorations with which the hall was fitted up for Lord Mayor's Day were retained for the present occasion; and the vast assemblage, when brilliantly lighted, presented a coup d'œil of splendour beauty.

The concert was commenced by the band of the Coldstream Lindsay Sloper, who, as well as all the other performers, generously volunteered their services. Among the vocalists who had come forward on this occasion to offer their aid were Miss Poole, Mrs. Weiss, Miss Rainforth, Miss Hammond, Misses A. and M. Williams, Miss Dolby, and Miss Miran; Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Weiss, Mr. Charles Braham, Mr. Whitworth, M. Weiss, Signor Burdini, Mr. Williams, and Mr. Frank Bodda.

M. Chopin, the celebrated pianiste, was also present, and performed some of his beautiful compositions with much applau

The dancing commenced about half past nine o'clock, and was continued with unabated vigour till an advanced hour in the morning. The refreshments were furnished on a very elegant scale by Messrs. Youngthusband & Son, of Basing-lane.

A SHAKESPEARE EXHIBITION is about to be opened in London in aid of the funds for the preservation and preservation of the poet's house. The [illegible] of Ellesmere will contribute the celebrated Chandos portrait; and the Duke of Devonshire, it is said, the [illegible] fifteen quarto plays published in the poet's lifetime—no one, we should [illegible] and not one of any importance is wanting in these pages. Mr. Troward will send the only known autograph of Shakspeare in private hands: and Mr. Wheler, of Stratford, his valuable collection of Shakspeare documents and curiosities. We are to have mulberry canes, and portraits, and engravings; a medley museum, in short, not unlike the attractive exhibitions which the Archæological Institute brought together at Winchester, Norwich, and Lincoln. A sub-committee has been appointed to conduct the [illegible], consisting of Mr J. Payne Collier, Mr Charles Knight, and Mr. Peter Cunningham. An active beginning of the [illegible] of the committee will be issued very shortly. The Chandos portrait is but partially known. Who exhibited at Stowe was so badly hung that it was scarcely seen.—Athenæum.

THE THEATRES.

COVENT-GARDEN

The manager has resorted to a reduction of prices to attract audiences—the max mum is now seven shillings for a stall, and the minimum one shilling to the gallery, eighteen pence being taken for the spacious and convenient amphitheatre; half-a-crown for the pit; and six, five, and four shill ngs for the public boxes. This tariff (preserving the half-price at nine o'clock) is one enough in all conscience; and, whilst it has had the effect of filling the lowest-priced portions of the house since the change, it has also tended still further to diminish the attendance of gentlemen, disposed to patronise the drama. That the manager was wrong in opening the season with an advance on the ordinary prices of the patent houses is proved sufficiently by the forced abandonment of his new tariff. It does not strike us that the only [illegible] has position by going to the extreme of low prices: no one has more ably shown the folly of reduced prices than Mr. Bunn, in his book, "The Stage, both Before and Behind the Curtain." We are at issue with many of our contemporaries on this subject, and we agree perfectly with Mr Bunn, in his work, "that your English man never regards the price of his entrance to a place of amusement; and more frequently than otherwise, thinks the entertainment must be bad, if he has little to pay to see it. He goes so seldom, that, when he does go, he will pay anything in reason. A concert, as effectively supported in the one place as the other, that they would only give a franc to see in Paris, thousands give a guinea, and seldom less than half-a-guinea, to be present at in London. That is fashion, not taste; and so it is with our theatres. Make it the fashion, by any trickery or stratagem, to go to [illegible], and there will be no lack of them; while another, replete with talent of the highest order, shall be altogether deserted. Through a very long experience, I have never found, theatrically speaking, that the price of the article at all [illegible] with the demand for it, the public is not to be deterred from going to the play because the admission to the boxes is 7s., any more than it is to be attracted there because the admission is only 3s. The quality of the wasteful, and not the price, is the thing incurred into." In a subsequent volume Mr Bunn proves, by returns of receipts, that, whilst many more people went to the theatre at the reduced price, the treasury was not the richer. The lowering the price did not make one proselyte. It only induced some who, at the former price, came but once, now to come twice; and the prosperity ceased to be minus in respectability and income."

Mr Bunn's arguments have been proved over and over again, and we regret that he did not confine his changes to the restoration of the usual playhouse prices. It must be recorded in his favour that no change has been made in the entertainment

On Saturday, the indisposition of Miss Lucombe caused the substitution of the "Spoonbenia" for the "Hayde;" Mrs. Dowell King, whose success in Adelphea has been so marked, appearing as Anania; Miss Romer being also hors de combat. On Monday "Haydée" was repeated for the fifth time. On Tuesday Mdlle. Nissen appeared for the first time in Lucia, and was received with the greatest enthusiasm, the character being much more adapted for her than Norma. If the quality of Mdlle. Nissen's organ kept pace with her artistic acquirements, there is no [illegible] she would not tremble at her rivalry; but nature has gifted her with high intelligence, but not with a fine voice. Mr. Reeves was himself again in Edgardo, singing with amazing spirit and feeling, and creating a powerful sensation Mr. Burdini was the Enrico, Corri Ibidebent, and Barker Arturo. On Wednesday "Norma" was repeated for the third time, and the first act of the "Bohemian Girl." Mdlle. Poinkert has been dancing with the ballet of the "Peri"

Two new operas are underlined in the bills, "Quentin Durward," by Mr. Henry Laurent, and "Kenilworth" by Schira, the musical director and conductor; and the "Lady of the Lake" is announced for to-night (Saturday), with Miss Romer, Miss Dolby (her first appearance), Mr. Travers, Mr. Harrison, and Mr. Borrani, as Ellen, Malcolm, Fitzjames, Roderick Dhu, and Douglas.

HAYMARKET

The announcement of "Twelfth Night," with the best cast at present available, at this theatre, on Saturday, was certain to attract a good house, and, accordingly, one of the fullest audiences of the season hitherto assembled on the occasion [illegible] parts were thus distributed: Malvolio, Mr Webster; Sebastian, Mr. H Vandenhoff; Duke Orsino, Mr. Sir Toby Belch, Mr. Tilbury; Sir Andrew Aguecheek, Mr. Keeley; the Clown, Mr. Wigan; Antonio, Mr. Rogers; Olivia, Miss Reynolds; Maria, Mrs. Humby; and Viola, Mrs Charles Kean With such a cast a most excellent performance was the result, and every one was perfect most admirable. Mrs. Charles Kean has made the part of Viola, at the present day, entirely her own. We have no other actress who can so delicately interpret this elaborate character, and whose voice can so attune itself to such graceful yet telling effect. no one who can so completely win the sympathies of her audience or draw down such hearty applause by a mere apt expression of feature or inflexion of face. Next to Mrs. Charles Kean's impersonation of the evening, and was as intitable in his assumption of dreary feeble-mindedness as of drunken would be jollity. We question whether Sir Andrew Aguecheek has ever been better played. His was consistency throughout. Tilbury, whose real joviality came forth in pleasant contrast. Mr. Webster's Malvolio was, as may be expected, a clever and thoughtful piece of acting; and the other performers were all most efficient in their respective parts. We cannot conclude without a few observations on the merits of Mr. Wigan's Clown, not merely amongst old playgoers, but from the journals—one party stoutly maintaining that the Clown was never meant to be a fool rather than a knave, and the judgment of the scene. At all events, Mr. Wigan is entitled to great praise, whatever the result may have been, for departing from conventionality and traditional observance: such step always deserves encouragement, and we hope to see Mr. Wigan's Mr. Hardy's Maria, were each, in their way, particularly good. Nothing could exceed the applause at the end of the performance, which continued until Mrs. Kean had prepared herself to receive the customary bouquet on the occasion. She was again called for at the conclusion of "The Ransom," in which effective drama she played her original character of Pauline

PRINCESS'S.

On Thursday night Bickerstaff's opera of "Love in a Village" was represented with a strong cast. Miss Julia Harland being the Rosetta; Miss Emma Stanley, Madge; Charles Braham, Young Meadows; Harley, Woodcock, Mrs. Selby; Justice Woodcock, Mr. G. Cooke; Young Meadows, Mr. Allen; Hodge, Mr. Wright; and Hawthorn, Mr. Charles Braham. The opera, or rather operatic comedy, went off with the greatest spirit. Miss Harland's singing of the sporisman "Hawthorn will add materially to his reputation; he was encored with rapture in the song, "There was a jolly miller," "My dog and my gun," "We all love a pretty girl under the rose," &c. His voice never took us as being more and more like that of his father in quality, —possessing the distinguishing characteristics also of the great tenor's style, excellent declamation, distinct enunciation, and vigorous forte-manner, or power of swelling a note. Miss Julia Harland and Miss Emma Stanley were encored in their duo in the second act, "For ever let us part." The powerful acting of Doherty in Hodge is worthy of notice. The manager is very active in his exertions, and he has a very powerful operatic company.

To a burlesque of "Midas," with Miss Poole's admirable acting and singing of Apollo, has been a great success. She is nightly encored twice in "Pray Goody," which she sings charmingly.

ADELPHI

An outrageously broad farce, which it would have been very dangerous to have played anywhere else, was produced at this house on Monday evening, called "Crusher and Smasher; or, The British Lion." The fun arises from the perplexities in which the heroes, who are arrant cowards, find themselves constantly involved through their assumption of courage; and it is sufficient to state that they are respectively played by Mr. Wright and Mr. Paul Bedford, for the reader to anticipate the kind of laughter which great their eccentricities. We suspect the farce to be an adaptation of a French piece called "Les Pattes." To see an Irishman, it begins with its end; that is to say, one of the characters is supposed to be delivering the "last speech" after the fashion of Irish—and it now only remains for these and friends," &c., when the characters not being settled on certain points, begin all over again. This bit of dramatic fun, however, was scarcely understood by the audience, and must be exceeded even at the farce, all the way through, and applauded loudly at the conclusion, thoroughly establishing its success. It is, we believe, by Mr. Maddison Morton, the author of "Box and Cox." Mr. Brough's burlesque is announced for Monday evening

MARYLEBONE.

Mr. Buckstone and Mrs. Fitzwilliam announced their engagement here on Monday evening, when "The Flowers of the Forest" and "The Rough Diamond" were performed to a crowded audience.—Mrs. Fitzwilliam played her original character of Ophelia, and Mr. Buckstone the part of Cheap John, formerly sustained by Mr. Wright. Miss Vining was Cynthia, Miss Saunders, Lemuel, and Mr. Johnston, the Zangaro. Its performance was, throughout, eminently successful; and we expect a very good company, by Mr. Dayes, contributed in no small degree to the favour with which it was received. We may particularize, in addition, a drawing room, in the "Rough Diamond," placed upon the stage with a correctness of taste not to be exceeded even at the Lyceum. After these pieces a most comical farce was produced, called "The First Night of my Wedding;" the fun of which turns on the miseries endured by Mrs. and Mrs. Pippins (Mr. Buckstone and Miss Handline) on the evening of their wedding, when, being overtaken by a frightful storm, they mistake a [illegible]'s rendezvous for an inn, and are therein exposed to all sorts of terrible adventures, until the appearance of the guard ensures their safety. The farce was entirely successful, being received with loud laughter, and without a dissentient voice. We believe that Mr. Buckstone and Mrs. Fitzwilliam have entirely seceded from the Lyceum company. Their engagement at the Marylebone is up to Christmas, certain.

A new play is announced to be in preparation at SADLER'S WELLS, and will be produced forthwith.

A new two-act drama, called "The Knight of Arva," will be brought out at the ADELPHI on Monday next. It is by Mr. Buckingham.

Some amateur theatricals, of a superior character, are in contemplation, and will take place at Guildford, in February. The principal actors are gentlemen well known in the fashionable circles of London life, and are said to be perfectly at home upon the stage

Mr. Webster has, we understand, purchased the early property of Mr Dickens's Christmas book, for adaptation. It was secured to Mr. Wilmot, some time ago; but, in consequence of the Keeley management having ended at the Lyceum, the gentleman gave up the agreement

WARREN'S PILLS AND BLACKING, at the Princess Concert-room, will, in future, commence every Monday evening at 10, instead of, as hitherto, at 11 o'clock.

LITERATURE.

THE TREASURY OF NATURAL HISTORY; or, A POPULAR DICTIONARY OF ANIMATED NATURE. By SAMUEL MAUNDER. Longman and Co

This work, the fifth of the author's "Treasuries," is of a class peculiarly fitted for the requirements of the present age, in which, if there are no Royal roads, there are at least railways, to scientific information. The vast impulse which the study has received in the present century has expanded its delights to every class of the people, who have found much to unlearn upon the subject, as well as more to learn from the spirit of discovery which has characterised this attractive branch of science. The recently revived question of the existence of the Sea-Serpent affords a remarkable advance of the public mind since this subject was last agitated: we refer especially to the suggestion as to the monster being a Saurian, the larger animals of which order had been but very imperfectly illustrated when the Sea-Serpent controversy was last agitated.

Mr. Maunder's present volume is, in every way, calculated to aid the popular advancement in the knowledge of the zoological characteristics of the Animal Kingdom. The work is most laboriously compiled, with sufficient attention to scientific details to preserve the distinctions of classes, genera, and species; and the spirit of the habits, instincts, and general economy, to render it as entertaining as a book of anecdote. Of the latter, indeed, it is a rare storehouse as full as the tail of a lobster. The arrangement is alphabetical, without any of the cyclopædian mystification of reference. There is, also, a classified Index, which is the means of supplying the necessary systematic information; and to the whole is added a syllabus of mystical Taxidermy, and a Glossarial Appendix of more than forty pages. The illustrations are 900 wood-cuts, engraved with accuracy and delicate finish. Altogether, this is a delightful book: the reputation of the author is a guarantee for its conscientious compilation; and it deserves to become as popular as either of the author's former works.

THE BOAT AND THE CARAVAN: A FAMILY TOUR THROUGH EGYPT AND SYRIA Second Edition. Bogue.

Upon the first appearance of this work, about two years since, we were much struck with the life-like reality of its main incidents, in spite of the artificial character of the framework—that of a family travelling in quest of health and recreation. That we did not record these impressions by way of review was a mere contretemps, for which we are now anxious to make amends, for too book has really peculiar claims upon our attention.

The "Family Tour" was performed, as its title implies, "by boat and caravan:" the travellers being the author (Mr. Dalton) and his wife, their son and daughter, and a female attendant. The party has not been made up for the book; and that they are flesh-and-blood, not paste-and-scissors tourists, the reader may rest assured. In the preface we are told that the author has endeavoured to adhere scrupulously to the truth, and has described nothing that did not really come under his own notice. This is coupled with regret that he could not refer to the works of previous travellers—a circumstance which adds to the assurance of originality; and it would be well if every book of travels could be written with such high recommendation.

The journey, we need hardly tell the reader, lies through the land of the Bible. Hence the descriptions are tinged with solemn association, and illustrated by frequent reference to sacred subjects. Yet this is done so unobtrusively, as to invite even the lightest reader to become better acquainted, by means of this book, with the localities of Scripture. There is no laboured identification of sites with passages; but, on the contrary, a free exercise of judgment upon such matters, which is the best characteristic of the entire work. Indeed, on this account, some of the reviewers of the first edition of the work have charged its author with dropping a little scepticism into his notices of spots in the Holy Land. His defence is worth quoting, for the amount of sound sense it displays:—

"While he has neither expressed, nor felt, a doubt of any plain statement contained in the Bible, he has considered himself as perfect liberty to exercise his own judgment on points in which no religious truth is concerned, and where the only evidence in their favour is gathered from the traditions of the Greek and Roman churches. In some instances, these traditions are plainly in opposition to Scripture. Such, for example, as—that part of Pilate's house still exists at Jerusalem, although our Saviour foretold that not one stone of the city should be left above another; that the church which crowns the summit of the Mount of Olives covers the spot from which our Saviour ascended, although the Evangelist Luke expressly says that it was at Bethany that he parted with his disciples and was carried up to heaven; and that the Mount of Precipitation is a high promontory two miles distant from Nazareth, although we read that it was from the 'brow of a hill on which the city was built' that the enraged Nazarenes sought to cast down their Lord. In many respects, it would have been more agreeable to have gone over the ground with unquestioning credulity; but the author thinks that belief of what is true is strengthened and confirmed by a careful rejection of all that is false."

Meanwhile, our readers must not suppose there to be any unbecoming levity in the "Family Tour;" on the contrary, there is unswerving veneration for sacred objects, and respect for well-grounded opinion. The narrative is cheerful and healthy throughout; prejudices are combated, and errors exposed with good humour, whilst the follies of credulity are let down gently. It is easy to perceive that the writer is a shrewd yet benevolent man—serious upon solemn subjects, and humorous upon lighter ones, with a keen perception of weak points, and the best intention of contributing something acceptable to his reader, both by way of information and improvement.

The route of the tourists is by steam-boat from Naples to Malta. Here they attended divine service at the beautiful church erected by the munificent Queen Adelaide. From Malta, the journey is by the Oriental steamer to Alexandria. The party then hire a boat, The Rona, and the scene changes to the Nile, visiting the mighty antiquarian wonders of Egypt in their route. A stay at Cairo, the journey through the Desert, and visits to Jerusalem, Nazareth, Beyrout, Damascus, Baalbec, &c., are all very agreeably described. The incidents never flag; and though occasionally minute and familiar, they are entertaining. We quote a few passages as specimens of the staple of the work

MEHEMET ALI.

"We have more than once mentioned the proprietors of land in Egypt, but, strictly speaking, there is but one, and that is the all-powerful and all-engrossing Mehemet Ali. By a late edict, he has appropriated the whole land to himself, as that Egypt is now as much the property of its ruler as it became after the great famine in the time of Joseph. The people have not, however, been turned out of their possessions, except where it has pleased the Pasha to take land under his own care. In that case, the Fellah is not permitted to seek some other residence, but must remain as a labourer in the Pasha's service. Mehemet Ali is not content, as Pharaoh was, with a fifth of the produce; he takes the lion's share. If a Fellah lets any portion of the land which he is permitted to retain, he will get, it may be, seventy piasters rent for a portion equal to an acre, of which nearly two-thirds goes to the Government in taxes. Nothing can exceed the apparent poverty of the people. Their dress is mean, their food of the coarsest kind, and their habitations not much better than the hovels of the Alexandrian suburbs. If a man scrapes a little money together, he carefully conceals his wealth, lest he should become a prey to the cupidity of the Pasha's officers; he cannot employ it in any profitable way, as the laws of the Prophet forbid the lending money on usury. Egypt is indeed the most fruitful country in the world; but although the condition of the people has in some respects been ameliorated of late years, yet misgovernment and oppression are still so great, that poverty and misery every-where abound."

CROCODILES IN THE NILE.

"A [illegible] of crocodiles' was a frequent sight. Once, as many as sixteen, some of them very large, were discovered on a bank. It was not often that they allowed the vessel to approach near enough to afford the opportunity of a good shot; but now and then they gave Mustapha a chance; he was always on the alert, and most desirous to kill one. The young people delighted in such sport, and pleased themselves with the notion of having it stuffed and sent to England. The sailors, too, were much interested in Mustapha's success; they looked forward to some hearty meals on the flesh, which is considered a great delicacy among the Arabs. In the course of the voyage, several were struck by the bullets, which their hard skin easily repelled. Two were wounded, one severely, for it was dilligently crawled into the river; but none were killed. They do not always lose all the tenacity of life possessed by reptiles; and as, on any attack, or even alarm, they seek the water, there appears to be no chance of securing one, unless it be wounded in a vital part, and does immediately expire—a rarely happens. The people near the Nile hold them in some dread, but assert that they never attack a man while swimming in deep water, but watch the opportunity when he stands up and is walking to the shore, to seize him by the leg, and drew him under. In this way, a boy about twelve years old was killed during our travellers' voyage. Dreading a similar fate, one of the sailors excused himself from bathing after a wild goose that Mustapha shot. His refusal gave the cook great offence; he was sharply rebuked for his laziness and cowardice, but acted very wisely in not venturing in."

The work is illustrated with a few spirited engravings. We should add that the profits arising from the sale of the previous edition have been distributed among religious societies; and the profits of the present edition will be similarly appropriated.

THE BURDEN OF THE AGE: OR, FALLACIES OF RAILWAY INVESTMENT, RAILWAY ACCOUNTS, AND RAILWAY DIVIDENDS. By ARTHUR SMITH. Third Edition. 1848. Sherwood and Co.

The title of the above work affords a sufficient index to its contents; judging from which, a Railway Censor has not come forward too soon, and is just at requisite as a "Railway Guide." Such a work, however timely at this moment, would have been still more so had it appeared prior to the railway mania of 1845, as it might then have contributed to prevent various of the evils thereby induced, which have now to be cured. The work contains some serious allegations against the present system of administering railway property and affairs in this country, and fearlessly points out the mischief which must ensue from continuing in the same course. Alluding to the present system in railway accounts, the author observes (p. 99):

"If it were possible to look forward and see a period at which Railway Companies—that is, supposing the present system continues—could extricate themselves, it would be advisable, however bad the present position, to be silent and live in expectation; but, this being completely hopeless, the whole system cannot be too soon brought before the public."

And, with reference to railway property, he says (p 13):—

"Ten old company rs' shares are computed to has e been depreciated £78,000,000. All the shares of the companies sanctioned in 1845 now sel. for less—with £25, £30, and £40 paid up—than in 1840, with £1, £2, or £3 paid; and scrip was depreciated £60,000,000 between September, 1845, and April, 1846; and the aggregate depreciation in the value of the shares of all the English railways exceeds the enormous sum of two hundred millions sterling being one-fourth of the national debt!"

We gather, from the author's statements, that it is not his desire to lessen the value of railway property, but to rouse the share and debenture holders into activity, so as to examine matters for themselves, and devise such remedial measures as may be necessary to preserve them from further loss; and he certainly has supplied them, in a cheap form, with much serious matter for [illegible] ion.

"TURN AGAIN WHITTINGTON," AND OTHER POEMS. By A WHITTINGTONIAN. This unpretending little work opens with a very sensible address to the members of the Whittington Club, and one which we trust will not be lost upon them. Many of these poems are very beautiful, containing thoughts of a high order, embroidered in the sweetest of rhythm. Amongst these we would especially point out "A Moonlight Ramble," "Stanzas to Christmas," and the "Song of the Mermaid."

CHANGE OF AIR: FALLACIES REGARDING IT. By J. C. ATKINSON, Esq. Ollivier.

This is a sort of guide-book to all who feel, or are taught to feel, that in their case a change of air is required, and who are prepared to make the kind of change demanded by the symptoms, whether sea-side excitement, or the quiet of an inland residence. This little manual will shew them, in plain, intelligible terms, the weaves of professional mystery, the best course to pursue under such circumstances

TALES, ESSAYS, AND POEMS. By JOSEPH GOSTICK. Simpkin and Co.

The contents of this volume, in part reprinted from popular periodicals, are unquestionably, as the author intended them to be, suggestors of "new thoughts, new feelings, and new circumstances." The prose sketches, too, bear a high poetic colour, and there is alike vigour and polish in the poems. Without going the whole extent of the writer's "class" views of mutual social changes, we find in them a very agreeable amount of instructive reading.

COUNTRY NEWS.

BISHOPWEARMOUTH RECTORY.—The rectory of Bishopwearmouth will not be filled up until a division is made of the parish, and a further provision allotted for the increasing wants of the district churches, in which it is expected the parish of Sunderland will be included, as formerly part of Bishopwearmouth. The new Rector will then be appointed, subject to these alterations and changes, by the Lord Bishop of Durham, patron of the living. An Act of Parliament will be applied for to effect the e changes, with power to sell the rectory house, gardens, parks, &c., which cover nearly twelve acres of land, now become valuable for building purposes, and worth at least £4000 per acre. Also the coal within the manor of the rectory, which comprises a large tract of land, together with a considerable part of the town of Bishopwearmouth. The proceeds of these sales, which will realise a large sum, will be applied to the augmentation of the present livings and the endowment of new churches, to be built in the parish.

GLASGOW UNIVERSITY.—On Wednesday the election of Lord Rector of the University took place, when the numbers were for Mr. Macaulay 1, for Colonel Mure, 203; majority for Macaulay 202. Mr. Macaulay had a majority in all the four nations.

THE CHIPPING NORTON AND CHIPPING CAMDEN BANK.—In the District Court of Bankruptcy, at Birmingham, on Tuesday, before Mr. Commissioner Balguy, Messrs. John and Charles Th. Matthews, who carried on business as bankers at Chipping Norton and Chipping Campden, came up on their last examination. Mr. Knight, solicitor, of Birmingham, who appeared for the assignees, stated that he offered no opposition to the bankrupts passing their examination, for, although on their joint estate there would be found a considerable loss, yet on the separate estates there was a large surplus, which would enable them to pay from 16s. to 17s. 6d. in the pound. From the balance-sheet it appeared that the bankrupts issued the notes of Messrs. Cobb and Co., of Banbury, and that the deposit accounts, which constituted the bulk of the debts, did not exceed £20,000.

EXTENSIVE FIRE IN MANCHESTER. On Wednesday night, a destructive fire broke out in the large m.ll belonging to Mr. James Fernsley, known as Gaythorn Mills. The fire continued to rage with great fury until the whole building and its chinery were destroyed. The origin of the fire is not known. The amount of the damage is said to be £40,000, and the proprietor is insured for only £20,000. The consequence of this disaster will be that nearly 500 persons will be thrown out of employment.

THE CHARTIST TRIALS AT EDINBURGH.—On Monday and Tuesday the High Court of Justiciary was crowded with auditors to hear the proceedings and evidence on the trials of the Chartists, John Grant, printer; Henry Rankin, late of the North British Express newspaper, and Robert Hamilton, tailor, charged with sedition and conspiracy. The panels having pleaded "Not guilty" to the indictments, the witnesses on the part of the Crown were examined at great length, and subjected to the cross-examination of the counsel for the defence. The evidence went to shew the connexion of the prisoners with the movements and intentions of the Chartists. Some documentary evidence was also produced. The jury, after a short consultation on Tuesday, returned the following verdict:—"The jury unanimously find Robert Hamilton guilty of sedition and art-and-part guilt of the same crime." Mr Grant was then discharged at the bar, and the other panels were conveyed to prison, and the court adjourned without passing sentence. It is understood that it is the intention of the counsel for the prisoners to object to the sufficiency of the above verdict. On Wednesday, the High Court of Justiciary sat, in order to proceed with the trial of James Cumming, shoemaker, who was charged with the statutory crime of contravening the Crown and Government Security Act, and with the offences at common law of conspiracy and sedition. As soon as the Judges had taken their seats on the bench, the Lord-Advocate rose and said, that, after due consideration, he had come to the resolution to abandon the prosecution of the prisoner, who was accord ngly dismissed from the bar. It is understood that the Lord-Advocate was reduced to the necessity of taking this course from the imperfect way in which the case had been got up by some of the officials.

THE ARCTIC EXPEDITION.—From the Arctic expedition and the north-west, a letter has been received, written by Mr M'Pherson, of the Hudson's Bay Company's service, dated Portage la Roche, July 26, 1848, which contains the following information relative to Sir John Richardson, who, it will be remembered, is seeking Sir John Franklin by land, while Sir James Ross is engaged in the same service by sea. The last dates from Captain Ross are, by way of England, to the 29th of July. At that day he was in Davis's Straits, in latitude 69 N. Mr. M'Pherson says:—"I have great pleasure in informing you that Sir John Richardson, Dr. Rae, Mr. Bell, and party, met us on the 11th day of July, as far advanced as Athabasca Lake. They appeared in good health and spirits, and I should suppose that Sir John would reach the coast about the 27th or 28th of the same month. I have little doubt, however, but that they will, on account of the lateness of the spring in the quarter, meet with considerable detention from ice. The latest news from Fort's River brings reports that the Indians who frequent the coast had met with Esquimaux, who showed them flies and knives, which they said they had received from whites, in two very large canoes, to the eastward of the M'Kenzie. Indian rumours are so problematical, that it is utterly impossible to vouch for their accuracy; but at the same time it is not improbable that such should have happened."—The barque Prince of Wales, which arrived at Hull on Friday morning (6th inst.), picked up, in latitude 68.10 N., and longitude 64.30 W., on October the 2nd, a cask, containing the following important information relative to the Franklin expedition:—"Her Majesty's ship, Investigator and Enterprise, entered the main pack in Melville's Bay on the 20th of August, and, after examining Pond's Bay, on the 23rd, passed on to the northward, in search of the expedition under Captain Sir John Franklin. The cask which contains this paper was thrown from her Majesty's ship Investigator, on the 28th of August, 1848, in at 74.50 N., and lon. 78.6 30 W. All well. Enterprise in company. Whoever may find this paper is requested to forward it to the Secretary of the Admiralty, London, with a note of the date, latitude, and longitude in which it was found

EDWARD BIRD, captain."

WRECK OF TWO FOREIGN EMIGRANT SHIPS Two German emigrant vessels were wrecked on Monday night, on the "Long" and "Goodwin" sands The vessels, both from Bremen, were the ship Burgundy, Mr Hunt master, 500 tons burden, with nearly 300 emigrants for New Orleans; the other the 270 ton Atlantic, Mr. Foster, belonging to Bremen, for New York, also with passengers (the number not exactly known). Between ten and eleven o'clock on Monday night the reports of signal guns of distress were heard at the Gull Light-vessel, in the direction of the Long Sands. Several smacks, as well as her Majesty's revenue-cutter Desbond, bore down in the direction. On nearing the outer bank of the sands in question, the Burgundy was discovered completely on the sand, engulphed in heavy breakers. It was impracticable to get her off, and her destruction seemed inevitable. The crews of the surrounding vessels lost no time in arranging a plan for their rescue, and the whole number were taken off the vessel, which, in a few hours became a perfect wreck. The wreck of the Atlantic was discovered on the morning of the same day on the Goodwin. She had got on the outside of the sands, and was fast going down, when several Ramsgate and Deal luggers came up, and, notwithstanding a tremendous sea, saved all persons on board, except the master, two passengers, and a boy, who were swept overboard.

FREE PARDON TO THE ALLEGED FORGER, BARBER The following letter has been received from the Home-office by one of Mr. Barber's friends:—"Whitehall, Nov. 10, 1848. Sir,—I am directed by Secretary Sir George Grey to acknowledge the receipt of the several documents which you have transmitted to him in behalf of Mr. W. H. Barber, who was convicted at the Central Criminal Court in April, 1844, of being accessory before the fact to forgery, and sentenced to be [illegible]ted for life. Sir George Grey desires me to inform you that these papers have received his full and serious consideration, and that he has satisfied himself that there is sufficient ground to justify his advising her Majesty to extend Mr. Barber a free pardon, which is herewith enclosed. But while he has arrived at the conclusion, from a consideration of all the documents in his possession, comprising very material circumstances which had transpired since the conviction, Sir George Grey feels bound to add that he sees no reason to doubt that the verdict of the jury was warranted on the facts proved at his trial; and although he now believes Mr. Barber to have been free from any guilty participation in the frauds of which he was made the instrument, he thinks that greater prudence and caution on his part would have exempted him from the suspicion to which his conduct in the transactions in question naturally exposed him. —I am, Sir, your obedient servant, G. CORNEWALL LEWIS.—A. STEVENSON, Esq., 15, Essex-street, Strand."

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS

"Beta," St. Neots The solution you ask for is the same. Q to Q B 3d (ch). 2. Kt to Q B 3d (ch) 3 Kt to Q B 8th. 4. it mates

"Alma," "B. F." and others, who have obliged us by answering "Inquirer's" query, are thanked

"Prisoner." A trying exigence, Mr. Horwicke wrote "The effort of my countryman," not "The efforts."

"Horsley." The first is too simple. In the second you have omitted to place the White King

"S. P. A."—Have the goodness to write out the position, and we will give the solution next week.

"W. L., Junior."—Your two versions of a position, which you number "5 a," and stipulate that mate is to be given in five moves, have evidently been made up without anything like the attention and study Chess Problems demand. The first is done in three, and the companion in two moves, easily

"H." "It is certainly not original, but merely an adaptation of the end of a game between Mr. Harrwitz and Dr. Rigan, which appeared lately in our columns

"Sagacious" is thanked for his obliging suggestion.

"G. S"—The player, under such circumstances, has the privilege of demanding any piece he chooses

"Joseph."—There are no "conventionalities," we can assure you, among eminent players in the relation of their games; and, if you play the particular one over again, you will find it quite right. The other points of your letter we should be happy to discuss; but the limited space at our command forbids us at present.

"J. H." City-road Chess-Club. We thank your plan for diffusing a knowledge of Chess by the establishment of small Chess Clubs in the Coffee-houses, a very good one, and shall deserving the support of all who feel an interest in promoting the intellectual culture of the people.

"M. N. O."—The rules of the Brighton Chess Club are well adapted for a proud-and Chess Club. Write to the Secretary

"W. D. S." 1. Write to the Secretary of the Brighton Chess Club. 2. The Chess-Player's Chronicle is published monthly by Hurst, King William-street, Strand. 3. The Problems, &c., in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, are only to be obtained by the purchase of the paper. 4. In your Problem "A," mate cannot be given in four moves; and "B." is much too obvious.

"A. W. B."—Thanked; but his Enigma is too easy.

"G. S. J." Your Problems are at length decipherable. No. 1 is much too simple. No. 2 cannot be solved as you propose. No 3 is the old "Philidor's legacy," which we have had more ad nauseam. No. 4 is too easy; and No. 5, which exhibits some design, shall have a place among our Enigmas.

"M. U." The same rule holds good in this country. No. 381 is solved thus—1. Kt from Q to Kt 5 th. Q. to Kt 3rd. P to K 4th. 4. P to K 5th (checkmate)

"H. W.," Isle of Wight.—A Problem so highly recommended, we have no doubt, is deserving the distinction asked for. Will "H. W." send us the diagram, his envelope brought the solution only

"W. S. B."—The King can Castle after he has been in check

"Carlo Futuro"—Your are under consideration.

"T. H. D." We have no time to correct your "hastily-constructed" Problems. Those only which have been subjected to repeated and repeated examination should be sent to us

"Rusticus."—Easy in two.

Solutions by "R. R.," "G. J. H.," "A. W. B." "F. G. R.," "Sopracuta." "H. G. S." "S. E." "A Beginner," "C. A. M. K.," "Ute Joe," "W. S. B." "Kenna," "E. G. D." "Otho," "S. L.," "Strad" "A. B. H. K." "T. W. J.," "[illegible]," "[illegible]," "H. P.," "H. C." "H. V.," "Iago," "S. T.," "Sussex." Those by "S. T." "P. A." are wrong.

The answers to several communications are deferred from want of space.

 Any Amateur who is desirous to engage in a game by correspondence may meet an opponent by addressing "C. E.," Post-Office, Gainsborough.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM NO. 251.

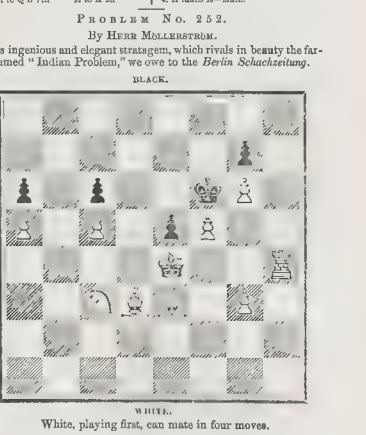
WHITE.	BLACK	WHITE.	BLACK
1. Kt to Q 8th (ch)	P takes Kt	3. R to Q B 6th (ch)	R to K 3d
2. R to Q B 7th	R to K 2d	4. R takes R—Mate.

PROBLEM NO. 252.

By HERR MOLLERSTROM.

This ingenious and elegant stratagem, which rivals in beauty the far-famed "Indian Problem," we owe to the Berlin Schachzeitung.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White, playing first, can mate in four moves.

CHESS MATCH BY CORRESPONDENCE

BETWEEN THE LONDON AND AMSTERDAM CHESS CLUBS

WHITE (Amsterdam).*	BLACK (London).
19. Kt to Q 4th	19. Kt to B 3d

* Amsterdam's move last week should have been numbered 19, not 20

CHESS IN THE PROVINCES.

GAME BETWEEN THE PRESIDENT AND HON. SECRETARY OF THE LIVERPOOL CHESS CLUB. (EVANS GAMBIT.)

WHITE (Mr S.)	BLACK (Mr. M.)	WHITE (Mr. S.)	BLACK (Mr. M.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	20. B takes Q Kt P	Q R to Kt sq
2. Kt to Q B 3d	Q Kt to B 3d	21. Q takes B	Q takes B
3. B to Q B 4th	B to Q B 4th	22. Kt to K R 5th	K Kt to B 4th
4. P to Q Kt 4th	B takes Q Kt P	23. Q to K B 4th	P to Kt 3d
5. P to Q B 3d	B to K 4th	24. Q R to Q sq	Q to Kt 3rd
6. Castles	P to Q 3d	25. R to K 4th	Q to Kt 4th
7. P to Q 4th	P takes P	26. K R to K sq	Q takes Q R P
8. Q to K 2d	Q to B 3d	27. R takes R (Kt (e)	P takes R
9. P takes P (a)	B to Kt 3d	28. Q takes P	Q to Kt 7th
10. P to K 5th	Q to K Kt 3d	29. Q to B 5th (ch)	K to Kt sq
11. K to his 5th	K Kt to B 3d	30. P to K 6th	P takes Kt
12. P takes Q P	P takes P	31. Q takes Kt	Q to K Kt 2d
13. K to K sq (ch)	K to B sq	32. Q takes K R P	P to K R 3d
14. Q Kt to B 3d	B takes Q P	33. P to B 4th	P to K R 3d
15. Q Kt to Q 5th	Kt to K 4th	34. P to K R 3d	Q to K Kt 3d
16. Q Kt to K B 4th	Q to K B 4th	35. Q to K 5th	Q to Kt 3d (ch)
17. B to K 5th (b)	Q takes K Kt	36. K to B sq	P to Q R 4th
18. B takes Q B (c)	Q to K 2nd (d)	37. P to K B 5th	P to B 3d
19. Q B to K 3d	B takes B	and Black wins

(a) P to K 5th at once may even be played, although that is hardly so safe a way of commencing the attack as first taking the Pawn.

(b) Ingeniously played. (c) Now threatening to win the Q by Kt to K 4th (ch).

(d) Possessing a dangerous check with the Kt next move.

(e) P to Kt 4th before taking the Kt appears to be better play

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 386.—By Mr. R. H. AGNEL, of New York

White K at Q R 3d, R at Q R 4th, B at K Kt 4th.
Black K at Q B 8th, P at Q R 4th

White to play, and mate in four moves

No. 387.—By the Same

White: K at Q 2nd, Q at K B 7th, Kt at K B 8th, Ps at K B 5th and Q 3rd
Black: K at Q 5th, Q at Q Kt 4th, R at K R sq, B at K 4th; Ps at K R 7th, Q 3rd, and Q B 4th. White to play, and draw the game

No. 388.—By HERR ETTSACH, of New York.

White K at Q B 2nd, R at Q 3rd, Ks at Q B 8th, and Q Kt sq.
Black. K at his sq, R at K R sq, Ps at K B 3d and K B 2nd

White to play, and mate in three moves.

FETE AT BRISTOL TO CELEBRATE THE REDUCTION OF THE PORT CHARGES.

PROCESSION OF THE TRADES AT THE TOP OF PARK-STREET.

On Monday last, the ancient city of Bristol was the scene of a great Processional Demonstration, and other festivities, in celebration of the passing of the Dock Transfer Act, by which the dues are considerably reduced. Throughout nearly the whole extent of the city, particularly along the route marked out for the course of the Procession, banners and flags, many being appropriate to the occasion, and others bearing emblems and devices of a more general character, were suspended across the streets and displayed from the windows and roofs of private residences, warehouses, and manufactories. The churches and public buildings were similarly decorated, and the ships in the harbour, from the Stone Bridge to Bathurst and Cumberland basins, a distance of more than two miles, hoisted colours in such profusion, that their masts and rigging were almost hid beneath the multitude of flags with which they were dressed. The bells of the various churches rang out merry peals; guns of large and small calibre were continually fired in all directions, especially in the neighbourhood of the shipping; bands of music played their liveliest tunes as they marched to their appointed places in the Procession; and the shops and establishments of the city (with few exceptions) being closed, multitudes of people—old and young, rich and poor, men, women, and children, all attired in holiday costume, were everywhere jostling one another with the most imperturbable good-humour, in their anxiety to catch a nearer glimpse of some splendid banner or ingenious emblematic device of the handicraftsmen to whom it belonged, as they wended their way, amidst the cheers of the assembled crowds to the place of rendezvous in the Old Market.

The weather was remarkably fine; indeed, the sun rarely shines with such brilliancy in November as it did on Monday last, the anniversary of the burial of the benevolent Edward Colston—almost proverbially wet.

The Procession being formed, at ten o'clock a bugle was sounded, and at the signal the banners, emblems, devices, &c., were simultaneously hoisted, amidst the firing of guns, the ringing of bells, and the deafening cheers of the crowds who filled the streets as far as the eye could reach. The sight at this moment was certainly very beautiful and animating. The gorgeous banners and insignia of the Odd Fellows, glistening in the sunlight, and the superb ornaments and models of the Trades, in perfect order and regularity, and extending nearly a mile in length, presented a magnificent coup d'œil.

The Procession being now prepared to move, the bugle again sounded, and the head of the column commenced its march up Castle-street, the bands of music, of which there were 13, striking up together. On the arrival of the Procession at St. Peter's Hospital, it was joined by the Governor (J. G. Shaw, Esq.) and the Corporation of the Poor, who led the way through Dolphin-street and Wine-street to the Council-house, which was reached shortly after half-past ten o'clock. (One of the accompanying Illustrations represents this scene.) Here the Procession was headed by his Worship the Mayor, John Kerle Haberfield, Esq., accompanied by many members of the town-council, and attended by the various civic functionaries, the society of Merchant Venturers, the president (Robert Bright, Esq.) and council of the Free Port Association, the incorporated gas companies, and a large number of the principal merchants, bankers, and tradesmen, who had assembled in the vestibule to wait its arrival. At this spot, also, the excellent band of the Rifles took up their position in front of the Procession, and continued with it the remainder of the day.

After a few minutes' delay, the Procession started from the Council-house in the following order:—

Committee of Trades' Delegates.
The Rifles Band
Inspector of Weights and Measures; Exchange Keeper.
Quay Warden; Water-Bailiff.
City Treasurer; Town-Clerk.
Under-Sheriff, bearing the Sword of State
The Right Worshipful the Mayor, JNO KERLE HABERFIELD, Esq.,
Attired in the state robes, and wearing the gold chain of office.
The Aldermen and Town-Councillors.
The Society of Merchant Venturers.
The Governor of the Corporation of the Poor, J. G. SHAW, Esq., supported by two of the Court of Assistants.
The Deputy-Governor, W. HOWE, Esq., also supported by two Assistants.
The Guardians.
Band of Music.
ROBERT BRIGHT, Esq., President, and the members of the Free Port Council.
Merchants, Bankers, Traders, &c.
The Independent Order of Odd Fellows, M. U. B. D.

A Band of Music.
The Shipwrights.
A Band of Music.
The Sawyers.
A Band of Music.
The Platers.
The Braziers.
The Coppersmiths.
The Brass-Founders.
The Wire-Workers
A Band of Music.
The Barrel-Makers.
The Rope-Makers.
The Twine Spinners.
A Band of Music.
The Coopers.

A Band of Music.
The Wheelwrights.
The Agricultural Implement Makers.
The Glass-Blowers.
The Glass-Cutters
The Slaters.
A Band of Music
The Masons.
A Band of Music.
The Cabinet-Makers.
The Floor-Cloth Workers.
The Gas-Men.
Water-Works Men.
A Band of Music.
The Hibernian Society.

The Firemen of the various Insurance Offices, with their Engines, Each drawn by four horses.

Vans,
Belonging to Messrs. Crowley and Co., laden with merchandise, decorated with Banners, &c., and each drawn by a team of horses.

The Procession was altogether, in theatrical phrase, "well got up." The models exhibited by many of the trades displayed great taste and mechanical ingenuity. Amongst some of the most striking objects was a knight, armed cap-à-pie, attended by his pursuivants with truncheons; a crossbow-man, in chain armour; and other attractions not immediately connected with the display of handicraft and implements.

The Members for the city (the Hon. F. H. F. Berkeley and P. W. S. Miles, Esq.) joined the Procession on horseback, about a quarter past one, at Clifton Church, and accompanied it the remainder of the route The hon. gentlemen were repeatedly cheered.

Owing to the length of route and the necessarily slow pace at which the Procession moved, it did not reach its destination at the Council-house at the hour intended, viz. three o'clock. On the contrary, St. Stephen's clock pointed to a quarter past four before the head of the column passed that spot; and it was not till after five that the whole of the brilliant cortège had passed by, filing off by degrees as it passed the municipal building. The larger Illustration shows the Procession as it appeared on passing the Asylum for the Blind, at the top of Park-street.

As the evening set in, a few tradesmen illuminated their houses, and there were occasional displays of fireworks. Several of the trades met, and celebrated the event of the day.

The men in the employ of Messrs. Bernard, Vining, and Co., sugar refiners, were regaled with a sumptuous entertainment, provided by their employers, at the Cat and Wheel Tavern, Castle-green.

Messrs. J. and J. White, of the Baptist Mills Pottery, provided a good dinner for the men of their establishment, which was served up on the premises in the evening. About forty sat down, under the presidency of Mr. James White.

Messrs. Pigott, of Corn-street, gave an entertainment to the hands employed by them, at the White Lion, Quay-head. The dinner consisted of good old English fare—roast beef, plum-pudding, &c.

The workmen, with their families, in the employ of Messrs. Lendrum and Marshall, tailors, celebrated the holiday by partaking of a substantial dinner, at the residence of Mr. Marshall.

The smiths, dyers, and tailors, also, we understand, assembled at the Cock and Bottle at the termination of the Procession.

The coopers dined at the New Globe, Christmas-street, the braziers and copper-smiths at the Ship, Redcliff-hill; the brass-founders at the Bear's Head, Redcliff-street; and we believe the men of nearly every trade that appeared in the Procession subsequently met in their various houses of resort, to conclude the day in a similar manner.

The following reductions in the Bristol Dock dues took effect from August 1, 1848:—On vessels from foreign parts, hitherto paying 1s. 8d. per ton, reduced to 1s. per ton; ditto paying 1s. per ton, reduced to 8d. per ton; ditto from Ireland, paying 8d., and coastwise, 6d. per ton, reduced to 4d. Corn, flour, meal, also cotton and wool, are free. Wharfage taken off all exports, and in no instance to exceed 6d. per ton, and only on imports from foreign parts.

THE PROCESSION IN WINE STREET.

STAITE'S PATENT ELECTRIC LIGHT.

With Electricity, as exhibited in the lightning-flash, all are familiar, and with its terrific and appalling powers—now shivering into fragments the forest oak, or rasing to the ground the most solid structures—developing, as a physical agent, tremendous mechanical effects. The science of the 19th century has, however, rendered this mysterious fluid serviceable and useful to man, as the means of general illumination. Light from Electricity—a light far exceeding in brilliancy and volume any light ever yet known—has just been exhibited, with unqualified success, by the inventor, Mr. W. Edward Staite (assisted by his coadjutor, Mr. Petrie), at the Hanover-square Rooms, in the presence of a large assembly, composed, for the most part, of scientific men.

A Copper Coil
B Soft Iron Bar for "Raising or Depressing" the Balance Lever Regulating Balance Lever
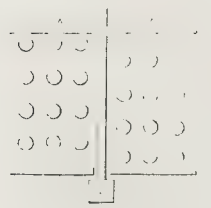
Ratchet Wheel for Raising or Depressing Rack
Rack carrying the lower Electrode
F Excentric Wheel moved by Clock-work, for giving motion, by means of the Lever G, to the Ratchet Wheel D
H End of Coil, communicating with the upper Electrode
I I Carbon Electrodes
K Clock-work movement

STAITE'S PATENT ELECTRIC LIGHT APPARATUS.

The light was produced from a galvanic battery of moderate size, embracing its construction and elements several improvements, so as to render the battery constant, continuous, and regular in its action, and economical in cost. By means of solid copper wires the electric fluid is conveyed to the lamp, which may be placed on a table or suspended from the ceiling. In this lamp are two sticks of carbon or carbonaceous material, between which the light is developed; and these sticks are moved by a clock-work arrangement, in proportion as they are consumed, at a speed which is regulated by the current. To render the light continuous, it is necessary that these two pieces of carbon should first be brought into actual contact, that the current may pass, and then be separated to a short distance apart. This is accomplished by means of the current itself, without manual aid. As the carbon gradually wears away (about half an inch an hour), the same regulated distance between the two electrodes, is ensured by like means. The apparatus (if it may be so called) to effect this self-regulation is an electro-magnetic instrument, placed immediately under the plate of the lamp, and through which the current of electricity is made to pass. The principle of this instrument is extremely ingenious, and in some degree resembles a galvanometer: the galvanic current passing through a coil of wire, magnetises a bar of soft iron which is passed through the coil; and, in proportion as the current is strong or feeble, the magnetised bar rises or falls. When the current is in excess, it actuates an escapement, and the two electrodes are drawn to the required distance apart; and when the current passing is less than the regulated quantity, the motion is reversed, and the electrodes are drawn closer together. By these means, not only is the light rendered steady and constant, but only so much of the generated fluid is allowed to pass as is developed in light—effecting an economy of the battery power never before approached.

The light equalled between 800 and 900 standard wax-candles; and when it was thrown by means of a glass lens on some pictures at the end of the room, the effect was almost magical, and was loudly applauded by the assembly. The most delicate tints of colour, the greys, greens, and blues, were as clearly defined as by daylight. The prismatic rays were subsequently shown by Mr. Staite, and were as vivid and bright as those from a sunbeam, and perfectly identical in colour, showing the light to be, in purity, equal to the sun.



A Copper coil. B Soft iron bar.

SECTION OF COIL.

The light was also exhibited immersed in a bowl of water, to the surprise of many present; and as an illustration of the fact that the light, strictly speaking, was not the result of combustion (in the ordinary sense of the term), but was a pure incandescent light, not dependent upon oxygen for its support. When in action in a room, it neither takes from nor adds to the surrounding air any property whatever—an important fact in large and crowded assemblies.

The inventor, we understand, is preparing modifications of his lamps, with a view to show the applicability of the discovery to every purpose of illumination, from a single candle power upwards. The cost of the light he stated to be about one-twelfth that of gas; that it was perfectly safe and harmless and easily managed, and that accidents from explosion or from fire were impossible. At the conclusion of Mr. Staite's address he was loudly applauded, and numerous questions were put and answered on the details of the invention.

A series of lectures with illustrations of the physical properties of light, will shortly be given by the inventor, at the Hanover-square Rooms, which will be lighted the whole evening by electricity; when the public will have an opportunity of judging for themselves as to the merits of this brilliant and novel system of lighting.

CHRIST CHURCH, HIGHBURY.

This handsome Church was consecrated on the 16th ult., by the Lord Bishop of London, attended by about forty or fifty of the clergymen of his diocese. The edifice was crowded by the inhabitants of the surrounding neighbourhood, who were unanimous in their praise of this elegant structure.

In plan, this new Church is cruciform—the centre being an octagon, carried by eight octagonal columns, supporting moulded arches, above which is the clerestory, the windows being filled with stained glass of curious patterns. The roof is stained imitation of oak. The lines which are formed by the intersection of the timbers have a very picturesque effect, the principals resting on carved corbels.

The north, south, and west fronts have each a large stained glass window, being contributions by private individuals; the two former were executed by Messrs. Ward and Nixon.

The apse or altar end consists of five sides of an octagon, with a stained glass window in each. The reredos is exquisitely carved, and occupies the whole of the sides; this is finished by a stone altar rail, the altar being ascended by three steps. The communion plate has been presented by one of the congregation.

The organ screen has rather a novel appearance, from the situation which it occupies—being in the tower, presenting two fronts, richly carved in Caen stone.

The pewing is stained in imitation of oak; and, from the form of the Church, the whole of the congregation can see and hear the minister, both in the pulpit and at the communion-table. The mouldings by which this is produced gives a picturesque effect, by the various intersections of the arches, always so pleasing in Gothic structures. The pulpit, reading desk, and font are of Caen stone, and carved very richly. The Church will accommodate nearly 500 persons.

The edifice is built of Kentish rag, with Bath stone dressings. It has been erected at a cost of £6000, from designs of Mr. Allom. From whatever point it is viewed, the building presents a varied and striking form.

NEW CHURCH AT HIGHBURY.

JEROME PATUROT IN SEARCH OF THE BEST REPUBLIC.

ILLUSTRATED BY GAVARNI.

CHAPTER II.

HOW FEAR EMBELLISHES OBJECTS.

Of the two new Commissaries, we lost the lean one and kept the fat one. This was an advantage. The lean one would have vented the effects of his bilious complexion upon us: the fat one, gifted with excellent digestive organs, would therein find a motive for softening the severity of his duties. Besides, he was a provincial, and, taken all in all, the best man in the world. His story may be told in a few words. When young, he had felt a strong inclination for a literary vocation, arising from the fumes of beer and the heat of the public-house; and, as he liberally lavished the tincture of wormwood, and played at dominoes to perfection, with a most chivalrous carelessness, there were not wanting men who said that a mind such as his required a more elevated stage, and that the flowers of his imagination ought not to be left to fade in obscurity. What a trap for an author's vanity! Still he resisted to his last dollar; and if he capitulated, if he secured himself to his high destinies, it was because the remains of his patrimony disappeared one fine day in the eventual stake of XX.

Then he repaired to Paris, the rendezvous of great ambitions and imperious wants; there he lived for fifteen years crowned with the smallest of glories, condemned to obscure and ungrateful tasks, dining badly, breakfasting sometimes, and giving his friends the sight of a worn-out hat and ventilated boots. Spite of these trials, he remained what nature had made him—good-hearted and without gall. He did not, as others, possess an incurable hatred of all superiorities—he did not see in his misfortunes an universal conspiracy against his genius. Mediocre minds seldom do themselves this justice; they prefer abusing the universe to accusing themselves, and they vent the evils of their organisation on society.

But by the force of circumstances our Commissary found himself associated with the restless world of unacknowledged authors, and he belonged to this congregation when the Revolution broke out. Everything in him then became a claim: his struggle against fate, his obscurity, his perforated boots. He was, therefore, immediately appointed one of the missionaries of the new régime. What a refreshing shower for a long thirsting soul! The Commissary was only too well pleased with the Revolution, and started for his post with joy in his heart and a smile on his lips. He had fifteen years of abstinence to repair, and that was the first revenge he took. How could he have resisted? He did not: his lips approached the goblet of the rich, and he commenced to regulate old scores with his stomach. This was not a light occupation, nor an insignificant care. Our hero knew that he could not acquit himself of it alone, and gathered round him the same parasites who had assisted in the liquidation of his patrimony. Thus supported, the task became less arduous, and was well fulfilled. From time to time some exterior diversions were mingled with it, and served to breathe public anxiety. After drinking, the friends of the Commissary broke the windows of the citizens; while he, ruling like one of Homer's gods, issued a proclamation ornamented with all the colours of his palette.

This conduct produced a great effect; nothing excites enthusiasm so much as fear. Thenceforward, every one in our department swore only by the Commissary. He became the object of exclusive worship; and, at the slightest intimation, they would have raised statues in his honour. He took all these things like a good prince, and left to his friends the care of entertaining, by some innocent frolics, a little civic terror, for which service he paid them by banquets worthy of an Assyrian prince. Nothing was changed in our department; we had only a prefect less, and a Commissary more.

Things continued on this footing until they were interrupted by an unexpected apparition. One morning the magistrate of the Republic was sitting down to table with some friends. The subject was a splendid dyeâner, with accompaniment of fine wines and delicate festlings. The forks were already in motion; the blood of the grape coloured the crystal of the glasses. Between the two courses they were discussing the politics of the future. In the meantime they attacked a venison pasty and an exquisite pomard. Their hearts were glad, their stomachs busy. There were no boding signs in the heavens—no fatal writing on the wall. Never did a repast promise more pleasure and less pain; and the assistants secretly determined to prolong it to the limits of human faculties. Alas! they calculated without fate, and omitted the chapter of the unforseen from their programme. The first course was finished, when the door obeyed an imperious push, and admitted a man whose physiognomy expressed anger and discontent. At the noise, and at this sight, the Commissary's first impulses was to turn to the servants and exclaim—

THE UNFORESEEN [illegible]

"What means this? How is it that my orders are not obeyed? Did I not say, I was not visible for any one?"

Instead of obeying this indirect dismissal, the unknown coldly advanced towards the head, and, casting a look of severity on him and on his associates, 'Except for me, citizen-collegues," he replied.

It was the thin Commissary changed into the Commissary-General, and therefore a superior. Revolt was not permitted. The magistrate of the department, therefore, bowed before powers more intended than his own.

"Welcome, citizen," he said, rising and motioning his friends to follow his example; "welcome in our domains. You arrive at the right moment. Take my seat—you shall preside. There is a hotchpotch prepared in the manner of this country which will repay your confidence. And to wash it down, we have Burgundy of the date of the old Government. You must confess everything was not bad under it."

Far from joining in this sally, or obeying the invitation, the Commissary-General's face only darkened more, and his inquisitorial eye surveyed the room. The table, the dishes, shocked him, so much luxury looked sacrilegious. He belonged to those austere Republicans who would put society to the regimen of black broth. He gave the example, and lived in Spartan frugality. The restaurants for twenty-two sous were to him temples raised to sujperfluity; he gave them a smaller tribute to the necessities of life, not from want of means, but from principle. He liked to attest himself as others like to enjoy themselves; it was his temperament. It can be guessed, therefore, what effect this table, loaded with succulent dishes, had upon the Commissary-General. He saw in it the disgrace of the new institutions. A dish of asparagus wouldalmost have made a scrupulous man at the beginning of March! What an example for the people! He could ill restrain his anger; and he answered in a rough tone—

"Thanks, citizen. . . I'll not murmur a cup of milk is sufficient for me. . . Besides, my moments are precious. . . . I am expected in the next department. . . . I can give you only an hour."

These words were accompanied by gestures which formed an expressive commentary. The Amphitryon felt his boldness desert him; and his guests did not know how to look. The Commissary-General mustered them one by one.

"These citizens are your friends," said he, addressing his inferior.

"Yes, my colleague; and I am proud of them," he replied, with a respectful tone. "The flower of the patriots here! The terror of the bourgeoisie! Pure, chosen men!"

"Well, then, let us sit down," replied the Commissary-General. "I prefer having witnesses. Return to your asparagus, citizens," he said, with biting irony: "I have other cares."

He took a chair, and again cast a withering look on the untimely vegetables. The guests stepped aside from respect mingled with fear, as if a marble statue had taken a seat at their banquet. The Commissary had on a large and a small one everything showed it. The simple Commissary was annihilated before the higher power. The austere Republic reproached the epicurean Republic. A long silence obtained, which was broken by the new-comer—

"Citizens," he said, "I speak out plainly; I am not satisfied with your town. Excuse my frankness; truth before everything."

"Citizen, that is a very serious judgment," replied the departmental magistrate, wounded to the quick. "May we know how we deserve it?"

"Nothing is done, citizen! Nothing is shaken; nothing progresses. I saw it at a glance."

"Explain, citizen, explain. What are your complaints? Where are your proofs?" cried the accused, more and more hurt.

"Proofs! They are only too abundant, citizen. I have been a quarter of an hour in the chief town of the district—what have I seen? Quiet streets; people going about their businesses."

"But is that a crime?"

"Citizens, I wish to explain. If I have accused you unjustly, I will be the first to acknowledge it. Let us see what has happened here; what have you done have you clubs, as in Paris?"

"No," said the others, "we have no clubs"

"Have you had your processions, after the manner of the Parisian ones?"

"No," said the assembly.

"No processions, no clubs; that is serious. At least, you have had the banquets, as in Paris?"

The convivial looked at each other in mute disappointment: the consciousness of their fault penetrated them more and more: they seemed to shrink before this overwhelming examination. But a new confession was pressed from them.

"We have had no banquets," they said.

"And you call that a Republic!" exclaimed the indignant judge. "A Republic without banquets, without processions, without clubs! Now I am prepared for anything. Confess that you have had no tree of liberty here, with accompaniment of firing and tricolor flags."

Their consciences were stricken, their lips powerless Silence alone replied to the accuser.

"I thought so," he continued. "I need not go on: nothing as in Paris, absolutely nothing. Not a great idea, not one noble spectacle. Oh! Republic, thus are thou inaugurated. Where are thy fusees? where thy antique drapery?"

At these words the Commissary-General rose: his grief was sincere; but when his ill-humour was vented by clues or four turns round the room, he returned to his seat, and said

"Speak, citizen, let us finish this affair. Why did you not agitate the district?"

"Agitate? For what purpose? It was ready for anything."

"Apparently, yes; but in their hearts the people are refractory, believe me. And have you punished the functionaries of the fallen system?"

"Why? They showed themselves eager to obey."

"Farces! You are cheated, citizen. What, not one revocation, not one destitution?"

"Three or four only. If you knew how submissive the department is"——

"That is it. Submissive! They pretend to be submissive, and in reality they conspire. Certainly, citizen, you will soon have proofs of it: numerous examples and austere traditions," added the Commissary-General, alluding evidently to the well-filled board

"But, indeed"——

"My orders are positive, citizen; positive—do you understand. You must agitate."

"I will do my best," humbly replied the subordinate officer.

"You have to make up for lost time; begin the work at once! Issue proclamations and bulletins; and be careful in the style. Words as large as houses!"

"Very well."

"Then you will have a club—two, if possible."

"I will have three."

"You will plant a tree of liberty."

"I will plant two."

"You will organise processions."

"To-morrow."

"As to public ceremonies I can give no positive orders. Let them be imposing; that is the essential point. If need be, run the town into debt; money cannot be better spent. Always follow the going-up of the young girls in white, and balls with gilt horns. Raise the mind of the people by great spectacles, and plenty of allegory!"

"Allegory, since you wish it."

"Indeed, citizen, it pleases me to see you return to the true principles of the Revolution. Two words contain them—Agitate and Depose—above all, Depose. No hesitation, no weakness. And remember that Curtius Dentatus breakfasted on a dish of radishes when the Samnites sent their ambassadors to him. A nation is nearly enslaved when it puts too much into the mouth. You understand me. Adieu."

Having given his colleague this last advice, the Commissary-General rose majestically. He took leave like a man who is conscious of his importance, and feels his superiority. The Amphytrion and his companions accompanied him to the steps of the hotel, and did not quit the place till his carriage was gone But, when it was out of sight, the humiliated Commissary raised his head, and bowing ironically. "A happy journey!" he said. Then, turning to his companions, like a man who feels the necessity of being revenged, "My friends," said he, "do you know whom you have seen?"

"No," they exclaimed.

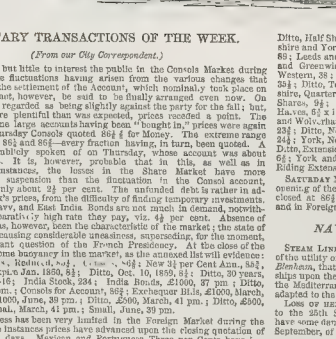
"The President of the Republic of Dry Bread. If it is established, I shall abdicate.

A unanimous laugh greeted this sally, and the Commissary, in a voice of authority, exclaimed—

"To our feast, comrades to our feast! This is only a cloud on a fine day. Quick to luncheon! We are yet the same we were an hour ago. Let us continue."

The feast lasted till night. In this manner our Commissary honoured the traditions of Curtius Dentatus.

(To be continued.)



MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

There has been but little to interest the public in the Consols Market during the week: all the fluctuations having arisen from the various changes that usually occur in the settlement of the Account, which nominally took place on Tuesday. It cannot, however, be said to be finally arranged even now. On Monday it was regarded as being slightly against the party for the fall; but, stock proving more plentiful than was expected, prices receded a point. The following day, some large accounts having been "bought in," prices were again firm; and on Thursday they touched 89¾ for Money. The extreme range has been between 89¼ and 89⅝—every fraction having, in turn, been quoted. A defaulter was publicly spoken of on Thursday, whose account was about £100,000 Consols. It is, however, probable that in this, as well as in several minor instances, the losses in the Share Market have more to do with the suspension than the fluctuation in the Consol account, which has been chiefly about ¼ per cent. The settlement of debts is rather in advance of last week's prices, from the difficulty of finding temporary investments. Bank Stock is heavy, and East India Bonds are not much in demand, notwithstanding the comparatively high rate they pay, viz. 6¼ per cent. Absence of public business has, however, been the characteristic of the market; the state of affairs in Prussia causing considerable uneasiness, superseding, for the moment, the more important question of the French Presidency. At the close of the week there was some business again, as the annexed list will evidence:

Bank Stock, 18[illegible] Reduced, 89[illegible]; Consols, 89[illegible]; New 3[illegible] per Cent Ann., 88[illegible]; Long Ann., to expire Jan. 1860, 8[illegible]; Ditto, Oct. 1885, 8[illegible]; Ditto, 30 years, Jan. 5, 1850, 8 13-16; India Stock, 234; India Bonds, £1000, 37 pm; Ditto, under £1000, 34 pm.; Consols for Account, 89[illegible]; Exchequer Bills, £1000, March, 41 pm; Ditto, £1000, June, 39 pm; Ditto, £500, March, 41 pm.; Ditto, £500, June, 39 pm.; Small, March, 41 pm.; Small, June, 39 pm.

Although business has been very limited in the Foreign Market during the week, yet in some instances there has been a slight advance upon the closing quotation of the preceding six days. Mexican and Portuguese Three per Cents have improved; Spanish Three per Cents, on the contrary, quoting a little lower. The limited amount of transactions may be attributed to the fall owing that of several bare ins at the close of the week:—Brazilian Bonds, New, 1843, 70; Mexican 5 per Cent. Ind., 21[illegible]; Peruvian Loan, 5 per Cents, 18[illegible]; Portuguese 4 per Cent., 24; Ditto Ditto, 1841, 26; Spanish 3 per Cent., 19[illegible]; Ditto, 3 per Cent., 2[illegible]; Ditto, Deferred, 5; Ditto, Passive, 5; Ditto, New Certificates, 70.

Railway Shares have been, and continue, rather flatter than during the previous week, notwithstanding good money purchases have been made in many instances on bel alf of the public. This rise, however, could not be expected to exist without some reaction. Speculative purchasers realising, added to compelled sales on "Settling" day, naturally affect the market. A greater feeling of confidence is, however, everywhere apparent; the traffic returns for October show in general no deterrase, notwithstanding the stagnation of business. This alone is cheering; and the sudenone check which has been put upon extensive outlay, with a disposition to close the capita. accounts, will be, there is no doubt, ultimately of the greatest benefit to railway property—notwithstanding the losses arising from diminished receipts, and ov[illegible]ue reliance upon an easy Money Market. Shareholders, it is hoped, will now not be necessary at attending the meetings, and, by his sting upon a cessation or total abandonment of unprofitable branches, as well as the employment of experienced persons in the higher branches of the executive, promote a gradual reduction of expenses, and consequent improvement of property. The Market, at the close of the week quoted—Birmingham, Wolverhampton, and Dudley, calls duty paid, or with guarantee, 13; Caledonian, 18[illegible]; Ditto, New, £10, Preference, 4[illegible]; Eastern Counties, 1[illegible]; Ditto, New, £10, Preference, 5[illegible]; Eastern Counties, 12. Ditto, New, £10, Preference, 8[illegible]; East Lancashire, New, 10[illegible]; Lancashire Junction, 24; Lancashire Union, 1[illegible]; Great Northern, 4; Ditto, One-Half, A, Deferred, 4; Ditto, One-Half, B, Six per Cent. Guaranteed, 4; Great North of England, 220; Great Western, 79; Ditto, Half Shares, 43; Ditto, Quarter Shares, 16; Ditto, New, £17, 9; Lancashire and Yorkshire, Fifths, 4; Ditto, Thirds (Reg.), 3; Leeds and Bradford, 89; Leeds and Thirsk, 18; London, Brighton, and South Coast, 37; London and Greenwich, 8; London and North Western, 117; London and South-Western, 38; Ditto, New, £50, 27; Ditto, New, £40, 19[illegible]; Ditto, Tenths (Consol.), 5[illegible]; Ditto, Tenths, 25; Ditto, Thirds, 5 dis; Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire, Quarters (No. 1), 10; Midland, 80; Ditto, Consolidated Preference, £30 Shares, 9; Ditto, Birmingham and Derby, 53; North Britain, 18; Ditto, Haven, 6; Ditto, Thirds, 3; North Staffords Ord., 8; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 22; Reading, Guildford, and Reigate, 5; South-Eastern, 23; Ditto, No. 2, Thirds, 6; South Wales, 7; Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth, 24; York, Newcastle, and Berwick, 26; Ditto, Original, New and Berwick, 25; Ditto, Extension, No. 1, 12; Ditto, ditto, No. 2, 13; Ditto, G.N.E. Preference, 6; York and North Midland, 20; Ditto, Preference, 9; Ditto, East and West Riding Extension, 22. Boulogne and Amiens, 5.

SATURDAY MORNING Although there was some buoyancy yesterday at the opening of the market, prices were not fully maintained till the close. Consols closed at 89⅝ for Money, and 89⅞ for Time. The Share Market was heavy, and in Foreign Stocks there was scarcely any business done.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

STEAM LINE-OF BATTLE SHIPS. The Lords of the Admiralty are so convinced of the utility of steam vessels, that instead of the sinking (which being "cut down" to have some davits in her bottom repaired), in Porto Grand Bay, on the 5th of September, of the above vessel, which, it was expected, would go to pieces.

THE MAILS BETWEEN ENGLAND, BELGIUM, AND GERMANY.—The arrangements made between the English and Belgian authorities for the more rapid transmission of the mails and passengers viâ Dover and Ostend, to and from Belgium and Germany, came into operation on the 11th. The most striking alteration is in the transit between Brussels and London. The letters were thirty-nine hours from the time of being posted to their delivery in London; under the following new arrangement they will be delivered in nineteen:—The mail train leaves Brussels at 6 P.M.; is joined at Malines by the train from Cologne and Berlin; the mails are marked at Ostend between 10 45 and 2 in the morning; reach Dover in time for the 8 A.M. express train (which conveys the French mails), and reach London at 10 30. To passengers the gain will be fully twelve hours in the three and possible saving of expense and trouble, as the journey from Brussels will be performed without stopping. From Cologne the journey will occupy twenty-four hours; from Hamburgh, forty-four; Berlin, forty-eight; to Vienna, three days-and-a-half days; to Trieste, five to six. From London to the Continent the new arrangement is a great improvement, particularly as regards the points beyond Brussels. The mails leave London (as usual) at 6 30, but instead of waiting at Dover and at Ostend, as they did frequently, until the next morning or afternoon, they will be embarked at once, and will leave Ostend 11.15 P.M. and 2 A.M., so as to arrive in Ostend about 7, in time for the first train. Should they be detained at sea, a special train will be in readiness until 8 30, to take on the mails and passengers, to join the first train at Malines, from whence they will reach Brussels or Antwerp at noon, Cologne the same evening, Bremen at 2, Hamburg at 5, and Berlin at 9 30 P.M. next day. Great as these improvements are, they are but the prelude to more important ones. A good deal of time may yet be saved, and the authorities are alive to the fact; but it is not an easy task to overcome routine and prejudice. Great praise is due to them for what has been effected.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—The total quantity of English wheat received up to our market this week somewhat more than the early 13[illegible] quarters By last carriage the receipts have been trifling in the extreme, from the show of samples here to-day was very small. The finest qualities of both red and white moved off slowly, at Monday's quotations. All other kinds were a mere drug, and somewhat easier to purchase. The arrivals of foreign wheat have fallen off, yet they have proved seasonably good. The want of an inland consumptive demand has of late been the influence which has caused us to submit to accept declines to nine in prices, large parcels might have been had at even rather less money. The supply of English barley was not large yet it was by no means equal to the wants of the buyers. All kinds were very dull in sale, at barely stationary prices Malt was in short supply and heavy sale. English beans were with difficulty obtained for any quality. Oats, beans, and peas were very dull The latter article, owing to the large import from abroad, was 1s per quarter cheaper. Flour was the same currency.

ARRIVALS—English: wheat, 1310; barley, 5220; oats, 120. Irish: oats, 800. Foreign: wheat, 11,380; barley, 4760; oats, 21,100; flour, 2280 sacks, and 3260 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 44s to 45s; ditto, white, 46s to 48s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 44s to 45s; ditto, white, 47s to 49s; rye, 30s to 32s, grinding barley, 27s to 28s, distilling ditto, 31s to 34s, malting ditto, 34s to 36s; Norfolk and Lincoln malt, 52s to 58s; Ware ditto, 60s to 62s, Kingston and Ware, 64s to 67s; Chevalier, 62s to 64s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire ditto, 52s to 54s; Scotch, 52s to 56s; Tweed, 48s to 50s; Clonmel and Cork, black, 17s to 22s, ditto, white, 19s to 22s; tick beans, new, 32s to 34s; ditto, old, —s to —s; grey peas, 37s to 38s; maple, 38s to 40s; white, 32s to 36s; boilers, 38s to 40s, per quarter. Town-made flour 43s to 46s; Suffolk, 38s to 40s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 37s to 40s per 280 lbs.

Foreign.—Dantzig red wheat, 4[illegible] to —s; white, —s to —s; barley, —s to —s; beans, —s to —s; peas, —s to —s per quarter. Flour, American, 22s to 23s per 196 lb; Baltic, 20s per barrel.

The Seed Market.—Very little business is doing in this market, and prices are almost nominal.

LINSEED, English, sowing, 56s to 59s; Baltic, crushing, 42s to 46s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 42s to 46s; hempseed, 45s to 46s per quarter. Cakes, 6l 10s per ton; brown mustard seed, 9s to 12s; white do., 8s to 11s; tares, 7s to 10s 6d per bushel. English rapeseed, £17 to £20 per last of ten quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £11 5s to £12 10s; ditto, foreign, £8 10s to £9 5s per 1000; rapeseed cake, £5 15s to £6 5s per ton; canary, 53s to 56s per quarter. English clover-seed, red, —s to —s, extra, —s to —s, white, —s to —s, extra, up to [illegible]. Foreign, red, —s to —s, extra, —s to —s, white, —s to —s, extra, up to [illegible].

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 6d to 6½d; of household ditto, 6d to 7½d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 52s 0d; barley, 33s 7d; oats, 20s 10½; rye, 30s 9d; beans, 37s 2½; peas, 38s 3d.

The Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 51s 8d; barley, 33s 7d; oats, 22s 6d; rye, 30s 10d; beans, 36 3d, peas, 38s 3d.

Ladies on Foreign Corn. Wheat, 6s 6d; barley, 2s 0d; oats, 2s 6d; rye, 2s 0d; beans, 2s 9d; peas, 2s 6d.

Teas.—For most kinds of tea the demand is tolerably steady, at prices fully equal to those paid last week. The supply of tea on offer is by no means heavy.

Sugar.—A moderate business is doing in West India sugar at full prices All the kinds of raw sugar move off slowly, at late rates. Refined goods are dull. Standard lumps are selling at 36s per cwt.

Coffee.—Ordinary to middling qualities are in fair request, at almost last week's prices About 600 puncheons East Indian have sold at 2s 3d to 2s 4d per cwt, and 900 Indonesia, 30 to 32s per cwt over proof, 2s to 2s 2d per gallon. Brandy is steady, at full currency. Cognacs are quite as dear.

Hops (Friday).—As the growers have not forwarded liberally, the supply of new hops on sale to-day has been very small. The few samples shown of old realised a full currency, at fully last week's quotations, but at other kinds commanded very little attention. Yearlings and other hops, which may be had at greatly reduced prices, are almost nominal in value.—Sussex pockets, 4l 4s to 5l 5s, Weald of Kent ditto, 4l 5s to 5l 10s; Mid and East Kent ditto, 5l 10s to 8l 7s; Farnham, 6l 7s to 9l 10s.

Coals (Friday) Sidney's Hartley, 15s 6d; Killingworth, 16s; Eden Main, 17s 6d; Clennell, 18s, Brown's, 18s, Hetton, 18s 6d; Whitworth, 18s 6d; Stewart's, 19s 3d; Braddyl's Hetton, 19s 6d, Haswell, 19s 3d per ton.

Smithfield (Friday). Our market to-day was very moderately supplied with beasts, nearly two-thirds of which were of middling quality: nevertheless, the beef trade was exceedingly heavy, at almost nominal currencies. At least a moiety of the beasts were driven over the Metropolitan Cattle Market, and the remainder were disposed where the pens were by no means well filled, the total number being only 2480 head yet the butchers purchased that description of stock with extreme caution, and where sales took place, rather lower rates were established to by the salesmen. The supply of calves was on the increase, owing to which the veal trade was heavy, at a decline of 2d per 8lb. In sheep very little business was transacted, at our quotations. Milch cows sold at from £14 to £17 the each, including their small calf.

Lots of each the offals—Coarse and inferior beasts, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; second quality ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 2d; prime large oxen, 4s 4d to 4s 6d; prime Scots, 4s 6d; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 8d to 4s; second quality ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; prime large ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; prime Southdown, 5s to 5s 2d; large calves, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; prime small ditto, 5s to 5s 2d; large pigs, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; sucking pigs, 18s to 21s per score pounds.

Beasts, 2480; sheep, 600; calves, 28; pigs, 280. Foreign supplies

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—There was but a very heavy sale for each kind of meat, at barely stationary prices.

Per 8 lb by the carcase:—Inferior beef, 2s 8d to 2s 4d; middling ditto, 2s 6d to 2s 10d; prime large ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 2d; prime small ditto 3s 4d to 3s 6d; large pork, 3s 0d to 3s 4d; inferior mutton, 3s 2d to 3s 4d, middling ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 4d; veal, 3s 4d to 4s 0d, small pork, 4s 0d to 4s 8d

ROBT HERBERT.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, NOV. 14.

BANKRUPTS

A RUTHERFIELD, Hitchin, builder, J BROWN, Cold-harbour-lane, East Brixton, builder, H NAYLOR, Norwich, grocer. W BROWNING, Whitable, grocer. J B ADAMS, late of Horsmonden, but now of Sturdett-place, Old Kent-road, miller. W LOMBARD, Bungay, bread baker. H BURKLAND, Charlton-street, Manchester-square, coffee maker. [illegible], Dorking, grocer W ARGENT, Abbey-street, Bethnal-green-road, boat-builder. [illegible] baker. W BROOKS, Great Queen-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields, carver and gilder W [illegible]PHENS, Leigh Woods, near Bristol, Esquire. F [illegible]WN, [illegible], Staffordshire, innkeeper. [illegible] HAMLEY, Upper Lewes, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] W Driffield [illegible], draper. [illegible] ROBERTS, Lewes, Sussex, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

PUBLICATIONS, &c.

[illegible] QUEEN
Now ready, the 7th thousand, post 8vo., cr[illegible], with five Illustrations, &c.,

THE PEARL of DAYS; or, the Advantages of the Sabbath to the Working Classes. With a Sketch of the [illegible]

Pianists Office, 67, Paternoster-row.

LES HUGUENOTS.—A Second Edition of [illegible] PIANOFORTE, price 2s. 6d. net. "Les Huguenots" is the best [illegible] Fugue," and 20 others at 2s. each Post free, 30 stamps. All full music size.

NEW SONG, "We You May Meet Again." Composed by E. L. HIME Price 2s. (post postage free).—This charming ballad, sung by the composer at the Princess's Concerts, Music Hall, &c., with the greatest success, resembles in character "Then you'll remember me." The melody is sweet, highly Irish and interesting. Mr. Hime has composed several favourite songs, such as "They shall be free," "I will return to thee," "I thought of thee," "Sing, but "We yet may me [illegible] Lonsdale. DUFF and ROBINSON, 86, Oxford-street.

NEW WORK ON TURNING.
Small 8vo. Price 7s. 6d., cloth, gilt,
THE HAND-BOOK of TURNING.
Containing Instructions in Concentric, Elliptic, and Eccentric Turning, with Elevations and Instruments, and Directions for working them.
By [illegible] Practical Turner, and Instructor in Turning.
SAUNDERS and OTLEY, Publishers, Conduit-street.

A New Edition, price 6s. of
WADE'S HAND-BOOK to the PIANOFORTE, comprising an easy Rudimental Introduction to the Study of the Elementary and Minor in general; the Art of fingering, Exercises, Scales, &c., in all the major and minor keys, and interspersed by relaxations from study, consisting of Popular Melodies and Romances, and selections from the Compositions of some of the most eminent masters; also, a short and easy Introduction to Harmony or Counterpoint and a new Vocabulary of Terms.
London: D'ALMAINE and Co., 20, Soho-square.
Published at CHAPPELL'S Music Warehouse, New Bond-street; and by WHITTAKER and Co., Ave Maria-lane.

FOR NORTHERN TOURISTS.
Now ready, in two vols., 12s. bound,
A YACHTING VOYAGE
TO NORWAY, LAPLAND, &c., in 1848.
By W. A. ROSS, Esq.,
"Mr. Ross has been given us a very lively and intelligent picture of the manners of a route to the Northern Ocean in company with [illegible] whose pleasures of the pencil are not less than the pedestrian trips and trips from one place to place, the romantic scenery and dangers of the sea, the Norwegian and Swedish society, the superstitions of the North, and the splendid tales chronicled by Mr. Ross constitute a work of the most inviting character, of two of the most agreeable volumes published for a long time."—United Service Gazette.
HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlboro'.

Third Thousand, price Sixpence,
ACCIDENTS and EMERGENCIES; a Guide to the Management of Cases of Sudden Danger or Difficulty.
By ALFRED SMEE, F.R.S. Surgeon to the Bank of England, and Lecturer on Surgery. Illustrated by numerous wood engravings. "It may be at every policeman by order of the [illegible] Police, and is already in use at most of the [illegible] stations in force."—Times. "A useful little pamphlet for the immediate treatment of accidents and emergencies, and it should, at present, be a conspicuous adjunct to every dwelling."
Published by Mr. CHURCHILL, medical bookseller, Princes-street.

In one thick vol., a new Edition, being the Tenth, enlarged price 16s.,
THE AUTHOR'S EDITIONS.
OLLENDORFF'S METHOD of LEARNING to READ, WRITE, and SPEAK a LANGUAGE in six months.
I. ADAPTED to the FRENCH. Written expressly for the English Student. By Dr H. G. OLLENDORFF. 8vo, the first edition, price 12s, cloth.
2. ADAPTED to the ITALIAN. Written expressly for the English Student. By Dr H. G. OLLENDORFF. 8vo, two parts. Part I., fifth edition, price 10s, 8vo, cloth. Part II., second edition, price 12s, 8vo, cloth. The parts sold separately.
KEYS to the ITALIAN, FRENCH and GERMAN SYSTEMS, prepared by the Author. Price 7s each, cloth, interleaved.
It is necessary for those who desire to avail themselves of the present method, to study that those are the only English editions sanctioned by Dr Ollendorff, and he deems any other totally inadequate for the purpose of English instruction, and disclaims any connection with the works of recommended by Captain Basil Hall and other eminent writers. They should be ordered with the publisher's name and, to prevent errors, every copy of the author's edition is signed by himself.
London: WHITTAKER and Co., and DULAU and Co.; and to be had of any bookseller.

LONDON and COUNTY ECONOMICAL INVESTMENT ASSOCIATION (No. 3) for purchase of Property and Investment of Savings. With a Branch for Notting-hill, Paddington, and vicinity.
Office for General Business, 19, Brunswick-square.
Patron, [illegible], Duke of Northumberland, K.G.
PRESIDENT.—P. P. Walesby, Esq., Magistrate for the County, &c.
BANKERS.—Sir C. Scott and Co., Cavendish-square.
SURVEYORS.—Mr. Arrowsmith, Addison-road North, Notting-hill.
Messrs. Kemp, Bedford-row, and Gower-street.
SOLICITORS.—Messrs T and E. Reeve Jones, Brunswick-square.
The Board of Trustees for Investments. No Arrears or Subscriptions. No Fines on Withdrawals. Five per Cent. for Payments in Advance. Parties at a distance can pay Post-office Orders, or deliver Notes.
NOTICE.—£ 200 will be advanced in two or more sums at the Four Subscription Meeting at Crown and Anchor Tavern, Strand, on the Seven o'Clock Post, which parties then entering may apply for.
Prospectuses may be had and shares secured by addressing to the Secretary.

BRITISH SOUTHERN WHALE FISHERIES.
PROSPECTUS.
founded on a "statement" (to be had on application at the undermentioned place) "explanatory of the necessity and means of re-establishing the above important branch of the national industry."
It is proposed —
1. That a company be formed for re-establishing the British Southern Whale Fisheries, by presenting them from the Auckland Islands, another title of "The British Southern Whale Fishery Company."
2. That the capital of the said Company be £300,000, in 6000 shares of £50 each, and power to given to increase it to an amount to be defined by the Board of Trade.
3. That when one-third of the required capital is subscribed, a board of not less than 12 Directors be appointed from amongst the Shareholders.
4. That the deposit be £2 1s. per share; and that this be paid at such time and place as a Board of Directors, when appointed, shall name.
5. That those who may record their names as Shareholders on the list to be kept by such, the foregoing preliminaries are fulfilled, and then only to the extent of their several subscriptions, as will be stipulated by the charter ready premises.
6. That a deed of settlement, to be approved by the President of the Board of Trade, be afterwards executed by the subscribers.
7. That the instalments on the shares be called for by the Board of Directors, as circumstances may require.
Messrs. C. H. and G. Rodwell, who are the Crown grantees of the Auckland Islands, have consented to transfer to the Company all the Licenses some on their functions.
All communications and inquiries with reference to the project may be addressed to Messrs Edgerton, or to Mr. Frederick Wm. Norris, and have authorised to act provisionally as Secretary pro tem. in the matter, who will be prepared to furnish a prospectus, memorandum, as also forms of application for shares at the Temporary Office, No. 8, Crosby-square, Bishopsgate, where attendance will be from Ten till Five o'Clock. Letters may also be addressed through Messrs. Latham, Upton, Johnson, and Co., solicitors, Lombard-street.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.
In addition to the ordinary Assurance of Healthy Lives, this Society, early in the year 1844, originated the plan of granting Policies on the Lives of Persons more or less deviating from the standard of health. Several of these Policies have been issued, and the success of the plan is that description, the Board, have recently caused a careful investigation into the results of the business to be made. The result of this investigation has proved highly satisfactory as to the past, and encouraging for the future. The data derived from long experience, and the class of cases, and exclusively available by the Society, enable the Directors to [illegible] with confidence.
The following Table has been now adopted by them for Assuring Invalid Lives in as safe and beneficial as that upon which the rates for Healthy Lives are constructed.

TABLE OF PREMIUMS FOR ASSURING £100 ON A HEALTHY LIFE.

Age.	For 7 Years, at an Annual Payment of	For 14 Years, at an Annual Payment of	Life Rate.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
30	1 14 1	1 6 1	2 10 4
40	1 19 10	1 13 3	3 5 8
50	2 3 10	2 18 11	4 7 3
55	2 9 4	3 13 2	5 4 8
60	3 3 3	5 1 3	6 7 3
65	3 16 3	6 19 11	7 16 8

Every description of Assurance may be effected with this Society, and Policies are granted on the Lives of Persons in any Station, and of every age.

BONUSES.
The two first Divisions averaged £32 per Cent. on the Premiums Paid. The third, £36 per Cent. The fourth Bonus, declared January, 1847, averaged rather more than £36 per Cent. and, from the large amount of Profit reserved for future appropriation, and other causes, the Bonuses hereafter are expected considerably to exceed that amount.
Tables of Rates, and Forms of Proposal, can be obtained of
GEO. H. PINCKARD, Actuary,
No. 99, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, London.

WANTED, a Respectable YOUTH as an APPRENTICE to a HAIR DRESSER, where he will learn [illegible] Apply personally at No. 21, Bishopsgate-street Within.

RIDING TAUGHT to LADIES and GENTLEMEN, by Mr JOHN HAWKINS of the Gravesend [illegible] Terms may be had on application, and lessons commence on the first day of each month. Horses and Ponies for Sale for any period. Improved Saddlings, &c.

THE ARCHITECTS, BUILDERS, OPERATIVES and ARTISTS' WINTER DRAWING CLASSES for the STUDY of ARCHITECTURE, CIVIL ENGINEERING, &c.; with the practical application of Geometry to Perspective, Ornamental and Mechanical Drawing of every Description. Conducted by CHRISTOPHER DAVY, Architect C.E., and author of "Engineer and Architect's Pocket Guide," "Descriptive Precedents, contributor to the new edition of "Tredgold on the Steam-Engine," "Weale's Carpentry," and other works.—11, Furnival's-Inn, Holborn, where terms may be had.

CLASSICAL BOOKS.—R. SAYWELL'S CATALOGUE of 2000 Editions of the Greek and Latin Classics, Translations, &c., is at very reduced prices, and will be given gratis, postpaid, on receipt of two postage stamps. A Catalogue of 3000 English works, on receipt of four stamps. 193, High Holborn, opposite New Oxford-street.

MARSHALL'S BRITISH and FOREIGN LIBRARY, 21, Edgware-road Hyde-park. A Two Guinea Subscription entitles to the above Library, and to the privilege of [illegible] New Work in succession. The Three, Four, or Five Guinea Packets of Quality or any Subscription allows of from 16 to 24 volumes at one time, and the number to consist of the works of the [illegible] Any Subscription can be taken. The Country Clubs, on extensive [illegible] the supply required.

STAMMERING and DEFECTS of SPEECH. Those persons, and there are, unfortunately, many of both sexes and all ages in life who are afflicted with stammering and defective enunciation, will be gratified to learn that a method of removing this impediment is practised by Mr. HUNT, of 324, New Oxford-street, extensively and successfully. The success of a long experience, extensive practice, and matured judgment, in the removal of the defects under which so many about, and his cure of the mainly if not entirely, on principles peculiar to himself, on scientific [illegible] and he requires it his method. It has been appreciated by hundreds, and deserves to be appreciated by hundreds more."—The Mining Journal, Oct. 21st, 1848.

THE LANTUM FLUTINA, comprising the tones of the Seraphine and Guitar, sold only at the ACCORDION and [illegible] DEPOT, 19, Burlington Arcade.—These melodious instruments, as also Accordions, concert pitch, in the most magnificent manner with Accord and Melody notes, Flageolet and piano and forte Musical Box, may be seen in very great variety at the above Depot. Also a large assortment of second-hand instruments always on hand.

NEW PATENT for ROASTING COFFEE, effected by rapid currents of hot air. The true flavour of Coffee can only be obtained by this method. France for famous [illegible] Sold in packets, 1s, 2s, 3s, 4s, 5s, 6s, 8s, 10s, and 12s per lb. ground and packed whilst hot in the machine, perfectly air-tight, and warranted to preserve the strength and aroma for months. Lb tins of ground Coffee, 2s 6d, 3s 6d, and 3s 6d each. 1276 agencies in all parts of the kingdom.—ADAMS, ANDER BRADEN, Tea Merchants, 13, High-street, Islington, London

CARPETS.—Splendid designs in Tapestry, 2s. and 2s 6d; Best Brussels at 3s. 6d. per yard; 4-4 wide, second pile, 4s. 6d.; Royal Axminster, 5s. 6d. per square yard.—CLARK, ADAM, and COMPANY, Carpet Manufacturers, Tottenham-court-road, Cumberland-street, and Hatton-garden, to the Queen Dowager, Princess Heweil and Samuel; whom they trust the patronage they have so long enjoyed will be continued. They are disposing of several thousand yards at the above low prices, and every description of Carpeting equally cheap and good. Country agents wanted.—CLARK, ADAM, and COMPANY.

CHINA BROOCHES. Those superb novelties and elegant appendages to the dress, being made of white Parian, in twelve choice varieties of various flowers, can be obtained direct from the Sole Agent, MOSES JACOBS, Embroiderer, &c., 48, Old-street, Finsbury. Price per Pair, 6s. cash. Post free 6s. extra.

SARLI'S ARGENTINE SILVER PLATE, is now universally admitted to be the only Plate which can be safely used for the table, and consequently is the most economical. Table Forks or Spoons, per dozen, 18s; Dessert Forks or Spoons, 14s; Tea Spoons, 8s. Sarli's Argentine Silver Plate is manufactured by the Patentee, and is to be had only of him, at his Manufactory, 3, Cornhill, opposite the New Royal Exchange.

	Fiddle	Double-thread	Kings
	Pattern	Pattern	Pattern.
12 Table Forks or Spoons	£2 8 0	£3 12 0	£3 16 0
12 Dessert ditto	1 16 0	2 8 0	2 12 0
12 Tea Spoons	1 5 0	1 12 0	1 16 0

Carriage paid to be had gratis or sent by post, postage free to any part of Great Britain, Ireland, or to the Colonies

SILVER and PLATED DESSERT KNIVES, FORKS, and SPOONS, Manufactured, London, has just completed some perfectly new, chaste, and elegant patterns, both plain and ornamental, which he submits to the best and cheapest in the metropolis.—Table Knives, Ivory Handles, Medium Shoulders, 10s per dozen; Ditto, Extra Size, 12s; Carvers, 3s per pair. The handles are of pearl and ivory of the finest quality, and will wear for years. Desserts to match. Razors, Scissors, Pocket Knives, &c., at equally moderate charges.—MECHI'S New Show-Room is a ways open to public inspection, and contains the most novel and varied assortment of PAPIER MACHE goods, in Work-tables, Cabinets, Tea-Trays, Desks, Writing-cases, Envelope-boxes, &c.

FORD'S EUREKA SHIRT.—To a Gentleman of taste a good fitting SHIRT is a matter of no small importance. The EUREKA SHIRT, which is a good fit, is also unrivalled for comfort and elegance, which is the perfection of shirt making. Price, ten for 60s, to be had only at FORD'S, 185, Strand, London.

TO TAILORS and WOLLEN-DRAPERS.—Mr. Moses, VENABLES, BROTHER, Woollen at, Manchester Warehousemen, 34, Aldgate-street, Aldgate, respectfully invite Woollen Drapers and Tailors to inspect their Stock, being now enabled to furnish new goods at extraordinarily low prices, they feel confident the immense variety, superiority, quality, and low prices will give satisfaction, and induce buyers to make large purchases

NICOLL'S PATENT POCKET PROTECTOR. This invention is of importance to Merchants, Bankers, Solicitors, and to all persons who have occasion frequently to carry about the person large amounts of such documents, and other valuable memorandums, &c. It is manufactured by NICOLL, 114 and 116, Regent-street, and 22 Cornhill, the Inventor of NICOLL'S Registered Paletot, Guernsey, and Vest Shapes, &c., to all of which garments it is applied, free of extra charge.

THE REGAL POLKAS, fitting closely to the figure, hand knitted, with super finery, forwarded free upon receipt of P.O.O. for 2s. 6d. each, or the opposite sex, in scarlet, crimson, claret, or to order in any colour. No. 1, size for females from three to seven inches round the ankle. No. 2, from seven to twelve, 3s. 6d. The 3, ladies' size, 12s. DRESSER ROGERS, Wholesale Berlin Warehouse, 59, Borough, London.

WEDDING ORDERS and INDIA OUTFITS executed in the first style of fashion at MRS. NORTON'S Show Rooms, 39, Conduit-street, Regent-street, Manufacturer of Ladies' Dress and Outer Clothing, Dressing Gowns, &c. Notice a Depôt, also, in Hull, Perth, Silks, and Printed Flannels, with a beautiful variety of Baby Linen.
Gentlemen's Shirts made to the nearest style. The Ladies' Regulet of Self-Measurement, to direct, may be obtained gratis, Norton's, 77, Strand.

IF POSSIBLE, the whole STOCK must be CLEARED by CHRISTMAS.—Arranged with the Trustees of the late Mr. [illegible] general [illegible] to sell the whole of his valuable STOCK, at 20 per cent below the present wholesale prices, for three, four, and eight months' credit, on approved bills, or for cash, at a discount of 5 per cent. The stock consists of rich brocades, moires, and other fashionable silks and satins, [illegible] robes, [illegible] &c.; cashmeres, barèges, [illegible], &c.; [illegible] and [illegible] shawls, [illegible] &c.; [illegible] and [illegible] &c.; [illegible] and [illegible] &c.; [illegible] and

THE DOCK WORKS AT GREAT GRIMSBY.

GREAT GRIMSBY AND ITS DOCKS.

THE opening of the Great Northern Railway, which gives a railway communication throughout from Great Grimsby to London, and the success which has attended the operation of excluding the water from the coffer-dam and embankments of the Deep Sea Docks, now constructing at Great Grimsby, furnish us with the opportunity of redeeming the promise we made to describe these Docks, when we gave representations of the large pier erected for crossing the Humber ferry, and of the more remarkable points of the line traversed by the section of the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway, opened in March last. We now give two views of these important Dock works.

Many of our readers, not ill-versed in the geography of foreign lands, may pause here and ask where is Great Grimsby? Great Grimsby lies on the north-eastern coast of Lincolnshire, at the widest part of the mouth of the Humber, facing the sea, and protected by a curve on the Yorkshire side of the river, known as Spurn Point, from all the storms of the German Ocean. This admirable situation, just out of the sea and at the mouth of the river, with the advantage of a natural breakwater against wind and waves, made it a port of importance in Saxon times, long before Hull was founded.

Macpherson, in his "Annals of Commerce," states that "Grimsby is noted by the Norwegian or Icelandic writers, as an emporium resorted to by merchants from Norway, Scotland, Orkney, and the Western Islands."

The municipal rights which it still enjoys are said to date from King John. The earliest charter in existence was granted by Edward III., and vested the government of the town in a mayor, two bailiffs, twelve aldermen, and thirty-six burgesses. In that reign Grimsby carried on a considerable trade; and was rich and populous, as is proved by its having furnished eleven ships and one hundred and seventy men to assist at the siege of Calais From very early times Grimsby returned two members to the House of Commons; but the Reform Bill reduced this privilege one half, by placing the borough in Schedule B.

In the course of time the superior means of internal communication afforded by the Humber raised up Hull, and attracted nearly all the commerce of Grimsby. It then sunk into a mere fishing village, sustained in factitious importance by municipal and parliamentary privileges, until about fifty years ago, when some local landowners formed a company and made a dock, which extends, canal-like, into the town, with a capacity of about fifteen acres This dock did much toward saving the town from utter decay, and was of considerable advantage, although the tides permitted it to be open but a few hours each day, for local exports and imports.

In 1845, a Company was formed for the purpose of making a Dock at Great Grimsby, worthy of its admirable local position, and to connect it, by the contemplated railway communication, with all the principal towns of England. This Company eventually purchased all the property and privileges of the Old Dock Company at a cheap price.

The promoters of the succession of lines, since amalgamated under the title of the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway, made Great Grimsby one of their termini. They had the wisdom soon to see the importance of executing the Dock works upon a scale which would render it a first-rate shipping station. In great towns it has not been unusual to expend vast sums of money upon accommodation for railway stock, land carriages, and merchandise. At Grimsby there was no large population, but there was a natural position most favourable for local, river, coasting, and foreign trade, when once by railways a means of internal communication, equal to the water carriage possessed by Hull was opened It was determined to provide the best possible accommodation for ships and steamers, as well as land carriages, to attract and create a trade and population, as well as serve the local and general traffic which would naturally flow along the railways

The Dock Company was amalgamated with the Manchester and Sheffield Railway; and the works were placed in the hands of Mr. Rendel, the celebrated engineer of Birkenhead Docks and the works at Plymouth; and it was determined to construct docks and warehouses on the most complete scale, as a branch, a feeder, and a water station for the railway.

It will be seen that, in a naval point of view, Great Grimsby occupies a very important position, commanding as it does the mouth of the Humber, and enabling war-steamers to dash into the ocean at a moment's notice. In the last war twelve hundred vessels under convoy were frequently seen at anchor, under the shelter of Spurn Point. In adverse winds nearly as many may be seen taking advantage of this natural protection. The Admiralty were so sensible of the great naval advantages that Grimsby would possess when connected with the interior of the metropolis by railways, that they induced the Woods and Forests to give up a large tract of land of many acres on condition that the lock-gates were increased to a sufficient capacity to receive the largest war-steamers This the Company consented to do at an additional expense, it is said not far short of £50,000. We believe it is the first instance on record of such a work, for a purely national object, having been undertaken by a private company. The two railways terminate at Great Grimsby—the East Lincolnshire (belonging to the Great Northern) opens up a communication with London through Boston and Peterborough; and the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire opens a communication with Hull, Lincoln, and the other towns from which it takes its name. A branch from the station where these two railways unite passes through the town until it reaches the edge of the dock: there it divides into two forks, one of which will traverse the East Wharf to the extremity of the Pier, for the convenience of passengers and goods landed at the outer Basin; the other fork will traverse the West Wharf between the quay edge and intended warehouses for the transport of heavy goods

The Dock works consist of a wet dock, of an area of about thirty acres, walled in on the west side by a wharf 2000 feet long, 200 wide, and 36 feet high, having at the extremity a pier of great length,—making in all a waterside quay and pier about three-quarters of a mile long. This will be the passenger pier for steamers from Hamburgh and the Baltic. The east side wharfing, of the same length, and 270 feet wide, will be partly covered with warehouses, and partly devoted to a goods station, with a perfect communication between the shipping, the warehouses, and the railway, by tramways,—the first example, perhaps, of a complete union of such works.

The passage to the Docks will be through an entrance basin formed by the two piers, area about twenty acres; within which, and alongside the piers, vessels not requiring to enter the Docks may lie. Thus a steamer may discharge passengers and goods in railway carriages and trucks brought right alongside, and taking mails and Manchester silk and cotton goods aboard from other trucks, and go to sea again all in one tide. The communication between the open tidal basin and the Dock will be effected by two locks. The one 300 feet long and 65 feet wide, will admit the largest war-steamer at any time, except an hour before, and an hour after dead low water. The other will be 200 feet long, and 45 feet wide At the lowest tide there will be six feet water on the threshold of these Dock-gates. All the ordinary class of vessels and steamers will find water enough to enter and lie in shelter in the basin at any hour. At Hull large vessels can only enter an hour before and an hour after high water.

The Dock has capacity for accommodating 700 average ships, and the basin 500, in all 1200—being a number equal to the accommodation of all the docks open at Hull, where at present the accommodation is insufficient, and Hull merchants are looking for relief to Grimsby Docks.

The Dock dues are fixed at a merely nominal rate. The arrangements for receiving and dispatching goods, either for import or export, require more immediate carriage Vessels arriving to discharge cargoes for warehousing, will lie under the very warehouse cranes. Those with goods for immediate transmission into the interior, as, for instance, German wool for Leeds or Manchester, will discharge into a line of trucks standing upon the quay. For export the facilities will be equally great; and as the docks and warehouses will be surrounded by a wall, there will be none of that pilferage which occurs at Liverpool and other ports, where the storehouses are at a distance from the quays. Here, as we have said, the sea, the rails, the quays, and warehouses are in most convenient juxtaposition.

Our Baltic and German trade becomes daily of more importance. For the timber trade, Grimsby is peculiarly well situated. Merchants from Hull have already established timber wharfs there; and such is the prospective prosperity of the port, that the Customs duties, without increased facilities, have risen in three years from £3800 to £70,000 a year

The connexion of Grimsby with Leeds and Manchester is even closer than with London

The Docks of Grimsby saving twenty miles of river navigation, and lying fifty miles nearer London than Hull, accessible at all hours, will always enable passengers and mails to reach London six hours sooner than by way of Hull. In winter evenings they may be landed the same night, instead of having to lie off until the next morning.

Lincolnshire is the greatest producing county in the kingdom, and therefore requires the largest quantity of bones, oil-cake, and other tillages imported from the Baltic ports. These Docks will also render Great Grimsby the first and best harbour of refuge on the eastern coast.

Endowed with such dock accommodation, forming the port of the greatest producing county, united by railways with Hull, with Leeds, and the clothing district, with Lancashire, the greatest manufacturing county, and with London by a direct line, nearly the most level in the kingdom; not rivalling Hull, but acting as a useful auxiliary and outport for the overflowing Baltic trade, at the same time that it creates a new and profitable commerce of its own, it is impossible to doubt but that Great Grimsby must become one of our most important commercial and naval ports, the mart of a great foreign and home trade. In the unhappy case of war, it must be the station for the fleets which, in the last war, used to lie with so much danger in the Beston-roads—with this difference, that now a few war-steamers will do the watching work of a whole squadron; and we may presume that the national importance of Great Grimsby which has induced Prince Albert to announce his intention of laying the first stone in the spring.

THE DOCK WORKS AT GREAT GRIMSBY.

The Diamond Steam-packet Company held the annual general court of proprietors at Gravesend, on Friday se'nnight. The report stated that the balance in hand enabled them to propose a dividend of 5 per cent.; this dividend was subsequently declared, and Mr. Birchall having been appointed managing director, with a salary of £200 a year, and the directors and auditors having been re-elected, the meeting separated.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1848.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 345.—Vol. XIII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1848. [Sixpence.

THE IRISH POOR-LAW.

The approach of winter brings the usual cry of distress from Ireland. As the interest of the political trials dies away, a new and far more painful interest is excited by the certainty that a widespread destitution will afflict that country during the long interval between the present season and the warm days of 1849. The distress may not positively amount to a famine, as in bygone years; the failure of the potato crop may have been partial, not general; the population may have been decimated by the misery and disease of the far greater calamity of 1846-47, and vast numbers of emigrants may have fled from those fatal shores to seek a better fortune over the Atlantic; but sufficient misery, and a sufficiently deplorable pressure of mouths to be fed upon the supply of food to fill them, remain in Ireland, to tax to the uttermost the benevolence of the wealthy, and to afford room for all the statesmanship of this country in providing a remedy or even an alleviation. The amount of the tribute which private charity shall bestow, or the debt which this country will yet have to pay to Ireland in return for the long but unintentional misrule of past ages, it is impossible to estimate. We may well believe that both will be heavy, before Ireland can be placed in the condition of a self-supporting country. The process by which this necessary and imperative consummation is to be arrived at, it is equally impossible to specify. The best minds of England must, however, be devoted to it. The misery cries aloud, and will give us no rest, until by some process or another we cope with it earnestly, wisely, and effectually.

The introduction of a Poor-Law into Ireland is one of those measures from which much was to be expected. A Poor-Law in England has worked well. By recognizing the right of the poor man to live as a pauper, if there were none to give him employment, it compelled property to take the wiser of the two courses. It stimulated employment and improvement; and, while it looked like a burden upon the land, became, in effect, a blessing upon it. To introduce such a system into Ireland, seemed to the theoriser of England to be both just and politic. All argument was in its favour. What had wrought so well here could not, it was imagined, be other than beneficial to Ireland; and so the Poor-Law was introduced and carried. But, alas! such is the wide extent of the misery and destitution of that country, that the Poor-Law, so just in theory, so fair-sounding, so applicable elsewhere, has broken down. It is found that it cannot be applied. England herself is a fortunate country. The wisdom of past ages, directed to social and civil rights, applied a Poor-Law in the sixteenth century, and accustomed all classes to its operation, before it was possible that any undue strain could be made upon it; just as in the seventeenth century we acquired those civil rights which other nations are struggling for in the nineteenth. But the good-fortune of England in the timeliness of her reforms was forgotten by the friends of a Poor-Law for Ireland. Even amongst ourselves the introduction of a Poor-Law for the first time in the middle of the nineteenth century, and amidst the set of circumstances which would have grown up in the absence of such a law, would, in all probability, have been a failure. The misfortune in the case of Ireland is, that the Poor-Law was not applied generations ago—before population had increased to such an enormous extent—before the people under its pressure had been reduced to the lowest and most precarious of diet, the potato—before they had been deteriorated, if not demoralised—before the innumerable evils consequent upon such a state of society had arisen, and before landlords had become too impoverished and embarrassed to be made available for the extirpation of the pauperism around them. But the sudden introduction of such a law, however just in itself, has but extended the circle of misery. The cry of distress arises not only from the over-abundant people—from the immense potato-feeding multitudes—but from the classes both immediately and high above them. Small farmers and great landed proprietors are equally pinched or crushed beneath the operation of the law. Without a Poor-Law the people would have died of famine; with a Poor-Law, the people are not elevated above habitual and constant pauperism, and the property of the landlords is all but confiscated. Such is the unhappy social condition of a beautiful and fertile country. Such is the state to which a variety of causes, acting from age to age, and from generation to generation, has brought an island that has every natural capability of being one of the richest and happiest on the face of the earth. Such, also, is the condition which must be changed with all the speed we can command, under the penalty, not merely of a destitution and degradation which shame us in the eyes of the world, but of convulsions always imminent when the empty stomach and the despairing heart are the advisers and inciters of civil strife.

However difficult the task may be, something must be done to save the Irish landlords as well as the Irish people. To repeal the Poor-Law is out of the question; but it is equally out of the question to attempt in any district of that country to levy rates of thirteen-and-sixpence in the pound, as in Scariff. Whatever be the real, tangible, available property of Ireland must be both assessable and assessed for the support and for the employment of the people in productive agriculture; but it is cruel to enforce a Poor-Law upon the English landlord in a country that is not in the enjoyment of English circumstances. The same differences that ex st between English and Irish society in all their grades, ought to exist in the machinery of the English and Irish Poor-Laws. The habitual pauperism of England does not exceed one-fifteenth of the whole people—a sufficiently disagreeable and costly proportion; but the habitual pauperism of Ireland does not fall far, if anything short, of one-third. To tax the large property of the one people for the support of its poor, inflicts a tax quite heavy enough to impatiently endure; even advantageously borne; but to tax the small property of the other in a ratio so awfully augmented, becomes in fact impossible. The farmer gives up his farm, rather than cultivate the land with such odds against him; the small trader becomes a pauper himself, and the amount, in hopeless progression, sees no prospect for himself but that of being gradually devoured by the people who ought, in a proper state of society, to increase his wealth and their own. The rate is levied, but it cannot be collected. The machinery, so admirable here, will not work there; the strain is too great upon it; and the old cry of distress and despair resounds from every corner of the island.

JELLACHICH, BAN OF CROATIA.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

These facts have been brought under our notice not only by the wail of the people in terror of the privations too certain to befal them during the approaching winter, but by a remarkable book upon the subject, which has just been published by M. Aubrey de Vere, a resident Irish proprietor. Mr. De Vere, has given his book the title of "English Misrule and Irish Misdeeds," and is not sparing in his exemplifications of both. He is not—in this instance, at least—a man who speaks without experience, having filled the office of Chairman of a Poor-Relief Committee in the dreadful winter of 1846-7; and knows by sight and hand with his own ears, the miseries of the people. Mr. De Vere, though he blames English misrule for the complicated and long-enduring wretchedness of Ireland, is not insensible to those faults in the character of the Irish themselves, which have rendered misrule more speedily fatal to them than it would have been to a people of greater energy, more steady self-reliance, and a more enduring perseverance of purpose. But Mr. De Vere seems to forget that the misrule of England in Ireland, whatever it may have been (and we are not disposed to underrate its amount), dates from a period long past; that the present generation of English men, at least, have never had, and are not likely to have, any intention to perpetuate misrule, but the very reverse; and that, in a time of commercial pressure and distress, we have consented to enormous pecuniary sacrifices for the sake of Ireland, and are ready to do so again if we can be assured that our bounty will n t do harm rather than good to its recipients. He should remember that if Ireland has offered to the world the spectacle of a gigantic misery, England has also offered to the world the spectacle of an unparalleled effort to relieve and to remove it. If the splendour of our benevolence has not kept pace with the hideousness of her misery, it has not been from any want of inclination on the part of the living race of Englishmen, but from the sheer impossibility of remedying in one year the accumulated evils of ages; and of elevating the character of a people too poor and sorrow-stricken to attempt to elevate themselves. Men of influence among the Irish would do better service to the cause of their countrymen by showing them the good intentions and goods of living more towards one another, than by continually dwelling upon past crimes and errors, which men of all parties unhesitatingly admit and most unfeignedly deplore. Mr. De Vere, like all who take anything like a comprehensive view of Irish misery and its causes, is an advocate for the Poor-Law; but he desires, as indeed every one must, that it should be reconsidered in all the details of its working, in order that the burden may be fairly distributed; and that the misfortune of the people, and landlords themselves should not, as at present, be crushed into pauperism by assessments too heavy for their property to bear. He says truly, that "the position of the Irish proprietor is that of a man called to the discharge of functions not his own, through the instrumentality of resources not at his command. He is obliged daily to witness the misery which he did not cause, and which he cannot relieve. He is reproached by the patients of thousands to whom he can offer no aid, and by the impatience of hundreds who will not let him aid them. If he sinks into apathy or recklessness, he becomes an insignificant in a crisis when everything has its significance. If he rouses himself to the exercise of those rights without which the duties of property are abstractions, he is proclaimed a tyrant and an exterminator. De jure, he has a right to his property; de facto, not quite to his life."

It is extremely difficult to frame any law that will work well in all cases. Even in happier England, it requires the greatest care to prevent the Poor-Law from being abused, either to the disadvantage of the pauper, or to the rate-payer not greatly removed above pauperism; and in a country like Ireland all such difficulties are of necessity immensely increased. It seems to be agreed on all hands, that the Government committed an error last Session in refusing an inquiry into the working of the new Poor-Law in Ireland. We may anticipate that, in the ensuing Session, the fault will not be repeated, and that some attempt will be made to give the Irish people a Poor-Law which shall not aggravate the misery it was intended to remedy, and reduce both property and pauperism into one common mass of despondency and ruin.

JOSEPH BARON JELLACHICH.

Joseph Baron Jellachich was born in 1801, at Peterwaradin, of Croatian parents. His early education was exclusively conducted by his mother, who seems to have implanted in him a predilection for poetry and intellectual recreation. The Emperor Francis, to whom he was presented when a boy of eight years old, noticed him much, and placed him at the Theresianum in Vienna, an institution which has produced several eminent military and statesmen for the Austrian monarchy. There he studied military science and history with zeal and success; not neglecting, however, at the same time bodily exercise: he thus became a skilful fencer, a bold horseman, and, at a later period, a capital shot. At the age of eighteen, Jellachich entered a dragoon regiment stationed at Tarnow, and very soon gained the respect of his superiors and the love of his inferiors. At this period, during a long illness, he composed several poems, which abound with ambitious views and an ardent longing after the achievement of great deeds, yet are tinged with melancholy.

In 1825 his health was restored, and he was able to join his regiment, in its new garrison at Vienna. After the French revolution of July, 1830, when fresh appointments, advancements, and prospects of war infused new life into the Austrian army, Jellachich was appointed captain in one of the border regiments, which was marched into Italy in 1831, where it remained about four years. After its return to the border, Jellachich had ample opportunity to gather experience of a different nature in the incessant and bloody conflicts with the Bosnians. In 1842 he became commander of the 1st border regiment, and soon distinguished himself with his brave troop in the battle of Posvid. But, although well known as a brave soldier, and a distinguished officer of the army, it was only in March, 1848, when the Emperor made him Ban-General, Ban of Sclavonia, Croatia, and Dalmatia, and a few days later, Field-Marshal-Lieutenant, that he came prominently before the public. It is from this period as no longer upon the important political motives and consequences connected with his appointment; but the following details, in explanation of Jellachich's position, will not be out of place.

The kingdom of Croatia and Sclavonia have been united with the kingdom of Hungary for the last 700 years: it was not conquered by the latter, but attached to it after the demise of the last Croatian King. The Croats and Sclavonians since that time have shared the fate of the Hungarians, and participated in their freedom. As in Hungary the Palatine, so in Croatia the Ban, was the viceregerent of the King; but the affairs of both countries were conducted by a common Imperial Diet. Some years ago, the Hungarians demanded that their language alone should be used at the Diet. The Emperor gave his consent, by which the Sclavonian people were greatly exasperated. This excitement reached its height when, in consequence of the events of March, the Emperor was compelled by the Hungarians to grant to the country an administration apart from the Austrian Ministry, and to incorporate the Banat with re-constituted Hungary. Already, at that time, the insurrection was ripe, but the leader was still wanting. Meanwhile, the situation of the Government at Vienna became more and more difficult. The Court strove hard to put down the agitation of the people. Vienna rejoiced at the free language and manly demeanour assumed by the Hungarians in opposition to the Court, and derived from it a fresh impulse in the struggle. Thus the Government lay between two straits: on the one side, the Hungarians and Germans struggling for liberty; on the other, the Croatians, supported by the whole population of the remaining Sclavonian provinces, who endeavoured to take advantage of the agitation for the purpose of constituting an independent Sclavonian empire. Instead of openly declaring itself for one party, the Government endeavoured to be on terms with each, and commenced an intrigue for the destruction of both. With the expectation of possessing, in Jellachich, the favourite of the Court, Government appointed him Ban, and he forthwith availed himself of the new power entrusted to him. He appealed to the national feeling of the Sclavonians; pointed out in brilliant language the encroaching despotism of Hungary, and collected around him fanatical hordes, with whom he opened his campaign against the Hungarians; and they, unprepared for the conflict, proposed peace, at the same time demanding the mediation of the Austrian Government. The ministers made fair promises, and the deposing of the Ban was officially decreed, whilst money was secretly sent to him for the army, and the Emperor, with the whole Court, received Jellachich at Innspruck with respect and honour. He returned to his army, entered Hungary, and was confirmed by

ROME.—The Papal Government has contracted a loan of four millions on the security of the property which the religious corporations have given up to the State

Information of the death of M. Rossi, at Rome, in consequence of a wound left rest on him by an assassin in the street, is said to have reached the French Government on Thursday

The congress on the affairs of Italy will be held immediately, at Brussels, when Lord Minto will represent England, and M. de Tocqueville France.

HOLLAND

A report of the Ministry to the King respecting the reform of the budget, and showing that the State expenditure may be reduced to the sum of 2,000,000 florins, has been published. The Ministry propose to curtail the salaries and emoluments of the officers of state, and several sinecures are to be suppressed entirely. The King has given a ready assent to the report.

SWITZERLAND

The following is the composition of the new Swiss Federal Government:—Furrer, of Zurich, President; Druey, of Vaud, Vice-President; Ochsenbein, of Berne; Munziger, of Soleure; Frey Herosé, of Argau; Fleming, of Unterwalden; Naeff, of St. Gall; and Schiess, Chancellor of the Federal Government. The two Chambers (the Council of States and National Council) met for the first time on the 16th instant, to proceed to the above-mentioned elections. The gentlemen elected thanked the Assembly, reserving the option to resign until it shall be decided which town of the Federation will be the seat of Government.

UNITED STATES.

By the Europa, which left New York on the 8th inst., we learn that the Presidential election, which took place throughout the Union on the preceding day, was considered to have resulted in the success of General Taylor, as far as the returns had been known at that hour to influence the decision.

General Taylor had received, according to the accounts sent by telegraph, 131 votes; while General Cass was only known to have received 20 votes. The entire number of electoral votes is 290. The absolute majority necessary for the choice of President is 146.

The election had passed off quietly, except in Baltimore and New Orleans, where there had been some rioting, in which pistol-shots were fired, and several persons injured. At New Orleans the Democrats burned down a house

With respect to other matters of a domestic nature, we find that by a treaty concluded with the Winconnin Indians, the Government had acquired a title to new territory to the amount of 4,000,000 acres. General Kearney, the commander of the American expedition to the north-western boundaries of Mexico during the war, had died at St. Louis. Mr. Calhoun had proposed the transfer of the elective power, in regard to the Presidential electors of South Carolina, from the State Legislature to the people.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE

Intelligence from the Cape of Good Hope, to the 29th Sept., states that a proclamation had been issued by Sir H. Smith, dated the 21st of that month, announcing that the insurrection of the Dutch Boers had been effectually put down.

WEST INDIES.

The usual monthly mail arrived during the week. There is little or no news from any of the islands. Fever continued to prevail amongst our troops in Barbadoes. It was also prevailing at Havannan to a frightful extent.

INDIA.

Advices overland have been received this week from Calcutta to the 7th; Madras, the 8th; and Bombay, the 17th ult.; from which we learn that the Supreme Government had decided upon the permanent annexation of the Punjaub to the British territories in India, and that, with a view to the immediate occupation of the country, orders had been issued for an augmentation of the Bengal army to the extent of 15,000 men. Troops were being concentrated from different quarters, and it was expected that Lord Gough would find himself, before the close of the present month, at the head of an army of 30,000 men, with a force of 10,000 from Bombay, or operating along the line of the Indus.

At Mooltan no change has taken place in the state of affairs. There has been no further fighting of consequence. General Whish has secured for his camp a good position, where he awaits the coming reinforcements, steadily refusing to give battle in the meantime. It was believed that Dewan Moolraj and Sirdar Singh place no confidence in each other, and that a separation of their interests and their forces was probable. Their alliance was, however, still maintained In Cashmere warlike preparations were going on. At Lahore all remained quiet; but Sir F Currie had refused to sanction the withdrawal of any portion of the garrison. The commander-in-chief, Lord Gough, was expected to be at Ferozepore by the 2d inst.

From Ceylon accounts have reached us of the total suppression of the recent rebellion in that island, the greater portion of which had been the levying some obnoxious taxes. The insurrection had spread to nearly every fine district. A spirit of disaffection pervaded almost the whole native population of the district around Kandy, and the accounts contained a great devastation wherever they were able to come unexpectedly upon estates or towns. The British army encountered the rebels on two occasions, and in both the latter fled without offering any resistance. An attack was, however, made on Kornegalle by about 4000 insurgents, but they were repelled by a party of riflemen.

The rebels had intended to seize upon Kandy, and had arranged to make the attempt on the 29th or 30th of August, when the European military were at church. They assembled on the hills for this purpose, but, having attacked the village of Matille, general alarm was excited, and they were easily put down by a body of Malay riflemen.

The pretender who had assumed the title of King of Kandy was captured on that occasion; 120 prisoners had been tried by court-martial, and 18 suffered death, the others being sentenced to transportation or to imprisonment. The pretender was to be tried at Kandy.

By the last accounts the country was quiet, and it was believed that the natives would not attempt a repetition of disturbances.

COUNTRY NEWS.

THE Senatus of King's College, Aberdeen, have unanimously re-elected the Earl of Eilesmere as Lord Rector of the University.

THE PACKET STATION AT MILFORD HAVEN.—The mail packet service between this port and Waterford may be considered as abolished. The last of the steamers, the Jasper, left during the past week for Woolwich, to be paid off. The services of Com. Dunn, R.N., borne on the books of the Royal Sovereign Yacht, to superintend the establishment, have also been dispensed with, all the engineers sent to Woolwich, and each of the packets paid off at that port. The two light-vessels placed on the Weir tongue and the Carr rocks for their convenience, have been also removed, and are now offered for sale by the Admiralty Buoys, however, for the safety of the navigation, have been placed at their moorings. By these arrangements a saving of nearly £30,000 a year has been effected. It has not yet been definitively settled in what purpose the pier, built at a considerable expense for the accommodation of the packet station, will be devoted; but it is expected it will be turned to account by the Board of Ordnance, at whose charge it was originally erected. A cavalry barrack in that vicinity is in contemplation by the Ordnance, the ground for which has recently been purchased, and the site determined upon by the authorities.

PASSENGERS' LUGGAGE.—A case of importance, as determining the duties of the liability of railway companies in regard to passengers' luggage, was decided on Friday week by W. Walker, Esq., the Judge of Barnsley County Court. A Mr. Tradd, a commercial traveller, sued the South Yorkshire Counties Railway Company for £13 10s., the value of a portmanteau with the contents, which was proved to have been put into the luggage basket at the Barnsley station, but which was lost between that place and Doncaster. The company proved a notice to this liability, and proved that a notice was affixed at all stations, warning passengers that they would not hold themselves liable for luggage left in the offices or with their servants—none of which notices, however, had been observed. A verdict had been handed by the plaintiff. The Judge pronounced in favour of the plaintiff for the amount claimed.

THE FORGERY ON SIR B. HEYWOOD AND CO.'S BANK.—M'Cormick, the young man who presented the forged cheque for £631 on the bank of Sir Benjamin Heywood and Co., Manchester, has been discharged from custody, in consequence of the strong probability that he was innocent of the knowledge that it was forged, and was a tool in the hands of Lee, his employer. Lee, there is reason to believe, has been living at Bowdon, Cheshire, near the seat of the Earl of Stamford, under the assumed name of Bellamy, and has been successful in raising money on a number of forged documents at Liverpool. The police got wind of his whereabouts a few days ago, and were in hot pursuit, but he eluded their vigilance.

THE LOSS OF THE "ATLANTIC."—On Monday a special court of the Cinque Ports Commissioners, in pursuance of an order of the Duke of Wellington, the chief warden, was held at Deal, at the Registrar's office, for the purpose of rewarding the crew of the Prince of Wales lugger of this port, who, in the most praiseworthy manner, at the imminent risk of their own lives, rescued the crew and remainder of the passengers of the Bremen ship Atlantic, which was wrecked on the Goodwin Sands on the night of the 14th instant. The Court having complimented the crew of the Prince of Wales on their noble conduct on this occasion in saving life, awarded them £4. 14s.

W. Trott, G. Bailey, J. Trott, T. Trott, H. Baker, D. Kirkadle, S. Trott, S. Pritchard, and J. Wilkins.

RAILWAY ACCIDENT DURING A STORM.—While a goods train was passing along the North British Railway on Monday on its way to Edinburgh, at a point at the east of Cockburns-path, where the line runs on a high embankment close to the sea, the force of the wind at this exposed elevation was such that it blew the roof of one of the carriages, on which one of the guards was sitting, entirely off, carrying the unfortunate individual along with it to the base of the embankment. About the same time one of the doors of a luggage van was forced open by the gale. The accident was not discovered till the train reached the next station, when several persons were sent out in quest of the guard, who, it was feared, might be drowned, on account of the proximity of the line to the sea. He was, however, found at the place alluded to, seriously, although it is hoped, not dangerously injured.

SALE OF CHARTIST PIKES.—A few days back Mr. J. Howarth sold by public auction, in the Market-place, Heywood, Lancashire, some goods which had been taken under a warrant of distress from the house of Edmund Crabtree, a tinman cutler, at Hardfield, amongst which were a number of Chartist pikes, a grindstone for sharpening them, &c.

THE WEATHER AND AURORÆ BOREALES.

The weather during the past week has been distinguished by some fine days, a sale of wind, and two exhibitions of the aurora borealis. The following are some particulars of each day:—Thursday, the sky was clear early in the morning, was partially clear during the day, and it was overcast at night; the direction of the wind S.W.; and the average temperature of the air was 39°2. Friday, the sky was overcast till the evening, and there were occasional breaks in the clouds at night, through which some pink and white streamers of an aurora borealis were visible, and the general light was prevalent all night. This aurora was seen, under more or less favourable circumstances, all over the country. The Rev. A. Weld of Stonyhurst says that on the evening of this day an aurora borealis was visible at 6h 30m. P.M.; and between the hours of 9h and 10h it was overcast. At about 9h P.M. it was noticed that, from being quite dark, there was sufficient light to read manuscript without the aid of a lamp (there being no moon). The aurora became brighter, and a brilliant crimson was seen, which, with harona-streamers were emanating; the clouds in the S.E. and S., which a few minutes before were lowering black, were tinged with crimson as at a fine sunset. The clouds were moving rapidly from the W.S.W., and it appeared that the whole mass of light had given them partook of the same motion. In the N. the clouds were dense, and nothing was seen till about 11 P.M., when the clouds for the most part cleared off, and the usual appearance of the aurora borealis were seen, the rays meeting so as to form an imperfect corona: they were at the time perfectly white.

The sky seems to have been the most free of cloud at about the centre of the country; and a correspondent at Nottingham has kindly furnished an account, which I have condensed as follows:—At 7 P.M. the sky was bright, a dense black cloud was near the horizon in the E., and the constellation Ursa Major was dimmed by a silvery light, and objects on the earth were thrown out in bold relief. At 9h P.M. some faint pink streamers were seen in different directions, but more particularly in the N.W. Presently an arch was formed, extending from the S.E. to the S.W., with its apex situated near the zenith. This arch was of the most roseate hue, and from its highest point streamers emanated on all sides, and the whole sky was lighted up with the varied changes from pink to deep red. The effect was beautiful. At about 9h. 30m some clouds collected, and the glare of red light upon them had the appearance of the reflection from a fearful fire. At 10h. 30m. P.M. a large mass of white cloud, of an auroral character, arched the horizon in the S., when suddenly a light arose, and moved undulating towards the zenith, till it just reached the Pleiades; then it formed into a luminous arc, with streamers shooting from its centre; this arc eventually formed into a kind of cone, with its base parallel to the before-mentioned white cloud, leaving a space of clear sky between them. The barometer reading during the day decreased half an inch nearly, and the changes at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, were not much disturbed; they were also under some cause of disturbance on the preceding as well as on the succeeding day. (See the Report of the Registrar-General for the week ending November 18.) The direction of the wind during Friday was S.W., and the average temperature of the air was 45°. Saturday, the sky was for the most part overcast; the direction of the wind was S.W.; the average temperature of the air was 43°5, and the barometer reading decreased one-fourth part of an inch nearly. Sunday, the sky was cloudless, the day was fine, the direction of the wind was S., and the average temperature of the air was 40°2. Monday, the sky was overcast; at night the wind blew a gale from the S.W., and the average temperature of the air was 45°5. Tuesday, the sky was cloudless till late in the evening; the direction of the wind was S., and the average temperature of the air was 44°5. At 6 P.M. there was a well-defined auroral arch emanating from N.W. to E.N.E., with its centre under the three stars in the tail of the Bear. Between 6 and 7 there was a remarkable patch of light over the constellation Draco, and which remained motionless for an hour; and there was a bright blood-red portion in the N.W., which was also motionless for some time. Between 7 and 8 40' A.M. many red streamers sprung from the arch, but more numerous at the W. extremity, and which shot upwards generally to Draco, and occasionally above the constelation. The clouds were tinged with crimson all the night. Wednesday the sky was overcast, the direction of the wind was S., and the average temperature of the air was 50°4; and that for the week ending this day was 43°.

The following are the exact thermometrical readings for each day:—

Thursday.	Nov. 16, the highest during the day was	45 deg.,	and the lowest was	33 deg
Friday,	Nov 17,	48		42
Saturday,	Nov. 18,	49		34
Sunday,	Nov. 19,	46		34
Monday,	Nov 20,	53		36
Tuesday	Nov 21,	54		37

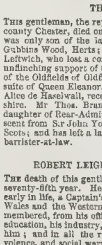
Blackheath, Thursday, Nov 23, 1848. J. G.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED

GEORGE LANE FOX, ESQ., OF BRAMHAM PARK, CO. YORK.

ACCOUNTS reached town this week of the decease, at Bramham House, of this distinguished country gentleman. He was the eldest son of the late James Lane Fox, Esq., of Bramham, M.P. for Horsham, who inherited the great estates in England and Ireland of his uncle, George Lane Fox, Lord Bingley, and was at one time offered a peerage, which he refused, preferring, as he stated, to hold his honourable position as a Lane Fox of Bramham and Bingley.

Mr. Lane Fox, whose death we record, succeeded his father in 1821, and represented Beverley and Pontefract successively in Parliament. He was major of the Yorkshire Yeomanry Cavalry, and a deputy-lieutenant of the North Riding. He married, Sept. 10, 1814, Georgiana Henrietta, only daughter of Edward Very Buckley, Esq., by the Lady Georgiana, his wife, daughter of John, second Earl of De la Warr, and has had with two daughters, one son, the present George Lane Fox, Esq., of Bramham, who married, in 1837, Katherine, daughter of John Bullock Lister, Esq., M.P. for Sackville Walter Lane Fox, M.P., son-in-law of the late Duke of Leeds, is brother of the deceased gentleman.



THE LADY ELEANORA CAROLINE GRAHAM

WITHIN less than two years of her marriage, and at the early age of twenty-eight, this lamented lady has been snatched away, to the inexpressible sorrow of her relatives and friends. Her Ladyship was the eldest daughter of the Earl of Uxbridge, sister of Lord Paget and of Viscountess Maidstone, and granddaughter of the Marquis of Anglesey. Her marriage to Sandford Graham, Esq., eldest son of Sir Sandford Graham, Bart., of Kirkstall, county York, took place on the 4th February, 1847.

THOMAS BRAMLE OLDFIELD, ESQ.

THIS gentleman, the representative of the ancient house of Oldfield of Oldfield, county Chester, died on the 20th inst. at Champion Hill, Surrey, aged 60. He was the only son of the late Thomas Oldfield, Esq., of London, and Ann, one of the Gubbins Wood, Herts; and fourth in descent from Leftwich Oldfield, Esq., of Leftwich, who lost a considerable portion of his ancestral property through his unflinching support of the Royal cause during the great civil war. The founder of the Oldfields of Oldfield was Guy de Provence, who came to England in the suite of Queen Eleanor, on her marriage with Henry III. in 1235, and wedding Alice de Hazelwall, received as the dower the manor of Oldfield, in Cheshire. Mr. Thos. Bramle Oldfield married, 9th February, 1813, Emma, eldest daughter of Rear-Admiral Young, of Denmark hill, Surrey, seventh in direct descent from Sir John Young, Knight, of Leny, Chamberlain to Mary Queen of Scots; and has left a large family, the eldest of which is Thomas Oldfield, Esq., barrister-at-law.

ROBERT LEIGH, ESQ., LATE OF BARDON, CO. SOMERSET.

THE death of this gentleman occurred at Taunton, on the 29th of October, in his seventy-fifth year. He was a Deputy-Lieutenant of Somersetshire, and held, early in life, a Captain's commission in the 1st Somerset Militia. Throughout Wilts and the Western and South-Western Counties of England, he will be remembered, from his office of Inspector-General of Taxes, for which his legal education, his industry, and his uncompromising integrity, eminently qualified him; and in all the relations of life, his intellectual acquirements, his benevolence, and social warmth of character will not easily be forgotten.

His family was a branch of an ancient Devon house, which is traced by Sir William Pole, the antiquary, as far back as the reign of Henry II.

SUDDEN DEATH OF SIR JOHN BARRON.—On Thursday last the death of this Hon. Baronet took place, at his residence in Spring Gardens, under lamentably sudden circumstances. While seated at lunch, he suddenly drooped; and, notwithstanding the immediate professional assistance of his medical friend, Dr. Rigby, the vital spark fled. The deceased Baronet was in the 85th year of his age, having been born on the 19th of June, 1764, at the obscure village of Dry-Leyheck, near Ulverstone.

THE BOARD OF HEALTH.—A third notification from the Board of Health has been published, stating that it has appeared to them "desirable to at the special orders and regulations (previously published) should hereafter take effect without further notification, in all places forthwith, upon the actual occurrence of cases of cholera, and by these orders and regulations they do so provide. In all cases, however, in which these orders are carried upon, information of the fact must be sent to the Genera. Board of Health, and the medical officers will be required to notify, from time to time, for the information of the board, the progress which the epidemic may make in their respective districts.

PERVERT TO ROMANISM.—OXFORD LIST (No 70).—The Rev. Robert K. Scence, B A., of Brasenose College, Oxford, ordained in 1845, has conformed to the Church of Rome. In his reasons for secession he states that he had, previously to leaving the Church, been permitted by his diocesan to hold and teach the identical doctrines which he now holds in communion with Rome; and that the only doubt existing in his mind for a considerable time previous, was whether his own diocesan or the Bishop of Rome had the greater claim on his obedience!

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

FORTIFICATIONS AND DEFENCES OF THE HOME PORTS.

The following are extracts from reports of the Commissioners appointed to inspect the fortifications and defences of the home ports, and to recommend improvements or additions to the existing works for the protection of the said ports:—

"SHEERNESS.—The floating battery should be a line-of-battle ship, without masts, having her bow and stern strengthened, and shaped in form, to enable her to fire the greatest possible number of guns from those points, she should be armed with the heaviest ordnance she will bear, and be snug ried by a tower on the Isle of Grain, having a battery of six heavy guns in front of it. The rear ship of the ordinary should also be equipped with eight-inch guns on the lower deck, and with her pivot armament on the other decks; and she should be permanently fixed at the moorings the Nymph frigate is now riding by, as the ebb tide at the moorings will always admit of ships being swung with their broadsides to the entrance of the harbour. Six strong rings of very light draft of water, but with considerable steam power, and capable of carrying two or more heavy guns, should be permanently attached to Sheerness; they should be ready to change the position of the floating batteries, and would be generally useful for the defence of the harbour. With the floating force, the proposed battery at Queenborough might be dispensed with "DEFENCES OF THE MEDWAY. The removal of the ordinary to the upper part of the river, above Sungate Creek, is, therefore, recommended; and, in the event of war, some of the mooring lamps attached to the dockyards should be moored across the river at the narrowest and most convenient points below them, each with two line-of-battle-ship's anchors and cables seaward, and lighter ones to ride on by the ebb, at such distances as would allow of their being connected by their hawsers and sterns with chain cables, of dimensions so fitted that they might be unshackled to admit of ships passing up and down the river when required; these lamps should be armed with two heavy shell guns each, and the line to be flanked with two frigates armed with heavy guns, fitted as floating batteries, the one a little in advance of the other, to admit of their delivering their fire clear of each other.

"FORTIFICATIONS.—In order to assist in the defence of the port, and to meet the contingency of an enemy landing for the purpose of a sudden and rapid inroad, a floating defence is proposed of two line-of-battle ships and six frigates with screws, two heavy block-ships, which would admit of their broadsides as well as their sterns and bows being armed with heavy guns. These block-ships would not only assist in the defence of Portsmouth Harbour, but also fit that of the Isle of Wight, Southampton Water, and with this view should be capable of being propelled at the rate of between seven and eight knots an hour."

The report adds:—"We consider these steam block-ships might also, in the event of a direct attack on the coast, at a distance from Portsmouth, be made available for its defence."

INFANTRY ACCOUTREMENTS.—The question whether, instead of the bayonet belt now in use by the army, except in rifle regiments, a waistbelt can be substituted, is at present under consideration at the Horse Guards. In the rifle regiments, the bayonet, when it is not fixed to the ordinary sword, is carried in a sword or waist-belt, and the change proposed would have the effect of substituting the mode of wearing the bayonet in all regiments, whether rifle or otherwise. This change would, it is considered, be an improvement in appearance, and would diminish, in some degree, the weight carried by the soldier on the back and shoulder

IMPROVEMENT IN THE DETAILS OF NAVAL ADMINISTRATION.—The Board of Admiralty, who are at present engaged in prosecuting the task of revision, have directed that in future, when any vessels are ordered to be repaired, an estimate shall be furnished of the probable expense; and should the amount estimated prove insufficient, a supplementary estimate is to be submitted for their approval. Their Lordships have further directed returns to be transmitted, showing in detail the expense of manufacturing a ton of cable copper into sheets, and also in rolling the same quantity into bolts or bars, with the expense of manufacturing a ton of iron into sheets, and the same quantity into bars, adding a separate statement of the expense of coals, labour, &c. They have also commanded a report to be prepared and transmitted to them, showing the expense per ton of manufacturing blooms and blanks with Nasmyth's hammer stating in detail the number of men employed, and other incidental expenses, together with the cost of hammer, &c; also a return to be prepared of all the yard steam-engines and machinery, whether in use, appropriated, unappropriated, or broken up, stating the number of each description, present state at which the engine can be worked, name of maker, when ordered, and when received, the first cost and present value, and the state of repair of both the engines and machinery, and every description, and if out of repair, the nature of defects and the estimated cost of repair, together with any remarks the engineer officers may have to offer. This will convey an idea of the measures in progress

NEW DESCRIPTION OF ORDNANCE.—At Woolwich, a trial has been made this week, of Mr. M'Ivan's wrought-iron gun, of only 5 cwt. 16lb., two thirds of a hundred weight less than the lightest 6-pounder field gun. The object of the trial was to discover, by direct test, the strength of the metal for cannon, as well as its power of endurance of heat, and of obtaining clear data for the proportions required for guns of malleable iron; and the result of that part of the experiment exceeded the most sanguine hopes entertained of the inventor. The record was naturally enormous with the heavy charges it was tested with, but by a different adaptation of the metal so regulated in light guns, compared with those formerly used, and now adopted by Colonel Dundas, C.B., and Mr. Mann, on their principles to give the greatest body of metal at the breech, the great record in Mr. Morgan's may be obviated. Mr. Morgan's wrought-iron gun, although so much less in weight than the light 6-pounders in the service, was bored to the calibre of the old 9-pounder gun, 4.25 inches

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

A BANKRUPT SCULPTOR.—On Saturday last, Mr. Commissioner Goulburn gave judgment in the case of G. E. Jones, sculptor and engineer, whose application to obtain certificate had been made a few days previously. The application was opposed, on the ground of the bankrupt's expenditure being excessive, and it appeared that he had been employed to execute busts of the Queen, Prince Albert, Louis Philippe, and other distinguished personages, and had executed no less than 120 in the course of four years

His Honor said that, after fully considering the case, he had determined to make a similar order to that which had been made, he believed, in the case of Lord Huntingtower. He would only grant the certificate after the bankrupt had entered into a bond binding himself to report, at stated periods, the amount of his earnings to the official assignee, and likewise to set apart one-half of these to the payment of his creditors. Protection would be granted for a fortnight; and when the bankrupt had fulfilled the above conditions, the Court would sign an order for his certificate

POLICE.

MARYLEBONE

CHARGE OF ROBBERY AGAINST THE BARONESS ST. MARC.—The hearing of this case was resumed and concluded on Tuesday.—Mr. Charles Fleay, a relative to Sir John Barr, said he remembered calling at Thayer-street, at the house of the Countess, on the subject of the rings. Sir John Barr accompanied him there, and after some conversation with the Countess he saw the Baroness. The Baroness said that he called at the request of Sir John Barr, to demand two rings which she (the Countess) had pawned. Sir John Barr took hands to the hands of Miss Todhunter. Sir John had retired by this time. The Baroness said that she had not the rings then. She also said that she had tried one of them on her finger; it cut the last Lady Barr had worn. She had a very small finger for the ring to fit; and that she had returned the rings to Sir John or Lady Barr. [Examined by Mr. Ballantine:] I have not told all that passed on the occasion. It is a small account there, of which I demanded payment. It was for a small sum due to Sir John Barr. It might be for 13s. 6d.; the account was paid by the Countess, and I paid it over to Sir John Barr. I did not say that I was ashamed of the conduct of Sir John Barr, or that he was very eccentric since his wife's death. I swear that I did not say so, or anything similar to it. Sir John was with me when I first went into the house, but he was not present when the conversation took place. The Baroness did not say by whose hands she had returned the rings to Sir John Barr. Mr. Clarkson: That, sir, is the case.—Mr. Broughton: When the case was last before me, I expressed my intention of committing the Baroness, and I am still of the same opinion. Beyond that I have no wish to express any opinion as to the merits of the case—the matter must be referred to a jury. It appears that a gentleman hands rings to a lady, which she puts on her fingers, and the gentleman immediately asks them to be returned; and he did so with such urgency as a gentleman could use without resorting to violence. It was but a temporary possession by consent, and the returning of them after they had been demanded is, in my opinion, felony. It is a serious question and one of grave consequence to both parties, and I must therefore send it to the Central Criminal Court, that a jury may express their opinion of it. I regret I give no opinion upon the facts, but that the evidence is of a nature which makes it my duty to commit the case before a jury.—Mr. Ballantine: I presume, sir, you will be satisfied with the bail already given.—Mr. Broughton: I do not think it be an alteration in the bail. I shall take the Baron's bail for £200 for his wife, and two other sureties in £100 each.—The Baroness [illegible] wish it to go to trial.—Mr. Broughton: The Baroness stands committed, and the depositions will be read over, the witnesses [illegible] appear at the Central Criminal Court, and the bail completed.

INDUSTRIAL ESTABLISHMENT FOR JUVENI[illegible]. The opening of the committee and others interested in the success [illegible] was held at the Ragged-school, Hen[illegible]. The report stated that the course adopted had already produced [illegible] moral effects, inducing cleanliness, and of industry. [illegible] aids separations. Four youths were employed in boot and shoe making, and nine in opening hair, wool, &c. Seventeen boys, &c., they received three meals daily, including Sunday; are partially clothed and lodged, and farmed out with money according to the amount of work done. Religious services are daily performed, and they have the use of a well selected library. Several have been provided with places. The institution is at present £60 in debt. The committee, in conclusion, make an earnest appeal for support. An industrial school for females also is now forming.

RECAPTURE OF AN ENGLISH BRIG FROM MOORISH PIRATES BY H. M. S. "POLYPHEMUS," ON THE COAST OF THE RIF.

GALLANT RECAPTURE OF AN ENGLISH BRIG FROM MOORISH PIRATES.

We have been favoured by a Correspondent with the accompanying Illustrations of this gallant affair, and the following details:—

It appears that on the 7th of November, Captain M'Cleverty, commander of her Majesty's steamer Polyphemus, received a letter from the consignees at Gibraltar of the English brig Three Sisters, stating that Mr. Forster, the master, and the crew, had arrived, having on the morning of the 7th made their escape in a small boat from that vessel, on her being attacked by seven Moorish boats, carrying about twenty men each, armed with long muskets, and all ready for action. Mr. Forster immediately ordered the small boat to be got out, in order to keep out of the reach of their guns, but, to his astonishment, no sooner had he put off from the ship than a volley of shot came tumbling about the boat, but fortunately they all fell a few yards short. Firing was then kept up at the ship at a distance, and one of the Moorish boats went in chase of the crew; but the pirates soon returned to tow the vessel within their own dominions; and when she was last seen by her crew, the Moors were towing the vessel into a bay ten or twelve miles to the westward of Cape Tres Forcas.

MOORISH PIRAT.

Upon the receipt of this intelligence, the Polyphemus got under weigh, and started the same evening to the Rif coast; and Captain M'Cleverty thus describes what followed, in his official letter to Admiral Sir William Parker:—

"At daylight we ran into Al Khoymich Bay, and coasted from thence, close to the shore, towards Cape Tres Forcas, for the purpose of discovering the brig if the Moors should have taken her to the westward. At 11 A.M. of the 8th, on opening the point of Calla Tramontana, we discovered her anchored close to the shore, in a small bay, partly surrounded by an amphitheatre of precipices, high rocks and ravines, all of which places were crowded with men armed with long muskets, evidently for the purpose of protecting the brig, which lay considerably within musket-shot range. Their boats, seven in number, were hauled up on the beach and in the mouths of cavarns, with a strong party of armed men lying under cover for the protection of part of the cargo, which they had landed: their whole force appeared to consist of at least 500 men. On approaching close to the brig, they opened a fire of musketry from all points, which we immediately returned with grape, canister, and musketry, doubtless with very good effect, as a very large number of them began flying about in all directions, and taking up more secure positions. Having dislodged them from the beach, we proceeded to take the vessel in tow, which service was performed by Lieutenant Gardner, who volunteered to take the cutter, with a hawser, and weigh the brig's anchor. Just at this time, a fire was opened from a gun, supposed to be a six or nine pounder; and as, unavoidably, our stern was towards the nearest point of low rocks, and therefore could make no return, it encouraged them to approach us quite close, and open a well-directed fire of musketry, which, I regret to say, severely wounded Lieutenant Wasey, and slightly two seamen on board the ship, and one seaman severely in the cutter. It was my intention to have landed and burnt the boats, but, from the secure position taken up by so numerous a body of well-armed men, I deemed it very imprudent to risk so severe a loss as must have inevitably taken place, particularly as the fire from our great guns had rendered them unserviceable. Having now taken the brig in tow, we steamed to sea. From the scattered position taken up by the pirates, it would be impossible for me to estimate their loss; but, from the accuracy of our fire, and many men having been observed to fall, and some carried away, as we steamed out of the bay, there is little doubt but it must have been very severe."

Captain M'Cleverty then adverts to the zeal displayed by Mr. Gardner, first lieutenant, who volunteered to board the brig under so severe a fire; also, the able support he received from Lieutenant Wasey, in command of the foremost gun; and the coolness and skill displayed by Mr. Taylor, the master, in conducting the ship in so intricate a place. The Captain likewise thanks Mr. F. Gibert, paymaster and purser, who volunteered to take command of the small-arm men.

Having placed Mr. Kirkham, master's assistant, on board the prize, with six men, Captain M'Cleverty proceeded to Gibraltar, where he arrived on November 9.

This must, altogether, be regarded as a successful and useful enterprise, inasmuch as the pirates of the Rif have become very notorious. The accompanying sketch is a portrait of one of them, with his long gun. Both sketches have reached us, with the guarantee of Messrs. Longlands, Cowell, and Co., Lloyd agents at Gibraltar.

This circumstance had created some excitement at Gibraltar, and it was supposed that her Majesty's Government would demand satisfaction from the Emperor of Morocco for this wanton aggression on the part of his subjects.

THE GREAT TUBULAR BRIDGES.—The final operation of lowering the second tube-bridge at Conway for the return line to London, on the Chester and Holyhead Railway, and the placing it on its permanent bed, has been accomplished. The ponderous mass of 1300 tons was suspended on chains, hanging and swinging two feet above its permanent bed, over an area of estuary of 400 feet, and 20 feet above the Straits, for a period of ten days, during which the engineers and pilots were engaged in adjusting the bed plates and rollers and masonry for its support. The tube was likewise lengthened 12 feet, by the addition of six feet o similar tube to each end of the mass so raised, this additional length also weighing upwards of 60 tons. Under the direction of Mr. R. Stephenson, Captain Claxton, and Mr. Edwin Clarke, the whole bridge, with its permanent way for the passage of the trains, complete and ready for use, was then gradually lowered, by means of the hydraulic presses which raised it, on to a bed of red and white lead, spread over the creosoted timber, which equalised the weight on the cast-iron bed-plates and rollers, to allow for the constantly varying length of the tube from changes of temperature. The tube is now in use for the transit of the trains.

PRESENT STATE OF PARIS.—Paris is gradually recovering from the shock it got in February. The prosperity of Paris is generally in proportion to the amount of the octroi duties. When they are low, Paris suffers; when they are high, Paris prospers. It now appears that the octroi duties collected amounted to 2,606,983 francs. The produce of the first fortnight of November amounts to 1,575,819 francs, which is at the satisfactory rate of 105,053 francs per day. I may also mention that a considerable number of the English families who were resident here last year have returned, and that more are expected. The Russians, who, from their wealth rather than from their number, formed an important portion of the winter population of Paris, are still absentees, and are likely to continue so for some time. On the other hand, the American families in Paris are nearly as numerous as in the days of Louis Philippe, and it has been remarked that almost all the Irish families habitually residing in Paris remained firm during all the scenes of February and June, and declare their intention of still entrusting their safety to the Republic.

RUINS OF KILVE PRIORY.

FIRE is a ruthless destroyer of the works of man: to-day, it levels the newly-built dwelling to a heap of ruins; and to-morrow it leaves a pile of architectural beauty a blackened shell.

The picturesque view we have engraved is an illustration of a catastrophe of the latter class. It shows the remains of the curious old Chantry of Kilve, near Nether Stowey, Somerset, on the banks of the Bristol Channel. This edifice was destroyed, save the outer walls, in an accidental fire, which took place a week or two since. The flames were first seen issuing from the chimney of the farm-house adjoining the Chantry: an alarm was instantly given, and gentry, farmers, and peasantry hurried to the spot. But in an incredibly short space of time the whole fabric was on fire, owing partly to the combustible material in the interior, which was used as lumber-rooms, and filled with empty casks and much dry wood; the roofs also being of oak. The wind also blew strongly from the north-west, indeed, almost a hurricane, so that in less than two hours the Chantry and farm-house were in ruins.

An engine could not be obtained nearer than Williton, a town nearly six miles distant, and it arrived too late to be of any service in saving the buildings: but it was placed in the pond (shown in the Sketch), and made to do service on the ricks adjoining the Barton, as flakes of fire were driven by the wind across, and speedily devoured stock to the value of several hundreds of pounds. Had the wind at all shifted from its point, and veered to the north, an ancient church, just opposite, would assuredly have been destroyed.

Of the history of the Chantry we find the following details in "Collinson's History of Somerset:"—

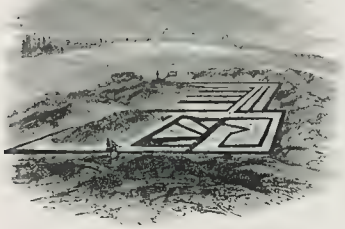
"A.D. 1329. A chantry was founded in the Church of Kelve by Sir Simon de Furneaux (lord of the manor) for five priests, who were every day to say divine service for the souls of Sir Matthew de Furneaux, father, and Sir Matthew de Furneaux, grandfather of the said Sir Simon; Alice, his wife; and Sir Henry de Umfraville, her father; for the endowment of which he had a license to amortise a house and garden at Kilve, a furlong of land at Stringston, another in Wembdon, and a field in Chilton Trivet, together with the churches of Kilve and Stringston. This chantry was called 'Minister de Sodales Societatis de Kilve.'"

It is feared that the remains of the Chantry will be razed to the ground in a few months; but we join in the hope of our artistic Correspondent who has favoured us with the sketch, that the picturesque relic may yet be spared.

REMAINS OF KILVE CHANTRY.

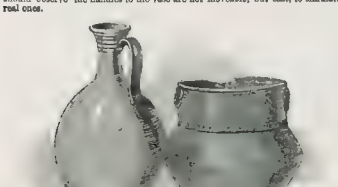
DISCOVERY OF ROMAN REMAINS AT CHESTERFORD.

THIS very interesting discovery has just been made at the picturesque village of Chesterford, on the Cambridge-road, and close to the ancient Roman station Camboricum, or, as some antiquaries suppose, the Venta Icenorum. Among the latter is the Hon. R. C. Neville, who, during the last few years, has sedulously investigated the antiquities of Audley End and its neighbourhood, and has collected one of the most interesting museums of local antiquities in the county of Essex. One of the accompanying Engravings represents one of the honourable gentleman's latest discoveries, made on the land now in the possession of Mr. Edwards, who has kindly permitted Mr. Neville to excavate. It derives additional interest in being the subterranean remains called by Stukely (one of the antiquaries of the last century) the vestiges of a temple.



REMAINS OF A ROMAN VILLA JUST DISCOVERED AT CHESTERFORD.

Mr. Neville has proved them to belong to a Roman villa, and such as have been often brought to light in this country. They lie within the line of the walls of the Roman station, which have been completely destroyed for building purposes and to repair the roads. We understand that the forthcoming number of the Journal of the British Archæological Association will contain a detailed account of the recent researches of the Hon. Mr. Neville, with sketches of many of the objects of interest found during the progress of the work. We have been kindly permitted to select two specimens of Roman pottery from these sketches; and we should observe the handles to the vase are not moveable, but cast, to simulate real ones.



ROMAN POTTERY FOUND AT CHESTERFORD.

There are also some fine remains of a temple near Ickleton, on the left of the railway to Cambridge, which have been discovered by Mr. Neville.

BURNING OF HATFIELD'S MILL, YORK.

ON Saturday night last, the 18th, between 8 and 9 o'clock, a serious fire broke out at Mr. Thomas Hatfield's steam mills, in Skeldergate, York. All the efforts of the city and the barrack engines were of no avail to stay the flames, which in an hour utterly destroyed the building and its valuable contents. A low estimate makes the loss £3000; only partially covered by insurance for £1400.

It being Saturday night, after work hours, the concourse of spectators was very great, opposite the banks of the river, Ouse-bridge, and other points commanding a view, being densely packed with people.

The fire is supposed to have been caused by the overheating of the spindles connected with the mill-stones. Fortunately, no accident amounting to loss of life occurred.

GENERAL BEM.—Of this intrepid officer (whose portrait was engraved in last week's ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS) we find the following statement in the Paris letter of the Times: "General Bem is the son of a German, but was born in Poland. His reputation as an artillerist stands high; it is, however, of his unflinching courage, and perhaps of his relentless disposition, that I am about to speak. Some five-and-twenty years since he had a quarrel with another (Polish) artillery officer, whom he challenged to fight with pistols. They met. On the ground they tossed for the first shot, and Bem lost. His adversary took aim, fired, and Bem fell. The officer, believing him dead, prepared to quit the field, but Bem, who had received the ball in the right hip, turned over on his left side, raised himself on his elbow and said, "Stop, comrade; it is my turn now. Take your place." The officer did so, and in a moment fell, shot through the heart. Bem lingered long under the wound. The ball could not be extracted. During 20 years he suffered excruciating torments from its presence, and at last resolved on proceeding to London to consult the faculty there. He was told that the operation, to be successful, must be a painful one. He at once said he would submit to it. He was accordingly thrown by ether into a state of stupor, and the operation commenced. The circular saw had indented the bone round the bullet when the intense agony roused the patient. The operator became alarmed, but Bem reassured him, called for his pipe, lighted it, and commenced smoking while the operation was resumed, and was crowned with complete success. The ball was extracted, and Bem perfectly recovered."

EXPULSION FROM THE GUARDS.—Frederick White, the private of the 2d battalion of Grenadier Guards, who was convicted a short time ago of robbing a French National Guard, under circumstances fresh in the recollection of the public, was on Monday morning expelled from the service. After the usual inspection at the Tower, the battalion was drawn up on parade, and formed in hollow square, when Colonel Sir Ord Honyman, Bart., the commanding officer ordered the delinquent to step forward, and addressed him as follows:

Frederick White, the crime of which you have been convicted by the civil power is at all times considered most disgraceful and degrading to the character of a soldier; but, considering the consequences resulting from it in your case, it is a crime of the deepest die. You robbed a soldier of the French National Guard, a stranger in this country, who, in the generous warmth of the moment on meeting a fellow-soldier, invited you to drink. In robbing him you committed an act, which not only stamped your own name with infamy, but compromised the character of the whole British army; for that soldier, on his return to his own country, beyond all doubt, published through the ranks of the French army that he had been robbed in England, and that the robbery had been perpetrated by a soldier of the Queen of England's Guards. What atonement can you make for the stain you have thus cast on the character of the soldiery of England? What atonement for having outraged the feelings of every good soldier in the army? None. The sacrifice of your miserable existence would not redeem the deed. The only consolation left us is, that you will no longer ye suffered to disgrace our ranks; and I trust that as the knowledge of your crime has been spread far and wide, so the fact that we have expelled you, and thus done all that lies in our power to punish you, and to redeem our fair fame, will become as extensively known to the world. I have the command of his Grace the Commander-in-Chief to dismiss you as utterly unworthy of serving in the British army, and his Grace desires me at the same time to express to the regiment his regret that in consequence of your having been already tried by the civil authorities for your offence, it is not in his power to bring you to a court-martial, in order that you might have been drummed out of the regiment, and disgraced with all the ignominy which the rules of the service permit." At the conclusion of this address, White was marched out of the precincts of the barracks.

ROBERT BLUM.

THE LATE ROBERT BLUM.

IF there was a man born "when all good stars were contrary," it was Robert Blum, one of the chief leaders of the German Republican party. His history if written fully, would furnish one of the most remarkable of biographies, full of vicissitude and suffering, but shewing an energy of mind continually rising superior amid every struggle, crowned at last by success and fame, only to close by a bloody death. He was born on the 10th of November, 1807 (the birthday of Luther, it is remarked), at Cologne, on the Rhine. His father was a student, who failed in his examination for the Church, and became first a cooper, afterwards a needle-maker, and could scarce earn his bread in either trade, from bad health. He died leaving three children; and the mother contracted a second marriage with a day labourer, one of the class that lives by loading and unloading the barges on the Rhine. The father had children by a former marriage, and the union of the two families increased the misery of both. In the disastrous years 1816 and 1817 they were brought down to absolute starvation, and the boy Robert was obliged to contribute to the existence of all by his talents for —begging! Even at this early age he had a certain gift of language, a power of persuasion that was difficult to resist; and it is recorded that, by his pathetic description of the dreadful condition of the family, he opened the heart of an old miserly uncle, who had never been known to part with a penny, but who sent him home loaded with a supply of food, and enriched with a piece of silver! A sister of his father subsequently paid the small sum required for his attendance at the Jesuits's school, and his progress was so rapid as to excite wonder. He then became one of the boys who attend the priest during the celebration of mass, having in the intervals of the services to watch the open church. In these solitary hours, instead of becoming impressed with the solemnity of the place, he fell into religious doubts, especially on one of the principal tenets of the Catholic Church. He explained them to the priest, and was enjoined a penance for his presumption. He refused to perform it, and left church and priest to seek his fortune elsewhere. He became first the shopboy of a tinman, and then the general servant of a theatre exhibited talents and honesty, and was made cashier and money-taker. He followed the manager from town to town for some years, collected books, read, and at last wrote for the annuals and journals with great success. At length he fixed himself in Leipsic as a bookseller, plunged into politics, and discovered that he possessed unequalled powers of eloquence, powers that not even his opponents could deny—frequently could not resist. His influence over the people was immense, and more than once he had to prove it, by restraining them within the bounds of peace and order. He was chosen a member of the Municipality; and when the German Diet was summoned at Frankfort, under the new system, he was immediately elected one of the Deputies for Saxony. In it he was the recognised leader of the extreme Left, or Liberals. When the Emperor of Austria fled from Vienna the last time, Blum—conceiving he could be of use to the Republican party unfortunately for himself went to that capital, and joined it is supposed in the conflict with the troops under Windischgrätz—trusting, it is believed, to his inviolability as a Deputy of the Diet. But the General was no sooner master of the city than Blum was arrested at his hotel, and tried by court-martial, for what precise overt act is not known. On the 9th of November he was informed of his sentence, and immediately let out and shot. He had exactly completed his 41st year the day he was executed.

His fate has excited the greatest indignation towards the Austrian Government throughout Germany; his family will, it is believed, be adopted by the State, and subscriptions are being raised throughout the country for the education and support of his children.

To the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

Leipsic, Nov. 18th, 1848.

SIR,—With this I have taken the liberty of sending you some account of the last hours of ROBERT BLUM, the champion of German freedom, who was shot by command of the Hof-Marschall, at Vienna, on the 9th inst.

At the commencement of the disturbances at Vienna, he was deputed by the leaders of the opposition party at Frankfort to be an eye-witness of the proceedings there, and, it is supposed, to take an active part in them. Unfortunately for him (but whether it will prove to be unfortunately for the country at large, remains to be seen), he was taken prisoner, and his life has been the sacrifice. About an hour and a half before the time of execution, a chaplain was deputed to visit him, and prepare him for death, of which he had as yet had no notice. At first he could not believe the messenger of death; but the gloomy tidings were soon corroborated by official intelligence. He afterwards appeared quite calm and collected, remarking to the chaplain, "You know, perhaps, that I am a German Catholic; I trust, therefore, you will exempt me from auricular confession." The minister, being of his persuasion, of course assented. Blum then begged a little time to write to his wife, children, and mother, which was granted. Afterwards the chaplain and he conversed a good deal together. Blum was still very calm, and expressed his pleasure that he had become acquainted with such a "worthy and truly Christian man." "I wish," said he, "to leave you a remembrance, but I have only my hair-brush left; will you accept that from me, and thereby afford me my last pleasure?"

Upon this, he was summoned to proceed to death. An officer approached to bind him with fetters, but he said, "I will die as a free German; you will believe my word that I will not make a ridiculous attempt to escape; spare me from your chains." His request was granted, and the procession moved on, guarded by two thousand military. As they proceeded, Blum was much affected, and wept; but he was soon calm again, and remarked to those with him, "Yes, Robert Blum has wept, but not the delegate Blum—he dies with a free conscience; but the husband, the father—I thought of my dear wife and children."

About half-past seven A.M. they arrived at the place of execution. Blum stepped out of the carriage, and inquired who was to shoot him; the answer was, the "Jäger." Blum replied, "I am glad of that; the 'Jäger' marks well. On the 26th of October they wounded me in the shoulder." As they were going to blindfold him, he expressed a wish to die "looking death in the face;" but the commanding officer told him that the "Jager" would aim better if they did not see his eyes. Blum answered, "When that is the case, I willingly submit." He then spoke his last words, "I die for German freedom: for that I have fought. My country, forget me not!" As is the custom, the Provost begged three times for mercy; after which nine men stepped forward and fired: the two first balls struck him—one in the eye, and the other on the left side of the breast.

On Monday, the news arrived in Leipsic, and caused much sensation. In the evening, a great town's meeting was held in the Odeon, when many resolutions were passed, among which were—"That all friends of Blum should wear signs of mourning, either in their hats or on their breasts" "To bring the corpse of Blum to Leipsic"—"annually to celebrate his death." After the meeting, the people marched in great numbers to the Austrian Consul's residence, and pulled down his coat of arms, and carried it to the market-place, where they first hung it upon a lamp-post, and afterwards trampled upon it, and smashed it to pieces. The mob then went to the Café Français, the proprietor of which is a known enemy to Blum, and revenged themselves by demolishing all his windows; and, perhaps, would have proceeded to greater violence, had not the Communa Guard arrived, upon which they dispersed. Since then, the town has remained tranquil. A subscription-committee has been formed for the benefit of Blum's widow and four children.

Such has been the end of a man of great talent; though, I believe, of humble birth and self-education. Originally he was "candle snuffer" at the theatre in this town, afterwards cashier. At one time he followed the trade of "cooper." He was a man of very singular personal appearance, and, I might say, rather repugnant. 'Tis a pity he did not exercise his talents in a more likely manner to be of benefit to his fellow-countrymen. I believe his summary execution (which they call "murder") has caused feelings of dissatisfaction in almost every breast. To-morrow there is to be a funeral ceremony or "todtenfeier" here. If anything of interest takes place, I will send you an account.

Yours very faithfully, J. A. BAKER.

BURNING OF HATFIELD'S MILL, AT YORK.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING,

THE ILLUSTRATED

LONDON ALMANACK

FOR 1849,

Being the Fifth Annual Issue of this most beautifully embellished and useful Almanack. Illustrated by RICHARD DOYLE, H. FOSTER, &c.; and finely engraved by DALZIEL, VIZETELLY, &c. Country Scenes, by THOMAS MILLER; besides a variety of useful Tables usually pub' shed in Almanacks. The Astronomical Department by JAMES GLAISHER, Esq., F.R.A.S., and of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich.

Published by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, London.

 Country orders supplied for cash only.

SOCIETY FOR ENCOURAGEMENT OF ARTS AND MANUFACTURES

PRESIDENT—H.R.H. PRINCE ALBERT, F.R.S.

The NINETY-FIFTH SESSION WEDNESDAY EVENING, the 29th inst., at 8.—Mr. Glynn's paper, "On Hydraulic Pressure Engines," will be read; and Mr. Statte's New Electric Light will be exhibited.

The LARGE MODEL ROOM for Exhibition of Machinery and Mechanical Inventions having been re-arranged during the Vacation, will be thrown open on Wednesday Evening at seven o'clock.

The LIST OF PREMIUMS for Subjects of BRITISH MANUFACTURES, DECORATIVE ARTS, and MECHANICAL INVENTIONS, offered annually by the Society for Encouragement of Arts and Manufactures, may be had GRATIS on application at the Society's House.

The ANNUAL EXHIBITION OF SELECT SPECIMENS OF BRITISH ARTS and MANUFACTURES will be opened in the large Hall of the Society of Arts, in John street, Adelphi in the beginning of March. Subjects for Exhibition should be sent in on or before the first Monday or Tuesday in February.

The NEW VOLUMES of TRANSACTIONS of the Society for Encouragement of Arts and Manufactures will be ready for delivery at Christmas.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER HALL.—On FRIDAY Week, DECEMBER 8, will be repeated Handel's Oratorio, MESSIAH. Principal Vocal Performers, Miss Birch, Miss Dolby, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Mr. H. Phillips. The Band, on a greatly increased scale, will consist of above 700 Performers. Conductor, Mr. Costa.—Tickets, 5s.; Reserved Seats in the Area or Gallery, 7s. each; the Area in front of the principal Music gallery, at the office of the Society, No. 6, Exeter Hall, or of Mr. ROWLEY, 53 Charing-cross. THOMAS BREWER, Hon. Sec.

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY-LANE.

M. JULLIEN'S CONCERTS.

LAST WEEK BUT TWO.

GOD SAVE THE QUEEN and

THE ARMY QUADRILLE

EVERY NIGHT.

M. JULLIEN has the honour to announce that having obtained the kind permission of the Commanding Officers of the Royal Guards for the attendance of their Military Bands until further orders,

The Band of her Majesty's 1st Life Guards,
The Band of her Majesty's Royal Horse Guards, Blue,
The Band of her Majesty's Grenadier Guards, and
The Band of her Majesty's Coldstream Guards, will therefore continue to take part in the grand performances of the National Anthem and the British Army Quadrille every night until further notice.

The Programme during the week will also include the Overtures to "William Tell," "Semiramide," "Der Freischütz," "Zauberflöte," "Anacreon," and "La Caravane Memaite;" Leslie's Music to "Macbeth," Spohr's Symphony, "The Power of Sound," Mozart's "Jupiter," Beethoven's "Pastoral," and Haydn's "Surprise." Symphony, &c. Solos by Herr Koenig, Mr. Richardson, Signor Cioffi, Mr. Lazarus, the Messrs. Distin's Male Sextet, &c. He r Koenig will play M. Raoul's New Valse. Also, for the first time, an entirely new Polka, composed by M. Jullien, entitled "The Drum Polka."

The Concerts Commence at Eight o'Clock.

GRAND BAL MASQUE

M. JULLIEN'S ANNUAL GRAND BAL MASQUE will take place on MONDAY DEC 18

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—A LECTURE on the PHILOSOPHY of an EMPTY BOTTLE by Dr Ryan, daily, at Half-past Three, half-past Seven, and Monday Wednesday, and Friday at one, on the intervening Evenings on Visit at Two o'Clock. The Microscope, Light, by Dr. Archbutler. A Lecture on Pneumatics half-past One and Three o'Clock daily. The Developer's Week with Electrical Lecture on the Chronometer. The Fire Team sports by Hide at High O'Clock. Diver and Diving-Bell. Working Models explained.—Admission, 1s.; Schools, Half-price

THE REV. GEORGE GILFILLAN, Author of "Gallery of Literary Portra's," &c., will LECTURE at EXETER HALL on THURSDAY Evening, Dec 14 at 8 o'Clock precisely, for the funds of the EARLY CLOSING ASSOCIATION.—Tickets 5s.; 3s. and 2s.—Can be had at No. 9, Exeter Hall; at Messrs Seeley's, Hatchard's and other places, as per bills Offices, Strand. JOHN LILWALL, Sec.

SMITHFIELD CLUB (1848) CATTLE SHOW.—The ANNUAL EXHIBITION of PRIZE CATTLE, ROOTS SEEDS IMPLEMENTS &c. 8th, 9th, 6th, and 9th of DECEMBER. BAZAAR, KING-STREET PORTMAN-SQUARE. The Prize Animals remain for the special attention to the general completion of the Show, including the time to view this Natural Exhibition with perfect facility. Open from Daylight till 8 o'Clock in the Evening. Admission, One Shilling.

WEIPPERT'S SOIREES DANSANTES, PRINCESS'S CONCERT ROOMS MONDAY, NOV 27, and every Monday. Subscriber of Two Guineas is entitled to an admission for home, and lady or gentleman, to all the Soirées during the season. Private Boxes for Six and Eight Persons. The Soirées will be conducted by the Mr. Mr. Weippert's Quadrilles and Supper by Mr. Payne. Commence at Ten o'clock precisely. Tickets and programmes at St. John-square, and of Mr. Cocks, 6d, Great Marlborough-street

WALHALLA.—SALLE DE VALENTINO, Leicester-square. [illegible] Mr. Hughes has the honour to announce that he has made [illegible] Grand Ball on the occasion of the Marriage of Her Majesty the Queen of Spain with His Royal Highness the Duke of Cadiz. The arrangements are entirely under the superintendence of Mr. Hughes, and will be found to combine elegance, comfort, and economy. The Rooms are decorated in the most splendid manner, and will be lighted with the Patent Gas Chandeliers. Dancing to commence at Nine o'clock precisely. Tickets, Single Ticket, 10s. 6d.; Double Ticket, 15s.; Family Ticket, admitting Four, 1l. 1s.; Quarter-Night Tickets, 5s. Refreshments of the best description will be provided in the Supper Room. Private Boxes, 2l. 2s. and 3l. 3s. Doors open at Eight o'clock. Dancing to commence at Nine precisely.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, Nov. 26—Twenty-second Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 27—Princess Mary Adelaide, daughter of the Duke of Cambridge, born, 1833.
TUESDAY, 28.—Venus is near the Moon.
WEDNESDAY, 29—The Sun rises at 7h. 43m., and sets at 3h. 53m.
THURSDAY, 30—St. Andrew. Venus sets at 5h. 56m. P.M.
FRIDAY, Dec. 1.—Mars rises near [illegible] at 3h. 10m. A.M.
SATURDAY, 2.—Jupiter rises at [illegible] 22m P.M., and souths at 4h. 55m A.M.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING 1 DEC 2

Sunday	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday
M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.
h m h m	h m h m	h m h m	h m h m	h m h m	h m h m	h m h m
3 5 3 30	3 49 4 13	5 13 5 39	6 3 6 29	6 54 7 19	7 46 8 10	8 39 9 3

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"A Correspondent."—The word Aneroid, applied to the new Barometer, is taken from two Greek words, signifying without fluid, which is the principle of the invention.

"An Old Subscriber."—A letter addressed to the Secretary at the Lancashire Public School Association, at Manchester, will be promptly attended to.

"A Western Subscriber" is recommended to advertise; say on the Church and State Question.

"L. C. L."—At the Secretary of State's Office, Dublin.

"A Subscriber."—Plate glass is employed for its greater durability.

"G. J. Gibson, is correct.

"Brutus," Chester.—Sentence of death has been passed upon Mr. Smith O'Brien, and not yet formally commuted.

"Amicus."—We cannot tell.

"J. P." Boston.—Declined.

"C. E." Dublin, should apply to the Russian Consul, in London.

"Hereford."—See "Marshall's Military Miscellanies."

"Z. Z."—Address, the Royal Observatory, Greenwich.

"R. S."—We shall be glad to see the Sketches

"[illegible]—We do not recollect any work written specially upon the [illegible] and Abuse of Printing."

"J. W. F." Lancashire.—We had rather not give the recommendation

"A Constant Subscriber."—Wrongbox.—Snipes are not game.

"An Old Subscriber," Surbiton.—The variation is unavoidable, from its being regulated by a day's mean

"A Subscriber."—[illegible] musical work in question. The expense will be [illegible]

"T. B." Manchester, is thanked. We could not, however, find room.

"J. T."—Trongate, Glasgow.—Thanks

"R. H."—Declined

"D. H.," Southampton.—A work is published at Dublin, entitled "The Art of Tanning and Currying Leather," &c. "J. J." is thanked for this information.

"Addiscot."—Lace-pest.—Kelly's "Universal Cambist" is the completest work on Exchanges.

"J. C. D. B."—Mlle. Jenny Lind [illegible] peared in London as Alice, in "Robert le Diable."

"Pastor" is not likely to [illegible] wealth by the investment in question.

"Z. R."—Belsamer—[illegible]—and

"J. J."—Scott's "History of Mad e Europe."

"Fulgor" should apply to a music-seller.

"A Subscriber."—The dry and wet bulb thermometers may be procured at Bennett's, Cheapside, with their index errors determined by Mr. Glaisher, at the price of [illegible]. The adjustable apparatus, touch is not shown in the engraving in the last volume of the Registrar-General, the results of such observations are shown for many places, as any one of which the instruments can be seen in action.

"M.," of Nottingham.—"F." of Manchester, "W." of Stonyhurst, and others, who have favoured us with descriptions of the Auroræ of the past week, are thanked.

"Παντητης."—The most succinct account of astronomical discoveries during the past ten years will be found in the monthly notices of the Royal Astronomical Society, or in Schumacher's "Astronomische Nachrichten." We cannot find room to give you the places of Neptune; but Mr. Glaisher will do so, by writing to him. Dorset, 13, Dartmouth-terrace, Lewisham.

"Registrarius."—The Registrar-General's Quarterly Reports are not on sale. The Meteorological portion of the last report was forwarded to you by the author. Lord Rosse has published a short paper in the "Philosophical Transactions" of the appearance of some Nebulæ."

"S. O."—To your first question, yes: to your second no.

"Astra."—A telescope of moderate power will show Jupiter's Satellites, and some of the larger double stars; one of great power is necessary to show the more delicate double stars. If a telescope be wanted at a moderate price, wait till one presents itself; or, otherwise, apply to Dollond, 59, St. Paul's Church-yard; or, at Simms's, Fleet-street.

"F. L. G."—We will investigate the point connected with the descent of the Dreys of Breulle, and endeavour to supply the information sought.

"Ignoramus."—We do not know of any other family of the name of Lygon besides that of the Earl of Beauchamp. Refer to Nash's "Worcestershire" for full details of the pedigree.

"B. A. B."—Henrietta Maria, Duchess of Orleans, became, in her issue, heiress of King Charles I., at the extinction of the descendants of King James II.; and consequently her representative, the Duke of Modena, is entitled with all the rights and privileges belonging to the representative of an heiress. The Queen of Bohemia, from whom Queen Victoria descends, was not an heiress either in her own person or in the person of her representative, because descendants have always existed of her brother, Charles I.

"Nonus."—It is somewhat doubtful as to the legality of taking a second Christian name as confirmation. Apply to your Bishop.

"John."—A marriage by the Registrar is perfect and legal in every respect.

"G. W."—To be entitled legally to bear a cross, a person must show his descent from some party whose right is acknowledged at the Heralds' Office, or must be a grantee of the cross himself.

"A Constant Reader."—The Archbishop of Canterbury takes precedence of all Dukes who are not of the Blood-Royal.

"J. P."—Apply at the Treasurer's of London.

"Laura."—The use of arms, however illegally borne, does not subject the bearer to any fine.

"Ash."—The daughters of an heiress are as much entitled as the sons to quarter their mother's arms.

"A Subscriber."—The usage of a seal or ring, with the arms depicted, would render the wearer liable to the tax on armorial bearings.

"R."—Proper, in Heraldry, means the natural colour.

BOOKS, &c. RECEIVED DURING THE WEEK.

Burke's Trials of the Aristocracy.——The Song of Songs, illuminated.——The Royal Family, by C. Gilbraith.——The Consular Service.——Cook, on the Teeth.——History of the Reigning Family of Lahore.

Music.—Marian.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1848.

THE remarkable struggle between the King of Prussia and the Constituent Assembly still proceeds. The King, whose tendencies are liberal, and who has studied history in an earnest spirit, is represented as willing to yield so far to the Assembly, or to the remains of it now sitting in holes and corners in Berlin, as to revoke the decree removing it to Brandenburg. The Ministry, however, with a pertinacity only to be equalled by that of the Polignac Administration in 1830, urges no surrender; and M. Manteuffel, the colleague of the Count de Brandenburg, and even more unpopular than he, considers that the dissolution, rather than the prorogation or removal of the Assembly, would be the most effectual means of comb ting the Revolution. The German papers teem with rumours and conjectures on the subject these, however contradictory in all other respects, agree uniformly in representing the King himself as being adverse from the policy of unqualified resistance. The dissolution of the Assembly would be a step of this kind, and one so fraught with danger, whether it were legal and constitutional or the reverse, that we may well believe the King of Prussia will not readily accede to it. An ordinary Parliament may be dissolved by any constitutional lawyer holds that a constituent assembly called together in a time of revolution for one object—the passing of a Constitution—exists independently both of the King and of the people until its work be completed. Neither the one nor the other has the right to interfere with it. The specific task to be accomplished marks its duration. The point as to the power of the King to prorogue and remove such an Assembly is not so clear; but in the case point that the contest, big with the fate of the Prussian Monarchy, has arisen. But the most remarkable incident of this contest is the quietude of the people of Berlin. It marks an era in Continental revolutions. It seems as if the people of the Continent were gradually becoming aware of the fact, that nothing is to be gained by physical force, and that revolutions made by violence, in the name of liberty, uniformly lead to the destruction of liberty, and to the establishment of a worse despotism than any which they may have displaced. Had the people of Berlin rushed to arms in defence of the Assembly, and waged a street warfare against the King's troops, they would long ago have been defeated, and the solution of the difficulties of the Prussian nation would have been indefinitely postponed. The Assembly, on its part, grows bolder from impunity. Having decreed the payment of taxes to be illegal, it threatens a proclamation to the army, declaring that orders emanating from a Ministry lying under a charge of high treason are no longer binding. Such a proclamation, however, would, in all probability, lead to the immediate arrest of the members signing it, and to their trial before the military rulers, who are the sole law-makers and law-givers in a town in a state of siege, and would be as illjudged a proceeding on their part as the dissolution of the Assembly would be on that of the King.

While such are the relative positions of the King and the Assembly, the provinces—upon whose conduct the ultimate decision will rest—are sending in addresses, many of them in support of the King, but the majority, as far as can be gathered from statements in the journals, in support of the Assembly. Unaided by the public opinion of the provinces, Berlin, unlike Paris, cannot rule the whole country; and hence the anxiety with which the residuum of the Assembly looks for manifestations in its favour. "Judging," says a Berlin letter of the 19th inst., "by the host of addresses to the National Assembly, it would appear that all Silesia, and nearly all the towns in the provinces of East Prussia, Pomerania, the March of Brandenburg, and the Rhenish provinces, are in favour of that Assembly. On the other hand, numerous addresses to the King have been forwarded from the agricultural districts of those provinces, and from Westphalia. In the Grand Duchy of Posen, the German inhabitants are in favour of the Crown, t o Polish against it." It is also stated that numbers of the inhabitants of Cologne, Aix-la-Chapelle, Dusseldorf, and Coblentz had declared their determination to abide by the decision of the National Assembly.

THE execution of Blum, the Leipzig bookseller, by the orders of Prince Windischgrätz, has, as was foreseen, introduced a new difficulty into German politics. M. Fröbel, his colleague of the Frankfort Assembly, and deputed with him to bear to the Viennese, after the flight of the Emperor, the resolution of the Assembly that Vienna had deserved well of Germany, has escaped the fate of M. Blum, although condemned to be hanged. In the sitting of that Assembly on the 18th, he detailed the circumstances under which Blum was executed, and by which he himself was set free; from which it would appear that a violent protest against his imprisonment, signed by Blum, and handed in to the military authorities, expedited if it did not occasion his execution. The protest was delivered in at four o'clock in the afternoon of the 8th inst.; at six o'clock M. Blum was tried, and at half-past seven he was shot. Fröbel, who had not signed the protest, and who was, besides, the author of a moderate pamphlet on the difficulties of the Austrian Empire, some portions of which were thought creditable to his judgment, was detained in prison for four days and then set at liberty. In the interim, Prince Windischgrätz was doubtless made acquainted with the sensation created in Frankfort and throughout Germany by the execution of Blum, and deemed it imprudent to exasperate the German mind beyond the limits of Austria by taking the life of a second deputy.

The Frankfort Assembly has almost unanimously passed a decree in which it protests "before all Germany against the arrest and execution of the deputy Robert Blum, which took place in contempt of the law of the Empire of the 30th of September, and summons the Ministry of the Empire to take the most energetic measures to cause those persons to be tried and punished who took part, directly or indirectly, in his arrest and execution." Prince Windischgrätz will personally treat this resolution with contempt; but he cannot shut his eyes to the fact, that a collision of this kind with the Central Diet is both inconvenient to Austria and dangerous to the Germanic Federation.

POSTSCRIPT.

DEATH OF VISCOUNT MELBOURNE.

Intelligence arrived from town at a late hour last night of the death of Lord Melbourne.

The gossips of the clubs have been amusing themselves for some days with speculations upon the possible consequences of the Premier having lately shared the common lot, and caught a cold (the effects of which, we are happy to say, are rapidly disappearing); and the rumours thence arising, after floating long enough in their original atmosphere to acquire completeness by repetition, have, in due course, found their way into the columns of the Morning Post. We are enabled to state, from some confidential, that the rumours alluded to have no foundation whatever—that no change of Ministry, either that suggested or any other, is, or has been, in contemplation.—Globe of yesterday.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

GERMAN STATES.

The Archduke-Regent has addressed a proclamation to the people of Germany an address, in which, with reference to the present critical state of affairs in Prussia, he says:—"Prussians! the Imperial Assembly at Frankfort represents the German nation in the aggregate, and its decision is supreme law (oberstes gesetz) to all. Germans! I will act in full accordance with the Imperial Assembly. I will not allow the resolution which, by preventing the levy of the taxes in Prussia, endangers the prosperity of the whole of Germany, to be carried into effect. I will, however, enforce the fulfilment of the pledges given for the security of the rights and liberties of the Prussian people: they shall remain intact, as well as those of our German brothers."

In all the northern cities of Germany subscriptions have been opened for the widow and four children of Robert Blum, who was shot at Vienna. On the 22d a grand funeral ceremony was celebrated at Hamburg, at which all the members of the democratic clubs were present. The coldness of the weather has delivered Hamburgh from the cholera. Cases of mortality are rare.

On the 17th the military authorities at Vienna published a statement relative to the execution of Robert Blum and Messenhauer, in order to meet the malevolent reports prevalent respecting those transactions. The document then goes on to state:—

"Robert Blum, of Leipsic, notorious as one of the most active leaders of the riots in October last, was, in pursuance of the state of siege proclaimed for Vienna and its environs on the 20th of October, arrested and brought before a courtmartial after the entrance of the Imperial troops into the capital.

"In the examination consequent upon the trial, he was convicted by his own confession, and by the evidence of witnesses upon oath, of having, on the 23rd of October, fanned, by an inflammatory address, the armed insurrection in the Leile of Vienna, and having taken part in the same with weapons in his hand, as leader of a company of the Corps d'Elite.

* * * * *

"Wenzel Messenhauser, a native of Prossnitz, in Moravia, thirty-five years of age, a Roman Catholic, a single man, and an author, was convicted at the court-martial examination, by his own confession, as well as by overt acts, that he, in his quality of Professor of Psychology in the University of the National Guard, incited the armed insurrection in Vienna, its environs, and several provinces, by placards and summonses to the Landsturm; that he, after the announcement of the state of siege of the city of Vienna, its suburbs and environs, by means of a proclamation of his Serene Highness Field-Marshal Prince Windischgrätz, under date of the 20th and 22nd of October, did issue and propound a further call, on the 23rd of October, to rebellion against the troops sent by his Majesty the Constitutional Emperor against Vienna for the restoration of peace and order, and endeavoured to seduce the said troops to a breach of their faith; that, finally, he, on the 26th of October, did, by a further call, for defence of Vienna to the uttermost against the approaching troops, and thereby energetically continued the armed resistance. Nay, that he, even after the conclusion of the capitulation for the surrender of the city to the General Field-Marshal on the 30th, at noon, circulated numerous copies of the bulletins respecting the pretended victorious progress of the Hungarian army announced already on the 28th of October, and thereby induced the breach of this already concluded capitulation." For those crimes, the statement declares they had been sentenced to be hanged, but that, subsequently, death by shooting was substituted.

ITALY.

ROME.—The Paris papers state that the news of the death of M. Rossi is fully confirmed. After being stabbed in the neck with a dagger, he advanced only a few steps and fell dead.

The following letter, in the Alba of Florence, of the 14th, throws some light on the feeling with which the Romans regarded Rossi:—"The conduct of the Rossi Cabinet is anti-national. It intends to inaugurate here the reign of terror. The city is full of troops; reports of conspiracies are artfully circulated, in imitation of Guizot. The police, on an order of the Minister Rossi, sent for M. Vincent Carbonelli, a Neapolitan, and enjoined him to leave Rome in 24 hours. Carbonelli protested, invoking the right of every Italian, furnished with a regular passport, to reside quietly in a constitutional state of Italy, so long as he committed no violation of the laws."

COURT AND HAUT TON.

On Sunday morning the Queen and the Court attended divine service in the private chapel of the Castle. The Hon. and Rev. C. L. Courtenay officiated.

On Tuesday, the eighth anniversary of the birthday of the Princess Victoria Adelaide (the Princess Royal) was celebrated at Windsor. Soon after daylight in the morning the band of the 2nd Life Guards assembled on the eastern terrace, and performed several appropriate pieces of music beneath the windows of the private apartments. The joy bells, both of the Church and of the Castle towns rung at intervals throughout the day, and Royal salutes were fired by the Corporation guns, and also on the Belvedere battery in the Great Park.

DEPARTURE OF THE COURT TO THE ISLE OF WIGHT.

On Wednesday morning, the Queen, with Prince Albert and the Royal children, left Windsor Castle for Osborne, Isle of Wight. Her Majesty was attended by the Marchioness of Douro, Hon. Miss Berkeley, Colonel Wemyss, Colonel Buckley, Captain the Hon. A. Gordon, and Colonel the Hon. C. B. Phipps. On the present occasion there was a considerable alteration in the usual route. Instead of travelling by road from Windsor to Farnborough, a distance of seventeen miles, the route was from Windsor to Slough, only two miles; and at Slough by special train along the Great Western Railway to Reading, and thence by that company's new line to Basingstoke, where the Court quitted the Great Western line for the South-western, and thence proceeded to Gosport as heretofore. By this new arrangement a saving of an hour and a half was effected, with no other inconvenience than may be occasioned by removing from the broad-gauge carriages of the Great Western Railway to those of the South-western. The Court arrived at Osborne shortly before 2 o'clock.

THE VACANT GARTER.—It is understood that her Majesty has graciously intimated her intention to bestow the vacant Garter upon the Earl of Clarendon.

SALE OF PRINCE ALBERT'S STOCK.—Prince Albert's annual sale of live stock lately took place at Norfolk Farm, Berkshire. There was a large attendance of dealers, and the animals fetched good prices. Ten stock sold, independently of yearling fillies, included 73 fat Southdown ewes, 83 two-tooth ewes of the same breed, 11 short-horn barren cows, 4 Aldorney cows in calf, 20 Welch cows in calf, 13 Welch heifers, 21 short-horn heifers, besides half bred Hereford heifers, and a very fine Hereford ox.

GOVERNMENT AND RAILWAY STEAMERS. A trial of speed has lately taken place between the steam-packets certain by the Government, for the conveyance of the mails between Holyhead and Kingstown, and those employed for the passenger transit of the railway company. From an official return of the performances of the respective vessels, in their passages between Holyhead and Kingstown, for three mo ths, ending October last, it appears that the Government steamers have been beaten by the railway steamers, in similar seas and circumstances, on an average of 22 m nutes and 33 seconds in each trip. The average run of the Caradoc, Government steamer, from Holyhead to Kingstown, has been 4h. 28m., and of the St. Columba, Government steamer, 4h 32m. The average run of the railway company's steamers has been, of the Anglia, 3h. 50m., and of the Scotia, 3h. 58m.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

SOCIETY OF ARTS.—On Wednesday, the Joint ordinary meeting for the present session of the Society was held at the society's house, John-street, Adelphi; J. Walker, Esq., C.E., Vice-President, in the chair. The secretary read the address of the council, from which it appeared that the society was progressing, both in subscribers and finances. The certificate issued for the year was 1466, and the expenditure somewhat less; including an ample provision for the removal of the annual rewards. The prizes for the ensuing year contained premiums to the amount of nearly £600. The council called especial attention to the fact that two of the subjects for competition had been selected by Prince Albert, who had himself dictated the subject, and would distribute the prizes. Mr. Twining, a member of the society, had also offered a prize of £50, on a subject of great importance as connected with our manufactures of metal and glass. The annual exhibition of British manufactures would be continued this year, and preparations were making for the triennial exhibition for which Government had promised the quadrangle of Somerset House, or some area of similar dimensions.

BAKERS' ASSIZE AND THE PRICE OF BREAD.—On Monday evening a meeting of the ten bakers was held at the London Coffee House, Ludgate-hill, for the purpose of taking in consideration the best means to be adopted in order to regulate the price of bread in the metropolis, and to form an association under the title of of "The Bakers' Assize Association," to carry that object into effect. Mr. Neville having been called to the chair, stated that it was de-irable some steps should be adopted, not only for their own protection, but for the benefit of the public, who, in buying what they considered a cheap article, are supplied with food which is of a deleterious quality, and highly injurious to health. He knew that a large quantity of bread sold was not fit for human consumption. In the course of last week, in the neighbourhood of Shoreditch, the quarters loaf fell a penny in price, though the price of flour had fallen. The report of a previous preliminary meeting was then read, which stated that it had been resolved to form a central board, having deputies from districts in the metropolis to meet every Monday in Mark-lane. Three districts were formed in Westminster, St. Luke's, and the East of London; and from the latter a communication was read, stating the determination of the bakers in co-operating with the views of the central board.—Mr. Brooks, the secretary, observed that nearly eight hundred bakers of London about one-third of the whole number—in the course of the last year, had been reduced to a state of insolvency. In the year 1814, when the Lord Mayor regulated the price of flour, they were allowed 13s. 4d. on the sack. They would now be satisfied with half that remuneration. Various resolutions having been adopted, subscriptions were entered into to carry out the object in view, and the meeting separated.

WESTMINSTER RAGGED SCHOOL.—On Wednesday evening the annual general meeting of the supporters of the Westminster Ragged School was held in the committee Chapel, James-street, Buckingham-gate. The Earl of Radnor took the chair. The report stated that in the proverbially degraded district in which the school was situate, a great many child.en who lived by pursuing dishonest courses, instructed in and provided with the means of living honestly. When they first entered the school they were hardly controllable, and not unfrequently used violence towards the teachers; but the system of discipline adopted, and the rewards given for good behaviour, had entirely changed their conduct. The average attendance of boys was 150, and of girls about 70, all of whom were instructed in reading, writing, elementary arithmetic, and the Scriptures. The receipts of the institution during the year amounted to £69 13s. 2d., and the expenditure left a balance in the hands of the treasurer.—The report was adopted.

BATHS AND WASH-HOUSES.—It appears, from a statement published by the ASSOCIATION for providing Baths and Wash-houses for the Labouring Classes in the North-west District of London, that, from the opening of the establishment to this date there have been—bathers, 284,994; washers, dryers, ironers, &c., 97,484; and vidiuals washed for, 389,872. During the five weeks ending November 12, 1848, there were—bathers, 7011, being 1306 more than in the corresponding period of 1847; washers, dryers, ironers, &c., 6516, being 918 more than during the same period last year; and individuals washed for, 26,064, being an increase of 7552. Since the 1st of January, 1848, there have been cleansed, unwashed, and otherwise purified, 371 rooms, 2000 staircases, 321 closets, 228 passages, and 102 areas. The receipts have been £11,975 9s. 10d., and the expenditure £2248 9s. 3d., while there has been paid in reduction of debt £2730

THE BISHOP OF LONDON AND INTRA-MURAL BURIAL. On Wednesday, a deputation from St. Martin's-in-the-Fields parish waited upon the Bishop of London, at his palace, in Fulham, respecting the disgracefully and dangerously crowded state of Russell-court graveyard. Mr Lancaster explained the situation of the graveyard, surrounded as it is with crowded habitations; and his Lordship then assured them that he would issue his mandate for the immediate closing of the graveyard, unless sufficient cause to the contrary be shown

THE TEMPORARY BUILDINGS AT THE HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT.—The temporary buildings erected at the south-west end of the New Houses of Parliament, which served as the entrance to the committee-rooms of the Lords, in the river front of the New Houses, have been pulled down and cleared away, as have also some portions of the wooden buildings erected in the rear of Westminster Hall, and the cloisters and all communication with the New Houses through New Palace-yard has been stopped up entirely; and a new entrance has been constructed from the entrance to the House of Lords, communicating with the various offices connected with the House of Commons. It is intended that the whole of the temporary buildings in New Palace-yard, formerly used as committee-rooms, will be pulled down before the meeting of Parliament.

EXTENSIVE FIRES.—On Thursday morning, between six and seven, the neighbourhood of the Kingsland-road was the scene of a most destructive and alarming fire, which in a very brief period reduced to ashes some thousand pounds' worth of property. The conflagration commenced in the extensive premises of wood and cable-cover manufactory, Watts'-building, near the Canal-bridge, in the Kingsland-road, belonging to Mr Lawson, and quickly enveloped the exterior of the building in flames. The occupants of some adjoining tenements, on the fire approaching them, rushed forth into the open road, and almost immediately afterwards the houses took fire. The efforts of the fire men were, however, chiefly directed to confining the fire to the manufactory, which, with its contents, was utterly destroyed. The accident is supposed to have resulted from spontaneous combustion. Mr. Lawson was insured in the offices of the adjoining premises were insured.—On Thursday night, between eight and nine o'clock, a fire broke out upon the premises belonging to Mr. Fowler, a carpenter and builder, carrying on business at Pimlico-street, Bermondsey. Engines were quickly in attendance, and there being a good supply of water, the men succeeded in getting the flames extinguished; not, however, until considerable damage was done to the premises and their contents.—On the same night, about an hour previously, a fire was discovered in the premises occupied by Mr. W. A. Coger, the agent to Messrs. Parker and Co., boot merchants, No. 23, Newgate-street. It began in the upper warehouse on the first floor; but, owing to the timely assistance of the inmates, and firemen from Farringdon-street brigade-station, the flames were confined to the warehouse in which they originated. A spark from a lighted candle, used by some carpenters at work in the warehouse, it is presumed, was the cause of the outbreak

DEATHS, DEATHS, 606, FOR THE WEEK ENDING Nov. 18.—The births registered in the 100 cpis and suburbs during the above week numbered 1291, of which 658 were males, and 633 females, being less than the number of the preceding week by 76. The deaths during the above week numbered 1188 (611 males, and 577 females), being 34 more than the weekly average, and 98 more than the number of the preced ng week. It will be seen that the births of the week exceeded the deaths by 103. Of the deaths, 386 are from zymotic diseases, being 116 above the average; from tubercular diseases, 155, being 29 above the average; diseases of the brain, &c., 123, being 4 below the average; diseases of the heart and blood-vessels, 30, being 8 below the average; diseases of the lungs and other organs of respiration, 185, being 37 below the average; diseases of the stomach, liver, and other organs of digestion, 73, being 9 above the average; from small-pox, 28, being 5 above the average; measles, 15, being 20 below the average; scarlatina, 119, being 72 above the average; hooping-cough, 95, being 8 below the average; diarrhœa, 25, being 5 above the average; dysentery, 7, being 2 above the average; from cholera, 54, being 53 above the average; typhus, 70, being 20 above the average; consumption, 110, being 24 below the average. The details given of the 54 cases of cholera were not otherwise remarkable than as showing that most of them occurred where the drainage was deficient We are glad to observe, from the official statement just issued, that the cholera in London is on the decline. The tables show that, for the week ending November 18th, the decrease has been less than one-third of the rate preceding The deaths from cholera since October 14 have been:—In the west districts, 18 ; north, 12; central, 5; east, 34 ; south, 221 ; in all, 290. It will be observed that of the deaths from cholera not fewer than 221 have occurred on the south side of the Thames.

THE FRENCH INSURGENTS OF JUNE.—The committee on the bill relating to the transportation of the insurgents of June to Algeria has brought in its report. By a decree, dated the 9th of July, eight military commissions were instituted for investigating the cases, and deciding which of the Communist accused should be discharged, which should be transported, and which should be brought before a court-martial. Of the persons accused, 6374 were set at liberty, 4348 were ordered to remain in custody, and 205 were sent to be tried by court-martial. Of those ordered for transportation, all have been sent to the different parts of the Republic, except about 200, who are still in the prisons of Paris. Between the 25th of September and the 5th of October the Commission of Clemency has examined the documents relating to 4348 convicts, and had marked 951 as being worthy the clemency of the Government. As to the question of the term of transportation for participation in insurrection, the Committee of the Commission has expressed an opinion that there will be no danger in reducing it from ten to five years. After five years, the convicts will be at liberty to return to France, but it is probable that the greater number of them will not avail themselves of this liberty. "Become proprietor of land in Algeria," says the report, "having established there his family and his domestic hearth, and made it the centre of his affections and his interests, the convict will consider Algeria as his country." The committee proposes also to authorize the fathers and mothers of convicts to follow them, to encourage marriages, and to legitimatize children, so that they may hope to inherit the name and property of their fathers.

GERMAN EMIGRANTS SAVED FROM THE SHIP "BURGUNDY."—Under the auspices of the Mayor of Ipswich, £151 has been subscribed for the relief of these unfortunate persons.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"A Constant Reader," Kilkenny.—Your notation is unexplicable. The celebrated Indian Problem is published monthly on the wrapper of the Chess-Players' Chronicle. If that is the position you mean, we will give you the solution upon your writing to say so.

"Pessus."—A Pawn, on reaching the 8th square, may always be exchanged for a Queen or any other piece.

"S. A.," Leeds.—It is too easy: try again and again, taking for your models the best positions of Bolton, D'Orville. Mendheim, &c.

"J. T." Blackburn.—See the notice to "A Constant Reader."

"H. W.," Isle of Wight, may be assured that "Great Mogul" cherishes no little animosities; and in bygones, now would fain dwell only on what is pleasant to remember, in token of which he cordially accepts the proffered cutlery.

"Dix." You should join the recently established Chess Club at Carlisle.

"F. W. C." Received, with thanks

"A. Ambler."—No 388 cannot be solved in your way.

"H. B. P." 1. A King cannot Castle while in check. 2 He cannot Castle on that side on which his Rook has moved. 3. A Pawn, under certain restrictions, can take a Pawn en passant.

"G. A. B."—Look over more at Nos. 387 and 388.

"Cumro."—See the notice to "W."

"America."—It is highly ingenious, and shall appear on a diagram shortly.

"Rev. C. N. L."—Somewhat crowded, but will find early insertion.

"Medicus"—A player can have two or more Queens on the board at one time.

"Bath Duo."—No 388 cannot be solved in two moves.

"F. P." "Alpha."—It must be done in four moves

"Mars" It forms a not unlegant three-move Enigma.

"W. W"—The solutions you require are, in No 375 1. Kt from Kt 7th to K 6th (ch) 2. B take Kt (ch). 3. R takes Kt. 4. P mates In No 382 the author gives—1. Kt to K B 5th (dis ch). B takes R. 2 Kt to Q 4th (ch). 3. Kt to K B 3d (ch). 4. Kt to K 4th (ch). 5. P mates.

"A. Z."—Will you favour us with a sight of the little Problem in question?

"J. T."—See the notice relative to "W. W." Try No. 385 again. It is quite correct

Solutions by "Alpha," "Bath Duo," "F. G. B.," "J. P.," "J. T.," Blackburn; "A. Ambler." "E. L." "H. K. A." "O. P." "S. A." "Spero." "A. G. M'C." "J. H." Isle of Wight; "Bath Duo," "Carlo Fidaro." "F. C." "W. G. L., "R. H. A." "J. B.," "H. V." "Peto." "H. T. T." "A. L. M." "Southill." "F. S." "F. W. M." "Ohio." "R. S. T." "A Beginner." Largan; "G. A. H., "Cumro." are correct. Those by "T. H." "Dereton," "D. C. L.," "R. L." "T. Y. P.," "G. T.," "Jona," "P. T.," "S. M. G.," "ycyraqpe," are wrong.

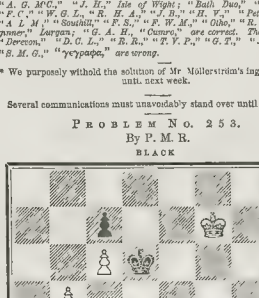
 We purposely withold the solution of Mr Mollerström's ingenious Problem until next week.

Several communications must unavoidably stand over until next week.

PROBLEM No. 253.

By P. M. R.

BLACK



WHITE

White, playing first, to mate in four moves.

MATCH OF CHESS BY CORRESPONDENCE.

BETWEEN THE LONDON AND AMSTERDAM CHESS-CLUBS.

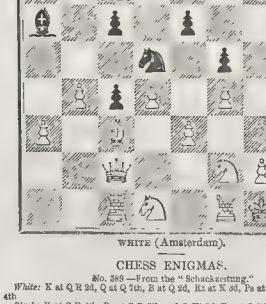
This contest having now arrived at a crisis of peculiar interest, we are induced to give the whole series of moves up to the time of our going to press.

WHITE (Amsterdam).	BLACK (London).	WHITE (Amsterdam).	BLACK (London).
1 P to Q 4th	P to K 3d	11 P to K 4th	Q Kt to Q 3d
2. P to Q B 4th	P to K B 4th	12. P to Q Kt 4th	K to R sq
3. Q Kt to B 3d	K Kt to B 3d	13 Q B to Q Kt 2d	Q R to Q Kt sq
4. P to K 3d	P to Q 3d	14. Q to Q B 2d	P to Q Kt 3d
5 K Kt to K R 3d	K B to K R 2d	15. P takes P	Q Kt takes P
6. P to K B 3d	P to Q B 3d	16. Q R to Q B sq	Q Kt to Q B 5th
7. K Kt to B 2d	P to Q 4th	17. K B takes Kt	Q P takes B
8. P to Q R 3d	Castles	18. Q Kt to Q sq	Q B to Q R 3d
9. K B to K 3d	K B to Q 3d	19. B to Q B 3d	Kt to Q 4th
10 P to Q B 4th	K B to Q B 2d	20. Cast :-

And London has to play.

For the benefit of Amateurs who may be desirous of studying the position, with out the trouble of playing the game from the beginning after every variation, we append a diagram which exhibits the situation of the belligerent forces up to the 20th move of Amsterdam inclusive

BLACK (London).



WHITE (Amsterdam).

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 389.—From the "Schachzeitung."

White: K at Q R 2d, Q at Q 7th, B at Q 4d, Kt at K 3d, Ps at Q Kt 3d and Q R 4th

Black: K at Q R 4th, Rs at Q B 6th and Q Kt 3d, Ps at Q 5th and Q B 2d.

White to play, and mate in four moves.

No 390.—By F. W. C.

White: K at his 2d, B at K sq, Kt at K Kt 4th.

Black: K at K R 8th, P at K Kt 3d.

White to play, and mate in five moves

No. 391.—By Mr A Lulman

White: K at Q R sq, R at Q 2d, B s. K B 2d and K Kt 4th, Kt at K 4th, P at K B 3d.

Black: K at his 6th, P at Q B 3d

White to play, and mate in three moves.

IRELAND.

THE STATE TRIALS.

WRITS OF ERROR.—On Saturday last, the Court of Queen's Bench gave judgment on the writ of error in the case of Mr. John Martin, now under sentence of transportation. The Judges were unanimous in rejecting the writ of error, and confirming the judgment of the Commission Court. The prisoner has now no alternative but an appeal to the House of Lords

THE CLONMEL PRISONERS.—On the previous day, the prisoners convicted at Clonmel were brought down to the Queen's Bench, to verify and bend in the writs of error. They all, considering the position, looked cheerful, and though pale, as from confinement, appeared to be in good health Having signed the writs, the Attorney-General requested time to consider the course he should adopt—whether he should demur to the errors, and thus turn the decision into one of law, or join in error, and take issue on the facts. The court, of course, granted this application, and on Saturday the Attorney-General joined in error, and the arguments were fixed for Tuesday last, on which day the prisoner's counsel opened his client's case. The arguments were not expected to be closed before the end of the week. The following are the grounds on which, in the case of Mr. Smith O'Brien, it was contended that judgment should be reversed :—

1 first—That the caption is insufficient, as it does not show that the Justices before whom the Special Session of Oyer and Terminer and General Gaol Delivery for the county of Tipperary was held had the authority in that behalf from said Sessions to take and try the indictment on which the plaintiff in error was convicted.

Second—That the five counts on which the plaintiff in error was convicted, are insufficient in law to support the judgment given against him, as that the matters therein stated are not treason in fact and

Third—That if they be treason, yet the several facts set forth in the said counts do not support said judgment; for not the said several facts in the said counts specially stated, or any or either of them, were therein respectively mentioned was levied in Ireland, and for or in aiding against the form of the statute, "in place of" against the form of the statute "the"

Fourth—That the judgment on the demurrer to the preliminary plea, pleaded by the plaintiff in error, should have been given for him, and not for the Crown

Fifth—That there was a mis-trial, inasmuch as it appears from the record that the plaintiff in error was not had delivered to him a copy of the indictment, and a list of the witnesses, ten days before his trial, pursuant to the statute; a enactment in such cases made and provided

Sixth—That the process under which the Jury was returned was irregular, and that a counterpart of it delivered to the plaintiff in error was not signed by the Sheriff, as appears to have been required by virtue of a law now in force, and not, as it ought to have been, by virtue of a particular precept, and, moreover, said writ appears not to have been in the form directed by the 3 and 4 William IV., chap. 91, sec. 1.

Seventh That the challenges to the panel by the Queen's Counsel, Bart. Hon. Frederick Ellis, Alexander Pelham, and Edward Litton, are not recorded in the record as having been performed in law, inasmuch as it does not appear thereby that the plaintiff in error was asked why the Court should not proceed to judgment and execution against him upon the verdict given against him

The Attorney-General, it was understood, did not intend to press the argument of any other case, but would leave the case in Mr. O'Brien's case to govern the others; any of the parties, however, might have such additional points argued as their counsel might deem peculiar to their case, or calculated to give efficacy to the arguments submitted on their behalf

The arguments on the writ of error, in the case of Mr. W. S. O'Brien, were concluded on Wednesday. Mr. Whiteside, on behalf of the prisoner, addressed the Court at great length in support of the errors assigned, and the Attorney-General replied.

At the conclusion of the argument

Mr Napier applied to the Court, that counsel might be heard on the part of the other three prisoners, in whose behalf writs of error had been lodged, before judgment was given in the case now before the Court.

After some discussion between the Attorney-General and counsel, it was finally arranged that one counsel should be heard for each of those prisoners before judgment in the present case; and that the counsel should confine themselves to the points of error which had already been discussed in that case.

THE POOR LAW.—A violent agitation has been organized the determination at which the Poor-Law Commissioners have arrived, respecting the establishment of sixty-three extra unions throughout the country. The objections raised are against the additional expense which will necessarily be incurred by the building of the unions and the maintenance of the additional staffs. The opponents of the proposed scheme do not object to reducing the extent of electoral divisions, but protest against the augmentation of the number of unions.

In Carlow the Board of Guardians have determined upon employing the paupers in manufacturing operations, in making of materials for clothing, &c., and they calculate in this way upon effecting a large saving for the ratepayers, while in five instances the paupers to attain independency, or wealth, have now in the workhouses either entirely idle, or, if occupied, are engaged upon unprofitable labour.

EMIGRATION.—The only remarkable intelligence from the South, is the steady progress of emigration, even as the winter advances. Whole districts appear abandoned, and cultivation totally neglected; while, on the other hand, the cessation system, by ejectment, continues in parts of the counties of Limerick and Clare

CLERKSHIP OF THE CROWN.—The death, on Saturday evening last, of Mr. Walter Bourne, leaves vacant the lucrative appointment of Clerk of the Crown in the Queen's Bench. The deceased was in his 82d year, and had filled the office for a period of 52 years.

THE STATE PRISONERS.—Mr. John Martin, on Sunday, received an intimation that, in consequence of the delicate state of his health, he would not be allowed from his present place of confinement "for any purpose whatsoever." In the case of Mr. KEVIN O'DOHERTY, another of the convicts, a memorial, numerously signed by the jury who found him guilty, was presented to the Lords Justices on Saturday last, praying for a remission of the sentence from transportation for a term of imprisonment. There was at the same time presented a second memorial to the same effect, signed by a body of the 1st zens of Dublin, the names of both the Lord Mayor and Lord Lieutenant at the head of the list.

Twenty-six lunatic asylums have been established in the south of Ireland, owing to the poverty of their owners.—Waterford Independent.

BANQUET TO SIR CHARLES NAPIER, AT DUBLIN.

ON Thursday evening, the 16th instant, the gallant and distinguished "Hero of Scinde" was entertained by his friends and admirers in Dublin at a magnificent entertainment in the Round-room of the Rotunda, which was fitted up for the occasion in the most elegant taste. At the upper end of the apartment was erected on a dais, the table occupied by the chairman and principal guests; and extending longitudinally through the room were five other tables

The ball-room was lit up by a magnificent chandelier containing 150 gas-jets, and a profusion of wax-lights, in rich candelabra. A spacious orchestra was erected at the end of the room, opposite the principal table, which was occupied by the band of the 6th Inniskilling Dragoons, who performed several pieces of music during the evening. The select parties, known as the Lockwood and Jullien's, also played several exquisite airs on three Irish harps.

At half-past seven o'clock the company entered the rooms, and took their places; and in a few minutes after came the chairman, guests, and committee, the band playing the National Anthem.

The chair was taken by his Grace the Duke of Leinster. At his right sat H. R. H. Prince George of Cambridge, the Earl of Devon, Hon Charles S. Black, James H Hamilton, Esq., M.P.; Sir Charles Coote, Bart.; Hon Captain Lindsay, Sir Henry Marsh, Bt.; Major Mahon, and Sir Richard Musgrave, Bart.

On the left, at the end of the evening, sat Sir Charles Napier, Lieutenant General Sir Edward Barnes, Lord William Fitzgerald, Baron de Rouville, Right Hon. James Grattan, Colonel Forster, Sir Henry Compton, Bart., Sir Richard Keane, Bart., General Sir Hopton Scott, and the Chief Remembrancer.

We regret that we have not space for the list of the numerous distinguished and highly respectable individuals present.

A large number of ladies, friends and relatives of the distinguished guests, and members of the committee, graced the assemblage by their presence.

The dinner was excellent: it was provided by Mr. Ingram, of York-street.

On the cloth being removed, "Non nobis Domine" was sung by the professional gentlemen present

The noble Chairman then proposed "The Health of her Majesty," which was drunk with the usual honours, and was followed by the other customary loyal toasts; the name of his Royal Highness Prince George of Cambridge being coupled with Prince Albert and the rest of the Royal Family.

Prince George of Cambridge thanked the company, and took the opportunity of rendering with gratitude to the hospitality, kindness, and attention he had received since his sojourn in Ireland. His Highness then spoke of the pride he felt in being a member of the noble profession of which Sir Charles Napier is so distinguished a member; and his Prince resumed his seat amidst loud applause.

The next toast, "The Lord Lieutenant and prosperity to Ireland," Band—"There's one luck about the house."—Drunk with marked applause.

"The Lords Justices." Air—"Patrick's Day."

Lieutenant General Sir Edward Barnes responded to the toast.

The noble Chairman then rose to propose the health of Sir Charles Napier, the guest of the evening. After referring to his brilliant services, the Duke of Leinster observed, that Sir Charles Napier had his having been compelled to engage in war—that he could not however help it, and that the loss of life was most acutely to his feelings. (Cheers.) On this account his victories must stand much higher in the estimation of every right-minded man.

The toast having been drunk with the most marked enthusiasm,

Sir Charles Napier, in rising, said he, observing, with reference to the praise bestowed upon him, that he had had the good fortune to command a brave army, which had won for him in the field the honour which he then just received. Had Sir Charles then recapitulated the leading events of the conquest of Scinde, and the policy of Lord Ellenborough, observing, that had the gallant man been guided by weak and foolish men, who wanted to place the treasons Amirs of Scinde—men who had broken their word over and over again with the British—upon a throne, the Sovereign of which they had murdered—(hear, hear)—had he let these men on the throne, at this moment they would have muskets at the head of 100,000 Beloochee warriors, ripe and well versed, and most quick, and fallen on General Wilson's devoted army, and destroyed it—(hear, hear).

Sir Charles then remarked, incidentally, "We must wait, in justice to General Wilson, until his own despatches arrive, and give us a correct account of his operations. But, my lords and gentlemen, there is one point which I think is matter for congratulation to us all. (Hear, hear.) Amirs have been destroyed the brilliant arms of England for a moment, but through that must we see the fatal valour of our soldiers, both Sepoys and Europeans, shining with unabated lustre (Loud cheers.) Feeble as both themselves in resources and to fall upon a country, should it be in the valiant assault of the Mountain. (Loud cheers.) Ethics may check, but nothing in the world can resist the glorious prowess of the Bri ish army." (General applause.) They (their general at down amidst a storm of cheers, which was again and again revived for a considerable time.

An ode, commemorative of the achievements of the illustrious hero of Scinde, and composed expressly or the occasion by Professor Smith, was then sung with remarkably good taste.

BENTLEY PRIORY STANMORE, THE RESIDENCE OF HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN DOWAGER.

Sir Charles Napier then proposed the health of the noble chairman, the Duke of Leinster. This was followed by "Sir Edward Blakeney and the Army;" "The Navy;" "The Duke of Wellington;" "Major M'Murdo and the Heroes of Scinde who fought under Sir Charles Napier;" "The House of Lords;" "The House of Commons." "Prince George of Cambridge, and the Garrison of Dublin," "Lady Napier," and a variety of other toasts; and the festivities terminated at half-past 11.

Among the guests was Mr. Whiteside, Q.C., who in an eloquent speech responded to a toast on the part of the Irish bar.

BENTLEY PRIORY.

This extensive mansion, at present the residence o. her Majesty, Queen Adelaide, lies at about eleven miles north-west of the metropolis, environed with beautiful pleasure-grounds, partly in the parish of Stanmore, and partly in that of Harrow. The house has nothing monastic in its design, and takes its name of Bentley from Benethley Priory, which is said to have occupied the site of the modern mansion; the ancient religious house having been suppressed in the early part of the reign of Henry VIII., and granted to the monks of St. Gregory's Priory, at Canterbury.

The mansion was built or enlarged by the late Marquis of Abercorn after designs by Soane, who well understood the interior arrangement of dwelling-houses. A few years since, Bentley Priory was tenanted by the Earl o Aberdeen: it is the property of the p esent Marquis of Abercorn, by whom it has been let to her Majesty Queen Adelaide.

The elevated site of the mansion (the greater part of which is clothed with luxuriant ivy) commands rich and extensive prospects, especially from the terrace. The grounds are ornamentally planted; and the estate altogether forms a delightful retreat, with the advantage of extreme beauty and convenience o site, at a very easy distance from the metropolis. The Queen, on her visit to Bentley, last week is stated to have been highly gratified with its rural do main.

GRAND BANQUET TO LIEUT.-GEN. SIR CHARLES JAMES NAPIER, G.C.B., AT THE ROTUNDA, DUBLIN.

"WALDFRAULEIN, OR THE FOREST MAIDEN."—A FAIRY TALE.

"[illegible]" is the title of a Fa[illegible] and of which t[illegible] a poet unknow[illegible]

[illegible] ch he surrounds it. Our summary of "Waldfraulein" will form no exception to this rule, unless the aid of the artist shall be

[illegible] unt of a love adve[illegible] l the high damp grass, the green trees waving over her, and the birds singing around her, she gives birth to a female child. But the life of the child is the death of the mother, and the lady expires alone and unseen. The incident suggests the pathetic stanza of the old Scotch ballad, where a woman dying in similar circumstances exclaims—

> There a no a bird in a this forest
> Will do a mak for me,
> As dip its wing in the wan water
> And strak it on my a knee.

The child thus born is Waldfraulein, the forest maiden. The fairy of the wood passing by "in her golden car," "bending the bushes as she flew," takes pity upon the babe, builds for her an enchanted castle in the deepest recess of the forest, where she leaves her with parental affection till her sixteenth year. The story says nothing of Waldfraulein's father, but depicts the remorse of her mother's sire (a powerful Prince, who dwells on the borders of the forest), on learning from the messengers he has sent out to seek for her the unhappy death of his beloved child. They return with her body: but all endeavours to discover the fate of her babe are unavailing. The lady in her flight wore two golden slippers; one of them is missing when the body is found, and plays a very important part in the story—the idea being suggested probably by the glass slipper of Cinderella. When Waldfraulein—growing in beauty, in goodness, and in gentleness—has attained her sixteenth year, the fairy presents her with the slipper, and commands her to wear it at her girdle, as a protection against the unhappy fate of her mother, and against all the perils and errors that beset the course to h of true love and falsehood. Waldfraulein promises obedience; wonders much what love can be; that she should be warned against it; and receives from the fairy a description of the torments of unrequited or unworthy love, and of the unspeakable happiness of a pure and true affection, when it is felt for, and returned by, one worthy of it.

In due time Waldfraulein experiences it in all its intensity. She meets in the forest the Knight of Mögelbrunn—such a hero in every romantic maiden, in fairy tales, are always fated to see and to fall in love with at the first glance. They have but one meeting, but it seals the fate of both. Their hearts are pledged before they know what they are doing. The fairy suddenly appears and raises her warning finger. Waldfraulein, scared at the suddenness of the apparition, and the angry looks of her only friend, rushes from the presence of her wooer, and accidentally drops the golden slipper in her flight. She loses her way in the forest, and never more discovers the enchanted castle where she has passed her youth; and the Knight of Mögelbrunn, after seeking for her in vain, and cursing the wild-wood to re-echo with her name, returns home, determined to discover her, whoever and wherever she may be, if she be of mortal birth at all—a point on which he has his misgivings. Waldfraulein—met in the forest by an old hag, a charcoal-burner, who forces her to become her servant—to spin, to sew, to cook, to wash, and to burn charcoal. This hag has a son as illfavoured as herself, who has long wanted a wife, and who determines that Waldfraulein shall be the happy woman. She remains a long time in this disagreeable condition, working hard, and receiving no thanks, and re-luring steadily the advances of her boorish and brutal wooer. In the meantime, the Knight of Mögelbrunn has taken counsel of a fortune-teller; she informs him that Waldfraulein is no fairy apparition, but a woman who lives and loves him; and that the only person who can give him any more precise particulars relating to her, is a more skilful fortune-teller than herself, residing at Cologne. To Cologne accordingly the knight departs, meeting in his way many strange adventures both on and beneath the waters of the Rhine, and resisting successfully the advances of the "Nixen" and the "Lurleien," the beautiful and too fascinating nymphs of that river, who seek to make him unfaithful to his mortal love, and who fail in an old bag, a charcoal-burner, who forces her to become her servant—to spin, to sew, to cook, to wash, and to burn charcoal. This hag has a son as illfavoured as herself, who has long wanted a wife, and who determines that Waldfraulein shall be the happy woman. She remains a long time in this disagreeable condition, working hard, and receiving no thanks, and re-fusing steadily the advances of her boorish and brutal wooer. In the meantime, the Knight of Mögelbrunn has taken counsel of a fortune-teller; she informs him that Waldfraulein is no fairy apparition, but a woman who lives and loves him; and that the only person who can give him any more precise particulars relating to her, is a more skilful fortune-teller than herself, residing at Cologne. To Cologne accordingly the knight departs, meeting in his way many strange adventures both on and beneath the waters of the Rhine, and resisting successfully the advances of the "Nixen" and the "Lurleien," the beautiful and too fascinating nymphs of that river, who seek to make him unfaithful to his mortal love, and who fail in their attempt. At Cologne he is successful in his search for the fortune-teller, and is directed to go to a grand tournament given by the Lord of Wyprecht, and to wear the golden slipper of his beloved around his neck, and trust to fortune for the result.

Waldfraulein, by another chain of circumstances, is led to the same spot. She resists the odious embraces of the charcoal-burner's son, and is rescued from his rude assault by a hermit of the name of Enseidler. The last-named personage, having given her a night's lodging, is glad to allow her to depart in the morning; for he has resolved to keep his temptations, words, and such beauty and goodness as hers threaten to be too powerful for him. The wide world is thus before her, and she determines to travel it all through, however wide it may be, in search of the Knight of Mögelbrunn. The sound of trumpets, the waving of banners, and the concourse of people al. going in the same direction, determine her course. In due time, and after slight adventure, she finds herself at the tournament. There she discovers her lover, but only her love. He is the Prince her grandfather. All her good fortune comes upon her at once, and the course of true love runs smooth; and the story of Waldfraulein ends,—with a delicate implication that the house of Mögelbrunn is not likely to be extinguished for another generation at the least

The reader will see that there is not much in this story; but, such as it is, the author has made it agreeable by his mode of telling it, and by the graceful lively effu-sions which he has interwoven in his narrative. The reader longs for the warm weather, that he may wander in such a wood, and sit by the side of such streams as are the haunts of the sister of Waldfraulein, and forgives the want of interest and originality in the story, for the sake of the descriptions of scenery in which it abounds. In conclusion, we can but add, that in general treatment the story is intensely German.

The large Engraving upon the preceding page is from a print designed and engraved by Neureuther, in illustration of the poem; and it portrays the leading adventure of the tale in a highly picturesque manner. The Print was originally executed as a Prize for one of the German Art-Unions.

FINE ARTS.

THE BABES IN THE WOOD. Published by J. Gundall, Old Bond-street.

Prob bly, during the two centuries and a half that the "doleful story" of "the Babes in the Wood" has interested children of all growths, it has never been about to introduce to our readers. They are from the accomplished pencil of the very be a leading incident of this thoroughly English ballad.

The Frontispeice is an architectural composition in the style of "the Revival," about the period from which the poem dates. It consists of a semicircular arch which ris a raven, the bird of ill omen: below is a sort of parapet inscribed Crasse Granted ry clinging about the pilasters, and flowers luxuriating in vases, fling their picturesqueness around the framework of the picture—the Babes," who are leaning over the parapet, and fondly feeding a robin. There is an epic character in the whole design, which is charmingly appropriate.

In the first tableau, the "gentleman of good account," "sore sick, and like to dye," is about to sign the will bequeathing his wealth to the two babes; the attorney and the witness being seated at his bed-side. Above and beneath the picture are books of account, seals, and sealed deeds, ink-holders, plumed pens, and parchment rolls—all grouped with great skill.

In the second tableau, the gentleman is at the point of death, and his wife "by him as sicke doth lye:" he is wrapt in parting prayer; the fine and pretty boy kneels by his side, his little hands raised to heaven, while the little daughter Jane is at her mother's last embrace; and on the opposite side of the couch kneels the wicked uncle, in mock affliction, affecting to pray. In the couch beneath, a serpent is just seizing a full-blown flower; another is aiming at a robin who is singing a requiem; while a second robin bears in his mouth a leaf for the dead. The death-bed scene is impressively told; the composition reminds one of some of the triumphs of sacred art by the old masters.

In the next picture, the parents being dead and gone, the uncle is taking he children from their home, a castle shown in the distance; and the face of the uncle is finely drawn, and the costume very admirable. The elder child is sorrowful, the younger one careless, and pointing at some wayside object: this distinction is a fine touch of nature. The device above and before the picture is a spider's web amidst lilies—emblematic of purity and the meshes of crime.

The tragedy thickens in the next scene. The fiendish uncle is bargaining with the "ruffians strong" to make away with the Babes: the fellows are being counted out, and the uncle awaits their resolves. The head and foot devices are branches and money-bags in fitting groups.

The hired ruffians are in the ensuing plate upon their way to "a fairre London" with the Babes. Above the picture is the murder-knife slung from oak branches; and below, a covey of birds are just flying into a net spread for them amidst the trees.

The "prate and prattle of the Babes makes "Murder's heart relent," in the next scene: it is the counterpart of the hired men in the wood, where "the wicked'st caitiff" is slain by the one "of mildest mood." The ruffians above and below are the murderous club, the basket-handled sword, and the poignard.

In the seventh tableau, the pretty Babes, with hand in hand, "are wandering in the wood, the boy pointing to a robin in the way-side. The head and foot borders is composed of the bramble in flower and fruit—the black-berries, which besmeared and dyed the "prettye lippes" of the Babes.

> And when they saw the darksome night,
> They sat them down and cryed, is the eighth scene: the boy's hands are clenched in despair, the weak r nature of the girl has sunk to the earth, and the robin looks on with characteristic watchfulness. This is a very effective picture, the dark wood admirably contrasting with the figures of the Babes. Beneath is a flight of robins bearing the leaves of

> In the main and last scene Death has ended the grief of "these two pretty Babes," and a robin is bearing a leaf; this single bird we accept as the one whom the Babes gave to the Frontispiece—a pretty type of gratitude. The children are locked hand in hand; and the scene is wood and lurid gloom of evening in the horizon ad this tale of early death.

Here the Illustration closes, the verdure the sequel of "the doleful story" being told in the verse. The text, we should mention, is inscribed in black letter beneath or beneath the series of prints.

The fancy and delicacy and quaint character of these illustrations are indescribably beautiful. The drawing of the figures in a the highest style of art; and graceful; and such composition strikingly narrative of the incident. There may be slight blemishes: the robins, for instance, would scarcely satisfy an ornithologist in their outlines

In some devices, or bordures—though they do not entirely surround the pictures—there is a considerable amount of Raffaelesque spirit and richness of invention, high comparison, the reader may say; but, to the best of our judgment, very popular as presents in the approaching Christmas season, for which, we need scarcely add, they are recommended by appropriateness of subject.

The etching is very delicately executed. Impressions are to be had coloured, in which the effect is, of course, greatly heightened—more especially in the brilliancy of the bordures.

THE SONG OF SONGS. FROM THE HOLY SCRIPTURES. Illuminated by OWEN JONES. Longman and Co.

It is hard to describe the elaborate richness and richness of fancy displayed in works of this class. The volume before us is a very successful revival of Middle Age Art. It contains "The Song of Songs, which is Solomon's," superbly illuminated in "the Middle Ages" style.

There are three title-pages refulgent with gold, and floral devices in rich colours. Then follows the Song, inscribed in Old English, each page within a floral bordures; each chapter commencing with larger and more richly illuminated characters, the initial capital upon a gold ground, and each verse with the initial capital in gold. The frame-work of the pages is endlessly various in design as fuchsia-like trefoil, and grassrpiil flowers, brilliant with gold, and richly charged with colour, while the text is beautifully clear and distinct. The finial-page, with its quatrefoil flowers in colour spiked with gold, surrounding the word "Finis," in which is a most momentic initial, is very striking. The work is printed upon thick paper, of the rich warm tone of the vellum of the ancient missals. The binding is also reliefve leather, of monastic design and lettering. The facing and inner gilding, too, are very elegant.

MUSIC.

CHORAL HARMONISTS.

The first meeting of the seventeenth season took place at the London Tavern, on Monday night. This is one of the most spirited of the City musical societies. Their concerts, of which there are seven, commencing in this month and terminating in May, are full of interest. Many fine and interesting works have been first introduced and made known in this country by the Choral Harmonists. The title might indicate that choral compositions alone are comprised in the selections; but a good orchestra, with a large proportion of professionals amongst the amateurs, who play overtures and accompany the solo and concerted pieces. For principal vocalists engagements are made with our leading native professors.

The programme on Monday opened with one of Handel's Coronation Anthems, "Zadok the Priest," followed by Haydn's Mass in B flat, No. 1, and the Chorus from Mozart's "Davidde Penitente," "Che la Dolce," for the soprano. The solo parts were sung by the Misses A. and M. Williams, Messrs. Lockey and W. Seguin.

In the second part of the concert, Converso, bearing date 1575, "When all alone my bonny love was playing," Weber's "Der Freyschütz" overture, and Andreas Romberg's "Song of the Bell."

In addition to the above, Mr. Lockey sang Hobbs' ballad to Peter Pindar's words, "Farewell to the fragrance of morn," so sweetly as to secure an encore, his neat articulation of a shake at the close being remarkable. The Misses Williams were also encored in Rossini's duet, "Le Terze Ma dons," now rendered so popular by their exquisite ensemble in the concerts. The madrigal was also demanded twice, Converso, or Convursi, was born at Correggio towards the middle of the fourteenth century, and published at Venice "Canzoni a cinque voci," and "Madrigali a sei voci," of which, the one sung by the harmonists will always be relished by the true Madrigalian.

The "Song of the Bell" is no ordinary composition. Of the genius of Andreas Romberg the English amateurs are not sufficiently aware, and yet, whether regarded as a writer of chamber music, or as a contributor of church and choral works, he is entitled to a very high place in the position. He followed in the wake of Haydn and Mozart, and wanted but courage, as Fédis has justly observed, to have struck out a path for him elf. As it is, Andreas Romberg, who was a passionate admirer of Schiller, has set to music many of the poet's inspirations with kindred genius. Andreas was born in 1767, and died at Gotha in 1810, with the title of Chapel Master to the Court of Coburg.

The Choral Harmonists, in addition to the "Song of the Bell," which, mstly to their credit, they have produced, might perform Romberg's "Power of Song" to Schiller's words; also his "Infanuelda," Odes of Kosegarten, &c. The "Lay of the Bell" describes the casting of the bell, through all its processes, intermixing the technical details with poetic and philosophical associations and reflections connected with the sounding and ringing of a bell through all its varied phases in life. The Misses Bell formed a very pleasing duet, and were encored. Mr. Seguin the tenor solos by Mr. Lockey; and the treble by Miss Williams. There are quartets, septets, choruses. One of the latter, describing the tocsin in revolutionary times, is so applicable to the present period, that the translation of Schiller's words will be acceptable:

> When sorrow! force is raging wide,
> When by itself the mob is freed,
> There can no good effect succeed.
> Sad is the house of that man,
> Where tyranny's most servile sabas lie,
> And vain, presumptuous power exile,
> The mob assumes the mastery.
> Then force and violence invade
> The serf's, but the nobler cage.
> Design'd for joy and peace, is made
> The receptacle of misery.
> "Let all be equal!" At the sound
> The peaceful burgher starts to arms;
> The streets are filled, and wide around
> Are seen the hostile marshalling forces.
> Then, woeful, like hyæna roam
> M d ness through the face of man,
> The panther seeks with thirst less keen
> The life-blood of each human foe.
> Fire
> When to vein to him the deadly ray
> Of license to the mob who lends
> The torch to the incendiary's hand,
> And all in one wide ruin blends!

LONDON WEDNESDAY CONCERTS.

The first of a series of fifteen concerts, to be given every Wednesday up to the 28th of February, inclusive, took place on the 22nd, at Exeter-Hall. The Directors have issued a prospectus, explaining their intentions, which are, to give periodical concerts of good vocal and instrumental music, "of a popular character, and at popular prices." This system is very praiseworthy, and we hope that the patronage which it merits will not be defeated by the exigences of the principal singers, for it is in the power of the management to keep down the fees, both by native and foreign artistes, particularly the latter, that there is the greatest need either for economy or reduction, while a cheap and good musical entertainment. It is declared in the prospectus, that no profit is intended to be derived from the Concerts already given in Exeter-Hall, nor to the instrumental performances proposed to be given there, and such a fee must prove the disinterestedness of purpose or intentions of those institutions." The prices are fixed at seven, four, two, and one shilling, and the smaller portion of the Hall being appropriated to the two l st-mentioned low prices. Thus far, it is well; but we do not think that the system of commencing a scheme with a selection from a first-class English, German, French, and Italian opera, is politic. Such gleanings, without dramatic adjuncts, are but tame affairs, and many of the operas mentioned in the Newton was encored in Sir H. Bishop's "Lo! here the gentle lark," with Mr. Hall's delicate obbligato; and Mr. Lee, one of Jenny Lind's Swedish melodies, which s e sang with dexterous volubility. A offer was encored in Dibdin's "Lord of the village;" as also Sims Reeves, in "Oh, Nanny, wilt thou gang with me," Thalberg playing the piano, and was encored in both his fantasias and themes from "Lucrezia Borgia" and "Masaniello." The latter, however merited as much distinction as the bestowed encores, such as Miss Poole's charming singing of the ballad "Whilst I sing a story," without accompaniment; and her interpretation of Lover's ballad, "The Angel's Whisper." Miss A. Williams gave Weber's arcna, "Ocean, thou mighty monster," in splendid style. The Grumiaux duet for violin and violoncello, a concerted piece of merit, entitled "St. Agnes' Eve," was well sung by Reeves, but did not seem to suit the style of the vocalist. We think the pompous announcement, that "this work was expressly composed for Mr. Reeves, and cannot be sung by any other vocalist in this country," had better have been omitted. Mr. Sims Reeves sang the first verse of "The Boy of Blakey," and then passed on to the third one, when he was hissed so violently that he walked off the platform, and, after a pause, disappeared. Mr. Hammers, who is the managing director, came forward, and explained that three verses only had been allotted to Mr. Reeves, the fourth being printed in the books by mistake. Mr. Reeves then reappeared, and sang the three verses with attempts to proceed with the third verse, but the row was renewed, and one of the opposition was soon after summarily expelled. Eventually Mr. Reeves did what he might have done in the first instance—sang the concerted piece with another vocalist to proceed with the concluding verse with such energy as to make his peace with the audience, who cheered him loudly

Mr. Wily's overture and played the "Oberon" overture, and the accompaniments, carefully. The Hall was very full, except the seven-shilling places, which were but scantily tenanted.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

Handel's masterpiece, the sublime "Messiah," was performed last night (Friday), for the first time this season, by the Sacred Harmonists. The interest in this revival was in the direction of the oratorio by Costa: in his hands, it is needless to remark that the majesty and strength, grandeur and simplicity, of the mighty conceptions of the Milton of Music were developed with the same fidelity, sympathy, and energy that attended the interpretation of "Elijah."

We cannot now enter more lengthily upon the talents of the conductor, which so strongly manifest his thorough appreciation of Handel's characteristics; but, without taking slight of the devotional tone of the entire work, there was an additional spirit infused into the performance by the more than usual exuberance of grace and tenderness in the rendering of the accompaniments. When Costa conducts, while the colouring is warm and animated, the beauties of the inner tissues, the undercurrent of descriptive power, are most exquisitely brought out.

Miss Birch, Miss Dolby, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Mr. Phillips, were the leading vocalists. The ample powers and high talents of the first-named singers in their respective parts, save Mr Reeves, who, for the first time in London, laboured under a severe cold; and of him we have reported most favourably in our Notices of the Festival. In passages requiring force, he was at times most successful; such as, "Thou shalt break them." He gave "Behold! and see if any sorrow be like unto his sorrow," with great tenderness.

At the "Hallelujah Chorus" the whole audience stood up, and seemed overwhelmed with the grand style in which this G d-like creation was performed.

Mr. Phillips gave "The trumpet shall sound," beautiful y. During the performance of this most solemn portion of the ora orio, one of the choral singers fainted, with a slight scream, produ cing, for the moment, a painful sensation.

The regulations prohibiting encores was strictly maintained.

The whole of the vast hall was crowded between 3000 and 4000 being present.

The performance commenced punctually at seven o'clock, and concluded at half-past ten. The arrangement preventing persons passing to and fro during the performance cannot be too highly praised.

HONOUR TO MENDELSSOHN.—It is nearly two months since we announced in our columns that it was proposed to perform Mendelssohn's "Elijah," with Mdlle. Lind in the principal soprano music, at Exeter Hall, for the purpose of aiding the funds now raising in Germany to found scholarships in the Leipsic Conservatory, as a commemoration of the lamented composer. The project has been steadily followed up, and the night is fixed for the 15th of December. Benedict, who has been in correspondence with the German and English comm ttees on the subject, is to be the Conductor; and, in order successfully to interest English amateurs, it has been arranged that natives of this country are to hold seats of the scholarships. The choral and orchestral arrangements are to be selected from our cathedral choirs, musical institutions and societies; and our principal singers will be selected to support Mdlle Lind, who will sing for the first time in English. The scholarships will ensure a gratuitous musical education to the aspirants who have evinced talent for good conduct.

MDLLE. LIND.—Two concerts will be given at Manchester, on the 19th and 21st of December, in aid of the funds for the enlargement of the Royal Infirmary. Mdlle. Lind has kindly promised to sing gratuitously at both concerts, as she will also at the Mendelssohnian Musical Concert at Exeter-Hall, on the 15th of December.

MUSICAL EVENTS.—Handel's "Messiah" was performed on Friday night at Exeter-Hall, conducted for the first time, by Costa. Miss Birch, Miss Dolby, Mr Sims Reeves, and Mr. Phillips were the vocalists. We must defer our notice next Friday the London Sacred Harmonic Society will repeat the "Messiah" for the second time, conducted by Surman, with the same vocalists as the old society.—On Monday night will be the second concert of the Society of British Musicians, in which all kinds of reformation in the Musical Society will repeat the "Messiah" for the second time, conducted by Surman, with the same vocalists as the old society.—On Monday night will be the second concert of the Society of British Musicians, in which all kinds of reformation in the Musical Society will repeat the second concert of the Vocal and Instrumental Wednesday Concerts at Exeter Hall.—Mr. Ratton, the composer and pianist, who is making a tour in the United States, has met with good encouragement since his arrival: Mr. Macfarren, the composer, is in New York; Mr. Wilson, the Scotch vocalist, had begun his entertainments

THE VICE-Chancellor of the University of Oxford has granted Mr. Lumley the use of the theatre of the University, for a concert, at which Mdlle. Lind and the great artists in her suite will immediately appear.

THE THEATRES.

COVENT-GARDEN.

The revival of Mr. Tully's adaptation of Scribe's "Lady of the Lake" was not a judicious step. After the extraordinary success of "La Donna del Lago" at the Royal Italian Opera, presenting as it did one of the grandest ensembles ever witnessed on any stage, it was folly for the public to perform the English version, only to prove how, on the same boards, with all the advantages of scenic and decorative resources, marked was the contrast in the musical execution of this fine work. For most amateurs who had heard the opera last season, it was a painful infliction in every point of view; and it may be questioned, if comparisons had been provoked, whether the present caste would not have suffered by the recollection of its first representation in English in 1843. Mrs. Donald King, who created such a very favourable impression by her Adalgisa, can add nothing to the assumption of Alice. The Ogarita of Travers assuredly was not the most successful character produced; and, with a cast of equal power, it has lost none of its attraction, as the crowded house on Monday proved.

Perhaps this night have been due, in no small measure, to the first appearance this season of Madame Vestris. Her name in the bills has to t none of its attraction. It was not because time has dealt lightly with her, or because her acting has lost none of the graceful charm that drew not only the play-going world, but the population generally, after her in bygone times, that this appearance was hailed with such pleasure. Because they knew that the correctness and propriety that raised her little theatre of the Strand, dingy Wych-street, to a drawing-room, and drew the West-end patricians into localities hitherto unexplored by them, was still unimpaired, and that the elegant taste which broke through all old and mouldy theatrical conventions, even in the half bizarre vaudeville, would be still expanded and elaborated in the comedy of Shakspeare.

The performance of Beatrice was as perfect as can possibly be conceived. The scepticism of the most violent "anti-legitimist" of the day must have been converted into a deep admiration for the standard drama. Never was a play represented with more general excellence, the cast being—Mrs. Ford, Madame Vestris; Mrs Page, Mrs. Yates; Anne Page, Miss Fitzwilliam; Slender, Mr. C Mathews; Falstaff, Mr. Granby; Shallow, Mr. F. Matthews; Ford, Mr. Cooper; Page, Mr. Bettingham; Sir Hugh Evans, Mr. Meadows; Dr. Caius, Mr. Selby; The Host. Mr. H. Hall; Fenton, Mr. Binge.

All these ladies and gentlemen are so well known to the public, and many of them have been so long associated with the same characters, that any analysis of their acting is uncalled for. We may, however, particularize Mrs. Yates and Miss Fitzwilliam—the latter young lady's fresh and beautiful voice telling with great effect in the interesting duet with Fenton. Granby's Falstaff, also, was eminently good. He surprised his best friends by his very careful and finished performance.

PRINCESS'.

A little farce called "The Model Couple" was produced here on Wednesday night, and was perfectly successful. There is nothing very new in the plot, but the performance of Mrs. Stanley, Mr. Stanley, Mr. Oxberry, Mr. G. Cooke, and Mr. Selby to display their eccentricities in; and the audience are kept constantly laughing.

HAYMARKET.

After the "Wife's Secret," on Wednesday evening, a new drama was produced written by Mr. Bourdenault, and called "The Knight of Arva" The story is as follows:—Marina (Miss Reynolds) is the Duchess of Catalonia. Whether it is the bright eyes or the broad lands of the Princess we are not informed; but her hand is sought by every potentate in Europe, including Prince Henry of England, Prince Ferdinand, and a mysterious Archduke of Austria. The reader must not, however, mistake all this for fashionable life; for history is not an inkling of it to be found in any chronicle; it is all the coinage of the author's brain. Marina, a girl of fourteen years of age, is under her feudal throne, is travelling from her capital, Barcelona, to her summer palace at Lerida. She is surrounded by ambassadors, ministers, and couriers; and at a roadside inn, where she stops to refresh her train, a wandering knight, a Free Lance so common in those times, who is the Knight of Arva (Mr. Hudson), a sort of hybrid between Ivanhoe and Don Quixote. Here begins the action. The Knight, the defender of the weak, who was attacked by brigands, not succeeding in saving him, has saved his papers. These papers are letters to Marina in answer, and they prove to be credentials from Henry the Seventh, of England; the stranger is the ambassador of Philip, Archduke, sent by proxy to marry Marina, for Prince Henry. The result is tolerably evident, and the Knight of Arva is taken by the minister for the secret envoy, and introduced at court.

The second act opens with a mysterious conference. He is bewildered, but takes all his good fortune with great philosophy. Scrapes and love encounters bring on the conclusion, which is the marriage of the Knight with the Duchess, for England, or France, and Marina herself.

All this is good material for a drama, and the author has worked it with admirable tact. The dialogue is very lively and sparkling, and the situations are full of interest. All the ingenuity of the French stage. The piece, however, is original. The chief weight of it lies on the shoulders of Mr. Hudson, who dashed and rollicked through the part with much spirit. Miss Reynolds was the Duchess, and performed with great delicacy. Mr. Chambers, who is the manager, director, came forward, and explained that three verses only had been allotted to Mr. Reeves, the fourth being printed in the books by mistake. Mr. Reeves then reappeared, and sang the three verses with attempts to proceed with the third verse, but the row was renewed, and one of the opposition was soon after summarily expelled. Eventually Mr. Reeves did what he might have done in the first instance—sang the concerted piece with another vocalist to proceed with the concluding verse with such energy as to make his peace with the audience, who cheered him loudly

Mr. Wily's overture and played the "Oberon" overture, and the accompaniments, carefully. The Hall was very full, except the seven-shilling places, which were but scantily tenanted.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

Handel's masterpiece, the sublime "Messiah," was performed last night (Friday), for the first time this season, by the Sacred Harmonists. The interest in this revival was in the direction of the oratorio by Costa: in his hands, it is needless to remark that the majesty and strength, grandeur and simplicity, of the mighty conceptions of the Milton of Music were developed with the same fidelity, sympathy, and energy that attended the interpretation of "Elijah."

We cannot now enter more lengthily upon the talents of the conductor, which so strongly manifest his thorough appreciation of Handel's characteristics; but, without taking slight of the devotional tone of the entire work, there was an additional spirit infused into the performance by the more than usual exuberance of grace and tenderness in the rendering of the accompaniments. When Costa conducts, while the colouring is warm and animated, the beauties of the inner tissues, the undercurrent of descriptive power, are most exqu sitely brought out.

Miss Birch, Miss Dolby, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Mr. Phillips, were the leading vocalists. The ample powers and high talents of the first-named singers in their respective parts, save Mr Reeves, who, for the first time in London, laboured under a severe cold; and of him we have reported most favourably in our Notices of the Festival. In passages requiring force, he was at times most successful; such as, "Thou shalt break them." He gave "Behold! and see if any sorrow be like unto his sorrow," with great tenderness.

At the "Hallelujah Chorus" the whole audience stood up, and seemed overwhelmed with the grand style in which this G d-like creation was performed.

Mr. Phillips gave "The trumpet shall sound," beautiful y. During the performance of this most solemn portion of the ora orio, one of the choral singers fainted, with a slight scream, produ cing, for the moment, a painful sensation.

The regulations prohibiting encores was strictly maintained.

The whole of the vast hall was crowded between 3000 and 4000 being present.

ADELPHI.

On Monday evening the long-promised burlesque of "The Enchanted Isle, or Riding the Wind on the most Improved Principle," was produced at this house and met with complete success. It is written, as we have before stated, by the gentlemen named brough, who for some time conducted a sort of provincial Punch called The Liverpool Lion with great success; and subsequently brought out this burlesque at one of the Liverpool theatres, where it was received with the loudest applause. The triumph it achieved on Monday showed that its heads at this peculiar kind of dramatic work. It is founded on Shakspeare's play of "The Tempest," and all the characters are comically introduce... We have Mr. Bedford as Prospero, looking very like a cross between an owned the Wizard of the North; Miss Woolgar as Ferdinand, a "last man" this time; Mr. Maynard as Caliban, a sort of boy dredge of all work; Madame Celeste as Ariel, "a magic page from Shakspeare's magic volume;" and Mr. Paul Bedford as Alonzo, "one of the numerous instances now-a-days of a Monarch all abroad and quite at sea." Into the months of these illustrious personages are put so many good things, that it would be impossible to enumerate or particularise them; but everything and everybody of the time is alluded to, and very good-humouredly, but the late Continental disturbances, and the melancholy "doings in Republic," together with our own semi serious riots and rebellions, of course, form the staple subjects. There are several very taking parodies on "gas" and one upon Lover's ballad of "The Four-Leaved Shamrock" is so excellently sung by Miss Woolgar as to be vociferously encored.

Of the actors, in point of drollery, we must certainly award the palm to Mr. Selby. We could scarcely conceive it was the same performer who so forcibly thrilled the audience with horror in his impersonations of "Cinque," or "The Witch of Vesuvius," or in "Adelphi at Sea," "Grace Hussey," "Valaka," and the other bygone "Adelphi hits." His very appearance in wig, spectacles, and academic gown, was the cause of a burst of laughter; but, afterwards, his attempts to sing and dance, his comical gravity and general comfuror-like appearance, kept the house in roars of laughter. Miss Woolgar was, as usual, graceful, intelligent, and effective. A little bit of sea-sickness, in the steam-boat scene, was cleverly acted. Miss M Taylor and Miranda very nicely. She is a rising actress, and with her nice voice and pleasing appearance will take high ground in her line. Madame Celeste was a smart saucy Ariel; but her inability to sing somewhat marred the effect of the character. What she wanted in voice, however, she made up in dancing, and introduced a cachucha instead of, we suppose, a scena. Mr. Paul Bedford, we fancied, lacked Mr. Wright to join him in his fun, or else the part was not a very good one. The latter gentleman, we believe, threw up Caliban. It was, however, sustained with some drollery by Mr. Maynard.

The piece was very beautifully put upon the stage; the scenery, by Messrs. Pitt and Johnstone, being superb. The laughter, throughout, was most hearty—more so, we conceived, than the closely-packed audience could have indulged in, at the fall of the curtain, the applause was unbounded.

OLYMPIC.

A piece that has been played with considerable success at the Variétés, called, if we mistake not, "Le Moulin à Paroles," was brought out here, in an English shape, on Monday evening, and called "Cousin Cherry." The idea is not very well constructed, or interesting, but it serves to furnish Mrs. Stirling with a famous character, that of a talkative pretty widow, a sort of female Paiter, the Cousin Cherry of the piece, or "Cherry-Ogle," as she is called by her friends. From this personality. The sojourn of the Earl of Mandeville (Mr. Leigh Murray) under an assumed name, at the farm of her brother, Thomas Primrose (Mr. Norton), and his courtship of the daughter, Elinor (Miss J. St. George), furnishes us with plenty of matter for comment, and one scene in which she summons all her male and female relations to discuss the matter, and then does all the talking herself, was particularly effective. A little courtship scene, also, that follows it, at her spinning-wheel, was charmingly acted. Cousin Cherry is the character of the piece—the others have comparatively little to do, but that little was done remarkably well.

The costumes of the period (1797) are very becoming; but Cousin Cherry—a little bit of advice; gentlemen could not at that time possibly have been taken for railway agents. Whoever translated the piece has done it very cleverly, and it was perfectly successful.

The three-act drama announced at SADLER'S WELLS is the "Riot on the Scotsford," which is not a new play, but was produced a few years ago at one of the large theatres, and achieved a certain degree of success.

We are happy to state that Mr James Wallack is recovering, and will appear at the HAYMARKET, in conjunction with the Keans, in a new drama by Mr. Bourcicault, with a cast of unusual strength

Mr. Maurice Power, the son of the late Tyrone Power, has appeared in New York, and excited some interest. Opinions are, however, divided as to his capabilities as an actor.

Mr. Bockstone has, we regret to say, sustained a loss in his eldest son, Mr. John Bockstone, who has died of fever, in his twenty-sixth year.

"The Willow Copse," a drama by Messrs. Bourcicault and Charles Kenney, which has been some little time in the theatre, is, we believe, about to be produced at the ADELPHI.

Mr. Paul Bedford announces his benefit at the HAYMARKET, under the patronage of Lord Combermere and the officers of the 1st Life Guards. The beautiful band of that regiment will attend on the occasion.

THE GREAT SEA-SERPENT.

BY PROFESSOR OWEN.

(To the Editor of the Times.)

SIR,—Subjoined is the answer to a question relative to the animal seen from the Daedalus, addressed to me by a nobleman distinguished in literature, and taking much interest in science.

As it contains the substance of the explanation I have endeavoured to give to numerous inquiries, in the Hanoverian Museum and elsewhere, and as I continue to receive many applications for my opinion of the "Great Sea-Serpent," I am desirous to get it once for all through the medium of your columns, if space of such value may be allotted to it.—I am, Sir, your very obedient servant,

RICHARD OWEN.

Lincoln's-Inn-fields, Nov. 9.

The sketch* will suggest the reply to your query, "whether the monster seen from the Daedalus be anything but a saurian?" If it be the true answer, it destroys the romance of the incident, and will be anything but acceptable to those who prefer the exciteme[illegible] to the satisfaction of the judgment. As a lover of nature I am far from insensible to the pleasures of the discovery of a new and rare animal; but before I can enjoy them, certain conditions, e. g. reasonable proof or evidence of its existence, must be fulfilled. I am also desirous that the value of the information which Captain M'Quhae has given us or what he saw. When fairly analysed, it lies in a small compass: but my knowledge of the animal kingdom compels me to draw other conclusions from the phenomena than Captain M'Quhae think the gallant captain seems to have jumped at. He evidently saw a large animal moving rapidly through the water, very different from anything like the ordinary surface waves produced by a shoal of fishes, a porpoise, a shark, an alligator, nor any other of the large surface swimming creatures which are fallen in with in ordinary voyages. He writes, "On our attention being called to two objects of unusual appearance in the water, apparently animal"), "with the head and shoulders kept about four feet constantly above the surface of the sea. The diameter of the serpent" (animal) "was about four or five inches behind the head; its colour a dark brown, with yellowish white about the thr at." No fins were seen (the captain says there were none; but from his own account he did not see enough of the animal to prove his negative). "resembling like the mane of a horse, or rather a bunch of sea-weed washed about its back." So much of the body as was seen was "not used in propelling the animal through the water, either by vertical or horizontal undulation." A question of scientific interest is here the strong preconception of the nature of the beast. The head, e. g., is stated to be "without any doubt that of a snake;" and yet a snake would be the last species to swim with the head raised constant with the forepart and characters of the heads of animals would refer such a head as that of which Captain M'Quhae has transmitted a drawing to the Admiralty, and which he certifies to have been accurately copied in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS for October 28, 1848, p. 265. Your Lordship will observe that no sooner was the captain's attention called to the object than "it was discovered to be an enormous serpent;" and yet the coarse imagination of the body as "a bear d'eau failed to detect any undulations of the body, although such actions constitute the very character which would distinguish a serpent or surpentiform swimmer from any other reptile species. The foregone conclusion, therefore, of the beast being a Sea-Serpent, notwithstanding its capacious vaulted cranium and stiff inflexible trunk, must be kept in mind in estimating the value of the approximation made to the total length of the animal "at the very least 60 feet." This is the only part of the description, however, which seems to me to be uncertain as to be inadmissible in an accurate account of the observation as soon as the nature of the animal. The more certain characters of the animal are these:—Head, with a convex, moderately capacious cranium, short obtuse muzzle, gape of the mouth not extending further than to beneath the eye, which is rather small, round, filing closely the palpebral aperture; colour, dark brown above, yellowish white beneath; surface smooth, without scales, scutes, or other conspicuous modifications of hard and naked cuticle. And the captain says, "had it been a man of my acquaintance, I should have easily recognised his features with my naked eye." Nostrils not mentioned, but indicated in the drawing by a crescent: mark at the end of the nose or cranium. All these are the characters of the head of a warm-blooded mammal; none of them, those of a cold-blooded reptile or fish. Body long, dark brown, not undulating, without dorsal or other apparent fins: "but something like the mane of a horse, or rather a bunch of sea-weed washed about its back." The character of the integuments would be a most important one for the zoologist in the determination of the class to which the above-defined creature belonged. In my opinion can be deduced as to the integuments from the above indication, it is that the species had hair, which, if it was too short and close to be distinguished on the head, was visible where it is usually in the longest, on the middle line of the shoulders or advanced part of the back, where it was not stiff and upright, like the rays of a fin, but "washed about." Guided by the above interpretation of the "mane of a horse, or a bunch of sea-weed," the animal was not a cetaceous mammal, but rather a great seal. But what seal of large size, or indeed of any size, would be encountered in latitude 24° 44′ south, and longitude 9° 29′ east, viz. about 300 miles from the western shore of the southern end of Africa? The most likely species to be there met with are the largest of the seal tribe, e. g. Anson's sea-lion, or that known to the southern whalers by the name of the "sea-elephant," the Phoca proboscidia, which attains the length of from 20 to 30 feet. These great seals abound in certain of the islands of the southern and antarctic seas, from which an individual is occasionally floated off upon an iceberg. The sea-lion exhibited in London last spring, which was a young individual of the Phoca proboscidia, was actually captured in that predicament, having been carried by the currents that set northward towards the Cape, where its temporary resting-place was itself a floating away. When a large individual of the Phoca proboscidia or Phoca leonina is thus borne off to a distance from its native shore, it is compelled to return for rest to its floating abode after it has made its daily excursion in quest of the fish or squids that constitute its food. It thus brought by the iceberg into the latitudes of the Cape, and perhaps further north, before the berg has melted away. Then the poor seal is compelled to swim as long as strength endures; and in such a predicament I imagine the creature was that Mr. Sartorius saw rapidly approaching the Daedalus from before the beam, scanning, probably, its capabilities as a raft-ing-place, as it paddled its long stiff body past the ship. In so doing, it would raise a head of the f rm and colour described and delineated by Captain M'Quhae, supported on a neck also of the diameter given; the thick neck passing into an tribe, his true K, its longer and coarser hair on the upper part of which would give rise to the idea, especially if the species were the Phoca leonina, explained by the similes above cited. The organs of locomotion would be out of sight. The pectoral fins being set on very low down, as in my sketch, the chief impel-ling force would be the action of the deeper immersed terminal fins and tail, which would create a long eddy, readily mistakeable by one looking at the strange phenomenon with a Sea-Serpent in his mind's eye for an indefinite prolongation of the body.

It is very probable that not one on board the Daedalus ever before beheld a gigantic seal freely swimming in the open ocean. Entering unexpectedly upon that vast and commonly blank desert of water, it would be a welcome and exciting spectacle, and might be well interpreted as a marvel; but the creative powers of the human mind appear to be really very limited, and on al. the occasions where the true source of the "great apparition" has been detected whether it has proved to be a file of sportive porpoises, or a pair of gigantic sharks—o.d Pontoppidon's Sea-Serpent with the mane has uniformly suggested itself as the representative of the portent, until the mystery has been unravelled.

The vertebræ of the Sea-Serpent described and delineated in the "Wernerian Transactions," vol. i., and sworn to by the fishermen who saw it off the Isle of Stronsa (one of the Orkneys) in 1808, two of which vertebræ are in the Museum of the College of Surgeons, are certainly those of a great shark, of the genus selache, and are not distinguishable from those of the species called "basking-shark," of which individuals from 30 feet to 35 feet in length have been from time to time captured or stranded on our coasts.

I have no present confidence in the exactitude of my interpretation of the phenomena witnessed by the Captain and others of the Daedalus. I am too sensible of the inadequacy of the characters which the opportunity of a rapidly passing animal, in a long ocean swell," enabled them to note, for the determination of its species or genus. Giving due credence to the most probably accurate elements of their description, they do little more than guide the zoologist to the class, which, in the present instance, is not that of the serpent or the saurian.

But I am usually asked, after each endeavour to explain Captain M'Quae's Sea-Serpent, "Why there should not be a great Sea-Serpent?"—often, too, in a tone which seems to imply, "Do you think, then, there are not more marvels in the deep than are dreamt of in your philosophy?" And freely conceding that point, I have felt bound to give a reason for scepticism as to the existence of a gigantic Sea-Serpent actually extant, the species must of course have been perpetuated through successive generations from its first creation and introduction in the seas of this planet. Conceive, then, the number of individuals that must have lived and died, and have left their remains to attest the actuality of the species during the enormous lapse of time from its beginning to the 6th of August last! Now, a serpent, being an air-breathing animal, with long vascular and reciprocular lungs, dives with an effort, and commonly floats when dead; and so would the Sea-Serpent, until decomposition or accident had opened the tough integument and let out the imprisoned gases. Then it would sink, and, if in deep water, be seen no more until the sea rendered up its dead, after the lapse of the cons requisite for the yielding of its place to dry land—a change which has actually revealed to the present generation the old saurian monsters that were entombed at the bottom of the ocean of the secondary geological periods of our earth's history. During life the exigences of the respirations of the great Sea-Serpent would always compel him frequently to the surface; and when dead and swollen—

> Prone on the flood extended, long and large,
>
> He would lie floating many a rood; its bulk as huge
> As whom the fables name the monstrous size,
> Titanian or earth born, that warred on Jove.

Such a spectacle, demonstrative of the species if it existed, has not hitherto met the gaze of any of the countless voyagers who have traversed the seas in so many directions. Considering, too, the tides and currents of the ocean, it seems still more reasonable to suppose that the dead Sea-Serpent would be occasionally cast on shore. However, I do not ask for the entire carcase. The structure of the back-bone of the serpent tribe is so peculiar, that a single vertebra would suffice to determine the existence of the hypothetical species; and this will not be deemed an unreasonable request when it is remembered that the vertebræ are more numerous in serpents than in any other animal. Such large, blanched, and scattered bones on a sea-shore would be likely to attract even common curiosity; yet there is no vertebra of a serpent larger than the ordinary pythons and boas in any museum in Europe.

Few sea-coasts have been more sedulously searched, or by more acute naturalists (witness the labours of Sva and Lovén), than those of Norway. Krakens and Sea-Serpents ought to have been living and dying thereabouts from long before Pontoppidon's time, to our day, if tales were true; yet here the never vertebra entitled a single fragment of their skeleton to any Scandinavian collector; whilst the other great denizens of those seas have been by no means so chary. No museums, in fact, are o rich in the skeletons, skeletal and accidental wreck of the numerous kinds of whales, cachalots, grampuses, walruses, sea unicorns, seals, &c., as those of Denmark, Norway, and Sweden; but of any large marine non-ascript or indeterminable monster they cannot boast a trace.

I have inquired repeatedly whether the natural his ory collections of Boston, Philadelphia, or other cities of the United S ates might possess any unusually large cephalic vertebræ, or any of such peculiar form as to indicate some large unknown marine animal; but they have received no such specimens.

The frequency with which the Sea-Serpent has been supposed to have appeared near the shores and harbours of the United States has led to its being specified as the "American Sea-Serpent;" yet, out of the 200 vertebræ of every species that should have lived and died in the Atlantic since the creation of that species, not one has yet been placed in the museums of Boston or Philadelphia. A specimen of the small snake, less than a yard in length, "killed upon the sea-shore," apparently beaten to death, "by some labouring people of Cape Ann," United States (see the 8vo pamphlet, 18.7, Boston, page 28), and figured in the Sea Serpent" ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, October 28, 1848, from the original American memoir, by no means satisfies the conditions of the problem. Neither do the Sacopharynx of Mitchell, nor our Ophagostathus of Leach, an enormous eel, the one 40 feet, the other 8 feet long; both are surpassed by some of the congers of our own coasts, and, like other marinoid fishes and the known small sea-snakes (Hydrophis) swim by undulatory movements of the body

The fossil vertebræ and skull which were exhibited by Mr. Koch in New York and Boston as those of the great Sea-Serpent, and which are now in Berlin, belonged to different individuals of PETERBOROUGH CATHEDRAL, FROM THE GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY.

BUST OF LORD GEORGE BENTINCK.

In our Journal for the 11th instant we engraved a Bust of Lord George Bentinck, as modelled by Mr. James Wyatt. This sculptor's treatment is purely classic. The Count d'Orsay has since modelled a Bust of the lamented statesman, who wears the costume of the present day. It is cleverly designed, and has much of the striking ressemblance by which Count d'Orsay's artistic productions are invariably distinguished.

BUST OF LORD GEORGE BENTINCK, BY COUNT D'ORSAY.

THE INSURRECTION IN CEYLON.

We have engraved from our colonial contemporary, the Ceylon Overland Observer, published at Colombo, and received by the last overland mail, the accompanying Illustration of the first skirmish between the British troops and the Kandian insurgents, near Matelle. This is a memorable event, as being the first conflict that occurred in the recent rebellion; and the details of the affair are thus given in the evidence of Captain Lillie, upon the trial of the insurgents.

It appears that Mr. Lillie is a Captain in the Ceylon Rifles; and that, under instructions from the Commandant, he left Kandy for Matelle, with 200 men (100 Europeans and 100 Malays), in consequence of information received that the rebels had taken the latter place. He quitted Kandy a little after 10 o'clock, P.M., on the 28th of July last. As he approached Wariapolle, he met some men armed, entering a by-road, one of whom came forward and said something, which Captain Lillie could not understand. He then ordered the troops to file off, and get into the rear of the armed men, telling some of the Ridlemen to explain to them that if they attempted to run away he would shoot them.

He next took the insurgents prisoners, when some of these from the jungle fired upon the troops, and one of the soldiers of the 19th regiment was wounded.

The men in the road did not, however, fire; Captain Lillie then went back, and directed Captain Watson to take the Rifles to the spot whence the firing proceeded, where they the the insurgents, on their way to the store at Wariapolle. Several of the Kandians fell; those taken prisoners bore loaded guns, and 60 stand of arms were thus captured.

Soon after this Captain Lillie received information that the insurgents had collected at the store, and thither the officer went with the Rifles: the Kandians then ran off, but not before they had fired upon the advancing party. Captain Lillie found a palanquin at the Bungalow with from twenty to thirty pounds of gunpowder, a quantity of balls, slugs, and lead. The Captain then advanced to Matelle, where he found the Bungalow and Rest-House broken open, the house of the Agent gutted, the bazaar partially plundered, and the town almost deserted.

PETERBOROUGH CATHEDRAL.

With the accompanying View of a portion of the town of Peterborough and its fine Norman Cathedral, we conclude our series of views upon the Great Northern Railway. The Cathedral is remarkable for the solidity and massiveness of its construction. In the View, the magnificent western front, with its three lofty arches, each equal to the height of the nave, and its lofty turrets, crowned with spires, is prominently shown; together with the Early English tower, over the north-western transept; the longline of the nave, the low central lantern tower and the great transept: altogether a noble pile of Norman or Early English architecture.

Destructive Fire at Eye.—An alarming fire, attended with great destruction of property, consisting of corn stacks, farm buildings, and about forty cottages, occurred on the evening of Monday last, at the village of Eye, four miles from Peterborough. The fire broke out about six o'clock, on the premises occupied by Mr. Sawfoot, the whole of which, with the exception of the dwelling-house, are consumed. The wind at the time raging frightfully from the south-west, carried the flames across the road to a row of thatched cottages, and from them to the stackyard and premises of Mr. Brainsby, the whole of which were destroyed; and it was only by means of the greatest exertion that the surrounding property escaped. The fire burned furiously until about one or two o'clock in the morning, when the wind, which had previously shifted a point or two to the south, became more calm, and a shower of rain providentially fell. Had the wind continued at the point at which it was when the fire first broke out, the whole village would, probably, have been destroyed. There is too much reason to suppose this to be the work of an incendiary, and that more than one person is concerned; as, within a very short time after, a similar outbreak occurred at the farm of Mr. Sisson, near Singlesole: little damage was, however, done here, as the fire kindled on the leeward side of the stack-yard. The fire-engines from the neighbouring towns of Thorney, Croyland, Peterborough, and Newborough arrived promptly, and did great service in subduing the conflagration at Eye. The premises of Mr. H. M. Little had a narrow escape; one of his corn stacks took fire, but was fortunately extinguished.

SKIRMISH BETWEEN THE BRITISH TROOPS AND THE KANDIAN INSURGENTS, IN CEYLON.

BURNING OF THE ADELPHI THEATRE, AT GLASGOW.

A LITTLE after 1 o'clock on the afternoon of Wednesday week, flames were suddenly observed to burst from the upper front of the Adelphi Theatre, situated on Glasgow-green. As the building was a very spacious one, accommodating nearly 2000 people, and principally composed of timber, the fire spread with vast rapidity, and before the engines arrived every part of the edifice was evidently doomed to destruction. Instead of paying attention to the blazing theatre, from which the flames shot up in startling brilliancy, the fire brigade directed their efforts to save the adjoining property, particularly St. Andrew's Episcopal Church, which was at one time in jeopardy; and, as there was a total absence of wind at the time, they happily succeeded. The theatre, however, is totally destroyed. Mr. Calvert was the lessee of the building; Mr. Frank Raymond, manager; and a large company was nightly performing in the house, who have lost all their effects. Indeed, the progress of the fire was so rapid that the total amount of property saved will not amount in value to £10.

At the moment the flames broke out, the company was rehearsing a new piece, called "The Ocean Monarch; or, the Ship on Fire;" and as Mr. Belfont (who personated Captain Murdoch) was reprehending his imaginary crew for endangering the ship by smoking tobacco, he himself observed real flames bursting out in the upper part of the gallery, and quickly creeping from north to south of the building. The alarm was immediately given throughout the Green room and all the other parts of the house, and the astounded performers speedily made their escape to the outside. The Adelphi was built in 1844; but, as it was badly constructed at the outset, it has undergone so many alterations and reconstructions, that it is believed upwards of £10,000 has been spent upon it from first to last. The house was not insured. The origin of the catastrophe is quite a mystery, as no fire was known to be in the theatre at the time of the accident. Mr. Macready, Mr. Sheridan Knowles, Mr. Phelps, Mrs. Butler, the Misses Cushman, and other eminent players, have performed in this theatre, which was the first erected in Scotland after the passing of the new Licensing Act.

BURNING OF THE ADELPHI THEATRE, AT GLASGOW.

JEROME PATUROT
IN SEARCH OF THE BEST REPUBLIC.
ILLUSTRATED BY GAVARNI.

CHAPTER III.

A TEMPEST IN A GLASS OF WATER.

THE Instructions of the Commissary-General must be obeyed; his voice was only the echo of a more powerful voice. The mot d'ordre in future was agitation in town and country. The parasites of the prefecture were no longer the proper ones, for a serious agitation requires different elements. In the great hotbeds of population these agitations conceive themselves; but agricultural life has sedative virtues which make these fits difficult. Before being moved, the field labourer likes to account for the object of his emotion; he asks what he has to lose or to gain, and if the profit is not quite evident he prefers to forego the chance.

Over such obstacles as these our Commissary had to triumph. Besides, he had to conquer his secret prejudices. To exchange quietness for noise, peace for struggle, was for him anything but a pleasant prospect. He would willingly have floated on the tide of revolutions crowned with roses and with a goblet to his lips! Unhappily, he was not allowed to choose: hesitation even would have been suspected. He therefore went to work in spite of everybody and himself. It was an ungrateful, odious task, more worthy of an evil spirit; for he had to sow alarm where tranquillity had reigned, discord where peace had dwelt.

But justice must be rendered to our Commissary, who had neither taste nor talent for his part. Though he was obliged to act, yet he did the prescribed things badly or only did them half: revolutionary instincts cannot be so suddenly acquired. Among the measures which had been ordered the first was that of bulletins and proclamations. He issued them with a lavish hand, he covered the walls of the prefecture with energetic exhortations and appeals to popular enthusiasm. Their contents were startling and imaginative, and betrayed the artist's stamp.

"The régime," said this voice of the walls, "is a net whose meshes must be broken. Its apparent harmony conceals a deep disorder. God did not intend to create unequal positions, or different rights for the children of men. It is dreadful to think that some live only to enjoy themselves, others to suffer, and that, in this constant contrast, whatever is added to the pleasures of one is so much taken from the necessities of another!"

THE NEW COMMISSARY.

Thus spoke the Prefecture, with a thousand ingenious variations. Well! can it be credited? This appeal to the disinherited left our population unmoved. Neither an armed assault nor a public meeting followed. The state of the town would not get worse. Crowds of idlers stood before the placards of the Prefecture without seeming to be at all affected by these sombre representations. Opinions on each side were exchanged, after which the tide flowed on. The courrier went his way whistling an air, and the citizen went home with unclouded mind and happy spirit.

Spite of his efforts, our magistrate had failed. Whatever he did, the town was not agitated: his friends were in despair; the pavement was unbroken, the windows were undisturbed. It was an absolute, flagrant, irremediable defeat. Concord and order yet reigned—two inexcusable faults. Fortunately, fate intervened, and the disappointed functionary had the honour and privileges of a less tranquil position. He expected the tempest from one corner of the heavens, it came from the opposite one. This is how it happened.

The elections were promulgated, and for the first time universal suffrage obtained an unlimited application. This experience was great and important; it produced many ambitious feelings—legitimate ones and the reverse. Therefore, France was, in a twinkling, overrun by club delegates and travelling Commissaries. At the same place three or four sometimes arrived at once; it was a real unloading. These persons had all a call, a mission. It is true the terms were not always very exact, and occasioned many embarrassments. It was not known which powers might unite or exclude each other, nor which among them had the advantage of precedence. This caused many conflicts in which self-love rose to violence. More than one Hôtel de Prefecture became the scene of selfish struggles, of mysterious tournays, where the champions entered the lists with sabre at the side and pistols in the belt. Generally, the most impudent conquered, and the next day the town heard that it had changed masters. Or, it the power was about equal, the people had two despots instead of one, and were assailed by contradictory proclamations.

Our town, as all others, was visited by this scourge. One day a report was spread that three Commissaries had arrived at once, and that they were holding a stormy council in the hotel of the Prefecture. It was added that in the midst of an agitated discussion, the new comers had carried politics to defiance, and administration to pugilism. It was said, too, that this Congress bested disgrace, and that our Commissary, the favourite of the town, had been threatened in his place. These rumours, at first vague, gradually were confirmed. They were discussed in the cafés, mentioned in the halls. The town was roused, then the country. The more the version was talked of, the more sombre it grew. The unknown Commissaries were for the crowd so many scarecrows: they were said to have threatening faces, and to be armed to the teeth. The public belief was that one of them had sworn that he would not leave the department without having confiscated and divided, the property. Another, still more extensive communism. The third was satisfied with neither; he wanted, by way of recreation, a few citizens' heads.

When these tales were propagated, they created the long-attempted agitation. But still they would not have sufficed if a singular circumstance had not intervened. One of the new Commissaries left the hotel of the Prefecture to assure himself of the good-will of the inhabitants. He was a young man who viewed the Revolution from the theatrical side, and had made it a question of costume. For him the Republic was composed of a hat with steel buckle, a white waistcoat with facings, tight pantaloons, and high boots. Therefore he proudly wore all this for the honour of the new institutions, and from historical association. It was his ideal; he re-ascended the course of time to the revolutionary toilets. Until then this worship of the past had had no dangerous results; it only excited curiosity and surprise. Our town did not take it thus. True, it was disaffected. Scarcely had this singular dress appeared in the streets than a murmur rose from the midst of the crowd. These emblems were not to its taste; it considered them an insult—a defiance, and instantly took up the gauntlet which had been thrown to it. The plagiarist of the Convention retreated to his house amidst the hooting of the people.

The next day was market day, and the town was filled with country people. The talk was only of the previous day's event. Groups were formed in many places where they spoke, and not in very respectful terms, of the men who in turn installed themselves in the department, and disturbed it with their fooleries and their quarrels. The revolutionary costume angered them most; it seemed the forerunner of an attack on property; and, on this point, villagers are intractable. Ours spoke already of cutting any one to pieces who should propose to divide their wealth. Yet many of them had scarcely a field as large as the shadow of their huts; but the passion for property in man is measured less by the importance of the object possessed than by the labour necessary to acquire it. This field, small as it is, represents the labour of a whole life, and often the savings of several generations. It is the identification of the labourer with the earth; and rather than give up an inch, he would give a piece of his body. Be it prejudice or no, this is the predominating instinct, and woe to him who tries to injure or ignore it.

Governed by these prejudices and by these reports, the animosity increased. The groups grew larger and more tumultuous. The orators of the café took stools for tripods, and from them harangued the multitude. The parasites of the Commissary directed the movement; their plan was simple and short. They wished to deliver their friend from this swarm of intruders, and except only him from these administrative vipers. For three names, the Tarpeian rock; for one name the Capitol: that was the mot d'ordre, and the cries of the crowd responded to it. We know how quickly spirits are roused by contact. "To the prefecture! To the prefecture!" was shouted on all sides. The riot was rife: they wanted only a drummer and a flag; these two accessories were easily found. The drummer beat the drum—the flag was unfurled; and a crowd increasing every moment, marched towards the hotel where the four Commissaries compared their candidateship and their powers. At the first noise one of them stepped to the balcony; it was the young man with tight pantaloons His presence sufficed to increase the agitation to its highest point. He tried to speak—noise drowned his voice; his white waistcoat exasperated the crowd they could only see in it the insignia of spoliation.

But yet in the midst of the tumult one wish was expressed with formidable unison: it was for the departure of the three Commissaries. Their oft-repeated names were accompanied by epithets prompted by the heat of passion. The villagers' entire vocabulary was not enough. Some peasants more demonstrative than the rest tried even to add deeds to words. Using their heads as battering-rams, they undertook to break the doors of the hotel and to force a passage to the besieged. The panels were already giving way to the blows, and the crowd of malcontents were upon the point of making an irruption into the place, when a parleying flag was hoisted at the gable window. The garrison wished to capitulate. The spokesmen were brief, the arrangements categoric. The Commissaries were instantly to quit the place. They tried to save their dignity; but the popular whirlwind growled outside, and excuses were imminent. At last, half-forcibly, half-willingly, they were put into the carriage, and drove away in the midst of noises more sonorous than flattering.

(To be continued.)

THE RIOT—"TO THE PREFECTURE!"

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The vacant clerkship in the Registrar's Office of the Court of Chancery has been given to Mr. A. Ellis.

On Saturday morning last, between twelve and one o'clock, a quantity of smoke was seen issuing from the window of the reading-room at present in Lloyd's, immediately facing Bartholomew-lane, and over the northern entrance. Two engines were promptly in attendance, and the firemen having effected an entrance, the flames were subdued.

The brig Three Sisters was recently captured in the Mediterranean by Spanish pirates. The crew succeeded in rescuing Gibraltar, whence the Polyphemus was sent in pursuit, and the brig was recaptured after a smart action, having been defended by 500 men. Of the crew of the Polyphemus, Lieut. Waxey (commander) is dangerously wounded.

Lord Courtenay having accepted the appointment of Assistant Poor-Law Commissioner, has, previous to his retirement from the representation of Devonshire, issued his parting address thanking the electors for the kind and disinterested manner in which, and stating that he has taken the necessary steps for vacating his seat.

The Government have instituted a committee of inquiry into the Customs department, with a view to investigate what reductions can be made in that branch of the public service, and the manner in which the same has been or will be adopted in all public departments, where a saving of expenditure is likely to result. The members are to be chiefly composed of those persons who have had a hand for the last few years in the various changes which have taken place in the internal economy of the Customs department.

In the four northern English counties—Durham, Northumberland, Cumberland, and Westmoreland—there are no fewer than 5,000 deaf and dumb, and 600 blind persons.

There are four on military and naval officers of the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, Major, and Captain in the duty of Poor-Law Inspectors in Ireland.

Messrs. J. R. Barry and Wm. Bean R. Simonds, Barristers-at-Law, are at present on a tour through Ireland, to fix the boundaries of the different districts under the late Act of Parliament for the election of conservators.

On Sunday last, the Lord Bishop of St. Asaph preached at St. Matthew's Church, Brixton, in aid of the Brixton National Schools. A liberal collection was made on the occasion.

In order to abate the nuisance of street-begging in London, the City Police Commissioner has ordered that all persons found begging in the streets of the city be at once taken to the police-office, there to undergo such examination, and if, upon investigation, it appear that the party is a known mendicant, let him or her be taken before the magistrate; or if, in the absence of such evidence, the officer refuses to give relief, it shall be lawful for such person to take him or her before the magistrate, who is empowered to commit such offender.

In Ireland the suppression of the canteen in military barracks does not seem to conduce to temperance among the soldiery. Since their discontinuance drunkenness and rioting among the soldiers out of doors has very much increased.

The London morning mails, viâ Liverpool, due at Kingstown on Saturday morning last, did not arrive till 5h 10m. p.m., 34 hours from London, the packet having been detained five hours by contrary winds across the bar at Liverpool, and subsequently by bad weather. The night mail viâ Holyhead reached Kingstown at 1h. p.m., 16 hours from London, and seven hours before the morning mail, thus proving the superiority of the short sea passage.

In the Maryleboue Savings Banks the number of open deposit accounts on the 20th inst. was 19,019; and the sums invested with National Debt Commissioners were £391,386.

The Rev. Dr. Croly, rector of St. Stephen's, Walbrook, preached a sermon before the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, Sir James Duke, the Sheriffs, and the Common Council, and a full congregation, at the morning service of St. Bride's, on the 12th inst., in behalf of the Sunday and daily schools of that parish. There was a large sum collected on the occasion.

Queen Adelaide has given £50 to the fund of the Philanthropic Society for establishing a farm-school of industry and discipline for juvenile delinquents. Among the donations which poured in to the society in aid of their object are £200 from M. Visconti, and £100 from an anonymous contributor, through Messrs. Coutts and Co.

The Earl of Cardigan, it is understood, has been induced to tender an apology to Captain Gerard Noel, of the 11th Hussars, for the insulting expressions he addressed to that officer on a recent occasion.

A lunar rainbow was observed at Scarborough and other northern localities on Saturday evening last, and presented a very beautiful appearance. It continued visible about a quarter of an hour.

On Friday night week a brilliant display of the aurora was observed through the north of Great Britain and Ireland. The curious lights were visible in London.

Last week the decrease of gin in London amounted to 32,567lb.

A correspondent in the Cork Southern Reporter states that some of the scientific gentlemen connected with the Royal Irish Academy have discovered that the celebrated fishing banks of Newfoundland extend across the Atlantic to within 100 miles of Ireland; and the quantity of fish on the said banks is more than sufficient to supply the markets of the whole world.

Tilbury Fort, at Gravesend, is ordered to be furnished from Woolwich Dockyard with three signal lanterns, of the same description as those supplied to our men-of-war.

Government has determined upon building a new registration court, and has intimated to the Governors of the Scottish Hospital that the site of the buildings at present occupied by that Corporation will be required for the purpose.

Her Majesty has given permission to the Rev. Robert Montgomery, to dedicate to her his new volume of poems entitled "The Christian Life," half the profits of which have been generously devoted by that gentleman, in perpetuo, to the Hospital for Consumption.

On Monday, the last statute of the late session (11 and 12 Vic. cap. 130) came in force. It relates to the management of savings banks. It facilitates the withdrawal of deposits and enables small sums to be invested to any amount not exceeding £100, before being actually due to depositors. It empowers actions to be brought and judgments recovered against savings banks. Once in every year, all deposit books are to be produced and inspected.

The Earl of Ripon is about to erect six almshouses for poor persons, in order to commemorate the circumstance of his eldest son obtaining his majority.

The Library of Circulation Hall, which was sold last week, pursuant to advertisement, and which contained some valuable works on Irish history, realised above £500.

There are 8000 paupers on the out-door and workhouse relief in Skibbereen (Ireland).

Mr. Laurence Power, the son of the late lamented Mr. Tyrone Power, has appeared lately in some of his father's best characters at the Park Theatre, New York, and has been received by crowded audiences with great applause. Mr. Power is said to display great talent and versatility, and his American critics declare that he must eventually gain a great reputation.

The metropolitan parish of St. Martin, it is estimated, would save £2500 per annum by the adoption of the Artesian water supply system.

Forty-seven deputy-lieutenants, facetiously termed "chevrons," have been forwarded from the inspector-General's Office, Dublin, for the members of the constabulary force of Kilkenny city, who defended the farm-house of Farrington against 3 Smith and his ballagatory insurgents.

A puncheon of the celebrated Lochnagar whiskey, distilled by Messrs. Begg and Buyers, whose establishment near Aberdeen was visited by her Majesty and Prince Albert, when they were in Scotland last autumn, has by royal command been consigned, within these few days, to the cellar of Buckingham Palace, and placed amongst the stores from which the festivities of the Palace are supplied.

This day (Sat., Nov. 25) is the centenary of the death of the celebrated Dr. Isaac Watts, who died Nov. 25, 1748.

M. Coquerel, the Protestant clergyman, who is a member of the French National Assembly, has written a letter to the newspapers, in which he recommends to his fellow clergymen to remain neuter in respect to the election of a President of the Republic.

The Marquis of Normanby has sent a note to some of the Paris newspapers, contradicting the report that he had called upon M. Louis Napoleon Bonaparte.

On Tuesday the Hon. C. W. Fitzwilliam commenced his canvass for the West Riding of Yorkshire, in addressing numerous meetings of electors at the Clock, Halifax. Before the commencement of the proceedings a deputation waited upon Mr. Fitzwilliam and Lord Morpeth, requesting the latter to withdraw his resignation on the following day. Mr. Roebuck is spoken of as a candidate by the Liberals, and Mr. Beckett Denison by the Conservatives.

Lieutenant Mansel has not been gazetted to the 7th Hussars, as generally stated. The appointment bestowed on him is that of barrack-master at Sheerness.

Prince Lowenstein, who for the last few years has officiated as Secretary to the Prussian Legation in London, has resigned that appointment, and gone to Berlin.

Ten Judges and other members of the magistracy of Paris have come to a resolution not to receive, as a body, any visits or to pay compliments to the President of the Republic, but to confine themselves to the discharge of their duties. It is believed, however, that four out of five will vote for General Cavaignac.

M. Grandmesnil, formerly editor of the Réforme, Paris newspaper, charged with participation in the insurrection of June, was acquitted by the Council of War, on Saturday last.

Colonel Rey, Commander of the Hôtel de Ville, arrested on the 15th May last, has been restored to liberty.

Continual fatal accidents reached town during the week relative to Ibrahim Pacha, the servant-maid of Lord Cowley, who was staying with her lord and family at Alexandria, after a search of many days, affirms that his Excellency had again become most precarious, and that it was his aged and now imbecile father, Mehemet Ali, who had died.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

Notwithstanding the political derangement existing throughout the Continent, the absence of employment for capital here neutralises the effect, and Consols again register an advance upon the previous week's prices. The market on Monday was [illegible] on Saturday's closing quotation, and ultimately improving in the extent of three-quarters per cent., closing at 87¼. Prices for Tuesday, although well maintained, showed a slight reaction towards the close of the market, quoting 87⅛ to ⅜. Some realising on Wednesday created dullness, and the French news did not favourably operate upon the forward movement. Prices consequently opened at a decline of about ⅛, and although a large purchase ensued, for the moment, an advance to 87⅜, the closing price was 87⅛. These prices were maintained on Thursday, with scarcely a variation of a slight decline. Bank Stock is heavy, and Near Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents are below the market value. The closing prices of the week do not display any further improvement, as the annexed list will show.—Bank Stock, 188; Reduced, 87⅛ to ⅜; New 3¼ per Cent. Annu., 86⅝; Long Annu. to expire [illegible] 1860, 3¼; Ditto, Short Ditto, 1860, 3¼; India Stock, 261 to 263; India Bonds, £1000, 37 pm.; Ditto under £1000, 38 pm.; South Sea Stock, 94⅛; Consols for Account, 87⅛; Exchequer Bills, £1000, March, 44 pm.; Ditto, £1000, June, 41 pm.; Ditto, £500 May, 44 pm.; Small Ditto, 44 pm.

In the foreign house, there has been rather an active market for Portuguese Stock, the quality for delivery in December having been issued for the Board of Public Credit at [illegible] per cent. The Dutch Certificates of Coupons have sold 75 per cent. present, and the remaining 25 per cent. at Five per Cent. Stock. The two remaining loans during the week have been the Spanish Passive, when over three-fourths were taken up by the Rothschilds, and the Russian 5 per cent. Inscribed Stock, which has been [illegible] 1847, as effects [illegible] 1 per cent. advance, at 104, with a further improvement that the deposits on [illegible] 5 per cent. will only [illegible] 2 per cent. after the reduction of 25 per cent. which will [illegible] 1 per cent. in the course of a few days. The Loan of the Credit Foncier, at the Paris terms, the comparatively trifling advance in the price of the Stock is not extraordinary. Its range during the week has been from Monday's lowest price of 24¾ to 25¼. It has since receded to 25⅛ to ¼. Mexican declined on Thursday, upon a report that no remittance had arrived by this mail, but afterwards partially rallied. In the other Foreign Stock no noticeable circumstances have occurred to affect the quotations, with the exception of [illegible] Spanish Passive at 5¼, 5⅜, Mexican, Peru Certificates, 24¾, Ditto, Active, 24¼, Peru Bonds, 85 per cent., Dutch Five per Cent., 104¼, Ditto, 2½ per Cents., 54¼ Ditto, Certificates, 25 per Cent., 25⅛, Ditto, Three per Cent., 24¾, Belgium, Two-and-a-Half per Cent., 40¾; Dutch, Two-and-a-Half per Cent., 19 Gerald., 47⅛.

There are no variations to notice in the Railway Share Market, with a limited amount of business. A tendency to decline has been occasionally evident, but no reaction of any moment has yet occurred. The Eastern Counties Company and Midland Company have put forth their statements from which the following particulars are gleaned:—

[illegible] Eastern Counties, 11¼; Ditto, New, Guaranteed 6 per Cent., 82; East Lincolnshire, 24¾; Great Northern, 42; Great North of England, New, 30; Great Western, 75½ Ditto, Half Shares, 43; Ditto, Quarter Shares, 16½; Ditto, Fifths, 17; Lancaster and Carlisle, 47; Lancashire and Yorkshire, 60; Ditto, Fifths, 12; Ditto, Thirds (Registered), 45; Ditto (West Riding Union), 13½; London, Brighton, and South Coast, 93; London and Greenwich, 12; London and North-Western, 116½; Ditto, Fifths, 23½; Ditto, £10 (M. and B.) 13½; Ditto, £10 (M. and B.) C., 2¾; London and South-Western, 38; Ditto, New £50, 27; Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire, New, 24¾; Ditto, 25 Shares, 7; Newcastle and Carlisle, 11¾; Ditto, Leasehold, 9; Norwich, New Guaranteed, 9½; Ditto, 17½; Scottish Central, 17½; Ditto, Perpetual, 8¾; Scottish Midland Junction, 3¾; Ditto, Scottish Northern, 4¾; Ditto, No 2, 10; Ditto, No. 4, Thirds, 6¾; South Wales, 8; West Valley, 6 per Cent. Guaranteed, 27½; York, Newcastle, and Berwick, 29¾; York and Berwick, 24. Docks: Commercial, 46; East India, 150; London, 90; St. Katherine, 72½; Victoria, 23¾; Colonial, 46; Ditto, Lost and West India Extension, 23¾; Orleans and Bordeaux, 18; Paris and Lyons, 4; Paris and Strasbourg, 2; Tours and Nantes, 1¼.

SATURDAY MORNING.—There was but little movement in the English Market yesterday. Consols quoting, during the day, 87⅛ for money and time. Mexican Stock was flat, at 21; and Portuguese closed at 24¾. In Shares there was no change of importance.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE, Friday.—In the [illegible] of good English wheat for our market [illegible] were very limited, and the [illegible] was very heavy. The [illegible] was very moderately supplied with barley, nevertheless the [illegible] ago for fine malting lots, both on the spot and for forward delivery, was very dull, but we have so fail to notice in prices. The demand for oats [illegible] has been considerably on the decline, other quarters it has proved small. The oat trade was heavy, at about Monday's currencies. Beans were [illegible] and [illegible] maintained.

ARRIVALS.—English wheat, 1850, barley, 1660; oats, 1870 quarters. Irish: wheat, —; barley, 670; oats, 11,380 quarters. Foreign: wheat, 11,230; barley, 1460; oats, 6940; flour, 8630 sacks and barrels; malt, 1460 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 40s to 54s; ditto, white, 48s to 60s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 44s to 52s; ditto, white, 46s to 57s; rye, 28s to 30s; grinding barley, 26s to 28s; Peterborough, 24s to 26s; Norfolk and Lincoln malt, 56s to 60s; brown ditto, 48s to 54s; Kingston and Ware, 60s to 64s; Chevalier, 64s to 67s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 19s to 20s; potato ditto, 21s to 22s; Youghall and Cork, black, 20s to 20½; ditto, white, 21s to 24s; tick beans, new, 28s to 30s; old, 32s to 34s; grey peas, 30s to 32s; maple, 32s to 34s; white, 34s to 36s; pollers, 37s to 40s per quarter. Tow, meal, 20s per load. Flour, 45s to 47s per sack. Linseed cakes, £6 5s to £6 10s per ton. Rapeseed, £9 per last. Canary seed, —s to —s. Coriander seed, —s to —s per cwt. Brown mustard seed, —s to —s; white, —s to —s. Tares, —s to —s. Hempseed, —s to —s. Linseed, —s to —s per quarter. Rapeseed cakes, £5 5s per ton. Hempseed cakes, —s to —s per ton.

Foreign.—Wheat, —s to —s; barley, —s to —s; oats, —s to —s; beans, —s to —s; peas, —s to —s per quarter. Flour, —s to —s per barrel.

The Seed Market.—So little business is doing in this market, that prices rule almost nominal.

[illegible] per cwt. for [illegible] quarters, linseed cakes, English, £11 10s to £12 10s; ditto, foreign, £8 10s to £9 10s per [illegible] rapeseed cakes, £4 10s to £5 per ton; canary, 60s to 65s per quarter. English clover seed, red, —s to —s; extra, —s to —s; white, —s to —s; extra, —s to —s. Foreign red, —s to —s; [illegible] —s to —s; white, —s to —s; extra, —s to —s. [illegible] per cwt. Mustard seed, white, [illegible] per quarter. Tares, [illegible] per [illegible] of 24 pecks. Hempseed, [illegible] per quarter. Coriander seed, [illegible] per cwt.

Linseed.—Calcutta, [illegible] Sept.—Oct. shipment, 52s 3d; Odessa, 52s 6d; Archangel, 52s 6d; Petersburgh, 52s 6d; Riga, 52s 6d; Baltic, 52s 6d; Mediterranean and Odessa, 52s 6d; Egyptian, 52s 6d; Bombay, 52s 6d; Madras, 52s 6d; Bengal, 52s 6d; Black Sea, 52s 6d per quarter.

Rapeseed.—Coast, [illegible] per last; Baltic, [illegible] per last; Mediterranean and Odessa, [illegible] per last; Egyptian, [illegible] per last; Bombay, [illegible] per last; Madras, [illegible] per last; Bengal, [illegible] per last; Black Sea, [illegible] per last.

Linseed Cakes.—Coast, [illegible] per ton; Baltic, [illegible] per ton; Mediterranean and Odessa, [illegible] per ton; Egyptian, [illegible] per ton; Bombay, [illegible] per ton; Madras, [illegible] per ton; Bengal, [illegible] per ton; Black Sea, [illegible] per ton.

Rapeseed Cakes.—Coast, [illegible] per ton; Baltic, [illegible] per ton; Mediterranean and Odessa, [illegible] per ton; Egyptian, [illegible] per ton; Bombay, [illegible] per ton; Madras, [illegible] per ton; Bengal, [illegible] per ton; Black Sea, [illegible] per ton.

Foreign.—Wheat, 32s 3d; barley, 24s 11d; oats, 20s 5d; rye, 0s 0d; beans, 0s 0d; peas, 0s 0d.

Flour.—Wheat, 34s 8d; barley, 23s 11d; oats, 20s 5d; rye, 0s 0d; beans, 0s 0d; peas, 3s 0d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 6s; barley, 2s 0d; oats, 2s 6d; rye, 2s 0d; beans, 2s 0d; peas, 2s 0d.

WOOL.—We have no material alteration to notice in the general features of this market. On the whole, a steady business is going on at, as about, last week's quotations

Sugar.—We have no change to report in the value of any kind of sugar, all kinds of which are [illegible]

[illegible] have undertaken to sell to us hands of iron, the prices of which are [illegible]

Provisions.—For all kinds of Irish butter, we have again to report a very inactive demand, at, in some instances, drooping prices. The stock is now upwards of 64,000 firkins. Foreign butter is dull, at last to 2s per cwt. lower. Very little is being done in bacon, and prices [illegible] 10s per cwt. for fine Dorset; and 6s to 8s for middling do. Pork is quoted at 5s to 5s per doz. lbs. There is a better inquiry for lard, but we have no improvement to notice in its value. Singed sides are selling at 5s to 5s per cwt. Pierce and barrel mid-less of pork are held from 45s to 47s 6d per barrel. Very little is being done in hams, at 60s to 70s per cwt. In other kinds of provisions, comparatively little business is doing.

Tallow.—The spot and all position have, yet the demand is steady at full prices. P Y C on the spot is selling at 43s 3d; and for forward delivery, 44s 9d per cwt. Town tallow, 42s 3d net cash.

Oils.—[illegible] is moving in the market, that it would be difficult to quote prices accurate ely. Hay and Straw.—Last week's meadow hay, 75s to 85s; clover ditto, 42 10s to £4 10s; and straw, £1 2s to £1 10s per load.

Wool.—In the public sales are going on tolerably well. A fair portion of the wool as yet offered has sold at nearly full prices. The arrivals continue small.

Spirits.—In the rum market is to-day firm, at about stationary prices. Brandy and corn spirits as last quoted.

Coals (Friday).—East Adair's, 13s 9d; Ord's Redheugh, 13s; Hetton, 13s; Haswell, 13s; Stewart's, 13s per ton.

Hops (Friday).—We have still to notice a fair demand for the best new hops in pockets, at very full prices. The remaining inferior qualities, the supply of which on hand is by no means large, are a slow sale, at late rates. Yearling and old hops are also out nominal to us.—Sussex pockets, £2 4s to £3 18s. Weald of Kent, ditto, £2 8s to £3 6s. Mid and East Kent ditto £2 10s to £5 12s. Farnhams, £3 12s to £5 17s.

Smithfield (Friday).—Our market to-day was scantily supplied with beasts in very middling condition. Still, however the best breeds were in [illegible] demand, at Monday's quotations. [illegible] were in moderate request, at full prices. [illegible] were in [illegible] demand, at Monday's currencies. [illegible] were in [illegible] demand, at Monday's currencies. [illegible] were in [illegible] demand, at Monday's currencies

PUBLICATIONS, &c.

NEW CHRISTMAS BOOK BY MR CHARLES DICKENS
Early in December will be publish d, p ice Five Shillings, with Illustrations by Clarkson Stanfield, R.A., Frank Stone, John Leech and John Tenniel,

THE HAUNTED MAN and the GHOST'S BARGAIN: a Fancy for Christmas Time
By CHARLES DICKENS
London: BRADBURY and EVANS, 11, Bouverie-street

New Work by the Author of "The Caudle Lectures"
On the 30th inst will be published, in Post 8vo cloth, price 5s.
A MAN MADE OF MONEY
By DOUGLAS JERROLD. This extraordinary individual will make his appearance every succeeding month, until completed in six months.
N.B.—The Man will every month hold Two Plates (to be supplied by Leech), for a Shilling.
PUNCH Office, 85, Fleet-street.

NEW WORK BY THE AUTHOR OF "VANITY FAIR."
On the 30th inst. will be published, price 1s (to be continued Monthly), No. 2 of PENDENNIS;
HIS FORTUNES AND MISFORTUNES, HIS FRIENDS AND HIS GREATEST ENEMY.
By W. M. THACKERAY,
Author of "Vanity Fair," "The Book of Snobs," in "Punch," &c. &c.
With Illustrations on Steel and Wood by the Author
London: BRADBURY and EVANS, 11, Bouverie-street

PRICE ONE SHILLING
Now ready, profusely illustrated, price One Shilling,
THE COMIC ALMANACK for 1849.
Edited by HORACE MAYHEW, and illustrated by George Cruikshank. D ROGUE, Fleet-street, and sold everywhere

NEW NOVEL
Now Ready, and to be had at all the Libraries, in 3 vols. post 8vo.,
TREVETHLAN.—A Cornish Story.
By WILLIAM DAVY WATSON Esq., Barrister-at-Law.
"Mr. Watson's novel is a success."—Britannia
"Two volumes full of delightful gossip."—Britannia
London: SMITH, ELDER, and Co., 65, Cornhill.

THE CONSULAR SERVICE.—Just published, 8vo. price 2s.,
THE NATURE and CHARACTER of the CONSULAR SERVICE. By JOHN CAMPBELL MACRAE, Esq., late Consul, Macedonia, and other Forms required in the Transactions of a Consul or Office By JOHN GREEN, Esq., late Deputy Assistant Commissary General, &c. &c. &c. London: WM. H. ALLEN and Co., Leadenhall-street.

NEW WORK FOR THE YOUNG, ILLUSTRATED BY GEORGE CRUIKSHANK.
On DECEMBER 1 will be published, in fcap 8vo, price 6s., cloth,
KIT BARN'S ADVENTURES; or, The Yarn of an Old Mariner. By MARY COWDEN CLARKE, Author of the "Concordance to Shakespeare."
GRANT and GRIFFITH, successors to J. HARRIS, corner of St Paul's Churchyard.

NEW CHRISTMAS BOOK.—Will be Published early in December, THE WINDS AND THE WAVES. A Tale of the Sea. To all who desire the spiritual and temporal welfare of their poorer neighbours this work is respectfully dedicated. Illustrated by Gilbert and others. Bound and gilt, price 5s. 6d.—Also,
THE ART-UNION ANNUAL, last vol Published on large paper, 21s 8d; small, 11 1s 6d.—Published by E. ARTHUR, 196, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury-square, London.

SONG for CHRISTMAS.—THE MERRY WINTER NIGHT. Composed by E. J. LODER. Price 2s (not postage free). Mr. Loder, the composer of "The brave Old Oak," "The Old Home at Home," "Pilgrim of the Palermo," and a host of other favourite songs, has made a decided hit in "The Merry Winter Night." Both words and music are highly attractive, and make an excellent song wherewith to enliven the winter evening; the subject being of a truly national character, and the compass of voice required not extensive, it will suit either male or female vocalists
London: D. ff and Co., 244, Regent-street, and 63, Oxford-street

ROYAL BALL and EVENING DRESSES, and 100 Winter Fashions, in the LADIES' GAZETTE of FASHION for DECEMBER, price 1s. The only correct Paris Fashions, also the summer's Fashions, any other work. 20 double Fashionable and children's dresses, 30 wood Engravings, 10 bas and evening dresses, and Indian costume, Knitting, Lace patterns, Needlework directions, &c. sent post free for 6d. extra
G. BERGER, Holywell-street, Strand; and all Booksellers.

LES TROIS NAPOLEON et l'Icare Napoleonien (deux magnifiques gravures), MM. Grippon and Valentine (vignettes), ont paru dans le No. 12 du MONDE, Journal Satirique et Pamphlétaire Terre-à-terre, Spirituel, Les Candidats Aéronautes César Napoleon Sandapson Africain. Madame la Duchesse d'Orleans. Nouvelle interrogation du M. Prudhon. Bienheureux Epoque. Au prochain Numero, on annoncera des dessins du nouveau Prix Londres, trois mois, 1s; provinces, 1s 6d. Le Numero, 3d. et 4d.
Office, 183 Strand.

SHARP'S LONDON MAGAZINE. Edited by FRANK FAIRLEGH.—The December Part, price 1s., contains Five superior Engravings on Steel, and the following, among other articles of general interest:—
The Daughters of Inverness. By Miss D. M. Mulock.
Birds—places among Barbarous Nations
Lewes Arundel Chap. I.-IV. by Frank Fairlegh.
Shakespeare's Fools. By Mrs. Cowden Clarke
The Story of a Family. By o. M.
Surrey By M. F. Tupper, &c.
Reviews—The Conjurers of the New World—Young Countess—Metropolitan Rev—
London: ARTHUR HALL and Co., 25, Paternoster-row.

MRS. GORE'S NEW NOVEL.
Now Ready, in 3 vols. post 8vo.,
THE HEIRESS of DIAMOND and the PEARL.
By Mrs. GORE.
Also, lately Published
THE YOUNG COUNTESS. By Mrs. TROLLOPE. 3 vols.
"A work of unfailing and absorbing interest."—Court Journal. Immediately,
A SECOND EDITION of MILDRED VERNON. 3 vols.

In a few days,
ADVENTURES in BORNEO. 1 Vol.
HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

Third Edition, Price 1s. 6d.,
FALLACIES OF RAILWAY INVESTMENT, Railway Dividends, and Railway Accounts. By ARTHUR SMITH.
Should be carefully examined by every one interested in Railway property.—Economist.
An excellent guide to share and debenture holders as a Railway Guide to travellers."—Illustrated London News
"Every one should carefully make himself acquainted with the causes of the present distress, and demand a remedy."—Liverpool Paper
SHERWOOD and Co., 23, Paternoster-row.

MONSIEUR LE PAGE'S NEW WORKS.
Now Ready, price 6s. neatly b und
READY GUIDE to FRENCH COMPOSITION.—FRENCH GRAMMAR by EXAMPLES; giving models as to reading strings throughout Accidence and Syntax; and practical and comparative view of the English and French idioms in their principal of turnover. By Mons. LE PAGE, Professor of the French Language, Author of "L'Echo de Paris," "The French Reader," &c.
"We should not think of describing an object to make it known, who was not either in at once. Why should we think of teaching by precepts and rules, when a model can be set forth?"
London: EFFINGHAM WILSON, Royal Exchange M. LE LONGMAN; and all Booksellers

NO MORE MEDICINE for Indigestion Nervousness, Low Spirits, Biousness, Stomach of the Lowest and Irregularity of the Intestines &c. Pub. sher by DU BARRY Price 6d., or 8d. in stamps by post, the fifth edition of DU BARRY on INDIGESTION: A Popular Treatise, with numerous cases practically illustrating the Restoration of Health to the most feeble, delicate, or habitual constipation without Medicine, or artificial means of any kind, by a simple and infallible means.—Du Barry and Co., 79, New Bond-street, London.

MODERN BOOKS AT HALF PRICE.—Families, Book Societies, and Literary Institutions, are united to call the Reduction from an extensive and valuable STOCK of BOOKS, to the best authors, in perfect condition, at BULL'S LIBRARY, Holles-street, Cavendish-square.—Detailed Catalogues delivered gratis, or sent to orders inclosing two stamps, addressed to Mr. BULL, Librarian, Holles-street, Cavendish-square.

FIELD'S JUVENILE BOOK ESTABLISHMENT.—The largest Stock in London, comprising the works of the most popular authors, with handsome bindings, and at low prices particularly adapted for school prizes, rewards, Christmas and birthday presents. A list forwarded upon receipt of two postage stamps. 66, Rupert-s Quadrant, corner of air street

FRENCH COMIC ALMANACK, price 9d.
AM. THOMAS begs to inform the public that the PARIS ALMANACK for 1849 can be procured at his Foreign Book and Newspaper Office, 21, Catherine-street, Strand.—the Comic Proposal, an illustrated sheet, by Cham, 66 Wood Engravings, 6 coloured Lithographs, and also agreed for the drawing room or library, printed in gold and richly embossed with high-finished devices and fixed upon wings, plain and coloured, from 1s to be each. Orders received by all Booksellers and measure

Conduit-street, Hanover-square
THE NEW AND STANDARD WORKS may be obtained for perusal in any quantity at the BRITISH and FOREIGN LIBRARY, 307, GREAT MARLBOROUGH-STREET, REGENT-SQUARE, LONDON. The great accommodations afforded by the extensive and valuable Library are considered as available in every part of the Kingdom as in the Metropolis, by arrangements with the Railway companies, and the Manufacturers and Merchants' Catalogues and Literary Boxes, rates.
Terms of subscription sent (post free) on application to Messrs. SAUNDERS and OTLEY, publishers, Conduit-street, Hanover-square, and the Librarian, at LONDON. Second-hand COPIES of NEW WORKS withdrawn from the Library for sale, at reduced prices, may be had on application.

FOLDING SCREENS for the WINTER.—The largest assortment of Screens may be seen at SHEBT HORNE'S, House Decorator, 61, Gracechurch-street, near London-bridge, and not to be surpassed in the Kingdom for cheapness in Fashionable Decorations, French and English, as well as an extensive Stock of Flock, Gold, Satin, and other Papers Estimates given for Painting in town or country. Screens securely packed and sent to any part of the kingdom

PIANOFORTES of sterling excellency, at 20 GUINEAS and 30 GUINEAS, carefully tuned the public so inspect, at their spacious Warerooms, 91, Cheapside, their splendid STOCK of PIANOFORTES, of a character, fashion, and workmanship not to be surpassed. Parties requiring the good instruments will find at WM. HOLE and SONS a stock so extensive as to enable every for an early selection and moderate cost, at prices as low as are possibly compatible with first-rate quality.

BONNETS.—PARISIAN MILLINERY.—Genou Silk Velvet Bonnets, all colours, ou grounds each. French Satin or Drapes, all colours, for morning, Trimmed Patent Crapes 10s 9d to 15s 6d each. More than 500 Bonnets, trimmed and untrimmed not to be procured at any price, and the largest stock in London to select from, at CHAMPION HOUSE, No. 29, Cranbourne-street, Leicester-square, proprietors, R. WOOLLEY and Company. Day Four Footmen's Cloak hats extra embroidered.

BRIDALS and BALLS.—The Lace Dresses, Flounces, Berthes also Brussels Point Veils, 8cs 9s, Bride Squares, Point and Flat Berthes, consisting of 27-Ds 6s and other Goods, are discerning Ladies early notice. The saving will be material in their expenditure. A GUINEAS you will regret if you fail in selecting from the extensive Stock at CHAMPION HOUSE, No. 29, Regent-street. DESUS is decidedly retiring from business. No. 227, Regent-street.

ANOTHER IMPORTANT and EXTENSIVE SUCCESSION of FRENCH MERINOES have just been received by BEECH and HERRALD, 6c, Edgware-road, which they are offering at prices that must command an immediate clearance. For instance

373 Pieces in all Colours, at 1s 4½d per yard, usual price 2s 3d
250 ,, ,, ,, 1s 6d ,, ,, 2s 3d
196 ,, finest imported, 2s 6d ,, ,, 3s 6d
Patterns sent free, postage-free.
Address, Beech and Herrald, 56, Edgware-road

GREAT BARGAINS in WOOLLEN CLOTHS.—Gentlemen's Cloths, Fancy Trowsering, real Woad Finishes.—BEECH and HERRALD, have just comp sed a very superior purchase of Woollen Cloths, which they are now submitting at prices considerably lower than it has ever been possible to offer them before. Late reporting these articles will do well to inspect this stock
Beech and Herrald, 56, Edgware-road.—Patterns sent post-free
N.B. Just received 800 pounds' worth of the choicest dahlia and other Shawls, at 10s 6d each, usual price 15s 6d.

EXTRAORDINARY CHEAP SILKS and VELVETS. FOR WASHING.
EVENING, and DINNER DRESSES, and CHRISTMAS PRESENTS the Richest Glaze, striped, and Checkers 8s 6d at 25s 6d the full dress
Very Rich Brocaded and Corded Silks 9s 6d to 25s dress
Very Rich White, Pink, and Rose Satin ogles, at 9s
Very Rich Brocaded Velvets, in the Shades, 7 wide, 30s the full dress.
The Richest Black Watered, Silks and Satins, at 50s the full dress.
The Richest Lyons Silk Velvets, 36 wide, full dress, worth £10.
Patterns
Sent on application
OETZMANN
50 to 51 parts of the United Kingdom and Colonies,
In order to save Ladies the trouble of coming to London to make their purchases
Address,
KING and SHEARD, 254, Regent-street.

IMPERIAL LADIES' CLOTH of the most superb quality in Europe, 54 inches wide, worth 6d
,, Narrow Lace ,, ,, from 1s 9d to 2s 6d
,, Insertions ,, ,, 0s 9d to 1s 6d
,, Insertions ,, ,, 0s 6d to 0s 9d
Real Brussels Lace ,, ,, 1s 6d to 2s 6d
Ditto ditto Flounces ,, ,, 12s 6d to 35s 6d
Beautiful Brussels Point Collars ,, ,, 2s 9d to 10s 6d each
Ditto ditto Sleeves ,, ,, 2s 6d to 10s 6d
The most elegant Guipure Berthes ,, ,, 28s 6d to 8 guineas each
Very beautiful Brussels Point Bride ,, ,, 4s to 30s
Several Hundred richly embroidered Cambric Handkerchiefs at Half-price
Real Black Lace Flounces, from 16 to 36 guineas, worth 40 guineas
Lace Veils, Barbes and White French Lace Dresses, from 6s to 7s the set
For the convenience of ladies in the country, patterns will be sent on application, and purchases exchanged or the money returned
KING and SHEARD, 254, Regent-street, London
Merchants, 284, Regent-street, London

CURTAIN DAMASK SELLING OFF.—L. and N. WORMS, 199 to 199, Whitechapel-road, London, have been authorised to sell the remainder of the late Thomas Hampson in DISPOSE OF the whole of his valuable STOCK of Worsted and Wool Damasks, Reps, Cloths, and Tapestry, and have removed the same to the following, which will be submitted to —lot 1. About 40 pieces of damask, original price 9s 6d, now 4½d. Lot 2 ,, ditto, original price 1s 6d, now 9d. Lot 3. 200 pieces ditto, original price 1s 9d, now 10½d. 500 pieces half-coloured damasks, all worsted, original price 2s 6d, now 1s 2d. Lot 5. 300 pieces magnificent quality ditto, original price 3s, now 1s 5d. Also 100 pieces superior Brussels carpets, last year's designs, at 2s 9d a yard. Patterns of the above are now forwarded on application to any part of the kingdom gratis.—L. and M. WORMS, Upholsterers, Furnishers, Carpet, and Damask Manufacturers, Carpet and Cabinet Warehousemen, &c., 199 to 199, Whitechapel-road, London. Largest Furnishers Published

CHILDREN'S FROCKS, COATS, and PELISSES, in all the new materials and prevailing styles, at large assortment is now expressly adapted for SCHOOL, by Mrs. SHEARMAN, 5, FINSBURY PAVEMENT, LONDON
(Between the Bank and Finsbury-square
SEVERAL HUNDRED Pelisses on view, from the useful indoor at 1s. 11d., 2s. 6d., 3s. 9d.; Medium, 5s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 10s. 6d., 15s. 6d.; Handsome, 18s. 6d., 21s., 25s. 6d., up to the richest goods made in Silk Velvets, Three, Four, and Five Guineas.
HOLLAND DRESS PATTERNS of all kinds, Frocks, 1s. 6d.; Pinafores, 1s.; Blouses, 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d.; and 5s. 6d.
CLOTH JACKETS, COATS, and CLOAKS, for all ages above two years, in great variety.
INFANTS' CLOAKS, HOODS, HATS and BONNETS, LONG and SHORT ROBES, French Cambric Caps, Day and Night Gowns, Robe de nuits, Laces and Cambric Ruchings, Open and Round Skirts, Trimmed Nursery Baskets and Bassinets, with or without canopy Trimmings, &c., with every other article in BABY LINEN, to which we shall be most happy to call the attention of Mothers, and thus obviating the trouble and inconvenience in going to various shops when a Baby Wardrobe is required. An assortment of Infants' Cloaks, Hoods, Robes, &c., sent to any part of the country to save time on the receipt of a letter.

ROBBINS'S CREAM of ROSES and ROSE-MARY.—This esteemed article is offered to the Public by GIBBINS, Court Hairdresser and Perfumer (late Percy), 7, King-street, St James's-square, as the most delicate and effectual preservative of the Hair. Its application promotes the growth and luxuriance of the hair, or, after illness has stripped it of its ornament it lasting effect. Price 2s 6d., 3s. 6d., and 5s. 6d., 7, King-street, St James's-square.

ELEGANT TOILET REQUISITES, each of which is strongly recommended, and will be found highly appreciated for creating and sustaining luxuriant growth of HAIR, KALYDOR, a preparation of unequalled efficacy in improving and beautifying the skin and complexion, and ROWLANDS ODONTO, or Pearl Dentifrice, a fragrant and preservative of the teeth and gums.
Bearing the appointment of Her Majesty the Queen, the Court, and Royal families of Europe, and the very Court of the ottoman world, together with numerous Testimonials constantly received of their efficacy, affords the best and safest proof of their merits ⁂ Beware of spurious imitations The only genuine of each bears the name of "Rowlands" preceding that of the article on the wrapper or label. Sold by them at 20, Hatton-garden, London, and by chemists and perfumers.

WELCOME THE FAMILY FRIEND!
THE FOUNDLING CHAPEL is Re-opened for Divine Service, which commences in the Morning at 11 o'clock, and in the Afternoon at 3.

ROYAL ASYLUM of ST. ANN'S SOCIETY.—A fair entertainment, dancing, and amusing Children of those once in prosperity (by fame or not, I'm every nation), by Voluntary Contributions.—All New Candidates for the next Half-Yearly Elections should be immediately examined. Forms of candidates and every information may be

HOTEL de FEUROPE, BOULOGNE-SUR-MER. This first-rate establishment, situated on the Quay opposite the steam packet station, the Custom-house, and near the Basin offers a offers every accommodation to Travellers. Apartments with airy bed-rooms, fine gardens, warm baths, stabling, and lock-up coach-houses. &c. &c. &c. "Times" paper of 6th

HYDROPATHIC ESTABLISHMENT, Sudbrook Park, Richmond, Surrey.—To prevent disappointment, Wednesdays are fixed for strangers to visit the Establishment. Cards may be had at 38, Sackville-street, Piccadilly, where Dr. ELLIS may be consulted on Fridays at noon, from 12 to 4 till three o Clock. I would be desirous for patients intending to be received into the Establishment, to write two days previous.
DAVID BARR, Secretary.

DANCING TAUGHT in the most Fashionable Style by Mr GEORGE BARNET, at WILLIS'S ROOMS 41 Brewer-street, Golden-square. Private Lessons in La Schottische Polka Waltz and Quadrille. Terms, Six Lessons 10s, Ladies and gentlemen of any age. An Evening Class on Monday and Friday A Juvenile Class on Wednesday and Saturday

BEARD'S PHOTOGRAPHIC PORTRAITS, by the NEW PROCESS are taken at 85, KING WILLIAM-STREET (1st floor),
24, PARLIAMENT-STREET and the ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION REGENT-STREET
"The portraits exhibit a decided improvement." Athenæum, June 24.
"The sepia colouring can only be compared to the finest enamel." Times, June 21

SPARKLING CHAMPAGNE, 42s per Dozen; Fine Old Pale Sherry and Pemine Bordeaux Golden Sherry, 36s. Superior, 36s. Amontillado Sherry, 48s and 60s. Old Port, from first-rate shippers, 42s. Superior Old Port, 48s. Fine Old Port, Sir Julian Claret, 28s per Dozen —HEDGES and BUTLER, Wine Importers, 6c, 155, Regent-street.—N.B. Pale Old Cognac Brandy, 60s per dozen

JULLIEN'S CONCERTS at DRURY-LANE THEATRE In one out of the many places where RICKETTS' PATENT DISAPPEARING GAS-BURNERS are in use, they are fixed in glass sockets for Rooms, Halls, Shops, Counting-houses, Churches, or in the Ceilings where a bright gas is required. Each burning tool not above a chimney.—Manufactory, 6, Aga-street, Strand, opposite Charing-cross Hospital.

PARIAN BROOCHES.—These superb novelties in the most elegant designs to the Empress Queen of Wurtemberg, in beautiful designs of Flowers, and post-free for 8s. in postage stamps, direct from the MAKERS, BROUGHAM, Burslem, Staffordshire. Parian Shells, Pins 3s. each

HANDSOME GOLD WATCHES, jewelled in four holes, capped, with all the recent improvements, in elegantly engraved cases, for £5 15s. Also, highly-finished silver Watches, with richly engraved dials and movements warranted for three years, a guarantee given with every watch
DAW BY and Co., 324, High Holborn, one door from Great Russell-street. Old and plain watches taken in exchange.

JONES'S £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES, at the Manufactory, 338 Strand, opposite Somerset House. They comprise every requisite, and are war anted to run more than half a minute per week. The great success of this article arises not so much from its cheapness as from the good manufacture, or any other house. On receipt of a Post-office Order, payable to JOHN JONES, for £4 4s., one will be sent Free.—Read Jones's Silver Lever Watch, 338 Strand, opposite Somerset House.

SARL'S ARGENTINE SILVER PLATE.—SARL and SONS, 18, Cornhill, opposite the Royal Exchange, have on SALE a large and well-selected STOCK of SPOONS and FORKS of every variety of pattern. The late extensive demand for the a table having rendered it necessary to supply families, S. and Sons take the opportunity of informing their friends and the public that orders to any extent can now be executed, and all the articles which are made in so fine silver are now manufactured by Sarl and sons in their Argentine Plate. Pamphlets of prices and pattern gratis

GLASS.—PLATE GLASS, GILT and PLAIN, WATCH and FINE GOLD CHAINS. Third compass, in a morocco case, for £3 10s, very suitable for a present. The description at the watch is as follows:—Jewelled in four holes, capped, in strong silver cases, movement, fine holes jewelled, run nothing power to go with long wear, and will perform well in any climate. Sent free to any part of the kingdom, on receipt of a Post-office order for the SAFETY CHAIN BROOCH, or will be sent to the inside of the watch case, if preferred. Observe the address, 338, Strand, Jones's Watch, and Devonshire Silver, and can be sent by post to any part of the kingdom.

SUMMERLY'S NEW ART MANUFACTURES.—FINE GREEK SLAVE A statuette, in parian, by HIRAM POWER, 18 inches high £3 7s
THE GREEK SLAVE A statuette, in parian, by JOHN BELL £3 7s
FISH "CUISINE" MATCH-BOX in parian, 4s.
TAZ SILHOUETTE CELLAR. Electro-plated, 21s the pair
CASTLE WOOD BREAD PLATTERS, 10s 6d. to 42s
BREAD KNIFE. With Carved Handle, from 4s to 30s
Sold by CUNDALL, 12 and 13, Bond-street, who will forward a Picture Book upon receipt of Three Postage Stamps.

STRAND TEA WAREHOUSE, No. 109.—WILLIAM HENRY HOOPER begs to call attention to his stock of Choice New Season Teas, consisting of the finest imported at the season's rise. TEAS & d COFFEES, which are worthy the attention of all who consume largely and economise

Good useful Congou	3s 6d	Sparkling Lump Sugar	0s 9d
Rich Congou, of fine flavour	4 0	Rich Lustre Moist Sugar	0 10½
Ditto	4 6	Good Cevlon Coffee	1 0
Finest Lapsing Souchong	4 6	Fine Ceylon Coffee	1 2
Ditto	5 0	Fine old Mocha	1 6
Rich flavoured Hyson	3 6	Genuine Invalids' Cocoa	1 0
Fine pearl leaf ditto	4 0	Pure Cocoa Nibs	1 0
Grained Lump sugar	0 6½	Manufactured on the premises.
		General list forwarded on application

Observe the address, 109, Strand. All orders containing a remittance or reference will meet with the strictest attention, and be forwarded carriage free.

UNDER ROYAL PATRONAGE.—ARROWROOT BISCUITS.—HILL'S, 60 and 61, Bishopsgate-street, and 65, Fleet-street, London, Manufacturers to the Queen and Royal Family. Prize Medal, 1851. Sole Inventors of the genuine Arrowroot Biscuits, so strongly recommended by the faculty for Invalids, Infants, and the General Public.
BROWN BREAD and BLOWN DIGESTIVE BISCUITS, the best and most wholesome, manufactured with a patent process. W. HILL solicits a trial of the Bread and Biscuits, for purity of flavour they cannot be surpassed.
W. HILL has ready packed, in convenient-sized boxes, the following description of biscuits—

Pressing Wine Biscuits	,,	2	0
Ditto	,,	3	0
Ditto (larger size)	,,	5	0
Cedar Captain's Biscuits	,,	3	0
Sweet Arrowroot	,,	3	6
Lemon Arrowroot Biscuits	,,	3	6
Irish Captain's	,,	3	0

The above are admirably adapted for presents, or families resident abroad. Warehouse, 61, Bishopsgate-street, and 65, Fleet-street, London.

W. HILL, Biscuit Baker, by Special Appointment, Bishopsgate, 60 and 61, Bishopsgate-street, and 16, Finch-lane, Cornhill, London.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN.
THE ROYAL NAVAL, MILITARY, EAST INDIA, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 8, WATERLOO PLACE, LONDON.

[illegible]	Smith, K.H., F.R.S.
[illegible]	Major [illegible] Shadwell Clerke, K.H., F.R.S.
[illegible]	Major-Gen. Tayler, C.B., K.L.S.
[illegible]	Rev. Geo. Ed. Wyvard, C.B.
[illegible]	Sir J. Cockburn, Bt., F.R.S.
[illegible]	Archibald Hair, Esq., M.D., late [illegible]

General Sir Thomas Bradford, G.C.B., G.C.H.
Admiral Sir P. Rose, G.C.M.G.
Gen. Sir John Gardiner, K.C.B.
Major-Gen. Sir Rowland Hill, K.C.B.
Major-Gen. Sir Edward Sabine, K.C.B.
Captain William Lennox, R.E.
Captain Thomas Taylor, Esq.
Major-Gen. Sir John Slade, K.C.B.
Major F. B. Sotheby, C.B.
Major-Gen. Sir Alex. Woodford, G.C.B.
Major-Gen. Sir Ed. Wetherall, K.C.B.
Major-Gen. Sir Geo. St. George, K.C.B.
BANKERS.—Messrs. Coutts and Co., 59, Strand
ACTUARY.—John Finlaison, Esq., the Government Calculator.

Assurances are granted upon the lives of persons in every station of life, and for every part of the world, upon particularly favourable terms
Persons assured in this office may change from one country to another without forfeiting their policies
A Bonus amounting to 80 per Cent. on the actual value of the policies, was apportioned to the assured at the first Septennial Meeting, held in the year 1844.
JOSEPH C. BRETTELL, Secretary.

N.B.—OTTOMAN for SALE, price £2.—A Ditto on two chairs, a full-length bedstead, with mattress, and stuffed seat for drawing-room in one.—JOHN INGLEBY, Upholstery Manufactory, 26, City-road, Finsbury-square

TO THE LADIES.—TORTOISESHELL COMBS of every kind from the smallest head of a few pence value to the most splendid, from comb maker, all of superior quality, and very moderate prices. PROUT, Brush and Comb Maker, 229, Strand, near Temple Bar

DOUBLE RIFLES, for Cash, 20 guineas; Exeter Shot Barrels fitting same stock, 8 guineas, forming the most complete rifle for 2 guineas. Its three beautiful specimens of work best materials, most highly improved principles, and warranted shooting may be seen at 52, Lamb's Conduit-street.

GOOD FEMALE SERVANTS are obtained at the CITY DOMESTIC BAZAAR, 10, Ludgate-hill, when conducted by a Lady of the highest respectability Servants with good characters will find it the best office to get a respectable situation. Open from Ten till Four, Saturdays excepted

"AS YOU LIKE IT."—Either Six Pounds of Tea or Coffee CONGOU for 20s., or Five Pounds of very superior quality and extraordinary strength for 20s. Carriage free to all parts of the kingdom, packed in the cases.—ALEXANDER, 8, Farringdon Market, 21, Hatton-garden, Holborn, London.

DAVIES'S CANDLES, 5½d. and 6d. per lb.; Wax-stick Mould, 7½d; Botanic Wax, 1s; Cream, 1s 2d; Pine Wax, 1s 4d; Sperm, 1s 6d and 1s 7d; Transparent Wax, 1s 8d; Gem-line Wax, 2s 1d; Composite, 8½d, 10d, and 10½d; Yellow Soap, 3½d, and 6½d per lb.; Mottled, 6½d and 8½d; Windsor, 1s 4d per pound; Brown Windsor, 8½; Rose, 8½; Shaving Wax, 4s 6d per lb; Argand's or Vegetable Oil, 4s 6d per gallon; colza, 3s 3d; sperm, 7s 6d. For Cash, at DAVIES'S 5-established Warehouse, 38 St. Martin's-court, Leicester-square.

THE EIDER DOWN QUILT is the warmest, the lightest, and the most elegant covering: it is suitable for the bed, the couch, or the carriage. To be seen in great variety at SEALY and SON'S Bedding Manufactory, 196 (opposite the Chapel), Tottenham-court-road.

GERMAN SPRING MATTRESSES, permanently elastic, very durable and cheap—3 feet wide 22 8s; 3 feet 6 inches, 25s; 4 feet, 28s; 4 feet 6 inches, 31s 6d; 5 feet, 35s; 6 feet, 42s. Sent carriage free by post. Illustrations free. Bedding Manufactures, 190 (opposite the Chapel), Tottenham-court-road.

HEAL and SON'S present PRICES of BEDFEATHERS.—Poultry, 1s per lb; grey geese, 1s 2d; foreign ditto, 1s 4d; best grey goose, 1s, white goose, 1s 6d; best Dantzic ditto, 2s per lb. The feathers are all purified by steam, with patent machinery, and are warranted quite sweet, and free from dust and dirt. See the List of Bedding, with full particulars of weights, sizes, and prices, sent free by post on application to their Factory, 196 (opposite the Chapel), Tottenham-court-road, London.

SIX SUPERIOR SHIRTS FOR 26s. Satisfaction guaranteed, or the Money Returned
BODGERS and CO., Shirt-makers, 80, 81, Shoe-lane, and No. 29, the corner of New-street, Covent-garden. Established 66 years. The largest assortment of shirts in London.

FORD'S "EUREKA SHIRT."—A Shirt that would really fit for the long waisted, many of the so-called improvements in Shirts have rendered them little better than straitwaistcoats difficult to get on, and still more difficult to get off. Mr. FORD of the Strand, has just brought out what he calls the Eureka Shirt, and, to the surprise of many, it is the acme of perfection.—Court Journal, October 21st, 1848. Catalogues, with directions for self-measurement, sent free, on application to RICHARD FORD, 183, strand, London.

SHIRTS.—WHITELOCK and SON, 166, Strand, beg to remind gentlemen that the Shirts supplie by them for 6d each, are made of the same shape worn by other houses at 9s, with new fancy fronts for dress 8s 6d, usual price 10s 6s. and as fine linen, 10s 6s, usual price 14s 6d.—Also all the latest improvements in style and guaranteed fit. Measure round the neck, chest, and wrist tight. Every size kept ready for wear from 12ga upwards. Sent as sample free, by post, upon receipt of the amount, and in addre. as pare payment of postage. Outfits at the wholesale prices

NICOLL'S REGISTERED PALETOT.—NICOLL'S allemanny and useful over-coat retains its original moderate price, and, in addition to its well-known qualities, is now associated with the patronage of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, Prince George of Cambridge, Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, his Grace the Duke of Wellington, and the elite of aristocracy, the Court and People, and the Bar This above can be obtained at 114, 116, 118, 120, 22, and 24, REGENT-STREET, 114, 116, 118, 120, 22, and 24, NEWGATE-STREET, and 22, CORNHILL.

SHOOTING.—The attention of Sporting Gentlemen is specially directed to BODGERS and CO.'s great STOCK of SHOOTING COATS, which for price, style, and fabric will be found unequalled. Also a large assortment of Tweed Jackets, Hunters, and Dress-suits Commencing at 8s 6d

Their work entitled "The Tradesman's Tact," with Lists of Prices and Directions for Self-Measurement, forwarded post-free

E. MOSS BOSS, Importer of Foreign Sargets, chintzes, furriers, hosiers, hatters, boot and shoe-makers, and general cashiers, 184, 185, 186, Aldersgate, and 69, 85, and 86, Aldgate, City, London
No bonuses transacted from the 1st of December till the 31st

PATENT SUSPENSION STOVES.—As a precaution against Cholera the Board of Health strongly recommend "Warmth and Ventilation." For the attainment of the a important object the PATENT PORTABLE VENTILATING SUSPENSION STOVES were expressly invented. Thousands of them have been sold, a ot tens of thousands are now re ding in the country and consider that these stoves are the most valuable aid to their situation, from the smallest bedroom to the largest ma s Prices from 10s and upwards. In operation at 39, CHEAPSIDE and JOHN DEANE'S, 45, King William-street, London-bridge, and 46, Pall-mall, Manchester.

FOUR FIRKS for ONE PENNY, by EDWARDS'S PATENT FIREWOOD—light as cork, and grocers 40lb for 1s 6d to the carrier, an exception of a Pa t Office order for 0s. sent to EDWARDS, 3, Crescent-place, Blackfriars-road, City-road.

DOES YOUR HAIR FALL OFF OR GET GREY? The Recipe for preventing Greyness and restoring the loss of hair is still offered for public benefit, and will be sent by return of post by any applicant, Gentleman remitting 24 stamps to MR. CREED, of Chertsey, Surrey

HAIR DYE.—A lady will forward to any person, by return of post, 24 postage stamps, the recipe for a most valuable and infallible Hair Dye, with all directions how to use it, that does not stain the skin, is free from all injurious qualities and its cost is but a trifle. Address to MRS. ALLEN, 19, Panton-square, Haymarket.—N.B. It has no bad smell.

DOES YOUR HAIR FALL OFF OR TURN GREY? THE COUPELLE, the HERBO-NIC LOTION, or the DYE (free), to any one sending 24 postage stamps, her Majesty's Hair Restorer, renewed with a healthy growth, preventing the hair falling off, and re-producing it when lost nature by disease or accident. It has never been known to fail, and is exceedingly pleasant in use TOOTHACHE.—Toothache instantly Cured. Dancy of Teeth, Filled up and rendered useful and ornamental through life, with Mineral Succedaneum, by Mr. HOWARD, Surgeon Dentist, 52, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Decayed Teeth rendered useful and ornamental from the most delicate to the largest cavity, without pain, by the application of Mineral Succedaneum. Mr. HOWARD, Surgeon Dentist, 52, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Decayed Teeth rendered useful and ornamental from the most delicate to the largest cavity, without pain, by the application of Mineral Succedaneum. Mr. HOWARD, Surgeon Dentist, 52, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

DO YOU SUFFER TOOTH-ACHE? If so, use BLANDY'S ENAMEL, for filling decayed teeth, and rendering them sound and painless. Price One Shilling. Enough for several teeth. The only substance approved by the medical faculty, as being neutral to the mineral teeth, with pain or danger. Sold by all Druggists, and by the proprietor, 7, Leicester-square.
"Mr. Blandy's invention, Secretary to the Sheffield Temperance Society, says—"I would have given a guinea for such a cure as this." Sold by all Chemists in the United Kingdom. Testimonials of unsolicited testimonials accompany each box, with full directions for use. Send four by return of post, by J. V. BLANDY, Cutler-buildings, Sheffield-square, London, in return for 13 penny stamps

DO YOU SUFFER from CORNS or BUNIONS? If so send One Shilling and a stamp to Mr. [illegible], Hemel Hempstead, Herts, and you will receive, without fail by return post, his Chiroteon Remedy, an instantaneous cure for Soft and Hard Corns, Bunions, &c. It is a perfect, painless, safe application, and no unfailing remedy.—Mr. Gibbins, Med. Philosophy, says "It is truly a wonderful remedy, safe, effectual, sure, and I doubt not speedy with all all themselves of so great a l

ANOTHER CURE of COUGH and HOARSENESS by Dr. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS.—"Gentlemen,—In August last, I had been troubled with a cough and hoarseness for many days, which rendered me unable to speak, and I was advised to try Locock's Wafers, the effects of which were soon valuable, for one large box, 1s 9d) has quite cured me. I have since recommended them to several of my friends, and they also have experienced the greatest relief from them.—J. WILLIAMS." Witness, M. P. Hennessy Chemist, Rosslyn.—Price 1s 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s.

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO HARROW SCHOOL.

(Continued from page 334.)

diameter, and run independently on their axles, as well as the usual movement of the axles in the journals. The frame is within nine inches of the rails, and no steps are required. The total weight is estimated at ten tons; and the consumption of coke will be under 10lbs. per mile.

The Steam Carriage was delivered on to the West London before she was in thorough working condition, in order to test her powers. The result has been that she has exceeded a speed of 35 miles an hour up a 3 mile incline of 1 in 100; and 41 miles down the same incline, with the disadvantages of a very sharp curve and no run at starting, very loose rails, and one of them deeply rusted from disuse, grinding in the flanges with great friction. There is little doubt that, when in order, she will make 60 miles per hour on good rails on a level. We understand that, when completed, it is the intention to run her for several days on the West London, to give directors and engineers an opportunity of trying her.

We should mention that in the trimmings of the carriages, is worked the monogram of the Railway Company—a tasteful novelty, introduced by Payne and Son, of Great Queen-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields.

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO HARROW SCHOOL.

The town of Harrow-on-the-Hill, on Thursday morning, the 16th inst., presented a scene of unusual bustle and animation; her Majesty, who was then on a visit to the Queen Dowager, at Bentley Priory, having graciously expressed her intention of honouring the far-famed School with a visit. Notwithstanding that her Majesty's gracious intention was not known to the inhabitants till the same morning, preparations were made for her reception with so much activity, that triumphal arches were erected as if by magic, banners waved from nearly every house; and in every prominent position decorations with royal mottos, &c., were displayed. On the Queen's arrival, shortly before one o'clock, accompanied by his Royal Highness Prince Albert and an illustrious party, she was greeted by the enthusiastic cheers of the inhabitants, and a large concourse of spectators assembled on the occasion. Her Majesty first visited the School, and was there received by the Rev. Dr. Vaughan, head master; the Rev. W. Oxenham, second master; and the assistant masters.

The Harrovians, nearly 400 in number, who were assembled in the Speech-room, welcomed her Majesty with hearty cheers—three times three. The Rev. W. Oxenham (second master); G. Harris, Esq., Rev. B. H. Drury, Rev. J. M. Simkinson, Rev. H Keary, Rev. G. Warner, Rev. F. Rendal, Rev. R. Middlemist, and F. Marliler, Esq. (under masters), and Church, the Captain of the School, had the honour of being publicly presented to the Queen. The names were then called over; and Dr. Vaughan signified her Majesty's command that a week should be added to the next Midsummer vacation. Her Majesty expressed herself much interested in examining the names and autographs of former Harrovians, many of whom have since shed undying lustre on the Church and the Bar of England.

On retiring from the School, the illustrious party was again saluted with deafening cheers by the Harrovians. Her Majesty next proceeded, amidst the cheers of the people, to the Church, where she was received by the Venerable Vicar, the Rev. J. W. Cunningham, and several clergymen in their canonical robes, the churchwardens, and other officials. After the fine old edifice, "Byron's Tomb" next became an object of interest. Having examined this memorial, the Royal party returned to the Priory. The Queen was greeted on retiring by the enthusiastic cheers of the spectators.

In the evening, the inhabitants of the town assembled to honour the occasion of the Royal visit by a public dinner, at the King Harry VIII. Hotel. The chair was taken by H. C. Vernon, Esq.; and after the cloth was removed, the health of the Queen was drunk with unbounded enthusiasm, as well as that of Prince Albert, the Queen Dowager, the Prince of Wales, and the rest of the Royal Family.

SWAKELEYS, NEAR ICKENHAM.

SWAKELEYS, NEAR ICKENHAM.

This fine old mansion was built by Sir Edmund Wright, in the reign of Charles I. (anno 1638.) It presents a curious architectural composition; the style, agreeably to the usage of that day, is Italian; the principal material is brick, with decorations of stone, sculptured in a fantastic character.

The edifice is divided into three stories by Ionic pilasters, supporting entablatures with friezes. Other ornaments, as terms, scrolls, orbs, obelisks, and foliage, contribute to adorn the front. The mansion is situated in the parish of Ickenham, and the three miles north of the Uxbridge road, and at the distance of sixteen miles from London. This parish was, according to "Domesday Book," among the domains of Geoffrey de Magnaville, Earl of Essex, who came hither with William the Conqueror, and was by him rewarded with divers lordships in several counties; and his family had possession here in 1400. Swakeleys is now in possession of Thomas Truesdale Clarke, Esq., in whose family it has been for upwards of one hundred years.

It will be interesting to add, that her Majesty passed through the park and ground of Swakeleys, in her way to and on her return from Bentley Priory, on Wednesday and Friday week.

The church of Ickenham is a small but ancient structure; it is dedicated to St. Giles, and contains a monument by Banks, to the memory of John G. Clarke barrister-at-law, who died at Swakeleys, 25th of June, 1800.

THE "FAIR-FIELD" RAILWAY STEAM-CARRIAGE.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, of 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, November 25, 1848.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 346.—Vol. XIII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1848. [Sixpence.

THE ROMAN INSURRECTION.

The position of Chief Magistrate is always a perilous one in times of revolution. Whether he be an absolute or a constitutional Monarch, or the elected President of the people or of a class of the people, his dangers are equally great. To resist revolution may be fatal to his power or his life; to yield to it or to aid it, may prove even more certainly and more speedily destructive. Whenever he resists, it is at the risk of all he holds dear. The shock of the Revolution is directed against him. He has to bear its whole brunt, and sometimes to pay its whole cost. The payment is too often exacted amid his own unspeakable misery, and consummated amid the tears and blood of his truest friends, if not amid his own. If, on the contrary, he favour or aid the Revolution, either from his conviction of its justice and necessity, or in order that he may guide it to a safer issue, and preserve some portion of his own powers or privileges that might otherwise be swept away by the ruthless besom of unbounded innovation, his position becomes even more difficult, delicate, and perilous. He acquires mob-popularity at starting, and if he be fond of the plaudits of the million, he may be tickled and gratified for awhile by that exciting, but short-lived luxury, the sweet voice of the people. He becomes the hero and the idol of a day. The rabble and the people, the ill-dressed and the well-dressed multitude, unite in celebrating his praises, and in urging him adown the broad path and fearful slope that lead to anarchy. If he ride with the mob, he rides to destruction; if he stand still, the feet of the multitude pass over him. The tongues that once praised him, disparage or curse him. The hands that waved their greasy caps in triumph as he passed, are ready to take his life; and the men who would have unyoked the prancing steeds of his chariot, and drawn him in triumph through the streets of his capital, but too often desire nothing better than to hurl him down the Tarpeian rock, as a peace-offering to offended Democracy. Louis Philippe is a striking example of the folly and danger of unwise resistance. His fate is already a world's lesson, and points a moral for all kings and for all people. The King of Prussia and Pope Pius IX. afford examples equally striking of the perils of a revolutionary career to men not possessed of the highest order of minds, but who fancy themselves capable of guiding the storm of popular commotion to their own advantage. Their fate shows that men who, in the situation of Chief Magistrate, perform an active, instead of a passive, part in the great drama of revolution, require not only the highest genius, the greatest courage, the most unyielding integrity, and the most unassailable virtue, but the most splendid good-fortune, to be successful. That neither the King of Prussia nor Pius IX. has succeeded, or can succeed, is scarcely to be wondered at, but very much to be deplored. It is impossible not to sympathise in their distresses and perplexities, and to wish that their lot had fallen in quieter times. Revolutions are unnatural monsters: they devour not only their enemies, but their friends. Saturn only devoured his children; but revolutions devour both their offspring and their progenitors.

A few short months ago the name of Pio Nono was the most popular name in Europe. A liberal Pope was such a novelty, that Roman Catholic Europe shouted with delight at the unusual but gratifying spectacle. His praise was upon all tongues. He may be called with truth the father of all the convulsions of this remarkable year. He gave, in 1847, the start which preceded if it did not hasten the French and German Revolutions of 1848. His example excited the nations. If it were not he that laid the train, it was his hand that ignited it. The world rang with his renown. He was the friend of the people, the liberator of the nations, the apostle of humanity. The inhabitants of France and Italy, and of Roman Catholic countries generally, vied with each other who should honour him most. Literature and art ran a race of emulation in celebrating his renown, and in making known to the grateful multitudes the graces of his countenance and the beauty of his mind. There was never such a Pope as Pio Nono in the estimation of the Italians and French. All his predecessors were dwarfs and pigmies compared with his gigantic stature and proportions. They were merely bigoted priests, and Pio Nono was a statesman. They lived upon the recollections of the past: he took his inspiration from the future. So said all men; yet he has outlived all this. The Revolution has been too rapid for him. He has halted to take breath, and has been undone. He was ordered, but refused to move further. The irresistible mass behind him has passed over him, and left him in the rear as we now behold him, denuded of popularity, possessing the name and semblance but not the reality of power, the most helpless of all the Monarchs of Europe, amid the Revolutionary excitement and excesses of our times. It would even seem, so great is the change that has taken place in the estimation of his subjects towards him, that the most popular of all Popes will be the last of the Ecclesiastical Magistrates of Rome; and that, in future, the holder of the Papal dignity will be a priest alone, and not a Sovereign.

The circumstances attending the recent convulsion in Rome are highly dramatic. The spectacle suits a southern latitude, and could not occur in the more sober and rational north. An unpopular Minister, surrounded by a mob hissing and hooting, turns upon them when on the threshold of the Hall of the Legislature, and, "pride in his port, defiance in his eye," confronts and braves his enemies. The heroism of his deed appears in their imagination to be presumption only. One man present conceives himself to be a Brutus, destined to rid Rome of a new Cæsar. The dagger, always ready in the hands of Italians, is in his grasp; and in a moment the unfortunate Minister is stabbed in the neck, and welters in his blood upon the steps of the Capitol. The assassin withdraws into the crowd; his name is unknown: the son of the murdered Minister stands over the dead body of his father, and in the sight of heaven, with bare head and hands and eyes uplifted, swears in that place, and in the hearing of thousands of the people, that he will not resign his seat in the Assembly, and thereby escape the assassin. The crowd withdraw and perambulate the city, shouting a wild chant, of which the burden is, "Blessed be the hand that has killed the tyrant!" They besiege the Pope's palace, and threaten to burn it down, and put every one in it to the sword, the Pope alone excepted, if he do not appoint a popular Ministry, and declare for the federation of the states of Italy. The Pope is utterly powerless. He has none to help him. The mob is lord paramount. The middle classes have fraternised with the rabble. The soldiers have done the same. There remain none to do battle in defence of the sacred person of the head of Roman Cath lic Christendom but twenty-four Swiss mercenaries. These do their duty in the most heroic manner; but what are twenty-four men against a whole population? The Pope yields. He acts under coercion, and consents to a policy which he in his conscience disapproves. We may easily foresee the result. He will never regain the high position in which he once stood; and, if he rule at all, will rule in spite of his own people, and by the aid of the bayonets of Radetzki.

THE INSURRECTION AT ROME.—ATTACK ON THE POPE'S PALACE.—(SEE PAGE 389.)

The idea of the federation of Italy, and the constitutional liberty and self-government of each of the states composing it, is a great and noble one. But such excesses as these can but retard its realisation. No mob can govern. The military possessors of Lombardy cannot be expected to take the law, as to the future government of Italy, or any portion of it, from the populace of Rome. Brute force has been employed by the people in support of an idea, and brute force will be employed as a natural consequence against that idea. As long as ignorant mobs resort to violence and bloodshed in support either of their real or imaginary rights, so long will their rulers meet them with their own weapons, and so long will despotism crush the steps of anarchy and licentiousness. Brute force has in a Revolution its place, from the interest of liberty, but as force keeps the Revolution within bounds. As in Paris, so it is elsewhere. The same laws apply universally. In countries differently circumstanced from Italy, the people and their governors are allowed to settle their own disputes with the forces, whether brutal or moral, at their own command, until both the one and the other recognise wisdom by the suffering without which it is scarcely to be obtained. Italy, however, must be left to herself. Foreigners hold a large and fair portion of the country. They stand in the position of conquerors. Radetzki is autocrat of the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom. He has planted the foot of despotism upon the anarchy of Milan. He will probably do the same at Rome: at all events, he will make the attempt. If he succeed, constitutional liberty in the Italian peninsula will be adjourned sine die. Liberty is a blessing that can only be enjoyed by an industrious, rational, orderly, and well-educated people. The Italians as yet are neither. They must educate themselves into a proper understanding of the meaning both of the word and of the thing, before they can attain it. Other nations have acquired or are acquiring this knowledge in sorrow and suffering. A similar ordeal awaits the Italians.

The French Government, in order to anticipate, if not prevent the march of the Austrians, has announced the departure of a division of the French army for the protection of the Pope. The instructions to the French Ambassador are to save Pius IX. from personal restraint, and offer him an asylum, if need be, in France; but on no account to interfere against the liberties of Italy: in other words, France will protect the person of the Pope, but will protect, at the same time, the Roman populace against the Austrians. It was believed in Paris, when General Cavaignac made this announcement to the National Assembly, that the Pope had actually fled from Rome; but the rumour has since been contradicted, and proved unfounded. The new Ministry acceded to by the Pope at the dictation of the people, has entered office; and General Cavaignac may possibly see reason to countermand his expedition. At all events, the certainty now possessed by Austria that France is ready for intervention in Italy, will, in all probability, cause Marshal Radetzki to keep quiet at Milan, and await events.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

PARISIAN.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, November 29.

The politicians—and at this moment the term is applicable to every man, woman, and child in this vast capital are still occupied with the debate of Saturday last. Notwithstanding the crowds collected in different parts of Paris, and especially in and near the Place de la Concorde, and the neighbourhood of the Assemblée Nationale, the greatest order prevailed. Curiosity seemed the prevailing sentiment. The groups resembled so many clubs in the open air; but the orators were, for the most part, extremely moderate in the language. As soon as the evening papers were published, the venders were literally besieged; and those who were lucky enough to possess themselves of a journal carried it in triumph to the door of some café or magasin, where, by the light of a gas lamp, they could read, and mass known to the surrounding group, the particulars of the debate up to half-past five o'clock, the Assembly having at that hour adjourned till eight. About half-past six o'clock some of the quiet inhabitants, while eating their dinner, were momentarily alarmed by the shrill blast of a trumpet, calling together a troop of dragoons for the purpose of patrolling the Place de la Concorde and its vicinity; but the alarm subsided, and time passed on without any repetition of the warlike sound. General Cavaignac's explanation in a certain measure allayed anxiety for his friends; and thus it as much as he could have expected, or perhaps desired. The storm now brought against him came with a bad grace from those who had accepted, if they had not approved, his plan. At the time when that plan was submitted to them they held the directing power, and he was their servant. They might—and probably with reason—have dismissed him from his post as Minister of War, if they entertained doubts either of its ability or of its integrity; but, having once accepted his plan, and permitted it to be acted upon at a moment when the fate of the country depended on its success or failure, what right can they possibly have, six months afterwards, to arraign measures which they tacitly accepted when they might have actively opposed them? General Cavaignac had the good grace to avail himself of—some say to seize on—his enemies say to create—events, and prepare the circumstances of the moment; but what man ever rose to power without some such fortuitous occurrence?

The accusers of General Cavaignac—those, at least, who belonged to the Executive Government—might find in their own incapacity, in their own impopularity, a truer cause for his elevation to power, than any stratagem or treachery of his own.

Prince Louis Napoleon's election has appeared. It is said to embody all that his most friends could desire.

will find an echo in the breast of every true patriot. A pamphlet was cried about in the streets yesterday, under the title of "Les Iniquités de Ledru-Rollin." It is a discourse pronounced at one of the Socialist clubs, by a friend of Blanqui, in which it is pretended that Ledru-Rollin has not, since February, ceased to betray those who have reserved their confidence in Bamqui. It ends by calling on them to reject the candidature of Ledru-Rollin, and support that of Joseph. This new discord in the Socialist camp will be profitable to Prince Louis.

The acquittal of Monsieur le Vicomte de Schonen in the Court of Assize was hailed with pleasure by all who are not Repub tans, and, strange to say, spite of the existing form of government, that may be said of a very large proportion of France, in which the Republicans are the minority. They are usually quiet in so large a country, but that is more observable at present. They are usually quiet in squares; but at Minette's, where everything is remarkable for its excellent taste, they are quietest in a regular design like embroidery. From the above named house—one of the few which has strictly adhered to the real point Parisien, and not permitted the innovation of foreign taste—some charming toilettes have been to Nice, for Madame la Duchesse du Luxembourg, who is to [illegible] Wednesday nights have each their [illegible] Madame Sabatier, the fashionable woman obtains by the adoption of what the French call demi-teinte. The Provinciaux of the Comte de Grammont's brisk (Mdlle. Prahdh) was remarkable for its great simplicity

FRANCE

An episode of a personal character this week has enhanced the unflagging interest with which the approaching electoral struggle for the Presidency excites, and has created with a fabulous triumph the man whose honourable ambition to become the first President of that Republic, whose infancy he had so ably rescued from destruction, it was intended to defeat.

We announced last week, that a charge, founded solely in envy and party hatred, which had been some months ago whispered about against General Cavaignac, had been resolutely revived for election purposes, and that General Cavaignac, having resolved on resigning himself from the important guilt Saturday last was fixed by the National Assembly for the purpose of hearing the charges specified against him, and of meeting them with General Cavaignac's explanations. The accusation was one of the blackest die, namely, that General Cavaignac (first Minister of War) had purposely refrained from taking promptly the republican measures to suppress at once the resurrection of June in the hope that, having gained and designed by all means to assume its formidable height, in order that he might have the greater merit of putting it down; and mass his success as a pretext for seizing on the Dictatorship, at the expense of the Executive Government, the inefficiency of which he expected would have been made manifest and to our detposition from office ensured by their seeming inability to deal with the evil which he had manufactured also that he, a subordinate functionary, had dis boyed the orders of the Executive, that he might the better accomplish his base design, quite reckless of the bloodshed and misery he was preparing for the country. Some of the most violent among the "Pure Republicans" themselves, and it originated in the way M. Barthélémy St. Hilaire, who was secretary to the Executive Government, is engaged in writing a history of the revolution of February, in which the Insurrection of June occupies an important chapter. This chapter, which has been written for the last two months, as recently communicated, to seven or eight members of the National Assembly, and one of them brought out the nature of the document to the knowledge of General Cavaignac, who determined at once to bring the subject before the National Assembly. Accordingly, on Saturday last, the day previously fixed for the purpose, he entered the tribune, and inquired of his adversaries (MM. Garnier Pagès, Pagnerre, and Duclerc, who were understood to be part authors in the paper in question) if they had spoken, written, or communicated anything which could have served as the foundations of the attacks to which he had been subjected; and, to prevent their escaping from these questions, he put the additional one of whether they had thought anything in conformity with such attacks? M. Barthélémy St. Hilaire at once declared that he and his colleagues had no relation, direct or indirect, with any newspaper, and had communicated nothing. He then told the fact as to his having drawn up the paper mentioned by General Cavaignac, and read from it the passage as he did it with passion to bear upon the question, he would read that part in the Assembly, as the substance of it—opinion on the subject and the state of affairs at the time—charges of the kind followed. Duclerc—the number of troops forming the garrison of Paris at the period of the June insurrection; the plan for the suppression of that insurrection, &c. &c. &c. General Cavaignac; and the full and exact statement General Cavaignac to the Executive Commission while in office as a member of the Government, and afterwards when charged with the formation of a Ministry. Duclerc—the number of troops in Paris; the force of sixteen regiments of the line, of effective men; and he showed, by the military returns, that on the 21st of June the number of troops in Paris was 50,000 men, besides 4000 in the forts, while, with the Garde Mobile and the Republican Guard, amounted to an effective force of between 43,000 and 44,000 men. With respect to the second charge, namely, that of having allowed the barricades to be formed without opposition, in order that the insurgents have the opportunity of destroying the whole of the insurgents at one blow, General Cavaignac stated that he had previously declared such to have been his intention, and that this subject was discussed and agreed to in a Council of Ministers. He further declared that he had intimated his plan to Generals Lamoricière, Bedeau, and Foucher, who approved of it. This plan consisted in fighting the insurgents in a pitched battle, and to cerner in concentrating all the troops on certain points, which he had previously determined, to occupy; of allowing the insurgents to take quiet possession of all the points which they chose; and of afterwards, by a continued system of simultaneous attacks, beating the insurgents from their defences in "a rational manner." The third charge of hostility and ingratitude to the Executive Commission, of which he was himself the minister, was submitted with equal success to the eloquence with which, for three long hours, he defended himself in an one which would have tested the powers of a man much more familiar with the tribune than he is, surprised every one; and he will henceforth rank as his place in the Assembly, not only as a successful soldier, but as a statesman capable of making his way by the force of his mind. In the course of the day General Cavaignac swept away three flimsy fictions by putting the interpellations severally, in reply to M. Barthélémy St. Hilaire; and subsequently, in reply to a second speech from M. Barthélémy St. Hilaire, and also in reply to MM. Garnier Pagès and Ledru-Rollin. In his last speech, General Cavaignac, having been violently interrupted by the members of the Mountain, seized upon that circumstance to repudiate in energetic terms all connexion with that party and with M. Ledru-Rollin

M. de Lamartine was in the Assembly, but did not speak.

The proceedings on this occasion were, with the exception of those which ended in the flight of MM. Louis Blanc and Caussidière, the longest on the records of the French Legislature. They commenced at one o'clock in the day, and did not close till half-past eleven o'clock at night. At that hour, M. Dupont (de Pèvre) mounted the tribune to propose the usual speech, but was expressed the profound affection which he felt at the motives which necessitated that discussion, implored the Assembly to put an end to those divisions, which evidently could not but have a fatal influence on the country. He then declared that the explanations given by the President of the Council were so clear, and imprinted with such a character of loyalty, that they could not do otherwise than carry conviction of their truth to the consciences [illegible] of Louis to his (this declaration was received with loud cries of "It is true, it is true, from all sides.) He concluded by moving the following resolution, which, he said, he brought forward in the full confidence that it would have the unanimous Assembly, persuading in its decree of the 28th of June, 1848, which, was in these words:—"General Cavaignac, President of the Executive Power, has well merited of the country"—passes to the order of the day." Upon this motion the bonours at once divided, when the following was the result:—Number of votes, 797; absolute majority, 399. For the motion, 503; against it, 31

[illegible]

[illegible]ly understood in Paris, in the early part of the week, that the Red Republicans were to make a demonstration on Saturday night, under the impression that the decision of the National Assembly would have been favourable to General Cavaignac, and that he would in consequence be compelled his opponents as to afford to the Républiques Démocratique et Sociale the chance could have for the overthrow of order and the establishment of a reign of terror, accompanied by the full plunder of private property, and to meet [illegible] recommended and threatened in the speeches delivered at their clubs during the previous week. The Government had, however, made ample preparations to crush the anarchists at the first moment.

The Bishop of Nancy has resigned his diocese in consequence of ill health. General Cavaignac has appointed to his bishopric the Abbé Jacquemet, grand vicar of the diocese of Paris, and the new prelate has accompanied the late Archbishop of Paris to the barricades during the insurrection of June.

A letter dated Dijon, the 21st ult., gives the following deplorable description of the commercial crisis which prevails in that city:—"Yesterday the wine of the estate of the Hôtel Dieu de Beaune were offered for sale by auction, although of most excellent quality, no a bidder could be found even as a price considerably under the value. A few wine-growers have been ruined at the sale declared that, in consequence of the state of uncertainty respecting the Government, together with the commercial crisis which prevails, they would not purchase a single cask of wine, and leaving it unbidden for. The proprietors of fine wines have, consequently, a melancholy prospect before them, as the cellars are now stocked with the entire vintage of 1847, as well as that of the present year."

On Tuesday, in the National Assembly, General Cavaignac, in answer to a question addressed to him by M. Bixio, replied that a division of French troops (3000 men in four steam-frigates) had been sent to Civita Vecchia to provide for the personal security of the Pope, and to offer him an asylum in France. This intelligence General Cavaignac had conveyed previous to the Archbishop of Paris, in answer to his application for assistance for the Papal Government. It was also announced that M. de Courcelles left Paris on Monday night as Envoy Extraordinary from the French Republic to the Government of Rome. The instructions furnished to M. Courcelles by M. Bastide, the Secretary for Foreign Affairs, say:—

"Your mission has for its object to interfere, in the name of the French Republic, in order to restore to the Holy Father his personal liberty, if it has been deprived of it. If ever it entered his interests, considering circumstances, to take refuge for awhile in the territory of the Republic, you will ensure, as much as in your power lies, the realisation of that wish, and you will assure the Pope that he will experience from the French nation a reception worthy of them, and worthy also of the virtues of which he gave so many proof.

"You are not authorized to interfere in any political question pending at Rome.

"You will cause the troops at your disposal to land, either at Civita Vecchia itself, or wherever that force may with safety co-operate in securing the success of your mission. Measures have been adopted to reinforce that body, if necessary, and to place it on a more effective footing. You will receive more detailed instructions if the National Assembly should consider them indispensable."

The brigade of troops embarked at Marseilles immediately on the receipt of a telegraphic despatch from Bastide, addressed to the commandant on Sunday. It has been quartered some weeks in the south of France, and was to have been originally sent to Venice. Since then the brigade maintained on the war footing had been constantly exercised, and was ready to embark at a moment's notice. It is commanded by General Molière.

On Wednesday evening, a body of National Guards, amounting to 12,000, accompanied by the Maire of Paris, waited on General Cavaignac and addressed to him expressions of esteem and regard for him personally, and of attachment to the Republic. This proceeding has very much increased the hopes of his friends relative to the election.

The Government has adopted strong measures against the Socialist clubs. Two of the most violent of them (those of the Rue Mouffetard and of the Rue St. Sauveur) have been closed by the order of the Count d'Assize of the Seine, and eight of the most violent of the orators who figured in them have been sentenced to fine and imprisonment, and to deprivation of their civic rights for two years.

The Duke de Bordeaux has returned to Frohsdorf, and gage in a civil war. If the Pope had not acquiesced in the demands of the people, they were determined to force an entrance into his palace. A search was made by the people for Cardinal Lambruschini, but he escaped in the dress of a dragoon. The military authorities had submitted to the popular club. Romanu and Serian had refused peremptory to form part of the democratic ministry. The Pope had been completely abandoned by his friends. He was left solely to the democratic corps, who found him with Cardinals Antonelli and Soglia. His Holiness is said to have declared that, having been compelled to dismiss his ministers, which had been regarded by strangers as a most unwarrantable step, he felt no scruple but that of spare the effusion of blood: but he declared, in the face of Europe, that he would take no part in the future Government, having therefore forbidden his name to be used, or that the seal of the State should be affixed to any of the good pleasure of his Holiness," should in future be prefixed to the Government acts.

On the evening of the 17th it became known that the Abbé Rosmini had declined to form part of the new Ministry, and consequently a great meeting of the popular clubs, which had assumed the direction of affairs pending the formation of a cabinet, took place. The meeting was numerously attended by expectants hearing the result of the ministerial arrangements which were still pending. It was announce d that the advocate Limarl had definitely accepted the portfolio of Finance: that Mamiani, the young popular minister, had accepted the office (he is not always an ecclesiastic) had accepted the portfolio of Public Instruction; and that M. Galletti had consented to fill the post of General of the Civic Guard of Rome. The Minister Sterbi and Galletti soon entered the hall, were received with loud cheers The following important notes was then agreed to, and immediately published :—

The Popular National Club, for the sole purpose of strengthening the Ministry named yesterday by his Holiness, and aiding public order, and preventing disturbances, invites every good citizen to take a part in the labours of the said club, constituted in a permanent sitting, to cooperate in maintaining the tranquility of Rome.

PALAZZO FARNESE, Nov. 17. The Directors— D. MUCCHIRELLI, G. B. POLIDORI.

A report which reached London and Paris in the early part of the week, stating that the Pope had voluntarily withdrawn from the Government and the bastion, and the foreground occupied by the people, carabiniers, and peasantry

PIEDMONT AND LOMBARDY. On the 20th ult. a proclamation was published by King Charles Albert, declaring null the decree of dictatorix imposing the forced contributions on the Lombards, and all sales and alienation of property made in accordance therewith; and also a decree by his Majesty against that decree. The Sardinian fleet had arrived at Ancona

From Milan we learn, that, in addition to the list of persons on whom the forced contribution of Radetzki had been imposed, the Prince di Belgiojoso was named for 300,000 livres. A remonstrance, under the advice of the eminent Jurisconsult Pedrazzi, was about to be made to the Emperor at Olmütz TUSCANY.—At Leghorn the announcement of the assassination of Rossi had been received by the people with indescribable joy. On the 18th ult. a bill was posted on containing these words :—"Pellegrino Rossi has fallen under the blow of the dagger of the avenger of the rights of the people. Retrograde ministers, learn hence and beware. Assemble at 4 P.M. under the windows of the Governor's palace, where the resignation of Italian liberty, and the Governor appeared at the balcony and spoke as follows :—"Pellegrino Rossi, a man who was hated by all Italy for his principles, has fallen by the hand of a son of the ancient republic of Rome). May God save his soul and the liberty of Italy!" The people loudly shouted applause at these words, whilst the bells of the city rang joyous peals, and the Italian banner was waved on the church steeps.

NAPLES.—Addresses dated the 17th ult. on which the elections had terminated unfavourably to the Ministry. Naples itself had returned six Liberals, two of whom were generals Pepe and Salucci. Most formidable military preparations were in progress. All the forts were now lengthened, new ones constructed, and the royal palace itself was converted into a fortress The greatest commercial distress prevailed.

GERMAN STATES

FRANKFORT.—On the 23rd ult., the National Assembly appointed a committee for making arrangement's for a solemn funeral service for the late Robert Blum. On the 24th, in answer to a question respecting the execution of Robert Blum, the Minister of Justice gave the following rep y :—"A copy of the decision of the Assembly of the 16th, regarding this affair, was immediately forwarded to the Imperial Commissioners, with instructions to communicate it to the Government in Olmütz, and to demand adequate satisfaction (literally, atonement) for the violation of right. A despatch from Olmütz, under date Nov. 18, had been received from the commission, containing a report of their first interview with Wessenberg, who was very courteous, and promised all due attention to their communicati n. The fir ther results of the last instructions cannot be awaited. The Assembly passed a motion to the effect that the Central Executive take steps for preventing the carrying out of the new fundamental law of Holland in the duchy of Limburg (" one inseparable union) with Germany.")

The President of the Assembly (Von Gagern) had gone to Berlin, in order to learn the exact state of affairs there

PRUSSIA.

The intelligence this week from Berlin presents few features of interest. All speculation as to the probability or otherwise of the "fall" of the National Assembly pers sting in their resolution not to attend the session summoned by the King to meet at Brandenburg, instead of at the capital, was set at rest on Monday last, the day fixed for the meeting, when the number of Deputies assembled amounted to only 154, which was 48 less than that required to constitute a Chamber capable of voting. The Opposition absented itself en masse from the sitting.

The Ministry declined to lay the Royal message before an Assembly not legally constituted, and the President adjourned the Chamber till the next day, the 20th.

It was expected that the Government would call up the substitutes of all the Deputies who have not attended the meeting

In Berlin, on the morning of the same day, the recusant members assembled in Mylius's hotel were again dispersed by the soldiery, and a quantity of official documents were seized All the approaches to the street (the Taubenstrasse) at which the hotel is situated were guarded by the military. Several persons in front of the hotel were arrested, on the charge of having indulged in inflammatory language to the surrounding soldiers, who belonged to a Posen regiment

The Government paper states that 3679 muskets, 765 rifles, 767 cuirasses and 2010 sabres had not yet been given up by the Civic Guards, to whom they were delivered out of the Royal depôts. From the 27th up to the 30th ult. inclusive, therefore, fixed for the surrender of these weapons, after which period all persons in possession of them would be subjected to the prescribed punishment. A reward of 300 thalers (£45) was offered for the discovery of the fabricators of false Prussian notes; the reward to be increased to 500 thalers (£75), if the misdeeds were also captured.

Among the rumours prevalent among parties in Berlin who were supposed to be well acquainted with what was going on at Potsdam, there was one to the effect that the King was resolved to grant a constitution, the main features of which would be the following: Two Chambers, one of Deputies (the electors for which, as well as the elected, must possess an income of about £30 sterling), and the other, also an elective one, composed of persons having an income of £75

Berlin continued tranquil In the Rhenish provinces, the Burgher Guards of Düsseldorf, and other places which evinced a spirit of disaffection after the recent disturbances in Berlin, had been disarmed In Bonn, Aix-la-Chapelle, and Coblentz the Guard was suspended. In Silesia insurrectionary tendencies have been exhibited, and the capital, Breslau, had been declared in a state of siege

AUSTRIA

The National Assembly, which, as has been already announced, had been summoned by the Emperor to meet at the Little Moravian town, Kremsier, was opened there on the 22nd ult. At ten o'clock in the morning a solemn service was performed in the Cathedral Church, by the Bishop of Olmütz; the National Guards were under arms, and nearly all the members were present. At eleven o'clock the sitting commenced in the auditory of the palace. The deputies were, as nearly as possible, ranged as in Vienna, the Poles and ultra-German party occupying the left, and the Czechs the right. The Minister Stadion only appeared for a few moments, but the Ministers Krauss and Bach remained. M. Smolka, having been re-elected to the President's chair, M Meyer was named first Vice-President, and M. Lasser of Salzburg second Vice-President. During the Presidency of the Austrian Diet is composed of a Pole, a Moravian, and a German; the Czechs have been completely thrown out. The deputy Schuselka then delivered a speech, in which he made a report of the last events of the Diet at Vienna. He affirmed that the Diet, which sat en permanence, had protested at head-quarters in Vienna against its transfer; but that no reply had been vouchsafed The Assembly, he said, had resolved to meet on the 30th of November, but, in order not to provoke divisions, they had decided to come to Kremsier, not recognising by this act that either the Crown or the Ministers had the right to transfer the Diet according to their own pleasure. He must, therefore, declare, in the face of Europe, that the Government had not the right to transfer it. Diet wherever it pleases, but, in order not to augment the public ills of Vienna, provoked the first instance by the abrupt departure of yesterday, and now by ultra-diplomatists and military men, they had decided to come where they now were. The President then proposed that the sitting should be adjourned till the 25th, and that no member having offered any opposition, the House adjourned at half-past one

The "Left," it is understood, had resolved to vote unanimously against all union to Germany, and to testify no sympathy whatever for the Frankfort Parliament, also, to make no allusion whatever to the events of October. The Hill of Assembly was to be occupied by the 23rd ult. The Austrian commissioners at Frankfort, and the most superfluous contempt for the decisions of the Frankfort Parliament, had declared that no allusion ever could, or ever would be, paid to its late proceedings, especially as Austria and Germany were properly defined and their mutual relations had received short real and tangible The Emperor of Russia had forwarded to Windischgrätz the Grand Cross of the order of St. George, and to Jellachich that of the order of Wladimar.

Görtz had been declared in a state of siege, as a measure of precaution against the numerous fugitives from Vienna.

The funeral of Count Baillet Latour had been celebrated with great pomp at Laxenburg, a league from Vienna. 15,000 troops and twelve batt . . . . . 1 very took part in it, and after the ceremony was over they filed off before Prince Windischgrätz

On the 23rd ult. the constitution of the new Cabinet was made known. It is composed of the following members.—The President of the Council and . . . ter of Foreign Affairs, Prince T. Schwarzenberg; Minister of War, Gordon; Interior, Stadion; Justice, Bach; Finance, Krauss; Commerce, Bruck; . . . . . Bilhes, Thinnfeld; Under-Secretary in the . . . . . the Emperor had contracted four millions . . . . . relief of the persons whose property was destroyed by the storms . . . . . The distress of the working classes was becoming so intense, that, notwithstanding the severe laws against associations and assemblages, large numbers of working men in the suburbs had begun to form and attend clubs . . . . . however, had been arrested. About one hu. only . . . . . the members of the late democratic committee. Mr. Becher was a person of considerable education, and was a native of Manchester. He was condemned to death on the 22nd of November, in consequence of some compositions which he had written for the newspaper, the Radetzki. It is said, at a time when Vienna enjoyed the freedom of the press, and when he was only answerable for his writings to a legal jury. Lord Palmerston was informed of the judgment on the evening of the 22nd. Before the arrival from Olmütz of the sentence not requiring the signature by Prince Windischgrätz, who pretended to be asleep when it arrived at Schönbrunn. Consequently Mr. Becher was shot on the 23rd, at eight in the morning, in the ditch of the citadel. It was impossible not to be struck by the manful bearing of Mr. Becher, and the sub-editor of the same paper.

On the 25th, Prince Windischgrätz proclaimed his intention of modifying the martial law extraordinary (Standrecht) into the ordinary course of martial law (Kriegsrecht). In explanation, it may be observed, that in Germany the proceedings of martial law (Standrecht) last within 24 hours, either by the liberation or execution of the culprit, while the Kriegsrecht, or usual martial law, allows of lengthened proceedings and a variety of punishments. If the strict sense of the legal term be adhered to, the Standrecht has been revoked at Vienna, for from the first Prince Windischgrätz took it upon himself to mitigate the majority of the capital sentences pronounced by the commission.

Intelligence from Italy had reached Vienna of the decease of Field Marshal Radetzki, the veteran leader of the Imperial army in Lombardy, who, it is asserted, died of apoplexy.

The province of Gallicia has been divided into three Governments—the Ruminish, comprising the Bukowina; the Ruthenish, which includes the greater part of Gallicia; and the Polish, embracing the city and former territory of Cracow and a part of West Gallicia, as far as Tarnow and its immediate neighbourhood.

HUNGARY.

The news that has reached us from this quarter is very scanty. The Emperor and Windischgrätz had both issued manifestoes to the Hungarians, calling upon them to aid the Imperial troops in restoring peace, and promising that their rights, as free subjects, should be maintained, but threatening to treat as traitors all who should oppose the Imperial arms, or adhere to Kossuth. Notwithstanding these proclamations the rebellion continued to gain ground, when, at the same time, large bodies of troops had gradually surrounded the Hungarian frontiers, completely blockading them, and a few trifling skirmishes of outposts had occurred. The Magyars had availed themselves of a three weeks' respite to collect their forces, and even many deputies within the said line had aroused into hostility against the Austrians by the blockade of their frontiers The Hungarians were generally disinclined to believe the fair promises of the Viennese, having already experienced, to their cost, the evils of military domination, and being well aware that any attempt to enforce discipline against the Austrian troops would now be vain, the soldiers being fully conscious of the power which their sanguinary conquests, and the massacre of the 6th of October, had given them.

The Hungarian Minister of War, Messzaros, had received full powers to carry on negotiations for the settlement of the Hungarian disturbances, with the two Generals, Wildschegrätz and Jellachich. The latter had not left Vienna upon the 22nd ult. Operations against the Hungarians were not to commence until after the 27th; in which day, the term accorded by Prince Windischgrätz to the insurgent Magyars, as an inducement to them to return to their allegiance, to present their submission, indeed, in default of which, they will be declared rebels, and treated as deserters to the enemy. The operations of the Imperial Generals are to be carried on from five different points. Field-Marshal Windischgrätz, together with the Ban Jellachich, with 50,000 from Vienna, will act on the right bank; Simunich, with 16,000, will pass over to the left bank of the Danube; whilst Puchner, with 30,000 will from Siebenbürgen; Rukavina, with about 25,000 from Banat; Nugent, Dahlen, and Todorvich, with about 26,000 from the Croatian borders, are drawing near to the Hungarian capital.

SPAIN

From Madrid we learn that on the 30th ult. the formal presentation of the new Belgian Ambassador to the Queen took place

The Eusenete of Barcelona of the 30th ult. announces the complete defeat of a body of the Queen's troops, under the command of Brigadier Manzano, by the united Carlist bands of Cabrera, Marsal, Muchacho, Sargatal, and Borges, amounting to 1000. The second in command of the Queen's troops was killed, and only 300 of the entire column and escaped

Cabrera had taken occasion to make known to the inhabitants that he had not shot or sacrificed an enemy in cold blood, notwithstanding the version of the Queen's generals, particularly Villalonga, and that all he desired was a regular exchange of prisoners.

RUSSIA.

Letters from Russia state, that since the commencement of November the cholera had re-appeared at St Petersburg, where it raged at present with more intensity than in July. Amongst the first victims were an aide-de-camp of the Emperor, and M. Lejeune, formerly an equestrian at the Cirque in the Champs Elysées, Paris, and who was director, when he died, of the Circus of St. Petersburg.

UNITED STATES

Advices have been received this week from New York to the 14th ult. They confirm the anticipated election of General Taylor to the Presidential chair, notwithstanding that the official returns had not been yet given; of the result, however, there was no question, the returns showing already 64 votes in his favour, while Mr Cass had got but 97. General Taylor had thus secured his election with eight votes to spare, the number necessary to a choice being 146 out of the total number 290

The victory achieved by General Taylor was celebrated at the . . . . . charge of 100 guns

The Legislature of the northern states to obtain the exclusion of slavery from the newly-acquired territory of the United States was eliciting strong opposition in South Carolina, where several meetings had agreed to resolutions of a very extreme character, denouncing the encroachment of the abolition spirit of the North upon the Southern States.

The details of the new postal arrangement with this country had been published. The new steamers of the Collins line of packets, of which there are six steamers of both nations for carriage across the Atlantic, for delivery at the Post-office, 2 cents; and for the inland transportation the rate charged for despatch letters, from Liverpool to Philadelphia, or New York, would be charged 27 cents The arrangement was to come into immediate operation.

From Washington, we learn that the National Gallery in the Patent-office in that city was broken open recently, during the night, and the United States' jewels stolen therefrom. These jewels consist of presents made by sovereigns and states to American ministers and consuls abroad, for which, as a reward for their services, according to the laws of the Republic, American officers or ministers are not allowed to retain individually, but are directed to deposit them in the Patent-office, or other office of the Federal Government. A reward of 1000 dols. had been offered by Mr. Burke, Commissioner of Patents, for a recovery of the jewels, and the conviction of the robbers. It is thought by many that the plunder had been sent to Europe for sale. The articles stolen were: Gold snuff box set with diamonds; gold scabbard belonging to the sword presented to Com. Biddle; gold medal struck by order of the Senate of Hamburg at their festival in commemoration of the establishment of their constitution; silver medal; duplicate of the same; gold medal, commemorative of the delivery from assassination of General Bolivar; gold medal, struck in Peru in 1824; duplicate, in 1826; gold medal of Napoleon; silver medal of Napoleon; date of his death, 1813; Roman gold coins, pint bottle of otto of roses; pearl necklace, two extra pearls in the gold snuff box, which was taken; 21 medals of copper and silver of Generals Wayne, Green, and other generals.

BRAZIL.

News from Rio de Janeiro, of the 10th October, acquaints us that another insurrection had broken out in the province of Seregipe, of which Vasconcellos and Oanda was the Premier. The new Cabinet is Conservative; that gone out was Liberal. Trade at Rio was exceedingly dull, with the exception of coffee, which was in great demand at improved prices.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE

Accounts which have been received by the last arrival from Sir H. Smith, describe his success over the Boers, and the pacification of the extensive district, which was in a state of insurrection so lately to the approach of a protracted war, as complete. Sir H. Smith had imposed a contribution upon the Boers, which would defray the commissariat expenses of the troops employed, and would also leave a small garrison in a fortified post at Bloem Fontein, to maintain order. The forces employed, with the exception of those appointed to defend the post, were on their return to head-quarters.

EGYPT

THE EGYPTIAN DYNASTY.—The salutary precaution adopted by the Ottoman Porte, of investing Ibrahim Pacha, the son of the viceroy Mehemet Ali, with the dignity of Vicegerent of Egypt, in order that, at the death of his father, the dynastical succession of Mehemet Ali should, which, in fact, it did, take place legally and peacefully, has proved of little avail, for the will of the late Pacha has been set aside, and Abbas Pacha, the grandson of Mehemet Ali, has been declared Viceroy. It is said that Ibrahim Pacha was desirous of abdicating, and that he had even made preparations for his departure for Europe, but that the Porte refused to accept his abdication. Ibrahim Pacha is said to be suffering from a disease of the throat, which has for some time rendered it impossible for him to speak, and which, in fact, is supposed to be the cause of his death. Mehemet Ali had been rendered to Ibrahim without success, and it is scarcely possible that another man can arrive without the announcement of his decease.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Emboweld? If yes embowel me to-day, you may pouch me to-morrow.—Falstaff.

THAT the pulse of prudence are not the only d . . . . . of the human family, every member of it is free to admit; but no individual is anxious to identify his particular case as one exemplifying the practice of going astray. "All men grow old," says the Wizard of the North, "all men must wear out; but men of ordinary wisdom, however aware of the general fact, are unwilling to admit in their own case any special instances of failure. Indeed, they cannot be expected to distinguish the effects of the Archbishop of Grenada's apo . . . . . not unwilling to pass over in their own composition, as insignificant carelessness on bad luck, what others may consider as symptoms of mortal decay." But there's no excuse for those who are warned that the way is fat genoa, walla g over a precipice, unless they like the excitement. "The fat Knight of horseshoes" announces his speculations as to what may befall him should he be "cleaned out." In language calculated to show how little cent m ny, in his opinion, need be observed towards a sport in such a category. To prevent the first process to save the patient from a moral embowelment, he has been often cautioned against the prevailing mania in speculation. In face of one's advisable office, in contempt of the warning to beware of being ensnared in these cunning, the victims still press onward to destruction. Now thatsunday, notice is hereby given that . . . . . that they shall not "powder and eat" them for all that. The question of turf gambling has been laid aside: it is only pampered ill. . . . . more vicarously disease

The course of racing events at home contrasted strangely with the progress of sports abroad in the year 1848. With our Olympics all was "gentle," if not exclusively "aristocratic." During the past season the éclats of Lord Clifden produced upwards of seventeen thousand pounds in stakes; and others of the Lords and Commons were up to good winners—in a laudable private way. In betting, although there was a great deal done, there were a great many "cooks" also, which leaves the balance on the wrong side The amount of . . . in the aggregate beyond all precedent, with prudent management in future years, in the hands of such as profit by experience, it is an investment from which good returns may be expected. Salient as sport was, still the interest centered in the cheering. It was impossible not to notice how much of its holiday aspect was gone, and very difficult to avoid regretting its disappearance. What a profound festival the Steeple Chase at Liverpool used to be—but Lent week, the day fixed for the . . . . . All note of preparation as the prologue to a Quakers' meeting The refectory at the Waterloo was, indeed, in all its youthful charms; and a round of the Aintree course was well worth a visit to the shores of Lancashire, if Alintree courses should shift to Timbuctoo. . . . The call to the c . . . . . is but the weather suits not the service of the virgin goddess. In many of the crack countries the scent has so far been bad the riding everywhere execrable. The people of the lush have been busy, and as we have not been there to see. For the ring, now is the winter of their discontent . . . .

Loud as a trumpet with a silver sound;

Give me to drink mandragora,
That I may sleep away this time

The quotations at Tattersall's are only to be taken by such as would "sleep no more." If ever there was a portentous Derby, it is that whose anniversary will be celebrated on the 23rd of May next The dyes and destits of the "legs" are at the mercy of caprice of two scabies . . . . The talents are between two stools of repentance. What is proposed? There's the flying Dutchman at 4 to 1; back him or breakfast off prussic acid—which ye will. Would you rather lay against Colonel Peel? There is the Serpentine and they talk of making it wholesome but it's between this and Ladyday. Is it all up, then? . . . No! but the crisis is imminent. The praise-and-prayer-book has had it his own way for a long season. Let him with all speed to Hyde-Park Corner, and appeal to the sympathy of the "mob" that is to say, to his self-interest. Let him down on his knees and sue for gentle usage at Epsom, in the year to come. Let him urge his argument in the logic of Falstaff—"If you embowel me now, you may powder me out me to-morrow

TATTERSALL'S.

THURSDAY.—The business transacted this afternoon at the Corner, and at Edmunton, during the Sale Stock Week, was not to it was at both places, enables us to give a "price current" on the two great events

DERBY.		OAKS.
33 to 1 agst Cossack	66 to 1 agst Surplice	66 to 1 agst Tarter (t)
50 to 1 — Bleacher	66 to 1 — Peep-o'-day Boy	2000 to 25 — Tascus (t)
50 to 1 — Pug, dam	(t)	2000 to 25 — Amazon (t)
66 to 1 — Herman Pistoff's	66 to 1 — Bon Mot (t)	1000 to 10 — Limestone (t)
DRAW.
12 to 1 agst Honeycomb	20 to 1 agst Orvil	40 to 1 agst Montagna
20 to 1 — Cotherstone	40 to 1 — Pyrrhus	40 to 1 — Pyrrha

ASK.
7 to 1 agst Sister to Arkwright (t)

LEAMINGTON AND WARWICK STEEPLE CHASES.—TUESDAY.

Hunt Cup of 150 sovs., 3 miles

Mr. Littledale ad. ace of Trumps	.. ..	(Mr. Davenport) 1
Lord Strathmore's Belshazzar	.. ..	(Mr. Bolville) 2

Handicap of 15 sovs each, 10 ft, and 5 only if declared, with 20 added.

Mr. Gadsby's Jack	.. ..	(Capt. Less.) 1
Lord Strathmore's Tit-bit	.. ..	(Mr. Brooks) 2

Free Handicap of 5 sovs each, and 30 added.

Mr. Land's Tom Patter	.. ..	(Owner) 1
Mr. Hudson's Tom Bowling	.. ..	(Archer) 2

WEDNESDAY

Professional Steeple Chase Sweepstakes of 3 sovs each, and 20 added.

Captain L. Little's Carlow	.. ..	(Oliver) 1
Mr. Land's Tea Witch	.. ..	(Archer) 2

Grand Open Steeple Chase Stakes of 20 sovs each, with 100 added.

Mr. Fuller's Knight of Gwynne ..		(Archer) 1
Hon. Dudley Ward and The Doctor ..	.. ..	(Saul) 2

Free Handicap Hurdle Stakes of 5 sovs each, and 40 added

Mr. Stevenson's Rotherthorpe ..	.. ..	(Crickemere) 1
Mr. Brown's Vent-Rein ..	.. ..	(Archer) 2

THE BURRA BURRA COPPER-MINE.

PROBABLY, the records of enterprise present but few such extraordinary instances of rapid success as are to be traced in the brief history of the mining localities of the newly settled colony of South Australia. It is now but fourteen years since the country was first made a British province; and already, from its mineral wealth, over and above its other natural resources, it has risen to an importance which has scarcely any parallel in colonial history

In a sense we have selected for illustration is the most famed of all these localities, being the Burra Burra Copper-mine, the ore of the produce of which was at first accepted as a sort of El Dorado dream, but has now received the full test confirmation.

Mr Wakefield, writing of the close of his valuable work on the Colony (recently published), thus sympathically refers to the Burra :

"The Burra Burra mine is situated about 84 miles from Adelaide, in latitude 33° 40' south, and longitude 139° 8' east, bearing from Adelaide north by east. The company (formed in 1845) set to work with only £2000 as working capital, and in the space of three weeks from the purchasing of the mine had raised 180 tons of ore, of what was sold to be a rich and valuable description. They have now built a village, containing, in October, 1846, four hundred inhabitants; have nearly completed smelting works; have sunk to the depth of 44 feet, and in length, comprising all the shafts and adits, one mile and a half. They have raised in one year no less than 7200 tons of copper ore, worth, on an average, at . . . . . per ton, ... £43,200; have paid in dividends . . . . . £30,000; have . . . . . further heavy charges, and also built and improved to the amount of £15,624!"

It is stated, too, that eight working months "earned £575, or nearly five guineas a week each, during a period of nine weeks; and that a Cornishman, whose contract had expired, did during this temporary absence from the Mine, and was re-instated on his wages name, cleared £50 in two months."

To describe the locality more in detail: the Mine is situated in a kind of basin, about fifty acres in extent, and surrounded by hills on every side, except Burra Burra Creek, towards which the ground slopes gradually. Near the Creek are the smelting house and charcoal stores; and around these are huts occupied by miners. The ore raised is of two kinds, blue and green. Both caverns excavated in the steep banks of the Creek

Over the land to the south of the Burra, and about a mile and a half from the Mine, lies the township of Kooringa; it is pleasantly situated on the face of a hill, on the western bank of the Creek; and is read from Adelaide enters the township by a small valley somewhat of the Mine. The best part of worship at Kooringa was a Wesleyan chapel; and among the earliest dwellings were some stone cottages erected by the Mining Association.

Proceeding from Kooringa, and passing through a gorge of northern hills, in a few minutes you reach the Mine, nearly surrounded by low hills. The workings, however, are comprised in the space of little more than six acres, but this space on a working day is a most animated scene. The first thing that strikes the eye is immense piles of earth, intersected with vast heaps of ore. Over the heaps are placed five or six great horse whims, some of which by night and day. One in particular, at Kingston shaft, never rests, except on Sunday. During the night it raises ore, and during the day it raises water for cleaning it. No less than thirty shafts have been sunk, most of them to the water Between the working shafts are separating and washing floors. To ore is washed upon a very simple principle. A lever and rod are suspended above troughs filled with water, and a sieve containing the ore is attached to the rod. The lever, by jerking the sieve up and down in the water, causes the ore, the heavier body, to sink, and the refuse on the surface is then taken off

A case of into the mine is a somewhat inconvenient to-dress. The visitor first puts on a flannel shirt and a round frock and a sandals, and enters by a perpendicular ladder to the depth of twenty fathoms; he then follows on through galleries lighted with copper, down little shafts, and into great vaults and chambers, and caverns and vaults of a forty, where men work to raise the best face of stone on the inches, showing away at the most spacious copper ever found to exist . . . . . But the most remarkable object in the mine is the . . . . . of the water, and the mass of earth continually being moved. Over and above you come to beautiful little basins or harbours, where the miners call their gardens. In some of the caverns, thirty, forty, and fifty feet wide, surrounded on every side with malachite, are red oxide, green and blue carbonates, mingled in rich confusion. Our authority (the South Australian News) states there to have been ore in sight to last for two years, independent of the new ground which the steam-engine would open up.

THE BURRA BURRA COPPER-MINE, IN SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

KOORINGA.—THE BURRA BURRA TOWNSHIP.

Mr. Burr, the superintendent, had introduced a most admirable and methodical system, and had nearly cleared the mine of bad characters. He was well supported by Captains Roach and Bryan, whose underground operations are upon a most excellent plan. The mine was particularly well ventilated and well timbered.

Two new lodes had just been opened at the Burra Burra; one of them, containing the finest ore, was discovered by the workmen who were levelling ground for a new whim. The direction of the lode appeared to be east of north.

There is a scarcity of timber in the neighbourhood of the Burra Burra mines, which will be most seriously felt in the course of a few years. This, we are told, is the reason why smelting is not likely to succeed there. A gentleman farther north had commenced planting gum trees (600) in the neighbourhood of his chief station.

By South Australian papers to the 10th of June, the mining operations were active operation, and progressing satisfactorily. The directors of the Burra Burra Mining Company had declared a quarterly dividend of 200 per cent, or £10 per share on each £5 paid up, payable on the 1st of the month. Out of a capital of only £12,000, this company has, therefore, in an incredibly short space of time, paid the shareholders a clear profit of £73,000, and at the present moment is giving them a return for the capital embarked to the extent of £100,000 per annum. The prices of mining shares on the 3d and 9th of June were as follows:—

OPENING OF LODE IN STOCK'S AIR-HOLE, IN THE MINE.

INTERIOR OF THE MINE.

	June 3.	June 9
	£ s. d.	£ s. d. £ s. d.
Burra Burra	145 0 0	140 0 0
Princess Royal	45 0 0	41 0 0
Adelaide Mining Company	3 17 6	2 17 0 to 3 0 0
North Kapunda	15 0 0	nominal
Royal Mining Company	0 19 0	0 14 0 to 0 15 0

We are indebted for the drawings of our Illustrations to Mr. J. B. Graham, who has recently returned from Australia, where, after a few years' labour, he has realised a handsome fortune from his shares in the Burra Burra Mine.

We have, likewise, to record this gentleman's honourable conduct in disposing of a portion of his newly-acquired wealth, in liquidating the claims, not only on his deceased father, but those on the firm of which Mr. Graham, sen., was a member. Soon after Mr. J. B. Graham's arrival in this country, he called all his father's creditors together, and paid off all their claims in full, at the same time giving them a splendid dinner to which a return dinner was given on Tuesday. Mr. C. Barfield, the Chairman, proposed Mr. Graham's health, and concluded an eloquent address by presenting him with a handsome silver salver, manufactured by Dodd, of Cornhill, and bearing an inscription explanatory of the circumstances. Mr. Graham feelingly responded to the Chairman's toast, and was evidently highly gratified by the testimonial.

We should add, that Mr. Dutton's work, entitled "South Australia and its Mines," contains, inter alia, the geological details of the Burra Burra district together with an historical sketch of the Colony.

BURRA BURRA MINE.—THE SURFACE OPERATIONS.

DEATH OF VISCOUNT MELBOURNE.

In our Journal of last week we briefly announced the death of Viscount Melbourne at Brocket Hall, on Friday evening (last week). His Lordship was taken unwell about six weeks back, with symptoms which were considered by the ordinary medical attendants to denote dyspepsy, and his Lordship was treated accordingly, without apparently any beneficial result. At length, Dr Holland was summoned from London for his advice, and the noble patient was considered somewhat better, when he suffered a relapse, and jaundice of an aggravated form set in, and he continued to sink hourly up to his dissolution. Dr. Holland paid his Lordship his last visit on Sunday, the 19th ult., and then informed the relatives of his Lordship that he could hold out no hopes of ultimate recovery. On Wednesday, faint hopes were entertained that a favourable change in the condition of his Lordship was perceptible; but in a few hours there was a relapse, and the noble invalid afterwards sank rapidly until death ensued. On Thursday night and Friday morning he was momentarily expected to expire; but he survived until Friday evening, at a quarter-past six, when he ceased to exist.

The family of Lamb Viscounts Melbourne first rose above the rank of gentry through the elevation to the Baronetcy, in 1755, of Matthew Lamb, Esq., of Brocket Hall, Herts, nephew and joint heir of Peniston Lamb, Esq., of Lincoln's-inn. The son of this Sir Matthew Lamb (Sir Peniston Lamb) was created, in 1770, Lord, and in 1781, Viscount Melbourne, in the peerage of Ireland, and in 1815 Lord Melbourne in that of the United Kingdom. The second son of that Peer, William Lamb, was the Lord Melbourne who forms the subject of this notice.

William Lamb, second Lord Melbourne, was born the 15th of March, 1779, in London. He went to Trinity College, Cambridge, and from thence he proceeded to Glasgow, where he continued his studies. In July, 1797, he entered at Lincoln's-inn; and in November, 1804, was called to the bar. His practical pursuit, however, of the legal profession was limited to a single attendance at the Lancashire sessions, in company with the late Lord Abinger (then Mr. Scarlett), through whose influence he received a guinea brief; and he used to say that the first sight of his name upon this document gave him the highest feeling of triumphant satisfaction he ever experienced—very far transcending that which he enjoyed on being appointed Prime Minister.

His marriage and his election for Leominster, in the year following (1805), led to his speedy abandonment of the law as a profession; and during many years he apparently passed a careless and silent life, divided between the gay circles of London and the House of Commons. His marriage with the daughter of the then Earl of Bessborough, afterwards so well known as Lady Caroline Lamb, proved unhappy. Lady Caroline Lamb died in 1828, the same year in which her husband succeeded to his father's title. A son of this union, the Hon. George Augustus Frederick, died in November, 1836.

On entering Parliament, the late Lord Melbourne, then the Hon. William Lamb, at once joined the Whig party. As he advanced in his career, the impression of his intent, though real talents, possessed the minds of the statesmen of the day. By Fox he was chosen to move the address for the Grenville administration, in answer to the speech, and he did so most ably. By Canning Mr. Lamb was made Chief Secretary for Ireland; and after a lapse of some years, during which he acted a somewhat independent part in Parliament, he, in 1830, having previously become a Viscount, took office with the Whigs as Home Secretary under Earl Grey. His connexion, then and subsequently until its passing, with the Reform Bill is too much a matter of recent history to be here detailed. When the Grey Government, after the accession of the Conservative Whigs, resigned, Viscount Melbourne became First Lord of the Treasury, and, with the exception of a short interval, remained so until 1841, when he was succeeded by Sir Robert Peel. Soon after this his Lordship sank into confirmed ill health, and his public life closed. His mortal career terminated on the 24th ult., at his seat, Brocket Hall, Herts.

Leaving no issue, he is succeeded in his honours by his next brother, Frederick Baron Beauvale, an eminent diplomatist. In public life, honest, straightforward, able, and ever well-intentioned; in private, refined, generous, captivating, and friendly: ever in high esteem and regard with his Sovereign, and always respected by the people—Lord Melbourne leaves behind him the memory of one of those whom the gowns of British history will love to remember, as having been, whatever their policy, the preservers of the dignity and character of England.

In Fraser's Magazine for the present month we find the following able and impartial estimate of Lord Melbourne's political character:—

"With all having earned for himself the character of a statesman, Lord Melbourne exercised no inconsiderable influence over the contemporary politics of his country; and the events of his seven years' administration of public affairs must hereafter secure a prominent place for him in our political history.

"The same foresight of the national tendencies, the same independence of character, which enabled him to break from the Whigs and enlist under the banner of the successor of Lord Liverpool, induced him to accept office from Lord Grey, and to assume the post of Home Secretary during the Reform crisis. The best proof of the general consistency of his character is afforded by the fact that his administration of that office, at the time when the Whig Government were compelled to assert the authority of the constitution against persons who were assisting them, in another way, to sap its foundations, rendered him very unpopular with the Radicals. He frankly accepted Reform of Parliament as a 'great fact,' although from his first entrance into public life he had been one of the most steady opponents of that great panacea for all national evils. And when he was called on by the Crown to form a Ministry in the year 1834, and afterwards in 1835, he conducted its policy in such a manner as to lay himself open to the suspicion, among the more violent of the Reform party, that he was really bent on retarding, and not accelerating, the advance of the movement.

"Lord Melbourne scarcely received his full share of approval or esteem during his life. He had been too closely identified with the Whig party to allow of the minute shades of difference between his principles and theirs being perceived; and while he seemed to leave the machine of the State to work on upon the impulses given from without, he was oftener employed in regulating its action, and preventing convulsive displays of its inherent strength. For this he was reviled, with equal ingratitude, by both political parties in the country.

"His social qualities endeared him to all who knew him; and his private character—his frankness, and freedom from all affectation or political disguise—very much infused itself into his public life. His death has occasioned deep regret in the circles of private friends, and they are many."

THE LATE VISCOUNT MELBOURNE

FROM THE "CORONATION" PICTURE, BY SIR GEORGE HAYTER.

BROCKET HALL.

Lord Melbourne possessed an estate in Derbyshire, bearing his name; but his principal seat was Brocket Hall, where he died. This property, lying in the parish of Hatfield, Herts, was named from the ancient family of the Brockets, and was conveyed in marriage by Mary, youngest daughter and co-heiress of Sir John Brocket, Knight, who died in October, 1698, to Thomas Read, Esq., of Barton, in Berkshire. His grandson, Sir James Read, Bart., left two daughters, co-heiresses; Love, the youngest, married Mr. Secretary Winnington, from whose family the manor was purchased by Sir Matthew Lamb, Bart., father of the late Viscount Melbourne.

The ancient manor house has been for many years taken down, and its site is occupied by a noble brick mansion, commenced from the designs of Mr. James Paine, by Sir Matthew Lamb, and completed by the Peer just deceased. The Hall is an extensive edifice; the principal front consisting of a centre, with a pediment, and two wings. The interior is sumptuously fitted, and contains a collection of fine paintings. A few years since, her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert honoured Lord Melbourne with a visit at Brocket. The mansion is situated in a beautiful park, through which flows the Lea, forming a spacious sheet of water; over this is a handsome bridge, also by Paine. Lady Melbourne was much attached to agricultural pursuits, and had two experimental farms upon the estate, on the system of Ducket.

Lord Melbourne was much beloved in the locality. "Nothing," says the Observer, "can exceed the regret which the death of the noble Lord has occasioned in the neighbourhood. He took the deepest interest in the welfare of his tenants, and ever since he came to reside permanently at Brocket Hall, seemed to make it the great object of his life to promote their prosperity. Soon after settling there he asked Mr. Charles Latimer, the eminent and extensive agriculturist, in what way he could do most good in the neighbourhood; and Mr. Latimer having answered, 'By giving employment to all who need it on your Lordship's estates,' Lord Melbourne ever since scrupulously adopted that gentleman's suggestion. A better landlord never lived. He always practically, as well as in words, recognised the rights of tenants, and never failed to express his unqualified disapprobation of the conduct of those landlords who oppress their tenants, either by requiring their votes for political purposes, or by exacting from them higher rents than they can afford to pay."

Lord J. Russell.—We are happy to learn that the Premier is quite recovered from the severe cold he caught a fortnight ago. The noble Lord, with Lady J. Russell purposes to reside at Pembroke Lodge, Richmond, until a fortnight after Christmas, and then come to town for a permanency.

Approaching Marriage in High Life.—Sir Henry Lytton Bulwer is, we learn, shortly to lead to the hymeneal altar the Hon. Georgiana Wellesley, youngest daughter of the late, and sister to the present, Lord Cowley. The ceremony, it is said, will be performed at Hatfield House, the seat of the Marquis of Salisbury, uncle of the fair fiancée. The Duke of Wellington and a large family party will assemble there on the occasion.

Appointments.—Mr. Barkly, M.P. for Leominster, has been appointed to succeed Sir J. Light as Governor of British Guiana. Mr. Barkly is a West India proprietor, and has obtained, during his short experience in Parliament, considerable distinction by the knowledge he has displayed on commercial and colonial subjects. Mr Barkly was not a supporter of the present Government, and his appointment cannot, therefore, be attributed to political favouritism.—Jacob Omnium, Esq., a gentleman well known in the City, it is understood has been appointed to the Governor-ship of Sierra Leone and its dependencies. Mr. Omnium is extensively connected with the colonies, and during the last session rendered important services to the Government, by correcting various errors of fact into which they had inadvertently been betrayed. Whatever credit is due for making so just and judicious a selection belongs to Lord Grey. There was no family connexion in the case; not even, we are informed, personal acquaintance. The appointment was wholly unsolicited, and was made solely on public grounds. It cannot be attributed to political favouritism.

BROCKET HALL, HERTS, THE SEAT OF THE LATE VISCOUNT MELBOURNE.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING,

THE ILLUSTRATED

LONDON ALMANACK

FOR 1849;

Being the Fifth Annual Issue of this most beautifully embellished and useful Almanack. Illustrated by RICHARD DOYLE, B. FOSTER, &c.; and finely engraved by DALZIEL, VIZETELLY, &c. Country Scenes, by THOMAS MILLER; besides a variety of useful Tables usually published in Almanacks. The Astronomical Department by JAMES GLAISHER, Esq., F.R.A.S., and of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich.

Published by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, London.

 Country orders supplied for cash only.

THEATRE ROYAL DRURY-LANE.—The LAST WEEK BUT ONE of JULLIEN'S CONCERTS

M. Jullien has the honour to announce that his Grand Series of Concerts will terminate next week. the theatre is but let for a winter's entertainment, the present is, therefore, most positive LAST WEEK BUT ONE

GOD SAVE THE QUEEN

THE ARMY QUADRILLE,

By THE FIVE BANDS,

Will be performed every night until further notice. No other will the novelties of the season

M. JULLIEN'S ANNUAL GRAND BAL MASQUE will take place on MONDAY Dec 18

EXETER HALL—WEDNESDAY CONCERTS.—

THE THIRD of these Concerts will be held on WEDNESDAY EVENING NEXT, December 6th, commencing at Half-past Seven o'Clock. Vocalists—Miss A Williams Miss M Williams, Miss Stewart, and Miss Poole. Mr Lindsay, Mr W Seaman Mr J Williams, and Mr Sims Reeves. Pianiste—Miss Kate Loder and H Tatlberg. The Orchestra will be complete in every department. Leader and Musical Director, Mr Willy. Tickets 10s and 5s Reserved, Seats 3s and 2s 6d, may be had of Mr STAMMERS, 6, Exeter-Hall and Mr. Mitchell's Old Bond street, and at the Door.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—DUMBOLTON'S SERENADERS. Have the honour to announce that their unparalleled universal celebrity throughout the United States will COMMENCE their ENGAGEMENT at this THEATRE ON SATURDAY NEXT, and that their ENGAGEMENT TERMINATES on the 30th DECEMBER, on which evening during the Week. The Programme will be duly announced. Stalls 3s, Pit 2s, Private Boxes and Seats, Mr. Mitchell's Royal Library, 33, Old Bond street, and at the Box Office.

MR. LOVER'S FIRST APPEARANCE since his return from America.—The Committee of the WHITTINGTON CLUB and Metropolitan Athenæum, Bow Street, have much pleasure in announcing that they have engaged SAMUEL LOVER, Esq., to commence a series of his unrivalled ENTERTAINMENTS at their Institution, on which occasion he will repeat his admirable Irish Evening, entitled IRISH SKETCH BOOK, on MONDAY EVENING December 4th, 1848. The Entertainment of the evening is as follows, PADDY FINUCANE, containing a variety of original and new songs, Irish sketches and stories, Impromptu, &c. Sketches of Travel, Nuts and Cousins and Character—Irish Sketches and stories and Mr Lover's new Songs among which some of the Go. Times Hero) he will have the honour of singing for the first time some ENTIRE NEW COMPOSITIONS. Detailed programme, may be had of the doorkeepers, at the Institution—Admission on the evening, 1s., reserved seats 2s.—Doors open at half past 7, to commence at 8

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—A LECTURE [illegible] Half past Three o'Clock, by W. Bell, ex Master Mariner, [illegible] Lecturer by Dr Ryan, at Half past Three daily, and on the Evenings of [illegible] Wednesday and Friday at Nine o'Clock. A Lecture on Voltaic Electricity [illegible] Thursday, and Saturday, at Nine o'Clock, by Dr Ryan. Also, on Wednesday, daily at Two o'Clock. The Microscope at one o'Clock daily. The Dissolving Views, with Historical Descriptions. The Chromatrope. The Phantasmagoria, by Charles Bell, at 11 o'Clock. Diver and Diving Bell. Working Models explained.—Admission, 1s.; School, Half-price

WEIPPERT'S SOIREES DANSANTES.—PRINCESS'S CONCERT-ROOMS.—MONDAY, DECEMBER 4, and every Monday. A Subscription of Two Guineas is entitled to an admission for himself and lady any Six Nights during the Season. Sing's Tickets, 7s each. Weippert's Full-band, as usual conducted by Russell M. [illegible] Davis. The Programme of the Night by Mr. Eyre.—Commence at Ten precisely at 11 o'clock.—Tickets and Programmes at 21, Soho-square, and at Mr. Sams', 32 St. Martin's-le-Grand.

WALHALLA.—SALLE DE VALENTINO, Leicester-square.—The spacious and elegant SALOON is OPEN EVERY EVENING. Its Lighting, Ventilation, and the whole of the Decorations and Appointments, render it a delightful [illegible] to attend. All lovers of Dancing are invited to visit this fete, and at Temple of Terpsichore. The Dancing is regulated by four masters of the ceremonies in full costume. The new and much-admired Quadrille, "Jeannette and Jeannot," every evening. Mons. Constantin, Herr Redl. Doors open at a Quarter past Eight, Dancing to Commence at Half-past Eight, and Close at Half past Eleven o'Clock.

SMITHFIELD CLUB (1848) CATTLE SHOW.—THE ANNUAL EXHIBITION of PRIZE CATTLE, ROOTS, SEEDS, IMPLEMENTS, &c., on the 7th, 8th, and 9th of DECEMBER BAZAAR, KING-STREET, PORTMAN-SQUARE. The entrance will be for the Exhibition to the Nobility, Gentry, and Public; admission 1s. Ladies to view this National Exhibition with perfect facility. Open from Daylight till Seven o'clock in the Evening. Access also Building.

THE MISSISSIPPI and MISSOURI.—By BANVARD.—The celebrated Panoramic Painting of the MISSISSIPPI and MISSOURI RIVERS, exclusively known as the Three-Mile Picture, exhibiting a view of country over 3000 miles in length, extending through the largest cities in the city of New Orleans being by far the largest picture ever executed by man, will open to the public on Wednesday evening, Dec 6, at the EGYPTIAN HALL, Piccadilly. For full particulars see bills and pamphlets

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, Dec. 3.—Advent Sunday. The Moon enters her first Quarter at 8h 6m. P.M.

MONDAY, 4.—The Moon and Saturn are near together. The latter souths at 6h. 27m., and the former at 6h. 46m.

TUESDAY, 5.—The Sun rises at 7h. 52m., and sets at 3h. 56m.

WEDNESDAY, 6. The length of the day is 7h. 57m., and the decrease since the shortest day is 6h. 38m.

THURSDAY, 7.—Day breaks at 7h. 48m., and twilight ends at 5h. 06m.

FRIDAY, 8.—Conception of Blessed Virgin Mary

SATURDAY, 9.—Jupiter rises at 9h. 32m. P.M.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING DECEMBER 9

Sunday		Monday		Tuesday		Wednesday		Thursday		Friday		Saturday
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
30	6	58	7	39	7	20	8	0	8	40	9	20	10
55	11	25	11	55	*	0	25	0	50

* During the afternoon of Friday there will be no high tide

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Galileo," Liverpool.—Mr. Miller's communication relative to the transit of Mercury was correct, except only in the time of the occurrence of the phenomena. The diagram was in accordance with theory; and it was confirmed by many observers of the transit. In our Correspondent Galileo's theory, the motion of Mercury alone is calculated, and his apparent motion as viewed from the earth, which is compounded of the motions of both planets.

"Simpson."—Apply to a solicitor

"A Subscriber."—The French song may be had of any music-seller

"E. S. S." Halifax.—The condition is mentioned in the previous line but three; so that the matter is intelligible.

"Justus" should apply to the publisher of the work in question.

"Theobald."—Col. Sabthorpe and Mr. T. B. Hobhouse sit at present in Parliament for Lincoln.

"R. Y."—Intelligible

"Cymro," Bangor.—"Wed a little longer."

"Bennabi Relgrier."—The cost will be about 10s. Apply to your bookseller.

"J. W. B." Chelsea.—See Hood's "Treatise on Warming, Ventilating," &c.

"A Subscriber," Portsmouth.—A work has just been published upon "Ornamental Poultry."

"A Poor Student."—See Balman's "Lessons on Chemistry."

"P. H. N." Tutor's "Counting house Guide"

"J. W." Stoke-upon-Trent.—We believe the story in question to be fact. In a week or two we shall illustrate the last arrival of Assyrian Marbles.

"E. V. A. N. O."—Apply at the London Mechanics' Institution, Southampton-buildings, Holborn.

"T. L." Bury-street.—Doctor Golding Bird's "Manual of Natural Philosophy."

"W. R. E. M." Tunbridge Wells.—According to the best authorities, it is summer from the middle of June to the middle of September.

"A. G." Dublin.—Gilbart's Treatise on Banking is an accredited work.

"W. H. B." Bath.—Thanks

"A Fine Young Subscriber."—See the List of Stamps in any Almanack. The price of the midsummer stamp depends upon the amount of premium.

"M. N."—Apply at the nearest nurserymen's.

"Tell-tale," Newington.—For allusion to the Reading-Room of the British Museum, apply, with the recommendation of two well known householders, to Sir Henry Ellis, at the Museum.

"Emigrant" may find a corrected list of provincial newspapers in the London Post-Office Directory for 1848, just published; or advertising agents, as White and Co., [illegible] street, will supply a list

"J. P." Manchester.—We had not room for the Illustration

"Zeuxis" Arbuthnot, a sound English authority, writes "spoonfulls."

"Da Vinci." It was Parrhasius, a painter of Athens, who bought a captive, and had him put to death with tortures, that he might therefrom depict the pains of Prometheus. This cruel artist has not his par.

"J. N." Wiggtone;" "Y. Z." "A B"—Your inquiries relate to matters which it would take considerable time to ascertain.

"An Inquirer," Burningham; "M. H." Sydenham; "A Constant Reader." Declined

"Nicoli's Patent Electric Light." "Flamingo;" "C. N. M, Leamington;" "H. ," "Pimlico;" "Angus," Northampton; "E. P. H. L." "Ex uerde Lichi." "P. Q. R." "W. H. S." "An Ozonian," "Bonaccord," Aberdeen," "J."

Cork.—Letters may be addressed to Mr. Stutie, Bazaar, Baker-street, Portman-square.

"Author."—See the work on the subject, published by Van Voorst, 1, Paternoster-row

"Nimrod," Bury.—A capital paper on the "Chase" has been published by Mr. Murray, from the "Quarterly Review"

"F. Z." Devon.—The appeal is worth making.

"R. B."—We should say, "the old friend"

"Mercator" must be in error. Highbury-terrace, Islington, is but 142 feet above the Thames high-water level.

"Astronomer," Hull, should be gratified, could we find space for the quotation.

"Sun-spur," Brighton.—We think the prospect doubtful.

"B. J."—The old custom of "Selling a Wife" is strictly punishable by law.

"W. Z."—See the published Treatises on "Wheat."

"Basil" should account for the other man's reward, for the gesture.

"A. Z." Mossing-lane.—The age is 53.

"Babes," Isle of Wight.—Clergymen, or Clerestory, is the walls of the nave of a church, supported by the arches, which divide it from the aisles, and pierced for lights. (31 Canon.)

"H. D." Hemel Hempstead, should appeal against the assessment.

"E. C." Newington.—Not at present.

"R. V." is thanked; but two Views of the Grand Island appeared in No. 126 of our Journal.

"A Subscriber," Scotland.—The facsimile on the "Number Seven" is too long a story for quotation

"E. F." Kedron.—The New Forest district, according to the last perambulation on record (22 Charles II.), is situated on the 23rd degree, statute measure

"A Constant Reader," Newcastle, had better apply to Mr. Beard.

"Bibliothecal." Mr Lockhart.—Calur

"An Old Subscriber."—Before 11 o'clock

"W. V. D." Perth.—The U may, with propriety, be omitted.

"A Lady," Dublin, is recommended to consult her Surgeon.

"Keying" is thanked for the Sketch, though we could not find room to insert it.

"J. C. N." Croydon.—Consult Bradshaw's "Railway Guide." Where information is so near at hand, we cannot spare room to quote it.

"Inquirer."—Your inquiry to the Secretary of the Royal Society, Somerset House.

"A Playgoer." Inquire at the Olympic Theatre.

"A Friend to the Colonies" should write again to the Inventor. Accordingly to published reports, his experiment

"A Constant Observer" should inquire at Sellers' Hall

"O. P. Q."—Dr. Prichard's able work on "Man" will, doubtless, give the Information you require

"Oxon."—Gore House, Kensington.

"Bryn."—Inquire at Ackermann and Co's, Strand.

"J. C. T."—The variation of the compass at present is about 22° 50'. The Pole Star is truly perpendicular to the true line of north on every day. For the time, see the "Illustrated London Almanack" for this year, at page 62; and for next year, at page 58. Information relative to the variation of the compass will be found in both years.

"H. C."—The surviving wife's arms should be impaled, and the crest may be added.

"A Subscriber."—The pay of a Cornet or Ensign is insufficient in itself

"Elizabeth."—Captain the Hon. E. G. G. Howard, M.P., is the third son of the late Earl of Carlisle. He has two younger brothers He married, 10th August, 1841, Susan, only daughter of the Hon. George Pansonby, of the noble and ancient Irish family of that name.

"A Subscriber."—A, on marrying the second daughter of B, would be entitled, as the lady has no brother, to bear her arms on an escutcheon of pretence; but he could not bar family rents, nor could he quarter her arms. The children of the marriage would, however, enjoy the latter privilege

"An Inquirer."—The document from the Heralds' Office is the safest guide. The supporters cannot be legally borne. The quarterings depend on the descent from heiresses, and should be carefully investigated. As "Enquirer" bears two names, he is, in all probability, entitled to two crests, but to no more

"T. F. S."—Viscount Curzon married, Feb. 3, 1845, Harriet Mary, second daughter of Henry Charles Stuart, Esq., M.P.

"A Subscriber."—A, on marrying the second daughter of B, would be entitled, as the lady has no brother, to bear her arms on an escutcheon of pretence; but he could not bar family rents, nor could he quarter her arms. The children of the marriage would, however, enjoy the latter privilege

"An Inquirer."—The document, from the Heralds' Office is the safest guide. The supporters cannot be legally borne. The quarterings depend on the descent from heiresses, and should be carefully investigated. As "Enquirer" bears two names, he is, in all probability, entitled to two crests, but to no more

"A Subscriber."—A grinding new arms, the College would either assert armorial bearings for the applicant, or found them on the engraving borne by others of the same name. The cost of a grant is about £50. A crest can be granted by the College of Arms

"A Subscriber from the Fens" should apply to his solicitor.

"Cambro-Anglicus."—The servant of a Deputy-Lieutenant is entitled to wear a cockade.

ERRATUM.—In the account of the Roman Remains, at Chesterford, in our Journal of last week, page 335, for "iconorum," read "icenorum."

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1848.

THE question of the fearful insurrection of June has been re-opened in all its bitterness by the enemies of General Cavaignac. All the parties in France who look with unfavourable eyes upon the Republic, however dissimilar their own political aspirations may be, unite in their dislike of the present head of the Executive Government. For the last two or three months, the most odious charges have been whispered against General Cavaignac. The whispers finally shaped themselves into specific accusations; and those accusations having found a member of the Assembly to give authoritative utterance to them, General Cavaignac was bound to reply. The charge amounted in effect to a crime the most enormous and degraceful that could be committed by a public man; and, if proved, would have warranted not only the immediate dismissal of the perpetrator from the service of the State, but the severest and most exemplary punishment that the laws of his country could inflict. M. Barthélémy St. Hilaire made the charge on Saturday last in his own name, and in those of MM. Garnier Pagès, Duclerc, and Pagnerre; and read from a printed paper, which had been privately circulated, the incidents upon which it was founded.

The various statements resolved themselves into these: that, during and previous to the days of June, the orders given to General Cavaignac, then Minister of War, under the Executive Commission, were not obeyed by him; that if these orders had been obeyed, the insurrection would never have been prevented entirely, or would have been suppressed on the first day, without much bloodshed; and that General Cavaignac purposely disobeyed these orders, and purposely allowed the insurrection to reach a certain height before he coped with it, in order that he might exalt himself as the destroyer of anarchy, serve the purpose of his selfish ambition, and become the Dictator of the Republic. The non-obedience of orders would have been an open and flagrant, less odious interpretation; but those who adopted that view of the case asserted that the honesty of the General could only be assented to at the expence of his capacity. General Cavaignac, who formerly had no character for, or pretensions to, oratorical power, astonished both his friends and his enemies by the reply he made. He spoke for three hours, without the aid of notes—a circumstance of itself sufficiently remarkable, where extemporaneous speaking is the exception, and not the rule of Parliament, and with an eloquence which no one could have anticipated.

General Cavaignac met the charges both ways by the simple statement that when he accepted the dangerous post from the late Executive Commission, he stipulated for unity of command, and that the measures he adopted were universally approved by military men as the most effectual pass to the order of the day, forthwith, at the same time, its decree of the 28th of June, that General Cavaignac had deserved well of the country. The motion was carried by the large and decisive majority of 503 votes against 34. It is generally considered that the character of General Cavaignac has been greatly raised in the estimation of his countrymen by this discussion, and that his chances for the Presidency have been much increased by it.

To counteract this advantage gained by his opponent, M. Louis Napoleon Bonaparte has issued an address to the people, setting forth his principles and intentions. This document is sensible and able, and could not fail, if people could believe it to have been written by himself, to impress all impartial men with a highly favourable opinion of his talents and his judgment. It is generally understood, however, that it was drawn up by his friends.

GENERAL TAYLOR, the conqueror of Mexico, has been elected President of the United States. Though "Rough and Ready," as his countrymen admiringly designate him, acquired his reputation in war, he is, like all great soldiers, a man of peace. There is no reason in his case to fear that he will in the high position to which the suffrages of his countrymen have called him lean to a war policy; on the contrary, judging from all that is known of him, he will devote the energies of his mind to the avoidance of quarrels—in this respect standing in favourable contrast with General Cass, his competitor for the Presidentship. The latter is a man whose prejudices are intensely anti-English, and who would, in all probability, have contrived on some pretext or another to pick a quarrel with this country. Though General Cass is a Free Trader, and the new President is a Protectionist, we think, all circumstances considered, that, both for the United States and for this country, the better of the two men has been selected. General Taylor can do no great harm in the question of the tariff—at least, the probability is somewhat remote; while General Cass might have pampered the greedy appetite of the Americans for the annexation of territory, to an extent which might have been not merely inconvenient, but dangerous. General Taylor has been virtually elected, but the official declaration will not be made in the Senate until February next.

THE premature death of Mr. Charles Buller, M.P., President of the Poor-Law Board, is an event that will excite general regret. Though called away in the very prime of his manhood, his talents had been long known and appreciated, both by the Whigs, under whom he served, and by the Conservatives. Even his political opponents (and private opponents he never had) cheerfully acknowledged his eloquence upon all subjects upon which he spoke, the superior knowledge he displayed upon some subjects of the highest importance—that of our colonial system more especially, and his general talents for high administrative functions. He seemed to be gradually rising in the service of the State, with new honour to himself and new advantage to his country, at every successive change, and to be destined both for a useful and a brilliant career. He has, however, been removed from amongst us; and, in recording, as public journalists, the termination of his labours by that hand of death which spares neither genius nor virtue, we give utterance to a very general feeling in all parties and ranks of life, when we state that no public man of our day was more universally liked and respected than he was he will be followed to the grave by a sincerer sympathy.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT OSBORNE

ON Sunday, the Queen and Prince Albert attended divine service at Whippingham Church. The service was performed by the Rev. T. Presberen.

On Monday evening Lieut.-Colonel the Hon. C. B. and Mrs. Phipps had the honour of joining the Royal dinner party.

On Tuesday Lord Waterpark, Lord in Waiting to her Majesty, left Osborne, his period of duty having elapsed.

THE junior branches of the Royal Family take open air exercise every morning on the sea beach, weather permitting.

PRINCE ALBERT A HIGHLAND LAIRD.—On Wednesday (last week) the estate of Birkhall, adjoining Balmoral, was exposed for sale in Edinburgh, and taken at £31,000. for Prince Albert. At the same time the lifeent of the entailed estate of Abergeldie, another adjoining property, was put up for sale and taken out for the heir of entail, Mr. Gordon, jun., of Abergeldie. It is understood that progress will be made with the extensive alterations and additions for which his Royal Highness gave instructions before his departure for the south are in the course of being carried out; and Dr Robertson, the active and intelligent land-steward, is now on the ground in order—removing vermin, and taking other precautions for preserving the game. From these circumstances it is but reasonable to conclude that Balmoral will henceforth take its place in the same category with Osborne and the other Royal residences, where her Majesty regularly spends a portion of each year. When his Royal Highness arrives on Deeside, next season, he must be welcomed in his new character of a Highland laird. Aberdeen Herald.

SIR ROBERT PEEL AND THE EX-KING OF THE FRENCH. Louis Philippe and a numerous suite are at present enjoying the hospitality of Sir Robert Peel at Drayton Manor

PLAYS AT WINDSOR CASTLE.—The following has been fixed as the intended performances which will take place at Windsor Castle after the Christmas holidays, it is said, under the direction of Mr. C. Kean:—1st night, Dec. 28. "The Merchant of Venice." 2d night, Jan. 4.—"Used Up," and "Box and Cox." 3d night, Jan. 11.—"Hamlet." 4th night, Jan. 18. "The Stranger," and "Twice Killed." 5th night, Jan. 25.—"The Housekeeper," and "Sweethearts and Wives." Dramatis Personæ.—"The Merchant of Venice"—Shylock, C. Kean; Duke, Dobbs; Bassanio, Wigan; Antonio, Rogers; Gratiano, Webster; Lorenzo, Leigh Murray; Salarino, Conway; Salanio, Boyce; Launcelot Gobbo, Keeley; Old Gobbo, Meadows; Portia Mrs C. Kean; Nerissa, Mrs Keeley; Jessica, Miss E. Montague. "Hamlet"—Hamlet, C. Kean; King, Diddear; Ghost, Vandenhoff; Polonius, W. Farren; Horatio, Howe; Laertes, Leigh Murray; Queen, Mrs. Warner; Ophelia, Mrs C. Kean; Actress, Mrs. Buckingham. "The Stranger"—The Stranger, C. Kean; Baron Steinfort Conway; Count Wintersen, Webster; Solomon, Rogers; Peterkeys, Mrs Keeley; Mrs Haller, Mrs C. Kean; Charlotte, Miss Montague. "Used Up"—Sir Charles Mathews's Comedy in his original character of Sir Charles Coldstream. "Box and Cox," Mr Buckstone and Mr Harley will appear in "Box and Cox," and Mr. Wright as Billy Lackaday in "Sweethearts and Wives."

THE BISHOP OF LONDON AND THE HON. AND REV. BAPTIST NOEL.—On Wednesday night, at the usual weekly evening's service at St. John's Chapel, Bedford-row, of which the Hon. and Rev. Baptist Noel has for the last 26 years, the rev. gentleman said: "My dear Christian brethren, many of you have heard that, as the result of opinions deliberately formed, which I know not how to alter, and the force of the measures engaged in, I have left the pastoral charge and communion of the Established Church, which I have been ordained for so long a period with comfort and satisfaction to myself, if not with profit to others. Since I addressed you last Sunday, I have been in this metropolis, and it is incumbent upon me to announce my intention of leaving this congregation, where I have ministered

POSTSCRIPT.

FIRE IN GRAY'S-INN-LANE—LOSS OF LIFE.

On Friday (yesterday) morning, about one o'clock, a fire took place in the house of Mr. Powell, oilman, Gray's-inn-lane, a few doors from Holborn. About two o'clock the flames were subdued; not, however, until Mr. Powell's house and contents were destroyed, and the two houses on each side much injured. After some time, the inmates were ascertained to have been saved, except two (a man and woman) lodgers in the upper rooms. The woman, who was far advanced in pregnancy, was found lying by the window in her own room, and deceased's husband was found lying on his back, apparently lifeless, in the yard. Both were instantly removed, the former in a shell to St. Andrew's workhouse; and the latter to King's College Hospital, but so dreadfully burnt that the medical authorities considered his case hopeless. All the lodgers were persons in poor circumstances, and have lost every portion of their humble furniture. Mr. Powell is insured in the Licensed Victuallers Office.

ANOTHER FIRE.—Before the fire in Gray's-inn-lane was entirely extinguished, another fire of no less and serious injury to the inmates happened at the Surrey Ale Stores, nearly opposite Kennington Church. The firemen succeeded in staying the progress of the flames, not however, until its greater portion of the premises was destroyed, and the premises adjoining, be engine in Mr. Smith's, a brazier and Mr. Edwards, grocer, were damaged. Messrs. Edwards and Smith are insured in the County and Imperial, and Mr. Yarington in the Phœnix.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

IMPORTANT DECISION OF THE FRENCH NATIONAL ASSEMBLY.

PARIS, Thursday

It is agreed on all hands that, whether the expedition to Rome were intended bond fide for the protection and liberation of the Pope, or was, as some persons affirm, a mere electioneering manœuvre, it has already a most advantageous influence on the prospects of General Cavaignac.

There was to-day a manifestation in favour of Prince Louis on the Place Vendôme, provoked, as was asserted, by the recent manifestation in favour of Generals Cavaignac. Notwithstanding the efforts of the police to clear the place, an immense concourse of persons was collected in front of the hotel where Prince Louis resides, one set to go to the Assembly, he was saluted by cries of "Vive Napoleon! Il nous le faut!"

The debate on the Italian question was opened to-day by M. Leon Rollin, who attacked the government for having refused its assistance to Milan in its struggle, and for not having protested against the interest of Austria in Italy. He was met with much less ground, hastened to intervene in favour of the Pope against his subjects. He said it was impossible to make a distinction between the spiritual and temporal sovereignty of the Pope, and that, in relation to any political intervention, he must be regarded as a temporal sovereign. He further contended that the question was one not for the Executive power to decide, but for the Assembly, as it concerned the Assembly, that body being in full session

General Cavaignac spoke in defence of the measures he had adopted, and, having concluded, several speakers of the day were proposed, but the Assembly gave priority to the following: "The Assembly, approving of the measure of precaution taken by the government for assuring the person I liberty of the Pope, and reserving its ultimate decision till all the facts are fully known, passes to the order of the day." Upon this the Assembly divided. Votes, 543; for, 480 against, 63; majority, 270

The chamber des Mises en Accusation and the authorities of the Court of Appeals of the Police Correctionnel, assembled respecting the proceedings to be instituted against the Ministers of Louis Philippe, have decided that there were no grounds for proceeding against any one of the persons implicated.

IRELAND.

STATE TRIALS.

THE WRITS OF ERROR.—On Friday while the arguments on the writs of error in the cases of the four prisoners convicted of high treason at Clonmel were brought to a close. Had Mr. Smith O'Brien's case been disposed of separately, judgment would have been pronounced; but the necessary arrangement of the thirty-eight cases rendered it necessary, as Michaelmas Term ended on Saturday, to postpone the decision until Hilary Term, which will commence on the 11th of January next. Early in the evening the two houses on each side of him caught fire. Judgment in all the cases together. Meantime, the four prisoners will remain at the Richmond Bridewell

Mr Justice Moore, in the absence of Dublin commission, which opens on Tuesday, the 19th inst. The bills of indictment were found at the last commission.

The Tipperary commission, which had been adjourned to Tuesday, the 5th inst., for the purpose of dealing with the cases of Smith, having part in the Ballingarry affair, under the Habeas Corpus Act, to meet this contingency, by requiring a new election for Lord Mayor within ten days after the office has become vacant. Mr. Dunne will be duly elected for St Patrick's ward in a few days, and then he will be re-elected as Lord Mayor by the corporation.

ILLNESS OF T. B. M'MANUS.—It is stated in the Freeman's Journal, that on Saturday night Mr M'Manus was attacked with a violent fit of retching and other symptoms indicative of approaching cholera. He was much worse at one o'clock an hour on Sunday morning the Governor of Richmond Bridewell despatched a messenger for the medical attendant of the prison. In the meantime the prisoner got relief, and by Sunday was much improved and going on quite favourably. The attack was a bilious affection.

THE CLEARANCE SYSTEM AND INCREASE OF PAUPERS.—In Kilrush union, in the last twelve months, 2000 tenants have been levelled. There are in 30 poor-houses in the several union workhouses of Limerick—a number never before approached.

ORANGE CLUBS.—The nightly meetings of these Clubs are becoming really formidable. They assemble generally when the working classes should be in bed; and true to the old peep-o'-day principle, rarely think of breaking up before cock crow.—Belfast News-Letter.

THE POOR-LAW AND EMIGRATION.—The local papers of the southern, and some, too, of the eastern counties, are almost wholly engrossed with comments upon the progress of depopulation, ejectment of tenantry, and the emigration, or rather flight, of farmers, all of which are attributed to the working of the Poor law; and they certainly make out a case sufficiently strong to demand the attention of the Legislature to this genuine grievance of all classes of Irishmen.

UNDESIRABLE STATE OF THE LAND.—In various parts of the south, especially in those districts in the counties of Limerick and Clare where the "clearance system" is in progress, considerable tracts of land are totally neglected, and no steps are taken to prepare for next year's crops. A Correspondent of the Limerick Examiner says: "The entire country, from Kilmallock on to Knockderry, Newcastle, and Rathkeale, is in a most wretched and sterile condition, no appearance of the least activity or inclination to put in any seed, or prepare for it either by gentle or simple. In this range of 35 miles I saw only two fields tilled."—The Limerick Chronicle contains a letter on the same painful subject: "A gentleman who rode through the barony of Kenry on Wednesday last, assures us he did not see a single sign of work in any field he passed. In many instances was amazed to find the fields in the same state as the farmers prepared their ground for seed early. In the neighbourhood of Newmarket-on-Fergus and Six-mile-bridge several hundred acres of land are left in a totally untilled state, and utterly bare of cultivation; in the latter district, a great part of Baron Richards estate."

THE POOR-LAW AND THE IRISH GENTRY.—Sir Richard O'Donnell, a Baronet of considerable wealth in Mayo, who has been elected a guardian for the Swinford electoral division in the union poor-house, Ballina, has resigned, declining the poor-rate in three electoral divisions of Westport, one of the most destitute unions in that part of the country. Before Sir Richard's resignation, the Incledon's (who will be remembered as having had their estate in Kerry under the extreme difficulty to obtain the rates by any means, but now the case is quite different, and for two years they have been paid to the satisfaction of the vice-guardians. Lady Scott, Tullynaney Hall, Mr Pudsey O'Donnell, wife of Sir Richard all the reflections cast upon the avocation he has chosen. "In no instance," he says, "has a poor house, or anything of any kind been seized, nor the services of police or soldiers required. I undertook this office for no sordid motive, but I am willing yet to be more vile in your eyes, if, by thus placing myself in such a position as poor-law guardian, I can be instrumental in the working of the law, and protect my poor neighbours from unnecessary expenses." This is a very novel and a highly gratifying avowal from a Connaught squire of the first class. It is an indication of practical good sense in the very part of Ireland where it is most wanted.

COURT OF ERROR, DUBLIN.—SCOBERN, PLAINTIFF IN ERROR, V. KELLY.—On Tuesday the judges assembled in pursuance of an adjournment entered, not the question of peace between the parties was, as to who was entit ed to the offices of Assistant Registrar of the Court of Chancery. The office having become vacant while Sir Edward Sugden was Chancellor, he appointed Mr Scobern to the office, but error, to fill the vacancy Mr. Kelly, the defendant in error, claimed the appointment, contending that the office was a sinecure, and that the Lord Chancellor was entitled him to the office of assistant registrar on a vacancy occurring. To on since his claim, he instituted proceedings in the Court of Queen's Bench, under a writ of quo warranto, and the decision of that Court being in his favour, Mr. Singlen appealed from it, and brought a writ of error. The case was fully argued some days since, and the ju gs day was appointed for giving judgment. All the Judges attended except the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas and Mr. Justice Moore. Each of the Lordships gave judgment stating at length their reasons for the decision at which they arrived. The result was, that Mr Justice Jackson, Baron Lefroy, Mr Justice Bell Baron Richards, Mr. Justice Perrin, Mr. Justice Torrens, the Chief Baron, Baron Pennefather and the Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench, decided that the right to make the appointment was in the Lord Chancellor. Mr. Justice Crampton alone was of opinion that Mr. Kelly was entitled to the office.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

ROYAL SOCIETY.—On Thursday (St Andrew's Day), the anniversary meeting of the Royal Society was held, when the Earl of Rosse was elected President, in the room of the Marquis of Northampton, re-signed. The council were also elected for the ensuing year. For the offices of secretaries there was a contest; the numbers at the close being:—S. H. Christie, Esq., M.A., 218; Thomas Bell, 134; W. H. Green, Esq., M.A., 104; and Messrs. Christie and Bell were accordingly elected. In the evening, the customary dinner took place at the Freemasons' Tavern.

SCOTTISH HOSPITAL.—The 183rd festival of the Scottish Hospital (on St Andrew's Day) was celebrated at the London Tavern on Thursday, for the benefit of that society; the Right Hon Sir James Duke, M.P., Lord Mayor, in the chair. The usual loyal and local toasts were given and warmly responded to; especially a compliment paid to the Queen for her visit to Scotland, when all Europe was convulsed, and Sovereigns in danger. The Right Hon. chairman then went into a statement of the advantages, objects, and position of the Society, and his address was received with loud applause, whilst his advocacy produced contributions to a considerable amount. The gathering was principally of Scots and many of the members were clad in Scottish costume, and we think looked. The Campbells and the Douglas plaids were predominant. Several military and naval officers replied to the toasts—and "the Caledonian" made his accustomed speech in favour of the society.

ORPHAN WORKING SCHOOL.—On Wednesday a general court of the governors of this corporation was held, to receive the half-yearly report of the general committee on the state of the charity, to elect auditors for the year ensuing, and to elect by ballot 25 children (18 boys and 7 girls) into the school. The report of the general committee, which was read and adopted, stated that the affairs of incorporation the charity had passed the examination of the House of Lords without alteration, and had received the Royal assent; that the boys and girls are efficient state, and contain now 102 boys and 63 girls, and, with the 25 to be elected this day, the numbers will stand thus 120 boys and 70 girls; total, 190; and good health generally prevails in the schools, and not one death has occurred amongst the children during the year. The six orphan children from the Hartshorne were kept in the schools for six months without any charge to the refugee committee. They have now left the institution, having been placed by that committee under their former schoolmaster. As the report stated, the receipts of 1847, the sum of £16,000 has been passed to the treasurer, besides which numerous donations and annual subscriptions have been paid into the charity. The sum realised at the dinner held under the presidency of Lord Robert Grosvenor, M.P., was £746 13s. 6d. As showing the increased value of property belonging to the charity, it was stated that in 1841, the number of tenements was only 21; now they are 100. There was admitted during that year 61 new children; during the present year fifty will have been admitted, and the same number were absorbed last year. To meet the greatly increasing expenditure, a large addition must be made to the annual contributions to the charity, or the building at Haverstock-hill cannot be fully secured to the objects of its establishment. The report was received, and thanks to the treasurer, auditors, and committee were voted, and a ballot for the election of the children took place, when the following were declared duly elected, and the ballot-papers destroyed in the usual manner:—Boys: Thomas Bell Bowden, Thomas Bowden, Charles Bowden, Thomas Bowden, Edward columns in the Regent's Quadrant). The balustrade beneath the figures is also bronzed. We should here remark, that the great number of bronze capitals, busts, figures, and other ornamental details which are not gilt, is too heavy in effect, and not likely to accord with the rest of this remarkable building.

THE NEW CATHEDRAL OF SAINT ISAAC, AT ST. PETERSBURG.

The dome, which has a very beautiful outline, of very high merit, is, internally, avowedly constructed on the principal of that of St. Paul's; but instead of timber brick, and stone, the Russian dome is of iron, filled in with vases like our garden-pots, which the architect deemed the [illegible] mode of obtaining the junction of strength with lightness. Externally, [illegible]vered with bronze, divided by twenty-four bold ribs, and gilt in three thicknesses of leaves of sterling gold. This operation was entrusted to the supervision of three of the principal gilders of St. Petersburgh, who rejected every leaf that showed any, however slight, defect on being tested. The gilders worked in glass masks, with air-tubes like an elephant's proboscis down to the knees, to avoid the effects of the mercurial amalgam; the electro process not having been then discovered. Deprived of the easily imagined effect produced by the reflection of the sunlight, this cloud of pure gold relieves itself at twilight in simple majesty against the azure sky, but its greatest glory is at night, when a thousand sparkling lights are constellations surrounding the far-beaming emblem of our religion.

THE GREAT BELL.

In the construction of the dome, there were used, of copper 52¼ tons; of brass, 32½ tons; of wrought iron, 52½ tons; of cast iron, 1068 tons; and of ducat gold, 247 lbs. (i. e. £10,000).

The seven portals of the Church will be bronzed by the process already mentioned. Three of these doors are 30 feet high and 12 feet wide; four others are 17 feet high and 8 feet wide. They contain 50 bas-reliefs, 63 statues, and 64 alto-reliefs, of religious characters and subjects. The doors shut against a middle pilaster of vine-leaves and fruits.

The Church is placed with the altar at the east end; and the principal entrances are from the north and south, as above mentioned, a fault chargeable solely upon the ritual and the site.

Interiorly, the Cathedral is divided into a Greek cross, with the dome, as usual, at the centre, and four square chapels, each surmounted with a campanile at the angles. Amongst the more striking decorations are 40 bronze angels, each 14 feet high. The centre nave is 175 feet long, and 54 wide; the total length, 278 feet, the total width, 153 feet, ornamented at the east end by an iconostase, or altar-screen, 150 feet long and 76 feet high, of white marble, encrusted with porphyry, jasper, and other precious stones, and enriched with eight Corinthian columns, 42 feet high, of malachite. This screen, serving to shut off the sanctuary, is usually much adorned, and in this case the three screens will contain 223 works, by 38 different artists. The iconostasis, or image-bearer, stands on three steps of red porphyry; and the doors, into the chancel, 35 feet high and 14 feet wide, not very unlike that of the portico engraved, will be of silver.

The great bell is made of worn-out and recalled coin, weighs 1800 pouds, and in diameter is about 8 feet. The larger bells are all of a similar pattern as to form, though the embellishments differ. That (the largest) represented bears five ornaments, viz. Peter, Catherine II., Paul, Alexander, and Nicholas Altogether, there are eleven bells, weighing 4711½ pouds, equal to 162,860 lbs. They are all fixed, the clappers only moving.

The pictures throughout the Cathedral, at present, are only in oil; but it is intended to replace them with mosaics, after the same designs. They are in three tiers, painted on a gold ground, in most glowing colours, before which a profusion of massive silver lamps are pendent from the ceiling.

The dome is 69 feet diameter, 286 feet to the cupola of the lantern, and 332 feet to the top of the cross. The columns of the portico, 6 feet 6 inches diameter; 63 feet 6 inches high; and, with the entablature—14 feet 6 inches by 63 feet 6 inches—equal to 78 feet in height.

The extravagant use of the rich materials employed, the careful skill with which the architect has fulfilled his task, the excellent feeling for decorative art with which he has embellished this Cathedral of the Russian capital, and the brief space in which he has erected the lofty pile, must ever render the Church of St. Isaac one of the most striking edifices of the nineteenth century.

We are indebted for these details to the great work published by the Architect, who appears in the title-page as his object. * * * * I think the money value of Rembrandt's portraits may be taken as a criterion of their intrinsic worth as works of art—other masters decline in producing high prices, Rembrandt's increase—witness the portrait sold the other day at the Duke of Buckingham's, at Stowe;—it, with the half-length of Burgomaster Six a few years ever heard of, it realised 700 guineas and upwards. No nameless portrait by Reynolds, under the same disadvantage, would produce an equivalent sum.

Auguste Ricard de Montferrand, Conseiller d'Etat, Architecte en chef de cette Eglise, Officier de l'ordre Royal de la Legion d'Honneur, Chevalier des ordres de St Vladimir 3me classe, de St Anne en Brillants, 2d classe, de l'Aigle Rouge de Prusse; Membre de l'Academie Imperiale des Beaux Arts de St Petersbourg; de l'Institut Royal des Architectes Britanniques; de l'Academie Imperiale et Royale des Beaux Arts de Florence; de l'Academie Pontificale des Beaux Arts de St Luc; Membre Honoraire de l'Institut d'Afrique; Membre de la Societe de l'Histoire de France; Membre Correspondant de la Societe Libre d'Emulation de Rouen, &c.

THE BRONZED GATE.

AND RI TLY SOLD AT STOWE.

SUNDAY MORNING. THREAD THE NEEDLE. Drawn on Stone by John Absolon, and Lithographed by John Brandard. Published by Lloyd Brothers.

This is a pair of charming works, both as regards subject and artistic treatment. They are essentially domestic in character and, therefore, must, on this account will, doubtless become very popular. The original of the "Sunday Morning" was one of Mr. Absolon's contributions to the New Water-colour Painters' Exhibition of the present year. The scene is a country churchyard, in which are grouped villagers of almost every age and degree—from the squires, in their laced hats and silken hose, to the aged crone—

Poor, yet industrious, modest, quiet, neat.

The costume is that of the latter half of the last century, when three cornered hats, long and full-skirted coats, flowing wigs, and ruffles and cuffs, lent a picturesque grace to many a crowd of Strephons and Pennys. We imitate their quaint fashions in the present day, as a relief to cold French taste. Mr Absolon has turned the old coats to the best account, and his group of villagers is worth a score of pictures from London shops. There is abundance of incident in the churchyard, perhaps in excess, which gives it the character of portraits of "the Seven Ages of Man." A group of rustic children, playing upon an altar-tomb, form a capital centre; and their listlessness contrasts well with the prim calm of the better class, led by her father in the path to the church porch. However, we must not individualise the beauties of the composition, as the picture will, doubtless, be remembered.

The original of the companion lithograph, "Thread the Needle," likewise by Mr Absolon, has also been exhibited. It is a joyous picture of the old English pastime, played by some score of children of "a larger growth," in costume of artistic cut. The music is a spirited one by an old man, and a tabor by his shoeless son. The players are spirited and life-like, with here and there a spice of village country.

These lithographs are large in size (each 34 inches by 15). They have been very effectively executed by Brandard, and very nicely printed by Hahnart.

W. ASTELL, Esq. Painted by FREDERICK R. SAY. Engraved by G. R. WARD.

Mr. Say's finely characteristic portrait of Mr. Astell, who has frequently filled the chair of the Court of the East India Company, is here ably engraved by Mr. G. R. Ward, in mezzotinto. Mr. Astell is highly respected in our first commercial circle, as well as in the county of Huntingdon, where his patrons, seat is situate; and this portrait will prove acceptable to a large class of his admirers.

GEORGE HUDSON, Esq., M.P., of Newby Park and Londesbrough Park, Yorkshire. Painted by FRANCIS GRANT, A.R.A. Engraved by G. R. WARD.

This is a "first-class print," from Mr. Grant's whole-length portrait of the Railway Monarch, cleverly engraved by Mr. G. R. Ward. The presentment of a man whose sagacity has worked with great influence upon the public for weight, is here directed, this print is a treasurable record; as well as a memorial of very remarkable individual enterprise.

ELIZA COOK. Drawn on Stone by H. BRITTAN WILLIS, from a Painting by J. WATKINS.

The gifted poetess is seated upon the sea-shore, beneath a beetling cliff, with pencil in hand, as if to catch inspiration from her loved haunt. The likeness is good, and the expression verges upon melancholy musing. At her feet lies a favourite Newfoundland dog, looking fondly for the return of his mistress. The sea is billowy; and the dark clouds and hovering gull portend a storm. Beneath the picture is this descriptive epigraph from Miss Cook's poems:—

My Muse alone, her every hint owe more
Than wealth the wrapt worship that is shed on old;
Again I dream upon the lovely shore,
With spirit joy all worthless and untold;
And he beside me, gentle, brave, and true,
Ready to hound my fallies, love them too.

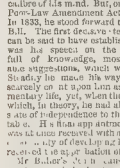
The celebrated pictures by John Martin, "Belshazzar's Feast," and "Joshua commanding the Sun to stand still," have recently been purchased of Mr. Colnaghi, by Mr. James Palmer, of Liverpool. Of the former picture, Mr. Collins, some years since, executed a copy on glass, as a fire-screen, for the late Duke of Northumberland.

SALE OF HAYDON'S WORKS.—On Thursday, a valuable collection of chalk drawings by the late unfortunate Haydon was disposed of by public auction at the rooms of Messrs. Robins, Covent-garden. The collection consisted chiefly of sketches from the ancient masters; unfinished sketches of heads of his Royal highness the late Duke of Sussex, the late Mr. Hume, M.P., Lord Lansdowne, Lord J. Russell, and other eminent individuals. It also comprised the celebrated "sleeping head," exhibited at the British Gallery in 1829, which is considered by the deceased to be one of the most valuable specimens of his art. There are unfinished gallery painting of Uriel and Satan, upon which the artist was engaged until a short time previous to his decease; a painting of Napoleon and hat, for the use of Sir Robert Peel; a finished sculptured marble bust of General Washington, and a large number of miscellaneous sketches. Several variæ were present. The bidding was tolerably brisk; and, considering that the drawings were in a very crude and incorrect state, for no other than students were extremely good. Five finished heads of Lord Melbourne, Lord Stanley, Earl Grey, Lord Althorp, and Sir F. Buxton, were sold for £2 7s. 6d. A head of Lord J. Russell here sold £2 10s.; and the "sleepin head" was sold for £5 5s. The original medal, presented by Sir David Wilkie to Haydon, were old at respectable prices; but many of the sketches realised very small sums. The whole of the proceeds will be devoted to the relief of the family of the lamented artist.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

THE DUCHESS OF MANCHESTER.

MILLICENT, Duchess of Manchester, whose death occurred last week at Kimbolton Castle, in Huntingdonshire, was only daughter and heiress of the late General Robert Bernard Sparrow, of Worlingham Hall, Suffolk, by the Lady Olivia, his wife, daughter of Arthur, first Earl of Gosford, and descended from some of the most ancient Suffolk families, the Barnards of Brampton Park, the Benolts of Henstead, &c.



Her Grace was born 25th January, 1758 and had, consequently, completed her [illegible] Somersetshire, 8th October, 1842, to [illegible] Viscount Mandeville (who died at [illegible] Belgrave Duke of Manchester), and had issue, William Drogo, Viscount Mandeville, a Captain in the Grenadier Guards, two other sons, and one daughter. The Duchess' mother, the excellent and venerable Lady Olivia Sparrow, of Brampton Park, still survives.

CHARLES BULLER, ESQ., M.P.

In his eminent member of the Lower House, who received death in the prime of life is as much to be deplored, was the son of Mr. Charles Buller, a younger son of Mr. Buller, of Crediton, Devonshire, by Mrs. Buller, son, distinguished himself in the civil services of the East India Company, of the family had great Parliamentary interest in Cornwall, as Mr. Charles Buller, sen., represented in Parliament, for many years, West Looe, a nomination borough, which was swept away by the Reform Bill.

Mr. Charles Buller, jun., the subject of this notice, was born in Calcutta in August, 1806. He received his first education at Eton. From thence he went to Trinity College, Cambridge, where, even among the youthful Liberals of his day, he was remarkable for the lengths to which he carried his theories of liberty.

Mr. Charles Buller became a barrister of Lincoln's-inn, but not till a year after he had been returned to Parliament. His maiden speech was made in 1833, on the Government's motion in the Currency. Mr. Buller was a steady opponent of the Corn-Laws long before those who have since given him office "took up" that question. He was against property qualification for members; in favour of triennial Parliaments; in favour of removing the Bishops from the House of Lords; and on almost every question of that cause he was always ready to support the Radicals, even down to questions which were almost beneath the cadres of his rank. But, on the other hand, he was always a steady supporter of the Poor-Law Amendment Act, and voted and spoke in favour of National Education. In 1833, he stood forward to move an adverse amendment to the Irish Coercion Bill. The first decisive step he made, on his own account in Parliament, which can be said to have established him in the high opinion of his contemporaries, was his speech on the Public Records—a laudinous and brilliant effort, full of knowledge, most lucidly conveyed, and prompted with valuable suggestions, which were afterwards adopted more or less in legislation. Steadily he made his way with the House; and, although the Whigs could scarcely or at all look on him as a supporter during the progress of the parliamentary life, yet, when their party had approximated somewhat nearer to that which, in theory, he had always advocated, the transition on his part from a state of independence to the acceptance of office was almost natural and inevitable. His first appointment to the office of President of the Poor-Law Board was hailed received with approbation by the public; and, so far as he had the opportunity of developing his aptitude for the discharge of its functions, he has received that approbation of the public.

Mr. Buller's death came on by typhus fever supervening upon surgical treatment, consequent upon his having received a wound in the pubis.

A portrait of Mr. Buller, and a memoir of his public life, appeared in our Journal for December 24, 1842.

THE REV. THOMAS PRICE

THE reverend and learned gentleman died lately, in the sixtieth year of his age, at Llandaff, near Cardiff, of which parish he was vicar. To his diligent researches in Welch history, students are much indebted. He won a prize at the late Abergavenny Cymreigddion, by a work called "Statuta Wallia; or the Statutes of Rhuddlan, by which Wales was annexed to England."

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS

"Mus Doe."—Address to Horse Kling, Professor of Music, Corn-exster place, Petersquare, London.

"Sixth Duo."—You forgot that Black, in No. 388, may Castle, and thus delay the Mate.

"A Constant Reader."—The Queen stands on the square of her own colour.

"Arden."—See the notice above, to "Sixth Duo."

"G. S. J."—In reference to the Indian Problem, see the notes to "W." Your position No 2 is not correct. No 1 is ingenious. No. 3 and 10 are too easy. No 9 is given only wrong, the White King being in check of Black's Q B Pawn. Enigma No 387 is solved as follows:—White: 1. Kt checks. 2. Kt to Q 8th (dis ch) 3. Q to Q B 4th (ch). A. Kt checks perpetually

"F. G."—The games played by Mr. Horrwitz, "thoughtful," at Brighton, were in type last week, but we were compelled to postpone them from want of room

"Joseph" is warmly thanked for the compliment conveyed in his present effusion on the antiquity of Chess. In reply to his queries, he is informed: 1st A player may Castle checking the adverse King on the rook. 2nd. The whole of the moves in the match by correspondence were given in our last Number. 3rd. The "examined" attached to the two references both to one's own and the adversary's games

"M."—Cape of Good Hope.—Very clever. It should have appeared last week, but that a trifling alteration in the arrangement of the men was indispensable, to prevent a double solution.

"W. L."—Your last version never came to hand. It was probably written, like your former Problems, on a small slip of paper, which, amidst the mass of correspondence, got mislaid.

"C. E. R." Oxford.—Accept our best thanks for the diagrams, which, with the point you call attention to in Mr. Waller's valuable analyses, shall be examined

"S. M."—We will examine the variation you suggest. The mouse given are of much earlier date than the works named.

"W." Mandeville.—We should be happy to give you the moves, but are too much pressed for space. Why can you not get a copy of the magazine in which it appears?

"Carlo Folcaro."—Returning a piece to the square from whence you took it is no move. Having touched it, you must play it elsewhere.

"E. W. C."—Next week, or in the Number following. In the meantime be good enough to re-enter it anon with care

"B. M. P."—Quite correct.

"Nora"—We think Kingsmith can take the Pure under such circumstances

"G. A. H."—You are right, both with regard to the Knights and Match games

"American."—Jones, perhaps, could not do clever as the first. Have they been printed?

"W. L." Jun.—It shall appear

"S."—The advantage of sacrificing the Pawn in the Evans Gambit is, that it takes the adverse Bishop from the diagonal of your K B P, as well as opens a field of attack for your Queen. See the "Chess Player's Handbook."

"New Yorker."—"Mate" is merely an abbreviation of the word "Checkmate;" between which and Stalemate, to which condition you have reduced the game, there is all the difference of a won or a drawn battle. See our Solution.

"Edwin."—You have signally failed in No. 255, and are as much in error respecting the preceding Problem.

"Αστερίσκος."—We are quite sure you are mistaken in your assertion regarding our Problems; with those of other periodicals we have nothing to do.

"B. M." York.—Quite correct.

"Nora"—We think Kingsmith can take the Pure under such circumstances

"G. A. H."—You are right, both with regard to the Knights and Match games

"American."—Jones, perhaps, could not do clever as the first. Have they been printed?

"W. L." Jun.—It shall appear

"S."—The advantage of sacrificing the Pawn in the Evans Gambit is, that it takes the adverse Bishop from the diagonal of your K B P, as well as opens a field of attack for your Queen. See the "Chess Player's Handbook."

"New Yorker."—"Mate" is merely an abbreviation of the word "Checkmate;" between which and Stalemate, to which condition you have reduced the game, there is all the difference of a won or a drawn battle. See our Solution.

"Edwin."—You have signally failed in No. 255, and are as much in error respecting the preceding Problem.

"Αστερίσκος."—We are quite sure you are mistaken in your assertion regarding our Problems; with those of other periodicals we have nothing to do.

"B. M." York.—Quite correct.

"M. C."—We shall be glad to see the Problem in question

"Dr. C."—Cape of Good Hope.—The notation you have adopted we will endeavour to decipher; but you should describe the positions on diagrams, and then the solutions shall be given immediately.

"Mona."—It strikes us as an easy mate in two moves. White can play his Kt to Q 3d, and then mate with the Q at K B 4th. Is it not so?

"Enhanmar," St. Petersburgh, is thanked for the trouble he has taken respecting M. Petroff's work. The solutions asked for are, of No. 247:—1. R to Q B 2d. 2. R mates. Of No. 284: 1. Kt to Q 4th (ch) 2. P to Kt 7th; 3 P to Kt 8th, becoming a Q, mates.

"Theta."—The Problem in question was by Mr. J. R. Edney; the pieces disposed as follows: White: King at his 2d; Kt at Q sq; Kt at K B 3d. Black: King at his 4th. White to play and mate in four moves Solutions by "H. U." "Schachspieler," "F. G. R." "Carlo Folcaro," "W. J.," "H. W." "Gordon P." "R. J. C." "A Member of the Belfast Chess-Club," "St. I." "Rev. A. C. H." "P. C." "W. H. W." "G. S. P." "G. M." "T. A. H." "Ohio," "W. L." "Beta," St. Neot's; "Joseph," and "Woodstockensis." "Sixth Duo." "W. J. P." "Kenna," "J. T." Blackburn; "E. H." "Mona." "M. C." "H. W." are correct. Those by "M. E. R.," "H. C. C." "C. H.," High-street, are all wrong.

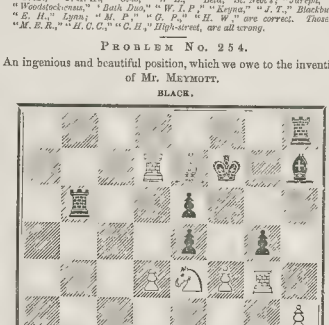
PROBLEM No. 254.

An ingenious and beautiful position, which we owe to the invention of Mr. MEYMOTT.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White, playing first, to mate in four moves.

MATCH BY CORRESPONDENCE

BETWEEN THE CHESS CLUBS OF LONDON AND AMSTERDAM.

WHITE (Amsterdam).	BLACK (London).
	20 Q B to Q Kt 4th

Amsterdam to play.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 252.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1 B to Q Kt 8th	R P moves B, or	3. K to Kt 6 P	P to Kt 6th
2. B to K Kt 5th (ch)	K takes B	4. Kt mates.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
a 1.	K to his 2d	3. Kt to Q 6th	K to Q B sq
2 R takes Q B P	K to Q sq (c)	4. R to K R 8th -Mate.
WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
(a) 2	K to K 3d sq	4. Mates.
3 R to R 8th (ch)	K to K 2d

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM No. 253.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. B to Q B 4th (ch)	K to his 4th	3 K to his 6th	K takes Kt
2. Kt to K B 2d	K to Q 6th	4. B to Q B 8th -Mate

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 392.—By A. AMBLER.

White: K at his 2d, Q at his 5th, B at Q Kt 2d; Kts at K R 7th and K at 6th; Ps at K Kt 3d, K 3d, and Q B 4th.

Black: K at K B 4th, Rs at Q B sq and Q R 5th, Bs at K R 3d and Q B sq, Kt at K 8th, P at K 3d.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

No. 393 By an AMATEUR.

White: K at his B 2d, Q at Q Kt 4th. B at K R 5th, Kt at K B 3d; Ps at K B 3d, K R 2d, 4th and 5th.

Black: K at his Q Kt 8th, Q at Q R 3d, Kt at Q Kt 4th; Ps at K R 3d, K Kt 3d, K 3d, Q 3d and 4th.

White to play, and mate in three moves

No. 394 By W. H. C.

White. K at his R 4th, R at Q 8th, B at Q 5th; Ps at K Kt 5th, K B 6th, and K 2d.

Black: K at his R 2d, R at K R sq, B at K Kt sq; Ps at K Kt 3d, K B 2d, and K 4th.

White to play, and mate in five moves.

MUSIC.

FOREIGN MUSICAL NEWS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, Wednesday Night.

On the day that the two marvels arrived of the Pope's patiable plight, and of the orders given by the French Government for troops to depart for Civita Vecchia, there was a great calm—robe for Italy in Paris, before the closing of the Théâtre des Italiens. Yes, the famed Italian Opera at the French capital, in less than three months from the opening of the season, has closed its doors, and some hundreds of families are deprived of bread; for, although the principal sin are were the sins, the band, chorus, and, and numerous employés were French. The reign of "Liberté, Egalité, and Fraternité" has been fata to the locality where once Pelham must old congregate. I arrived in time to be in at the death—to be present at the last representation. Alas! how altered the aspect of that once brilliant theatre—the Salle Ventadour. What a change in the toilettes of the company! what old persons were seen in the best places of the house! The magnificent dresses of the ladies, with their display of costly jewellery and ornaments, were no longer visible, everything looked dull, dingy, and dreary.

Such opera was Donizetti's "Maria di Rohan," and, as late decreed, two débutantes appeared for the first time, and for the last, unless M. Dufaure (the Ministre) will have pity, and grant a sum of money to keep the theatre open, at least for this season. It was Madame Bernard who was the Maria a part which she sang at the Royal Italian Opera. Her talents are only adapted for the concert-room. She owed a great deal to the reception to the genius of her husband, who, in Chevreuse, quite electrified the audience by his wonderfully impassioned acting and singing. His last scene has, to my mind, never been equalled, except by Tedder Kean in the third act of "Othello." Ronconi was overwhelming in the display of terrible jealousy, and despair. The tenor Bordas, in the lover, was not wanting in energy, but his voice is not first-rate, and his style is defective. The new contralto, Mdlle. Merle, is a charming singer. She played Alberoni's part at Covent. It was her first appearance on any stage, and a more triumphant one has rarely been witnessed. She is about twenty, and handsome, with an easy and graceful deportment. Her voice is of extensive compass, combining the richness of the mezzo soprano and contralto, rich and round in volume, sweet and sympathetic in quality. Her method is good, but where nature has been so bountiful, art will soon follow to give the finish and polish to the style. I shall hear some since I have met with such a promising débût.

On the horrors perpetrated by band and chorus I shall not dwell: the "rotten state of Denmark" was unmistakable; and the thorough independence of the troupe proved that the calls on the treasury had effected a revolution in its spines. The performances were to end on Saturday. On Monday M. Dupuis, the lessee, issued his decree to close. The artistes are trying to have another director, in order to open again; and as it is an axiom, that there are always speculators to be found and encouraged to start a newspaper, or to open a theatre, perhaps the shutting of the Royal some doors may not be final. But people are sun ratifious; and the fall of the Pope simultaneously with the fall of the Italian Opera here, is looked upon as ominous. Lablache, who has been travelling night and day from his villa, near Naples, to commence his duties here, only arrived the day after the Italians had closed. The company that is to open at the Salle Ventadour is Mdlle. Castellan, Mdme. Roncoui, Mdle. Rosio, Mdlle. Clara, Mdlle Sara (Miss Houson), Mdme. Bellini, Bordas, Sulli, Morelli, Arnoldi, Ronconi, and Lablache. Grisi is in Paris, but will not sing again until her engagement begins in London, next April. Mario is in his native country Sardinia.

Everything that has been published in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS of the extraordinary success of Halévy's new opera, the "Val d'Andorre," is quite accurate. I witnessed this work last night. It is a chef d'œuvre. The House was crowded to excess, and so on every representation. The drama, by M. St. Georges, is deeply interesting; it is a kind of "Ma d and the Magicle" romance. The setting and singing of Mdlle. Darcier, the heroine, are beyond all praise; and she is finely supported by a basso, M. Bataille. The other singers—Mdme. Lavoye, Mdlle. Revilly, M. Audran, and M. Jourdan—are good, but not great, but fall in the perfection of the ensemble of that is found the beauty of this opera. Halévy's music is delicious, full of quaint and elegant melodies, scored with consummate skill, and, in the concerted pieces, rising, at times, sublimely in energy, and always in keeping with every sense—pictorial, dramatic, and musical. If I am asked whether the "Valley of Andorra" would please an English public, I should refer to the execution of Auber's "Haydée."

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

Mr. T. Whitty, second-class tide surveyor of the Customs at Portsmouth, who risked his own life to save that of a fellow-creature in the gale which occurred on the last occasion of the return of the Court from Osborne to London, has, by her Majesty's command, been promoted to be chief tide surveyor of the port of Gloucester.

Lady Hall, of Llanover, has purchased a piece of land, contiguous to the town of Llandovery, which she has presented for a site for the necessary buildings for the Welsh Educational Institution, which Thomas Phillips, Esq., has so munificently founded for the education of the rising generation in Wales. Lady Hall is also one of the trustees of the institution, and is unceasingly in promoting the objects for which it is established.

J. Gregory, Esq., who has been twenty-seven years in colonial employments, is appointed Governor of the Bahamas, in succession to Captain Matthew. Dr. R. E. Brown is appointed colonial secretary for the Gold Coast.

An investigation is about to be made by the Treasury, with the assistance of G. J. Pennington, Esq., Auditor of Civil Service, into the distribution of the moneys voted by Parliament for Polish refugees.

On Saturday last, Henry Rankeu and Robert Hamilton, the Edinburgh Chartists, recently found guilty of using language "calculated" to excite popular disaffection, were (the objections taken by their counsel having been overruled) respectively sentenced to be imprisoned for four calendar months.

Sir George Grey is about to institute a searching inquiry into the expenditure of the prisons under Government control, and of the convict department generally.

An inquiry is ordered into the income, expenditure, &c., of the Ordnance Department, to be conducted by Lord Hardinge, Sir Willoughby Gordon, Sir Randolphe Routh, and W. Booth, Esq., of the Ordnance. There is also to be an unpaid committee, as well as the Committee of Inquiry into the Customs Department, which is at present sitting at the Custom-house, for greater facilities of access to documents, witnesses, &c.

Lancaster has been reduced, by order of the Board of Customs, to a fifth-class port, by which reduction a saving in salaries of the officers to the amount of £250 a year will be effected.

The advices from Holland announce officially that the Prussian Government intends to grant the same privileges to Dutch manufactured goods as to those of England and Belgium enumerated in the decree of the 8th of September last.

The office of Governor of the Salford New Bailey Prison, at £350 per annum, was on Monday given by the magistrates to Captain T. H. Mitchell, of the 60th Rifles. Unattached. There were 78 candidates, but Captain Mitchell was supported by 50 magistrates out of 58 present.

The Rompers steam-frigate, arrived on Monday at Spithead from South America, had a freight of 2,000,000 dollars on board.

A new street is soon to be made in the metropolis, commencing at the east end of Oxford-street, where it is joined by the Tottenham-court-road, and terminating at the east end of Hemming's-row, near St. Martin's Church. Another new street and road is also about to be made, from the north side of the East India Dock-road, at Limehouse, in a new and direct line to York-place, in the Mile-end-road, by which the approaches to the Victoria-park will be opened from Limehouse, Bethnal green, and Cambridge-heath turnpike.

Mr. Black, the late Lord Provost of Edinburgh, recently received intimation through Lord John Russell, of her Majesty's intention to confer on him the honour of knighthood. Mr. Black has, however, seen fit to decline the title.

It appears from the report of the Church School Inquiry, that the total expense of maintaining Church schools in England (exclusive of Wales, and inclusive of the Isle of Man) stands in 1,938—Amount returned, £487,203 14s.; probable amount not returned, £315,157 3s.: total expense of maintaining schools, £802,460 16s.

The French Minister has called upon all Frenchmen who are resident at Southampton to give in their names, in order that they may take part, by means of balloting papers, in the election of a President for the French Republic.

Sprats have been selling in the West of England, during the past week, at 1s. per bushel.

The family of Kossuth are about to take up their residence in Hamburgh. The Hungarian dictator appears anxious to secure them against all the eventualities of war.

A gold medal, of the intrinsic worth of about £20, which is thought to have been deposited at the time of the conflict between the Romans and the sons of the British King, Cunobelin, was lately found by a plough-man on the estate of R. Fox, near Wendover, Bucks, and is to be presented to the British Museum.

The Right Hon. Lord Leigh has fowarded to the Leamington Literary and Scientific Institution a splendid copy of "Alison's History of Europe." The value of the work is seven guineas, and the gift is enhanced by the fact that it was entirely unsolicited.

On Saturday afternoon last, at a meeting held in the temporary schoolchurch in Paul, Camden-town, for obtaining sufficient funds to complete the permanent church in Camden-square, amongst the subscriptions announced were £200 from the Queen Dowager, £100 from Lady Wilde, and £50 from Lord Ashburton and Sir Robert Peel. It is Mr. Dale's (the Vicar) intention to erect ten new churches in St. Pancras parish.

On Wednesday last, Lord Hardinge, accompanied by his son (who served on the plains of Sobraon in India) and the Prussian Consul, arrived at Dover, and presented to the regiment, at the Western Heights Barracks, the valuable gold cup, the gift of his Royal Highness Prince Waldemar of Prussia.

During Saturday forenoon, eight two fires were discovered simultaneously in the upper part of the house No. 8, Eastcheap. They were easily extinguished; but it appeared evident that they were the work of an incendiary; and the usual payment was awarded on suspicion in the course of the day, and locked up in Garlick hill station-house.

Commander Alexander Boyle, who was dismissed the naval service by sentence of a court-martial for the loss of the Thunderbolt, steam sloop, at the Cape of Good Hope, has been reinstated in his former rank in the navy, much to the satisfaction of every one acquainted with the proceedings under which he was sentenced. The master, also, of this vessel has likewise been restored to the navy.

The Admiralty have ordered Mr. Fincham, master shipwright of Portsmouth Dockyard, to call to his assistance the head master of the Central Apprentice School, at Portsmouth, and to carry out a course of experiments relative to the rolling motion of ships, with the view to its modification, if practicable.

At a meeting of the directors of the British Institution now in town, held at their rooms in Pall-mall, to take into consideration the expediency of providing for the duties of the deceased keeper, Mr. Barnard, a decision was come to, to the effect that the duties of keeper should be combined with those of secretary, in the person of the present secretary Mr. G. Nicol, and that a recommendation to that effect should be made to the next meeting of the directors for general purposes.

At the late Worcestershire Quarter Sessions, Mrs. Ellen Leighton, a respectable married woman, was found guilty of stealing at umbrella, the property of Mr. Thomas Cox, mercer, of Great Malvern. The chairman, feeling that her case was more than ordinary one who committed crime under the pressure of want, with the unanimous concurrence of the court, sentenced her to seven years' transportation.

Accounts just received from New Zealand state that on the morning of the 25th of August last, a tre broke out at Auckland, in the north wing of the Government House while the inmates were buried in sleep, and that the Governor carried Mrs Grey from the burning pile, when she was conveyed to the residence of General Pitt. The domestics escaped narrowly, and nothing was saved except a little household furniture. The plate, books, &c., and all else was consumed. The cost of the building was £16,000.

The murder of Lieutenant Snow and family, which occurred some months past in New Zealand, has been partly brought to light; but, instead of that inhuman deed having been committed by the natives, as was supposed, it was done by Europeans, and a wretch named Burns has been tried and hanged for his participation in the crime.

The cholera has again become active in Holland. On the 23rd ult., there received at Rotterdam 19 new cases; deaths, 9; recoveries, 18. Total number of cases since the appearance disease, 805; deaths, 421; recoveries, 44 ; under treatment, 134.

On account of the execution of Robert Blum, the people of Trieste have resolved not to return a deputy to the Frankfort National Assembly, until they learn what steps have been taken by that body to procure redress.

The Lords of the Treasury have requested the low the office of crier in the Court of Exchequer, vacant by the promotion of Mr. Reilly, as well as that of clerk of the crown in the Court of Queen's Bench, vacant by the death of Mr. Bourne (both in Ireland), to be filled up. Government have decided on the adoption of this course in order to carry out a system of retrenchment in the public expenditure.

The Oswestry Extension Branch Railway of the Shrewsbury and Chester line, which connects the mineral regions of Montgomeryshire, Wrexham, and Newton with the main line and the manufacturing districts, is ready for traffic.

The Lords of the Treasury have resolved to allow the potato, and its consequential results, is estimated at £43,000,0 0

The German papers announce the death of Mr. Joseph Mendelssohn, the well-known banker of Berlin, in the 57th year. He was the oldest son of the celebrated philosopher, Moses Mendelssohn, and was greatly esteemed.

Upwards of fifty clerks, connected with the Irish Board of Works, were dismissed on Saturday last.

It is said that Mr. Maurice O'Connell, M.P., has been served with a capias on account of some of the liabilities of Conciliation Hall.

The Arkwick Extension Railway, which has just been opened, unites the Lancashire and Yorkshire on the north with the London and North-western and Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railways on the south. It has been constructed purely for the accommodation of the immense merchandise traffic of these districts. The constructive cost has been £120,000.

The London Police Commissioners have issued an order than no officer shall enter a public-house, when off duty, in the purlieu of any court at which he may have a prisoner in custody.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS FOR THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The books for the transfer of Consols, New Five per Cents Annuities for terms of years, South Sea Stock, and Three per Cents (1726), will close at the Bank of England on the 13th of this month, re opening on the 16th of January, 1849.

There does not appear to have been any increased demand for money last week, except in the Stock Market, where it is, and in some instances 2 per cent., have been obtainable for short loans

Although on Monday transactions were nearly limited to speculative movements, Consols do not maintain the highest quotations of the week—commencing the opening price of 87 ⅞. But on Tuesday there was a considerable improvement in the market; and an upward movement, that improved the price to 87 ¾ ⅞. This quotation was maintained until the arrival of the news that a French intervention in favour of the Pope had been decided on, and troops ordered to Civita Vecchia. Prices immediately fell to 87½; and on Wednesday, although the opening quotation was again 87½, it gradually receded 1 per cent, closing at 87½ to ⅝. On Thursday Consols opened at a slight advance, quoting 87⅝, but afterwards re-sded to 87½, again improving to 87⅝. The unfunded debt has not materially altered. New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents and Reduced are still below their relative value. Bank stock has not been highly dealt in. The books for transfer of Bank Stock close on the 5th December. The market closes with tolerable firmness at the following prices:—Reduced, 88½; Consols, 87⅛; New 3¼ per cent. Annuities, 86⅞; Long Annuities to expire March, 1860, 8⅛; Bonus, 3⅛; Exchequer Bills, January, 1849, 5s. 8 13-16 p.; South Sea Stock, 95½; Ditto, Old Annuities, 84⅛; Consols for Account, 87⅛; Exchequer Bills, £10.00. March, 45 p.; Ditto, £1000, June, 42 p.; Ditto, £500, March, 45 p.; Ditto, £500, June, 39 p.; Ditto, Small, March, 45 p.; Ditto, Small, June, 42 p.

There has been rather more examination in the Foreign Market during the week, although no great improvement has taken place in prices. The principal business has been in Portuguese, Mexican, and Spanish. Mexican on Tuesday advanced to 21¼, but Spanish Five per Cents receded to 14⅜. The Three per Cents, on the contrary, advanced to 20¾. Portugue e has been steady at 24¾ to ⅞. Thursday was settling day, but the account was but small, and no difficulty presented itself in its arrangement. Prices were the same as on the previous day, viz.:—Buenos Ayres Brazilian Bonds, 72¾; Equador Bonds, 2⅞; Mexican Five per Cent., 1846, 21¼; Portuguese Four per Cent., 24¾; Spanish Five per Cent., 1840, 14⅛; Ditto, Three per Cent, 20⅝; Ditto, Account, 24½; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cent., 52 Buhl., 47¼; Ditto, Account, 47¼

Railway Stock continues tolerably quiet, the general tendency being rather towards improvement than the contrary. The projected amalgamations between the three great companies appears likely to end in nothing, but as the meetings advertised by the directors of the several companies, will be held for other purposes, an expression of the sentiments of shareholders, views may be probably elicited. At the close of the week, the market was firm at the following prices:

Aberdeen, 19¾; Birmingham, Wolverhampton, and Dudley, calls duly paid, or to be paid, 3; Buckinghamshire, 8¾; Caledonian, 9¾; Chester and Holyhead, 15; Chester and Holyhead, 19; East Anglian, £2, 5, 1, and [illegible] D., 4¾; Eastern Counties, 11¼; Ditto, New, Guaranteed Six per Cent., 11; [illegible] Lincoln, 24½; Lancaster, at 6 Gregg, 26½; Lancashire and Yorkshire, Thirds (Keighley to London and North-western, 117¾; Ditto. New, 7¼; Ditto, £10 (M and D) A, 10¾; Ditto, £10 (M and B) C, 2⅝; London and South-Western, 38; Ditto, New, £50, 37½; Midland, 77; Ditto, Consolidated, £50 Shares, 9½; Ditto, Consolidated, Bristol and Birmingham, 6 per Cent., 117; North British, 14¾; Ditto, Halves, 6; Ditto, Quarters, 3; North Staffordshire, 8¾; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 2½; Reading, Guildford, and Reigate, 9½; Scottish Central, 20½; South Eastern, 22½; Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth, 24½; [illegible] and Berwick, 25½; Ditto, Extension, No. 2, 11½; Ditto, [illegible] York and North-Midland, 48; Boulogne and Amiens, [illegible]

SATURDAY MORNING.—The market was tranquil yesterday at a slight advance upon the previous day's prices. Consols ranged between 87⅝ and ⅞, closing at 87⅝ ⅞ for Money and Account. In Shares and Foreign Stocks no change of importance occurred.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—During the present week the arrivals of English wheat fair average, amounted to only 900 quarters. Per last week 2,000 quarters. The trade have been trifling. Although the show of samples to-day was very small the demand for all descriptions was heavy, and, to effect sales, prices must have been submitted to. The same factors in most instances prices were nominal. The imports of foreign wheat have rather exceeded 14,000 quarters. Most qualities were offered on a reduced scale per quarter without finding to any business worthy of notice. Very little barley was on offer. Malting parcels met a dull trade, but the quotations were fully supported. Malt continues to move in a retail demand, with only a small quantity on offer. In prices we have no change to notice. The oat trade was in a very depressed state at late currences. Beans, peas, and tares continue nominal.

ARRIVALS.—English: Wheat, 270 qrs.; barley, 1790 ; oats, 250 ; beans, 3410 quarters. Foreign: wheat, 3,050 barley, 3280; oats, 4320. Flour, 4,000 sacks; meal, 3460 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 40s to 54s; ditto, waste, 40s to 50s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 40s to 50s; ditto, white, 50s to 57s; Rye, 30s to 32s; Grinding barley, 20s to 26s; Malting ditto 32s to 34s; malting ditto, 34s to 35s, Norfolk and Lincoln malt, 58s to 60s; brown ditto, 46s to 54s; Kingston and Ware, 60s to 64s; Chevalier, 64s to 66s; Peas, grey and [illegible] boiling ditto, 37s to 39s; potato ditto 34s to 37s; Youghal and Cork, black, 34s to 36s; ditto, white, 37s to 39s; Waterford, 34s to 36s; Dublin, 34s to 36s; Limerick, 36s to 38s; maple, 36s to 38s; white, 34s to 37s; beans, 38s to 41s per quarter. Town-made flour, 46s to 48s. Suffolk, 38s to 39s. Stockton and Yorkshire, 37s to 38s per sack.

Foreign. Danzig red wheat, —s to —s, white, —s to —s; barley, —s to —s; oats, —s to —s; rye, —s to —s; beans, —s to —s; peas, —s to —s per quarter. Flour, 24s to 26s per barrel.

The Seed Market.—Our market still continues in a very depressed state, and prices are almost nominal

Linseed, English, sowing, 56s to 60s; Baltic, crushing, 42s to 46s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 42s to 46s; hempseed, 40s to 42s per quarter. Coriander, 18s to 20s per cwt.; brown mustard-seed, 8s to 12s; white ditto, 8s to 11s 6d.; tares, 7s 6d to 10s 6s. per bushel.; English rapeseed, 24l to 25l per last; foreign ditto, 23l to 24l per last. Canary, 56s to 60s per quarter. Hempseed, 40s to 42s per quarter. Carraway seed, 24s to 25s per cwt.; canary, 50s to 52s per quarter. English clover seed, red, —s to —s; white, —s to —s; trefoil, —s to —s; extra, up to —s. Foreign, red, —s to —s; white, —s to —s; extra —s to —s per cwt.

Bread, &c.—Wheaten bread continues in the metropolis, at 6½d. to 7d. per 4lb. loaf; household ditto, 5½d to 6d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 51s 6d; barley, 33s 3d; oats, 20s 8d; rye, 30s 10d; beans, 35s 10d; peas, 40s 6d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 5s 8d; barley, 2s 0d; oats, 1s 6d; rye, 5s 0d; beans, 2s 0d; peas, 2s 0d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 5s 8d; barley, 2s 0d; oats, 1s 6d; rye, 5s 0d; beans, 2s 0d; peas, 4s 0d

SMITHFIELD (Monday).—Per sack of provisions more off slowly, at late rates

HOPS.—For 5 cwt. lots of whatever the demand is it is a sluggish state, at a slight reduction in the quotations. P U C on the spot, is selling at 40s; and for forward delivery, 45s to per cwt. Town sell-ew, 45s 6d per cwt. net cash.

Oils.—Very little business doing to this market, yet last week's quotations are fairly supported.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, 42 2s to 43 3s.; clover ditto, 53 10s to 54 15s., and straw 21 2s to 21 10s per load

Vegetables.—There is no reader to request at very fa [illegible] ,s to 32 per cwt. ever good, et 1 6d to 2s 1d; and 3s 3d to 3s 6d per doz. Red beets, 1s 6d to 2s per cwt. Red cabbages, 1s to 1s 6d to 4d per doz. Carrots, 1s 6d to 2s per cwt.

Hops (Friday).—The finest new M. at hops are in steady request, at, in some instances, a slight advance on the quotations of the previous day. Mid qualities are dull sale, and inferior sorts heavy sale. Fine and hops are a mo [illegible] ng, and sellers quote 5l to 6l per cwt. Fine middling ditto, 2s 6d to 2s 10d; prime ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 6d; prime small ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 6d; large pets, 2s 6d to 4s 6d; inferior ditto, 2s 0d to 2s 6d; middling ditto, 2s 6d to 3s 6d; prime ditto, 3s 10d to 4l; very fine ditto, 4l to 4l 5s; small pets, 4s 6s to 5s 6d. HOPT HERBERT.

POST-OFFICE LONDON DIRECTORY, 1849. We have received a copy of this work, though only in time to commend in general terms its completeness, which, it seems, has been the growth of half a century. During this period, the list of names has increased, from twenty thousand, five hundred, to the present volume contains, at the same prices, double the quantity of more letter-press nerly contained in its rival. We congratulate the proprietor on his success. His success is but the just reward of unwearied painstaking to insure [illegible] tem ter-ss and accuracy.

ESTABLISHMENT OF THE ROMAN CATHOLIC PRIESTHOOD. A large meeting of [illegible] of every class and hymn. was held in Glasgow, on Tuesday, for the purpose of opposing the proposed establishment of the Roman Catholic priest hood, and also in opposition to existing establishments of every description. Mr. [illegible] M.P. for the city, was called to the chair. Numerous resolutions proposed by the Rev. Drs. Eadie, Wardlaw, Taylor, And. Dun, and other gentlemen, in lengthe ed speeches. Resolutions were unanimously passed against establishments of every kind, but especially against the proposed establishment of the Roman Catholic priests in England. It was resolved that a memorial, founded on these resolutions, should be transmitted to Government.

COUNTRY NEWS.

MURDER OF THE RECORDER OF NORWICH AND HIS SON.

I. Jermy, Esq. Recorder of Norwich, and his son, Mr. J. J. Jermy, were both murdered on Tuesday evening. As the elder Mr. Jermy was standing in the garden, outside the hall-door of his residence, Stanfield-Hall, near Wymondham, at about half-past eight o'clock, he was fired at, and shot through the right breast. His son, Mr. J. Jermy, on hearing [illegible] of pistol, ran to assist his father, and was fired at and shot through the left breast. The wife of Mr. Jermy, ran, was next attacked by the murderer, and wounded in the arm; and lastly the lady's-maid, who, on hearing screams, came forward with a light, was fired at, and wounded in the thigh. The two gentlemen died instantly; the other sufferers are in a dangerous state. The assassin is unknown; but, suspicion having fallen upon a person named Rush, with whom the recorder had been at law, he was arrested, and now remains in custody.

The apprehension of Rush was the result of the lady's maid and Mrs Jermy positively swearing he was the party who fired at her and her unfortunate mistress. To enable his identification to be effected, he was taken to their bedside on Wednesday night.

On Thursday morning he underwent an examination at Wymondham House of Correction, in the presence of the Hon. and Rev. R. Wilson and Mr. W. R. Cave, county magistrates. The proceedings lasted from 10 o'clock till 5, fifteen or sixteen witnesses being examined, each deposing to a chain of circumstantial evidence. It was shown distinctly that he was absent from his farm at the period of the murder being committed. He called two witnesses to rebut the statements that is had.

The magistrate decided on adjourning the examination; and, having refused bail, Rush was removed in the custody of the police. During the examination he was permitted a seat. He evinced the coolest indifference, and cross-examined the witnesses with some tact. He appears to be about forty-five years of age, stoutly made, and was attired very respectably. An inquest has been held on the bodies, but nothing material was elicited, and the inquiry was adjourned

MILITARY ACADEMY, WOOLWICH. The gentlemen cadets who had been distressed in consequence of the premature breaking of scarlet fever in the establishment, returned to the Academy on Monday. The practical class will pass their examination for commissions in about a fortnight; there not being at the present time a sufficient second lieutenancy in the corps of Royal Artillery, and the list of first-Lieutenants being one deficient of the proper number.

THE FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.—The Duke of Buccleuch has consented to the erection of a free church at Wanockhead.

GLASGOW UNIVERSITY.—Mr. Macaulay has accepted the Rectorship of Glasgow University, and has written to the electors that he will visit the western metropolis about the new year, for the purpose of being installed. Lord Russell will be recollected, never and time to go through this ceremony, and his supposed indifference was probably the cause of his not being re-elected.

WEST RIDING ELECTION.—Mr. Denison and Sir Culling Eardley are prosecuting their canvass of the West Riding of Yorkshire. The friends of Mr Roebuck consider that he has been unhandsomely treated in being brought to Leeds to oppose Mr. Fitzwilliam, and then retired to Sir Culling, when no other competitor was in the field, and are making exertions to promote his interests as a candidate.

FESTIVITIES AT WARRINGTON.—The good old town of Warrington was the scene of great festivity on Wednesday last, on the proclamation of the winter fair. J. B. Edsbers, Esq., the newly-elected Member, there was a dinner at the Town-hall, by about 170 friends at the Ram's Head Inn, Horsemarket-street, from whence they proceeded to proclaim the fair. Mr. Thornley's band led up, and the rear was brought up by Wombwell's celebrated band. This part of the business being concluded, the whole of the invited guests retired to the Music Hall, at the Market-place, where luncheon was provided.

BURGLARIES IN NORTH BUCKS.—A number of daring burglaries have of late been committed in the north-ern part of Bucks and in the adjoining counties of Oxon and Northampton. To such a great extent has it been carried, and so daring have the burglars become, that no one house is considered safe, and a great amount of uneasiness has been created. Parties got farm-houses in the dead of night, armed, and boldly insist on having the cash that is on the premises. If they believe that all has not been given them, they unmask the firearms, &c., where they think it is likely to be secreted. A few nights since the house of Mr. G. French, of Finmere Warren farm, was plundered of about £50 by three men who went to his bedside and insisted on having his cash. He gave them the contents of his purse, but this did not satisfy them, and they broke open his cash drawer and helped themselves. Three nights previously the house of Mr. Hitchens, of Culpsaw farm, Stowe, was entered by burglars, three of whom went up stairs and with oaths and threats demanded the money. The farmer and his sons turned out from their beds and resisted, and the former jumped from a window and went to the village of Dadford and gave an alarm. Another son, who had been to a neighbouring village, came home at the time the thieves were in the house, and he was fired on alarm. In this case the burglars made a retreat without money. A meeting has been held at Buckingham to adopt means to put a stop to this state of things. Sir H. Verney, M.P., presided over a numerous and influential assembly. A mutual association was formed; and it was resolved to offer a reward of £100 to any one of the persons concerned in the burglaries at the house of Mr. French; and that, if any further cases occurred, handsome rewards should be offered.

DISTURBANCE AMONGST OF MILITARY OFFICERS. On Saturday last, at Bristol, the edify ne circumstance of the committal of a Captain in the R fle Brigade for following took place. The Rifle Brigade is stationed at the barracks at Brislington, near that city, and it appears that numerous complaints had been made to the magistrates by persons who had had their bell handles, knockers, and door plates stolen, or the palisades in front of their residences torn down, as these outrages were most commonly perpetrated in the line of road leading to the barracks, suspicion fell on the privates of the corps and their friends, and a memorial was presented to the magistrates for the purpose of obtaining a reward for the conviction of the offenders, praying them to furnish a police station in the neighbourhood of the barracks. In consequence, the commander of the brigade had nightly sent out patrols, and, as the outrages continued, the patrol received directions to keep a sharp look-out. This order was complied with, and on Friday night it led to the apprehension of Captain John Peter Need, and the Hon. Charles Chetwynd, the latter of the brigade, both of whom were found in the night in the station house, and were on Saturday taken before the magistrates for examination One of them was habited somewhat in the garb of a navigator, and the other as a gentleman. They were two due gets of wilful mischief preferred against the two; and Captain Need was further charged with stealing a door-knocker, the property of Mr. R. McDonald, a wholesale tea-dealer, residing in Queen-square, Bristol, and another who receives, under circumstances which exhibited his suspicions, and induced him to watch their movements. He saw them go to the house, No. 3, Cave-street, Portsmanpare, where they pulled down the iron railings before which they proceeded to the residence of Mr. Pillbarn, a professor of the French language, at the corner of the square, where they pulled and hauled the door-knocker. He complied, and having been convicted several offences, seized hold of Captain Need and Mr. Churchill, and conveyed them to the station-house. When there he searched them, and found in Captain Need's coat-pockets part of a brass door-knocker. From information he afterwards received he was induced to go into Queen's-square, and examine the premises there; and at the house No. 12, occupied by Mr. McDonald, he found a portion of a knocker had been stolen, and on fitting that found upon Captain Need to what rema ned on the door, it fitted exactly. The Mayor said it had often pained the magistrates to hear complaints made of the conduct of the privates of the Rifle Brigade, but they had never before had to complain of the conduct of any officer. How could it be expected that the subalterns of a force would be well conducted, when their officers set them a dis-ture example? The duty of the magistrates was a painful one, but they must do it. The charge was proved, and they had fined in penalties of 10s. and costs, and 20s. and costs for the wilful trespasses, and for the felony, Captain Need was fully committed to take his trial at the next quarter sessions. The prisoner was admitted to bail.

THE ROYAL INSTITUTE OF BRITISH ARCHITECTS, AND THE ROYAL MEDAL.

The first ordinary meeting of this body, for the session, was held on Monday week; but we delayed the interesting report of the proceedings in order that it should be accompanied by a representation of the beautiful Royal Gold Medal, which has just been executed by Mr. Wyon, of her Majesty's Mint.

After the usual preliminary business, the Earl de Grey, as [illegible] the first chair, presented, with very appropriate remarks, the usual premiums adjudged for last year.

Lord de Grey then said that he felt highly gratified at having been the first to make an application to the Queen for a Medal for those who had distinguished themselves in the art of Architecture; that her Majesty had acceded with great pleasure, as was always the case; and that it was assumed that one Medal would annually given by the Sovereign would be adapted for the use of the Society. In the course of a few days he should have the honour, in the first place, to submit to her Majesty a model of the Medal, and also to read the answer to the humble request Prince Albert to state to her Majesty that the Medal could be given to one of the junior practitioners, as the condition on which it was to be awarded was to be accompanied with [illegible] and an essay, by which the Medal might be conferred on "small and modest architects in all countries, as well as on many other country, who might have designed or executed a building of high merit, or published some work tending to promote or facilitate the knowledge of the art," &c. His lordship continued by saying that the council, with great liberality and anxiety to do right, to their work of selection, and not the first person, made various applications on his own part, or influence of his friends, by rivals in his own profession, of his own age and standing in practice remained certainly to be very highest compliment paid to any artist, that to be so intended on the presentation had produced a useful stimulus, by order of the Queen, for the institute; and that the interest taken by her majesty and the Prince had evinced itself in the [illegible] "great taste" of Simon by Count [illegible], and in the satisfactory expressed by both, those high personages the nomination, conveyed in the recommendation by the Council, of Mr. Cockerell, in whose possession he now had the gratification of placing the premium.

Many difficulties undoubtedly must have stood in the way of decision as to

NEW CHURCH OF ST. PAUL, CAMDEN-SQUARE.

NEW CHURCH OF SAINT PAUL, CAMDEN-SQUARE.

This noble edifice has been completed, or nearly so, as regards the exterior; but we regret to learn that a considerable sum is still requisite to defray the expense of the interior fittings. Yesterday week, a public meeting of the inhabitants of the locality in which the Church is situated was held at the temporary church, for the purpose of raising a sufficient fund for the completion of the great work. The Rev. Thomas Dale, the Vicar of St. Pancras, presided, and was supported by the clergy of the district, and from 300 to 400 of the inhabitants, members of the congregation of the temporary church of St. Paul. The Rev. Chairman addressed the meeting, and explained that the whole expense for the erection and completion of the Church would be £8603; of this sum, £3860 had been already subscribed and paid, leaving a balance of £4743 required. Of this sum, there was no reason to doubt that they would have assistance to the extent of £2000 from the Incorporated Society and the St. Pancras Church Building Fund; it was believed that the fittings, &c., of the temporary church would realise about £700; thus leaving the actual sum required to be raised for the completion of the Church, £2000. And, if £1000 of this sum could be raised before December 15, the Committee would be enabled to complete the edifice; and the builder would allow the remaining £1000 to be paid by instalments passing over a period of two years. The Rev. Vicar concluded with an earnest appeal to the meeting, and at its close the subscription amounted to several hundred pounds. We are happy to record this promising result, and hope the requisite sum for the completion of the Church will be raised within the ensuing fortnight.

The new Church is majestically situated, immediately adjoining a plot of ground laid out for Camden-square, in the rear of the Camden-road Villas, in the parish of St. Pancras. It is, certainly, one of the most picturesque ecclesiastical structures that have lately been raised in the neighbourhood of the metropolis. The apex stone was laid very lately; and externally the Church now stands a memento of the indefatigable exertions of the Committee and those professionally engaged in its erection. It is, we believe, the first ecclesiastical structure built in this extensive parish since the appointment of the Rev. T. Dale to the vicarage; and we trust that he may witness all his labours for Church enlargement and provision crowned with equal success.

The Church of St. Paul is erected on land given by the Most Honourable the Marquis Camden, K.G., who has, moreover, together with the prebend of Cantelow, the Rev. T. Randolph, handsomely contributed towards its erection. Grants of money have been also given by the Church Building Societies, to whose prescribed ample recommendation and other instruction it is in conformation; but it depends, for the larger amount necessary to defray its expenditure, upon private subscriptions

The building was commenced in July last; the usual ceremony attending the laying of the first stone being dispensed with, owing to the laziness of the season

The edifice, in plan, consists of nave and aisles, with transepts; and chancel, vestry, and organ-loft over the latter. The tower is attached at the west end of the nave; and, though circumstances have occasioned the introduction of galleries in the aisles, the vista from east to west is preserved, and forms not the least interesting feature. The Church will accommodates between 1200 and 1300 individuals.

Messrs. Frederick W. Ordish and John Johnson, of John-street, Adelphi, are the architects; and Mr. Kelk, of South-street, is the builder.

Mr G. H Lake has been appointed organist of St. Peter's, Walworth, a post occupied by Parkis, the celebrated performer on the Apollonicon, for twenty three years.

The Rev. T. T. Smith, M.A., Rector of Newhaven, formerly assistant preacher at the Temple Church, and Hulsean lecturer at the University of Cambridge, has been instituted by the Lord Bishop of Norwich to the vicarage of Wymondham, Norfolk, on the presentation of the Lord Bishop of Ely.

On Saturday last, the Rev. Henry Hutton, M.A., son of the late General Hutton, of the Royal Artillery, grandson of the eminent mathematician, and late incumbent of Woburn, was inducted to the rectory of St. Paul's, Covent-garden, by the Rev. P. C. Nicholson, B.D., who has had charge of the parish during the interregnum.

---

the person to be named to her Majesty; for when the council had to make a choice, eight English, and an equal number of foreign architects were placed, in consequence of their advertisement, before them. At another meeting, the claims of each candidate were further considered; and the majority of votes being ascertained by ballot, it was resolved "that the Royal medal be awarded to Charles Robert Cockerell, Esq., R.A., Professor of Architecture in the Royal Academy of Arts in London, member of the Royal Institute of France, &c., in testimony of his distinguished merits as an architect."

THE ROYAL GOLD MEDAL PRESENTED BY HER MAJESTY TO THE INSTITUTE OF BRITISH ARCHITECTS.

Mr. Cockerell then very eloquently expressed how deeply he felt the gift with all the addition from the qualifications of the Judges, which rendered it the highest reward of the profession; a reward the more remarkable as among the colony in dal in Europe loved to foster art-sch y, and tending to give thereto, in this country that pre-eminence, as the "Ars Regina," which it once had under the Freemasons, and which it so well deserved from the glory and advantage which it brought to the people. "The mighty men, and the man of war, the judge and the prophet, and the prudent and the ancient, the captain of fifty, and the honourable man, and the counsellor and the cunning artificer, and the eloquent orator," was the estimate of the inspired writer. (Isaiah iii. 2, 3.)

A paper by Mr. Donaldson, hon. secretary, being a resumé of the great description of the new St. Isaac's Church, at St. Petersburgh (of which we this week give a view and account), by its architect, the Chevalier H. L. August L. de Montferrand, honorary member, concluded the business of the meeting, which was most numerously attended.

We have given the two speeches at some length, as illustrating a very novel feature in the history of art in this country (Mr. Cockerell being a man of more than the middle age, and being excluded by a law of the Academy from being a member of the Institute), and these honours being hitherto confined to premiums from a society to younger members. Mr. Cockerell, it may be interesting to add, is the surveyor to St. Paul's, and Architect to the Bank of England, and is well known by his literary and artistic productions, as well as by his buildings. (The very elegant new Sun Fire Office is one of the latest of his public edifices.) It is to be hoped the Institute and her Majesty may be always as fortunate in their choice, and that the donation may be annual.

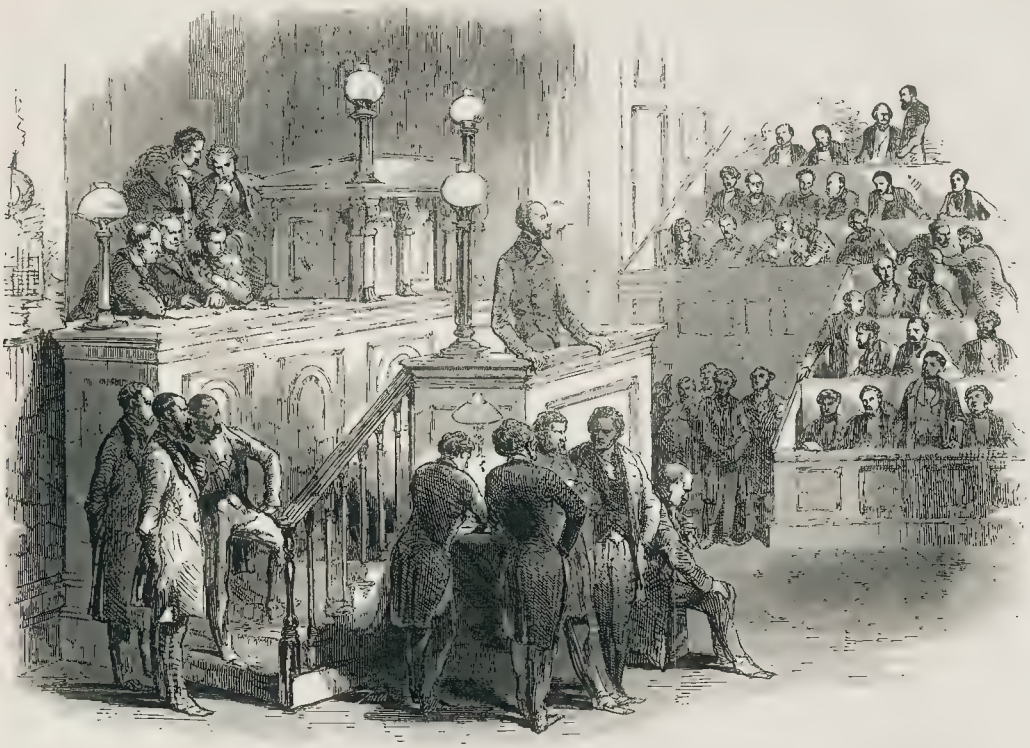
MRS. C. KEAN, AS "VIOLA."

The Shakspearean revival of "Twelfth Night," at the Haymarket Theatre, has proved pre-eminently attractive, in great measure by Mrs Charles Kean's charmingly intellectual performance of Viola. Our artist has portrayed this very graceful impersonation, in the fourth scene of the second act, at the touching reply to the Duke:

She never told her love,
But let concealment, like a worm i' the bud,
Feed on her damask cheek: she pin'd in thought,
And, with a green and yellow melancholy,
She sat like patience on a monument,
Smiling at grief.

It is, however, but justice to add that the ensemble of the performance of the play is entitled to high commendation.

MRS. CHARLES KEAN AS "VIOLA, IN "TWELFTH NIGHT," AT THE HAYMARKET THEATRE.



M. CAVAIGNAC IN THE TRIBUNE OF THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY OF FRANCE.

We have engraved the interior of the House of Assembly; showing Cavaignac in the tribune, at the moment that he turned towards Ledru-Rollin, and exclaimed, "A dresse z mon des injures!"—the most striking point of the proceedings of Saturday last. Ample details will be found at page 338 of the present Number.

IMMENSE CASK OF PORT WINE.

This huge Cask, or Tonel, of Port Wine, shipped from Oporto by Mr F W Cosens, of No. 4, Hart-street, Mark-lane, has just been landed in the St Katherine's Docks, from the brig Peso da Regoa, Captain Herbert, and its extraordinary size has excited considerable interest.

It has been long allowed by competent judges, that wine, of all fermented liquors, is the one that develops its high virtues character more fully in a large bulk, since the present, that it is possible for it to do in the casks (little more than one sixth the size) usually employed for transmission to this country. To prove this, the present monster cask has been sent; and it is, we understand, the importer's intention to adopt this mode in future of transmitting to this country his most recherché wines.

LARGE TONEL OF PORT WINE.—(620 GALLONS.)

About six hundred and twenty gallons is supposed to be the contents of this tonel, and the value £60.

Those of our readers who may be curious can satisfy themselves by visiting the D E and F vault, St. Katherine's Docks.

MR. BARBER.—This gentleman, a solicitor, who, a few years since, was sentenced to transportation, with Fletcher and others, for alleged forgery of certain testamentary documents, and whose sentence has been respectively reversed, and free pardon granted him, appeared on Saturday in the precincts of the Court of Common Pleas, Westminster, Mr. Sergeant Wilkins having been charged by him to make an application to the Court to have Mr. Barber replaced on the rolls. The novelty of hearing such an application or motion made attracted a considerable crowd to the court. In the course of the day, the Attorney-General entered, and had some conversation with Mr. Wilkins, after which the latter gentleman withdrew; and it was understood that, on consulting with Mr. Barber, he agreed to the postponement of the application until next term, or at least for the present.

JEROME PATUROT
IN SEARCH OF THE BEST REPUBLIC.

ILLUSTRATED BY GAVARNI.

(Continued from page 338.)

The town had emancipated itself. The people had plucked the forbidden fruit—they knew their strength. For the future, this feeling reigned around us, and perverted the people who, before so quiet and so well disciplined, no longer acknowledged any other power than their own. The disorder of the streets infected the manners. The excitement of the crossways engendered a taste for an idle life. To habitual industry succeeds walks and communes in full daylight. Tumult and noise were its necessary accompaniments and excited alarm in the wealthy and peaceful portion of the population, protested at first, by isolating itself; then, when the agitation increased, it left the town. Hence ensued a new cause of uneasiness: business was paralysed, riches disappeared, the sources of labour were dry. Thus, matters grew worse by themselves among increasingly deteriorating prospects. The people evidently fought with arms new to them; and had wounded themselves, not knowing how to use them.

THE MINISTER'S ANTE-CHAMBER.

But our Commissary had obtained what he desired The revolutionary spirit reigned within our walls, and it was beyond his power to arrest it. He had invoked agitation; agitation answered. A club was opened. My clerk had become the most violent Republican in the place. The club had elected him president. This deceit went to my heart; I retired from it in despair. The situation became more aggravated, and our Commissary even repented of his work, but it was too late—the club was stronger than he. Every evening, by way of relaxation they demanded his head. The preferment was awaited by them, by injunctions it had not always the strength to resist. The abolition of taxes, the discontinuance of the octroi, the general execution of all the clerks of indirect taxation was demanded This rebellious spirit was often extended to acts; their receipts became uncertain, and the revenue was compromised. But on no point did the club exercise its power with greater boldness than on the chapter of dismissals. No persons, no mercy; the blow must fall From the secret committees were issued lists of suspected persons, which the Commissary had only to sign. A Vehmic justice thus pervaded the administration, and reigned there. It might have been called a crusade against the officials, where the conquerors shared the spoils of the conquered.

One evening, after a walk in the country, I returned home; it was the time of our family repast. The fresh air had enlivened me, and I looked with some pleasure on the modest repast spread before us. No one could harass my wife in preparing it half so well and soon really I was about to enjoy the fruits of her care, when some one asked to speak with me. He was brought in, and gives me a letter. From the Commissary," he says, and goes. I open the official document without distrust. What have I to fear from the Government? Was I not secure by the purity and the date of my opinions? Malvina seemed less confident

"Read," she said, impatiently; "read it."

"You will see," I replied, "they will have advanced me without my asking for it"

Strong in this belief, I began to read aloud, when, at the two first lines, surprise and alarm stopped me. A cloud obscured my eyes; the sound expired on my lips.

"What is it, Jerome?" said Malvina."

"Here," I replied, giving her the fatal paper

She had greater self-command than I, and read as follows:—

"CITIZEN, -The mission of the Republic is to purge the administrative lists and to strike out all names compromised under the fallen monarchy. Yours is one of them, it is one of the worst of the days of patronage.

"I have therefore decreed your dismissal, and granted your office to the citizen M——, whose Republican sentiments cannot be suspected.

"Health and Fraternity.'

"THE COMMISSARY OF THE DEPARTMENT."

"M——!" exclaimed when I heard my successor's name. "He? my clerk?"

"Himself, Jerome. There it is in full, M——: it is not so difficult to read."

"It would make one doubt in the Republic," I replied, raising my indignant looks to Heaven.

"Then it is, Georges, Jerome; what did I tell you? Murder a man from behind, like the Italian bandits! That is the term"

"Such an outrage to me!" I said, indignantly

"And why not, Jerome? What have you to complain of? You have the right to live. The country allows you that"

I dared not reply; her irony overwhelmed me. How could I defend myself? I had myself called down the thunder which struck me I had pronounced myself for the Republic against the Monarchy, when the latter was standing and the former in the darkness of futurity. Yet the Monarchy had given me bread, and the Republic took it from me. What a grievous and distressing contradiction! I was struck dumb by it. Malvina did not strike people when they were down; she came to encourage me.

"Jerome," she said, "it is no use to give up; courage my friend, courage; the blow is hard, but it does not kill. Besides, you have two children, and I have no wish to present them to their fatherland; it feeds them too badly Therefore you must act."

"I am ready, Malvina; you shall see if I don't speak boldly to the Commissary."

"As for him, I will manage him. I will make him move. But he is only an inferior saint Let us apply higher. Shall I give you good advice, Jerome?"

"Speak, Malvina."

"Go to-morrow to Paris, and knock at the doors of these gentlemen of the Government; they must be pretty well off I fancy we should agree—they and I Go to them; tell them what has happened—what you have to complain of. They will attend to you "

"You think so, my love?"

"A Republican like you! an old one! a pure one! It is a rare bird with them; they haven't them by dozens. I repeat, they will be delighted to see you. They want clever men up there You must go to-morrow, Jerome."

"If you wish it."

"And, as for this fat Commissary, never mind him; I will speak to him."

All objection was useless when Malvina had determined. Besides, she was right; it was our only resource. The dinner was sad, and the evening was spent in preparations for departure. My wife wished to accompany me to the coach to give me the last instructions; and, as if convinced me, she said:—

"Your situation or war: take no less than that unless they offer you a better one."

"That is a matter of course."

"Above all, no waver ng. And make the Provisional Government understand that I turn to them only on t at condition. They may take it or leave it."

CHAPTER IV.

RUPUBLICAN VIRTUES.

When I arrived in Paris, I installed myself in the most modest hotel, which, however, I chose so that I was in the centre of my operations. From thence I could more easily go to places where my presence might be necessary. A delicate question was to know where to apply first. Before trying the members of the Government, it might be wise to sound those who influenced them, and to obtain their assistance. I determined to follow this plan

Among the men whom the storm had raised, to their own astonishment, on to the steps of power, was one with whom I had once lived in close intimacy. We had entered on literary life together, and drunk of the same cup—of misfortune. It is true that events had separated us since then; but I did not doubt that he had remained faithful to the memories of our connexion. Besides, he had only a secondary name in the new calendar. His titles consisted of three shrewd volumes, wherein he had displayed the talent of others, and compiled for the benefit of the Republican dogmas

My old friend lodged at one of the summits of the learned town, near the schools, and within reach of a library, whence he drew the elements of his book and of his dinner. His bachelor's hall was most simple and bare; but he filled it by his majesty, and decorated it by his importance. I cannot describe the solemnity of his reception. He was no longer the same man: the Revolution had transformed him. He carried his head like a holy emblem, and wrapped himself in his dressing-gown with so much superiority, that it was impossible not to distinguish in his look and manners the influence of a revolution I proved more by the reception he gave me, and by his wonderful question

"Do not speak of it, my friend," he said. "I have not slept now for ten days the country counts upon me to organise it. Ten have the power, and have not ideas enough for one. It's a Court of Confusion, Pa:aret, it is indeed. No plan, no unity of purpose; nothing great, nothing fitting. Heaven knows what would become of them if we did not help them. Fortunately, we are here."

During the whole hour of our interview nothing could destroy the good opinion this man had of himself. He incessantly recurred to what he had done and what he had to do. If the monarchy had vanished like April snow, it was in consequence of his works; if the Republic had been established without opposition, it was because he had philosophically and didactically proved its preeminence over all other forms of constitution. Of the Government, one could thought too much of the revolutions of the heavens, to know anything of what happens on our earth; the other was of the class of old men who refuse to obey the sentence of age, and whom the people of Rameses Sesostris promptly help to eat, pepper, and citronn. He was an inexhaustible subject, who except d no name, no fame, from condemnation, and found no one to admire except himself

In other circumstances these sketches for a mature would have interested me, and the sight of this native self esteem would have added to the enjoyment. But my business in Paris was more serious. I tried to bring back my protector, and to induce him to save me after having saved the people.

But it was in vain to invite; I could only get vague promises; my man escaped from me when I thought I held him fast.

"Yes, my friend," he said, "we will think of that. But for to-day we must attend to the affairs of Berlin. The idea of that movement is mine, as a historical necessity."

Prussia carried away the speaker, and, for ten minutes, I could get nothing from him. He thought himself obliged to explain to me what he proposed to do will, all the great and little margraves, the kingdoms, and the principedoms. I could scarcely stop him at last, as he was crossing the Elbe to invade Germany.

"A few words to the minister from you," I said, to bring him back to his subject

"Of course, of course," he replied, with the airs of a caliph; "I will think about it. But you see, Paturot, my anxiety just now—would you like to know it?"

"Most gladly," I said.

"It is Poland," he continued. "I don't yet know what we shall do with it For my part, I am very lenient. Poland may rely upon me. There are ties, affinities, titles of friendship between her and France. It is a debt, and I would gladly pay it. It would be great to do what Napoleon did not do. But I am grieved to tell you that no one under tands this question—no one. The ground, the grand problem, is to separate the Slavonic from the Germanic element."

I did not think it necessary to wait for the resolution; my dose of patience and of resignation was exhausted. At the moment when my interlocutor commenced a definition of races, and prepared to show me the beauties of Panslavonism, I rose, and took my hat. He was not moved, but followed on to the stairs to tell me that he would look after the position of the Transylvanians and the Bulgarians

I had to renounce this mediation, and return to simpler means—to direct application. The subject was only a simple reparation for a supreme iniquity. Some explanations would suffice; were we not under a rule of truth and justice? This consciousness emboldened me; and I at once directed my steps to the hotel of the minister of the department. My plan was to speak frankly to him, and make him the arbitrator of my fate

I arrived at the hotel of the minister with the hope, it must be confessed, of finding some compensation. But I was curious to know how these improvised sovereigns filled their parts. I imagined them at once simple and dignified, modest in exterior, and great in action: above all, original, and separated from the past by a wide abyss

I was thinking this as I ascended the steps of the hotel, when a carriage drove rapidly out, and stopped at the entrance. The ensemble was perfect, with the finest horses, brilliant harness, and coachman and footmen in the most splendid livery. To find anything so perfectly arranged, it was necessary to return to the traditions of the Court, and not even of the last. "What foreign ambassador is this?" thought I, drawing back respectfully. A gentleman in black coat came down the carriage steps; I recognised my minister. His secretary received from his hands a red morocco portfolio, and followed him as a mace-bearer would have done. The servants stood in line, and the guard presented arms. It was according to the strictest laws of ceremony. Oh! power of tradition, behold thy prodigies! Flag-stones are torn up, thrones fall; thou survivest thrones and flag-stones!

I ascended the stairs behind the glorious minister, and marvelled that he had in so short a time taken the manners and airs of office. Crowds of applicants filled the waiting-rooms; he crossed them with more majesty and wonderful indifference. His look expressed impatience and disdain; he seemed annoyed at having so large a suite around him, and yet it was a necessary accessory. Why has a carriage has courtiers; all greatness must explain But the minister was not very ceremonious; he dismissed the crowd according to his strictest laws of economy

PUBLICATIONS, &c.

MR. DICKENS'S NEW CHRISTMAS BOOK
This day is published, in post 8vo. 5s. cloth, gilt edges, bound in cloth by Remnant, with a Frontispiece by Leech and Stone, and Vignette Title by Leech and Jewitt,
THE HAUNTED MAN and the GHOST'S BARGAIN: a Fancy for Christmas Time
By CHARLES DICKENS.
London: Bradbury and Evans, 11, Bouverie-street.
This day is published, Loudoness's Almanac for 1849, price 1s. cloth, gilt edges, with an Index,
CHRISTMAS EVE; or, the Story of Little Joseph Cundall in Old England
Just published, price 1s. 6d.
THE OLD YEAR and the NEW YEAR. A Christmas Allegory, being the Dying Advice of Master Old Year to his son Master New Year. By CHARLES KNIGHT.
Chapter I. The Old Year's Will. Chapter II. The New Year's Inheritance.
London: WHITTAKER & Co., Ave Maria-lane. Sold by all Booksellers.

CHRISTMAS CAROLS. By ALFRED BUNN, Esq. Now ready, in 8vo. price 2s. 6d.
TWO CHRISTMAS CAROLS (with Music), by Thomas Baker) "The Holly and the Ivy" and "Christmas Eve," written and composed expressly for the Christmas Season. Also, by the same Author, "Oh! Sing Again," a Ballad, price 2s. 6d. London: ADDISON & HODSON, 210, Regent-street; and Published, by Appointment, to the Queen Dowager, 2, New Bond-street.

NEW POLKA.—THE FESTIVAL POLKA, composed by C. BROWNE. Price 2s. (net postage free).—Mr. Browne, the composer of the Agnes Polka, has just produced his new Polka for the music season, and from the above title it is sure to be a spirited and fascinating production and will greatly extend the popularity of the Composer. London: DUFF and HODGSON, 65, Oxford-street.

NEW SONG—"DEAREST, THEN I'LL LOVE YOU MORE." Price 2s. (net postage free). This is an answer to "Will you love me then as now," sung with exquisite taste by Miss Rainforth, and one of the most admirable compositions for the melody and words of the present ballad are equally interesting and beautiful in the extreme. Very charming and effective. Price 2 nett of publishers. London: DUFF and HODGSON, 65, Oxford street.

DEAREST MAE, as sung at the St. James's Theatre, with slightly varied words, and several new parts, price 2s. "Stop that Knocking." Of the same, with several new parts, price 2s. "Stop that Knocking." Of the same, with several new parts, price 2s. "Stop that Knocking." Of the same, with

PARIS FASHIONS FOR DECEMBER.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

The Adelphi is, we expect, just at present doing better than any other theatre in London, Mr. O Smith's Prospero, in the new burlesque, being pronounced a very fine performance, if not altogether an 'interpretation' (as the new critical word goes) of Shakspeare's character. And when the audience have, in addition, to laugh for a full hour at Mr Wright, in "Slasher and Crasher," it is wonderful how they eventually survive.

We have engraved one of the most striking scenes in the new burlesque, in which Prospero (Smith), and Ferdinand (Miss Woolgar), are in the ascendant; and the lofty magician has just exercised the potency of his wand.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR DECEMBER.

The Winter Fashions have completely set aside the autumnal toilettes. We have no longer to entertain our readers with the élégantes who are preparing for balls and parties, but with walking dresses. Simple garments of cloth, cashmere, and sometimes of velvet, are worn for the morning. Nearly all are short, rather scanty, though not tight to the figure; they have sleeves, and a small collar to stand up or lie down. The great fancy for the moment is the car-license of cloth, carmelite, chestnut, or snuff-brown; they are trimmed with gimp, &c.: they are also furnished with little pockets on each side, for pocket-book or handkerchief

For toilettes habillées, rich velvet or satin cloaks are made; they are trimmed with embroidery, gimp, fringe, and often with lace. Very pretty mantles with sleeves, ornamented with braid and lace, are much admired. They are fastened up the front by small buttons, attached with little gimp buckles.

For morning calls, a great many pelisses of plain stuff are made, creased in front, with a sash slightly drawn, and closed by a small buckle. At the edge of the bodice and skirt there is a trimming of the same material, cut or festooned; in the centre of which are buttons or pebbles, joined together by a small chain. Velvet buttons, or those of silk, fortunately take the place of boutons à pierre, and are decidedly of better taste, though less attractive. For toilette. dresses of very rich damask pékerini, with wide stripes separated by beautiful wreaths brocaded in two colours, are worn by ladies of high fashion. The bodices are uniformly worn high, though rather open up the front. The skirts are still made very full, but they are shorter; the best should be at least five or six inches wide. As a toilette de fantaisie négligée, plaid or striped silks are worn, with sleeves and bodices on the cross. Nearly all these toilette dresses are decorated with galons, be it buttons, braid, or gimp; and the sleeves are nearly all open at the wrist, so as to allow large puffings to escape. To robes négligées, embroidered muslin puffings are added; to those of cloth, simple cambric; and to robes habillés, a puffing of lace.

The new bonnet shapes are very distinguée. The pokes are round, the ears long, meeting under the chin, the crowns round, and the curtains not too full. Many bonnets are made of satin and velvet combined. The poke and the curtain are trimmed with a thick rouleau. The feathers are arranged en bouquets on the side, very low, the point falling to the edge of the curtain. Very rich shaded flowers are worn in dress bonnets, placed very high, and in the interior mixed with blonde lace the same colour as the bonnet. This lace has a very becoming appearance. There is much whispered about new toilettes de bals, destined to make a great show in the monde élégant.

SCENE FROM THE NEW BURLESQUE OF "THE ENCHANTED ISLE," AT THE ADELPHI THEATRE.

THE LATE SIR JOHN BARROW.

Sir John Barrow (whose sudden death we announced in our Journal of last week) was born on the 19th of June, 1764, in a small cottage at the village of Dragleybeck, near Ulverston, North Lancashire. He has himself thus described his early years:—"I was the only child of Roger and Mary Barrow. Their cottage had been in my mother's family nearly 500 years, and had descended to her aunt, who lived in it to the age of 80, and in it my mother died at the advanced age of 90. The only scholastic education I received was at the Town Bank Grammar-School, under the Rev. William Tyson Walker, curate of the parish church, and an excellent classical scholar, educated at Trinity College, Dublin. I was entered when in my eighth year, continued under his instruction until my thirteenth, when I had advanced to the head of the school, having read Homer, and Xenophon's 'Anabasis,' Livy, Horace, Virgil, &c. From an old gentleman, who, being a sort of peripatetating preceptor, used to pay his annual visit of about three months, I received instruction in those branches of mathematics which are most easily attained under a master, such as algebra, fluxions, conic sections—Euclid needed no master: and I very soon had an opportunity of acquiring the practical application of many of the theorems and problems to the common purposes of life."

At this early age Barrow was engaged in taking a survey of Colonel Braddyll's estates in Yorkshire, and acquired so much knowledge of the theodolite, and the several mathematical instruments, then and subsequently, that, on arriving in London some years after, he drew up and published a small treatise to explain the practical use of them; this, says he, "being my first introduction to the press, for which I obtained £30, and was not a little delighted to send my first fruits to my mother."

Sir John Barrow embarked in life at Liverpool, as a superintendent and clerk at an iron-foundry; in this situation he remained for two years, when he quitted it for a voyage to Greenland in a whaler, where he had some initiation in practical navigation and the duties of a seaman.

Sir John's next employment was as mathematical teacher at Dr. James's academy, Greenwich. From this service he was, through the interest of Sir George Staunton, who was Secretary to the Embassy, appointed on the effective list of Lord Macartney's suite, as "Comptroller of the Household," and nominally, in that capacity, proceeded with his patron to China. On his Lordship's return and appointment to the Governorship of the Cape of Good Hope, Sir John accepted the office of private secretary to his Lordship, and embarked with him for the seat of his government in January, 1797; and after a severe and very perilous, as well as very laborious voyage, he returned to England, on the evacuation of the Cape in 1803.

Of his services at the Cape during Lord Macartney's governorship, some idea may be formed from Sir John's own statement:—"Between the 1st of July, 1796, and the 18th of January, 1797, I had traversed every part of the colony of the Cape of Good Hope, and visited the several countries of the Kaffirs, the Hottentots, and the Boslesmen, performing a journey exceeding three thousand miles on horseback, on foot, and very rarely in a covered waggon, and full one-half of the distance as a pedestrian. During the whole time (with the exception of a few nights passed at the drosdy-house of Graaff Reynet) I never slept under a roof, but always in my waggon, and in the cot that I brought with me in the good ship Ready from England."

THE LATE SIR JOHN BARROW.

In 1804 Sir John Barrow was appointed second Secretary of the Admiralty; this office he held until 1806, and was re-appointed in 1807.

"From this day, the 8th of April, 1807, to the 28th of January, 1845," says Sir John, "I continued, without intermission, as Second Secretary of the Admiralty, when I retired, having completed altogether, from my first appointment in that capacity, forty years, under twelve or thirteen several naval administrations, Whig and Tory, including that of the Lord High Admiral, his Royal Highness the Duke of Clarence; having reason to believe that I have given satisfaction to all and every one of those naval administrations: and I am happy in the reflection that I have experienced kindness and attention from all."

As an author, Sir John Barrow has been as successful as he has been industrious; and it may be said of him that he has not penned a line which has not tended to some good and useful purpose.

Sir John Barrow was created a Baronet in 1835. He married in 1798 the daughter of Peter John Treiter, Esq., of the Cape of Good Hope, member of the Court of Justice, who survives him. He has left three sons—George Barrow, of the Colonial-office, who succeeds to the Baronetcy, married to the daughter of William Pennel, Esq., and niece of the Right Hon. John Wilson Croker; John, one of the senior clerks at the Admiralty, and head of the Record-office, and Peter Barrow. He has also left two daughters, the eldest of whom has within the last few days lost her husband, Lieut.-Col. Robert Barry.

The autobiography of Sir John Barrow, it will be recollected, was published last year; and from this source the substance of the above details has been derived. It presents, from first to last, a very interesting example of the success of a most energetic mind.

American papers announce the death of Colonel Mackenzie Fraser, Deputy Quartermaster-General of the Forces in Canada. The unexpected death of this officer, who has been for years in Canada, has caused much regret among his numerous friends. He was married to the daughter of the late Sir Charles Bagot, and is said to have been the hero of a scene described in "Harry Lorrequer," during the occupation of Paris by the allies in 1815, in which a British officer severely punished a France military bully, who insulted him in one of the cafés of that city. Colonel Fraser was a man of stalwart form and gigantic stature, and well calculated for the hero of such a scene.

Volcanic Eruption.—According to accounts just received from Batavi , a terrific eruption recently took place of the volcano Kloet, which had been inactive for a great number of years. This unfortunate event spread desolation and death throughout the province of Passaroan, one of the most fertile and salubrious districts of Borneo. The eruption was preceded by frequent but irregular detonations, which were heard at a very considerable distance. For several leagues round the volcano, the sky appeared covered with black clouds, which produced the thickest darkness in mid-day. Showers of burning cinders were thrown up from the crater, which fell within an hour afterwards on the surrounding country, burning to cinders the crops, carbonising the plantations, and rendering the most luxuriant plains in the world an arid desert. At the same time torrents of burning lava rushed from the sides of the volcano, and inundated the delightful district of Kediris, enveloping in its waves the farms and villages, as well as the cattle and men who were surprised and overtaken by it.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, December 2, 1848.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 347.—Vol. XIII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1848. [Sixpence.

THE FLIGHT OF THE POPE.

General Cavaignac announced to the National Assembly, on the 29th of November, that the French Government had determined to send a detachment of its army to Italy, for the protection of the person of the Pope. It was rumoured in Paris on the same day, that, as far as protection went, the expedition would be useless, as the Pope had left Rome and was on his way to France, and desired not protection, but shelter and hospitality. The rumour was believed by some, and disbelieved by others, as all rumours are. It has since been placed beyond a doubt that it was partially true. The Pope left Rome secretly on the 24th ult., accompanied by several of the Cardinals, and repaired to Gaeta. As soon as the French Government was informed of the probability of his flight, a French vessel of war was placed at the disposal of his Holiness—an asylum was offered to him in France—and preparations were made for receiving the Pontiff with a sympathy commensurate with his misfortunes, a cordiality due to the benignity of his character, and a splendour worthy of his high temporal and spiritual dignity. The Pope, however, has seen fit to seek an asylum elsewhere. Before he quitted Rome his mind is said to have been made up as to his place of refuge. It is added that he left confidential instructions to his Cardinals to join him at Malta. It is also stated that, in anticipation of being driven from Rome by the ungrateful people, for whose liberties as a temporal Sovereign he had done so much, he some months ago sent Cardinal Ferretti to Malta, to take the necessary measures for his comfort and security; and that Malta was chosen on account of its proximity to Italy, and of its freedom from all political commotions. It is not known whether the Pope will adhere to his original intention, or whether the respect and sympathy evinced for him by the King of Naples on landing in the Neapolitan territory will induce him to await the turn of events on the Italian soil. As soon as the flight of the Pope was known, the whole of the corps diplomatique quitted Rome—the Ambassadors of France, Sardinia, and Spain being the first to leave. It appears that the Spanish Ambassador afterwards joined his Holiness; and that the Pope disguised himself with a wig, moustachios, and a round hat, and passed as the servant of the Bavarian Ambassador. On the table of his private apartment in the Quirinal, the Pope left a note for the Minister Mamiani, the Minister forced upon him by the people, in which he simply announced his departure, and recommended to him and his colleagues the maintenance of public tranquillity. These are the facts as far as they have transpired of this great event—one of the most important, if not by far the most important, of the many stupendous occurrences of this "annus mirabilis" of 1848. Not only its remote, but its near consequences, it is impossible to foresee; but all men are prepared to believe that they will be remarkable.

The fall of the Papacy in the fulness of time is an event which Protestant Europe has been led to expect ever since the Reformation. It is not befitting in us to expatiate upon the awful mysteries of the Apocalypse; but the circumstances of our time are so marvellous, and the interpretations which have been put upon the inspired prophecy by Protestant divines and commentators would seem so nearly corroborated by contemporary events, that a passing allusion to the subject may be permitted even in the columns of a journal devoted not to divine, but to secular things. Both the Papal and the Protestant mind are awakened at present to the awful mysteries of prophecy, a fact which we record without commenting upon. Without reference to sacred matters, or to interpretations which the imaginative may find for the questionable prophecies of modern prophets like the Solitary of Orval, it is desirable that men should consider the flight of the Pope in its political aspect, both with reference to the Papacy itself, and in its probable effects upon the Italian question and upon the state of Europe generally.

We stated in our last Number, before the flight of the Pope was known, the probability that the most popular of all Popes would be the last of the ecclesiastical magistrates of Rome, and that in future the holder of the Papal dignity would be a priest alone, and not a sovereign. The flight of Pius IX. has rendered this result even more probable. As a Sovereign, he has lost everything by his flight. As the spiritual head of Roman Catholic Europe, he has as yet lost nothing. Even in ordinary times, it was impossible to conceive any arrangement for the government of a people more preposterous than the elective sovereignty established in the Papal States. A priest—in most cases superannuated—was taken from his cloister to administer not alone the spiritual affairs of that particular [illegible] of all other States of which the people adhered to Rom[illegible] Catholic Christianity. This was a duty sufficiently splendid and s[illegible] difficult to tax and to satisfy the highest and most active-minded of men. When, in addition to the duties of Archbishop-General of a large portion of Christendom, he was called upon to rule as a temporal King over a small but not easily managed section of a great people, there was an incongruity of functions which was full of absurdity as well as of peril. Roman Catholics and Protestants were alike aware of it; and all unprejudiced men admitted that piety and eminence as a priest were no proper qualifications for Kingsl. All the difficulties of the present Pope have befallen him in the latter capacity. It is not because he is a Pope that he has been compelled to fly from his capital; but because he was a King. It is not that any want of attachment has been displayed to his faith or his spiritual dignity, either in Rome or any other part of Europe, that insurrection has been organized against him — that his Minister has been assassinated—that his palace has been besieged—and that his person has been endangered. It was as a Monarch alone that the spiritual Head of the Catholics has been assailed as a King—not as a Pope; a fact which we should bear in mind before we conclude that the fall of the Papacy is identical with the abolition of the temporal sovereignty of the Pope. Rome may declare and maintain itself as a Republic, or all Italy may be united in a federation of Republics without weakening in the slightest degree the spiritual authority which the Pope claims to exercise over Roman Catholics. He may never revisit the Quirinal, or he may be installed in it again, without, in the one case losing, or in the other increasing, the greater of the dignities which his predecessors have enjoyed. Indeed it seems highly probable that his spiritual hold upon the affections of Roman Catholics will be strengthened, and not weakened, by these events. Persecution and exile will but endear his name to those who believe in his spiritual attributes. He may never leave Italy will probably be more than counterbalanced by the [illegible] he will gain over the minds of men in those parts of Europe where his religion is that of the majority of the people. Such, at least, is the view we take of this event; and all that has yet transpired, more especially in France, tends to confirm it. General Cavaignac never took a more politic step than when he consulted himself the protector of the Pope. Though that office has not been needed or accepted, General Cavaignac will owe his success, should he be elected, to the opportunity afforded him to conciliate and flatter the Roman Catholic party, of which the Count de Montalembert is the leader, and the skilful advantage that he knew how to take of it.

ALDERNEY CATTLE.—FROM THE CELEBRATED PICTURE, PAINTED BY JAMES WARD, ESQ., R.A.—(SEE PAGE 360.)

As regards the influence of this event upon the political fortunes of Rome and Italy, we cannot but anticipate many new and immediate perplexities to arise from it. The Romans, left to themselves, are not likely to carry on without bloodshed and tyranny a revolution which was inaugurated by assassination. Whatever they may do, it is to be most ardently desired that they may be left to themselves, or that a peaceful intervention of the principal powers of Europe may take place in the affairs of the whole of Italy, the Papal States included. The armed and hostile intervention of Austria on the one side could but lead to the armed and hostile intervention of France on the other, and vice versâ. In either case a general break-up of the peace of Europe might be the result. The present Government of France was evidently far from disinclined to run the risk last week. Its intentions, however, may have been changed; and to-morrow (the 10th of December) will decide whether the supporters of a new war shall assume the hazardous Government of the Republic. But whomsoever may be elected as President will be compelled to see the interest which France has in the consolidation of the constitutional liberties of Italy, and act accordingly. For the sake of Europe it is to be hoped that France will not be precipitate, and that she will play the great game with a full sense of the deep responsibility that a fate more [illegible] will rest upon her as well as on Europe. Even Austria, which has manifested a desire to accept the offered negotiations of the other States of Europe in reference to the affairs of Lombardy and Sardinia, will not be precipitate in the affairs of Rome, if no false step be taken by France.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

[illegible] preparations for the electoral struggle throughout the week, we carried on with a keen proportionate to the proximity of the day of contest—to [illegible]y, the 10th. According to the representations of the partisans of the two [illegible] states, there was no doubt of the success of both. Notwithstanding that, there can be but one President. The excess of the real United States parties to any probable excess in their favourite's triumphant return. In Paris, the meetings of electors, which were taking place hourly, were, it is [illegible], considered to be favourable to the success of General Cavaignac, but the open assemblages were decidedly for Louis Napoleon.

In Lyons, at a general assembly of the delegates of the sections of the city, and of the rural cantons, which was held there on Friday evening, the sections [illegible] votes to General Cavaignac, and but 6 to Prince Louis Napoleon. Six out of ten of the cantons outside the walls gave 143 votes to General Cavaignac, and but 79 to Prince Louis. Two of the four cantons, which had not elected delegates, but written to declare that they would vote unanimously in favour of General Cavaignac. It is stated, further, that General Cavaignac will intervene on the occasion of the [illegible] Bois created an immense feeling in favour of the General amongst the clergy and the religious portion of the inhabitants of Lyons.

The friends of each of the candidates have already been in communication with a view to the arrangements for the formation of the [illegible] Assembly. It will be one of the most important duties of the new Chamber to [illegible] dangerous even for the secret interests which it is desired to protect, also of a nature to compromise the peace of Europe.

On the subject of the expedition, General Cubières made the following statement on Tuesday in the National Assembly:—That on Friday he had communicated to the Assembly a telegraphic despatch announcing that the Pope had departed from Rome for Gaeta during the night of the 24th. In the same night M. d'Harcourt, the French Ambassador, had left for Civita Vecchia. He had in the Pouvoir steamer, with the intention of joining the Pope, who had manifested a desire to proceed to Gaeta. The Minister of War and General Changarnier Commander of Paris. M. Thiers has been sollicited, but has declined for the present any office. M. Passy has been mentioned for the Finances, and M. Vaulabelle for Public Works. M. de Falloux has also been offered the Portfolio of Public Instruction.

On Monday, in the National Assembly, it was announced by the President that a telegraphic despatch had been received from Algiers, stating that the votes as to the election of the President would be forwarded from Algiers on the 19th, so that they would arrive in Paris on the [illegible] which day no proclamation [illegible] election for a representative [illegible] took place at Ajaccio on the 26th ult., when Prince Louis Napoleon obtained 7,32[illegible] votes out of 107. He was also elected President of the Council-General of Corsica.

With respect to the expedition to Civita-Vecchia, M. Louis Napoleon has addressed the following letter to a Paris paper:—"[illegible] been in no way concerned from the outset in the expedition of Civita Vecchia. I feel bound to declare that, being fully decided to support all measures [illegible] to guarantee effectively the liberty and authority of the Sovereign Pontiff I could not approve by any way a military demonstration which might lead to dangerous even for the sacred interests which it is desired to protect, also of a nature to compromise the peace of Europe."

On the subject of the expedition, General Cubières made the following statement on Tuesday in the National Assembly:—That on Friday he had communicated to the Assembly a telegraphic despatch announcing that the Pope had departed from Rome for Gaeta during the night of the 24th. In the same night M. d'Harcourt, the French Ambassador, had left for Civita Vecchia. He had in the Pouvoir steamer, with the intention of joining the Pope, who had manifested a desire to proceed to Gaeta. The Minister of War and General Changarnier Commander of Paris. M. Thiers has been sollicited, but has declined for the present any office. M. Passy has been mentioned for the Finances, and M. Vaulabelle for Public Works. M. de Falloux has also been offered the Portfolio of Public Instruction.

On Monday, in the National Assembly, it was announced by the President that a telegraphic despatch had been received from Algiers, stating that the votes as to the election of the President would be forwarded from Algiers on the 19th, so that they would arrive in Paris on the [illegible] which day no proclamation [illegible] election for a representative [illegible] took place at Ajaccio on the 26th ult., when Prince Louis Napoleon obtained 7,32[illegible] votes out of 107. He was also elected President of the Council-General of Corsica.

With respect to the expedition to Civita-Vecchia, M. Louis Napoleon has addressed the following letter to a Paris paper:—"I [

I rely on your making provision with your accustomed liberality, for the exigencies of the public service, and the support of the public credit.

* * * * * * * *

Upon the much debated subject of retrenchment I have no instructions which specifically relate to Jamaica; but, from some other communications, and from observations of what has been said in Parliament, and of what has taken place in relation to another colony, I feel justified in expressing an opinion that extreme measures, destructive alike to existing interest and existing institutions, and of all confidence in the stability of public relations, as already constituted by law, would be firmly resisted, and would place the colony in opposition to the home government; but, on the other hand, I am confident that no resolution has been formed by her Majesty's Ministers to reject the consideration of any well-conditioned economical reform.

The address of the House of Assembly to this speech was presented on the 30th of November. It is little more than a cold acknowledgment of the Governor's kindness, in reading them a lecture on political economy. With respect to financial matters the Assembly say:—

We beg to assure your Excellency that it is not our intention to add to the difficulties and distress of the colony by withholding the requisite supplies for the ensuing year; but in providing the means of upholding the public institutions and the public credit, it will be our duty to do so with the strictest attention to the most rigid economy, as we are fully aware that the distressed state of the colony loudly calls upon us to lighten as much as possible the burthen of taxation.

On the 2nd of November a message from the Governor was received by the House of Assembly, relative to the imperial loan. He estimated the amount that would fall to the share of Jamaica at £100,000; recommended immediate provision for the payment of the interest; suggested that the improvement of roads would be the best way of applying the loan; and hinted at the expediency of revising the whole system of parochial taxation in the island. Little business had been transacted in the Assembly, down to the despatch of the mail, beyond the customary committees and bringing in bills for local arrangements. They appeared to be much reserve in the language of the members, and some difficulty in making business. The news of Lord George Bentinck's death elicited a strong and general expression of regret. The weather was propitious, and the crops were promising.

GUIANA.—The appointment of Mr. Barkley, M.P. for Leominster, to the Governorship of Guiana, in the room of Sir H. Light, which we announced last week, has been made just in time to save it from complete anarchy. The Royal Gazette, received by the mail, says:—

No despatches have been received from Earl Grey with regard to the financial position of this colony, at least none that have been promulgated. No such despatches, we believe, have been laid before the Court of Policy. Though therefore, the finances are in fixed [illegible] manner at the present moment, we cannot but feel that the future is pregnant with difficulty; the money is at this moment a negative one. The difference between the official and colonial estimates [illegible] be they assets or active items.

In the same journal, we find an account of the opening of the Georgetown and Mahaica Railway. The weather was good, and the crops promising.

Immediately on the announcement of the death of Lord George Bentinck, the colours of all the vessels in the Demerara river were hoisted half-mast high. A public testimonial was spoken of.

TRINIDAD.—The Council of Government assembled in the new Council-room for the first time on the 2nd of November. Lord Harris made a speech on the occasion, and took the opportunity to present the answer of the Secretary for the Colonies to the despatch forwarded with the estimates for the year; and to announce that the Trinidad share of the Imperial loan would be £30,000, as also to throw out some suggestions as to its application. With regard to the estimates, Earl Grey leaves the question of retrenchment entirely to Lord Harris and the Council. His Lordship, however, enters into an elaborate argument against the reduction of salaries. Still, if the Governor and Council will redress, he will let them. The following passage in Earl Grey's despatch is extremely creditable to Lord Harris's disinterestedness; but not quite so creditable to Earl Grey's sense of justice.

With respect to the apportionment of the reduction at a different rate per cent. upon salaries of different amount, your Lordship has proposed a graduated scale which, whilst it would [illegible] cent only on per cent. from salaries under £200, would subject your own salary to a deduction of 36 per cent. But I cannot concur in the justness of this principle, and I am of opinion that the deduction should be made at one uniform rate per cent. from all salaries whatever, or, at most, from all the salaries exceeding £500 a year.

Lord Harris deserves honour for the noble example he has set our own Colonial governors. But Lord Grey cannot be brought to understand how a salary which barely affords the necessaries of life to a hardworking man, ought not to be slightly touched as a semi-sinecure, affording luxuries.

INDIA.

Advices have been received this week in anticipation of the overland mail, dated Calcutta Oct. 21, and Bombay Nov. 2. The intelligence is interesting. Dhuleep Singh has, whether with consent or not, left the seat of Mooltan, and left the Dewan on the 10th October, for the purpose of joining his father, Chuttur Singh, who was left in charge by Captain Abbott and Lieut. Nicholson, in the Hazareh country. General Whish was at Lahore, and had expended the time during the two preceding days he had moved off portions of his troops; and with his view of disarming him for the treachery, it was determined to fall on him suddenly in the night-time, and preparations were accordingly made for that purpose; but Lieutenant (now Major) Edwardes, considering the movement a dangerous one, discarded the General's plan, and framed his design into execution, and the Sheer Singh escaped immolested. Great jealousy and ill-feeling are said to have existed between the two rebel chiefs, and at the time of Sheer Singh's departure the latter is said to have given information of the same in the form of attacking his slippery friend as he left the neighbourhood of the fortress. There was, however, an impression prevalent, that, instead of there being divisions in the rebel camp, and the plans of which Sheer Singh is one, and the Dewan being baffled by mutual distrust and disagreement, those parties had, throughout, played a cunning game already, and were in a position to strike a blow whenever it suited their purpose, and the information of the approach of the rebels to the capital itself, and that he has been compelled to summon troops hurriedly from Perozepore, and to send a messenger to recal Colonel Ashford's brigade, which started on the 19th of the previous month from that place, to join General Whish! In addition to the recall of Brigadier Eckford, and the requisition for troops from Ferozepore, General Cureton, at the head of the cavalry brigade, had been ordered to push on vigorously to Lahore; and Chuttur Singh and Sheer Singh were said to have effected a junction at Wuzeerabad, which is only sixty-four miles distant from the capital.

Orders, dated "Simla, Oct. 21," have been issued by the Commander-in-Chief of India, constituting a force of some 30,000 men, to be designated "the Army of the Punjaub," and of which Lord Gough intended immediately to take the command in person.

The Governor-General was expected to arrive at Allahabad in the first days of November. Lord Gough had left Simla, hastening forward to Ferozepore and Loodiana; and it was thought that the expeditious progress of the Commander-in-Chief would not admit of his having an interview with Lord Lake, however, previous to passing himself at the head of the army.

With respect to the state of the Punjaub generally, the accounts show but too clearly that the whole of the lately acquired territory is virtually in a state of rebellion, and that the machinations of the various parties in arms against our authority are at present, and have been for some time past, directed on a combined plan of operations, the results of which are likely yet to develope themselves to a greater extent, although the checks the Sikhs have received, and our vigilance round Lahore, have in some measure baffled them. The army of the Punjaub and the Bombay field force together amount to 38,377 men, of which 27,315 are natives.

Colonel Outram was a passenger by the present mail from Bombay, with the intention of passing two years furlough in Egypt. This distinguished officer was not, we are happy to learn, compelled to this step from any positive illness, but resorted to it with a view of recruiting his health by travelling.

LAW INTELLIGENCE

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

IN RE HOPE AND OTHERS.—THE HOPE JEWELS.—This case occupied the Exchequer Court for a considerable part of Tuesday, Wednesday, and Tuesday. The question at issue was, whether a very valuable collection of jewels, formerly the property of the late Mr. Thomas Philip Hope, belonged to his two nephews, Alexander Beresford Hope and Henry Thomas Hope, or to Alexander Beresford Hope exclusively. Henry Thomas Hope claimed a large portion of the jewels, worth about £40,000, under a deed of gift alleged to have been executed in 1821. But, on the other side, the execution of this deed was disputed, and it was said that the late Mr. Hope had left, by a will of a subsequent date, the whole of the jewels to him.

The Lord Chief Baron, in summing up, said that the sole question the Jury had to consider was, whether the name of Henry Thomas Hope was inserted in the deed, of 1821, when that instrument was executed by Henry Philip Hope, deceased, or whether the deed was executed in blank; and, secondly, whether Henry Philip Hope had gone through the ceremony of saying, "I deliver this as my act and deed," in short, whether the deed was really executed in the manner and for the purpose alleged. The learned Judge accordingly almost exclusively directed their attention to the first question, and told them, if they thought it had been executed, they would return a verdict for the plaintiff; if they thought not, for the defendant.

The Jury, without retiring, found a verdict for the plaintiff.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

TRIAL OF THE BARONESS ST. MART.

On Saturday last the Baroness St. Mart surrendered and pleaded "Not Guilty" to a charge of stealing two rings, value £40, the property of Sir John Hare Hare Hayward was accompanied by her solicitor.

Mr. Clarkson opened the case for the prosecution, and stated all the facts which were given in evidence when the witnesses were examined at the police court recently, and which we noticed at the time.

Sir John Hare was examined, and stated the alleged facts, which are already known to the public.

The servant, Ellen Russell, who at previous examinations had stated that she had pawned the rings at the request of the baroness, had her evidence on the present occasion much shaken on cross-examination.

The shopman to Mr. Boyce (the pawnbroker) proved that the diamond rings were pawned at his master's shop on the 1st of May, 1847, by a woman, but he could not speak positively to the witness Russell being the person. He also said that the same rings were pledged by the same person, whoever she was, on some previous occasion; and he contradicted Russell with regard to the name in which they were pawned on the 1st of May, stating that the name given was Mary Wilson, and not Mary Anne Turner, as she had represented.

The statement made by the prisoner when before the magistrate was put in. She said: "Sir John offered me marriage, saying that he was richer than the Baron. He showed me the rings, and I handed them to my mother, who gave them to the Baron, and he returned them to Sir John Hare, and I have not seen them since."

This was the case for the prosecution.

Mr. Cockburn then made a most eloquent and forcible address to the Jury on behalf of the accused lady; and Mr. Justice Coltman having summed up, the Jury immediately returned a verdict of "Not Guilty."

The trial occupied upwards of nine hours.

IRELAND.

FRIGHTFUL CATASTROPHE AT SEA.

Early in the week, rumours of a frightful tragedy enacted on board the Londonderry steamer, sailing between Sligo and Liverpool, reached Dublin. It was said that the steamer, which left Sligo on Friday week, had on board 105 passengers, part of the crew, and the captain, and the other part for Liverpool. A great number of the latter, it was alleged, went on board for the purpose of plundering the passengers; and when the crew were engaged in the management of the steam-boat during the storm, they commenced their horrid work, and on the arrival of the steamer at Londonderry, not less than forty of the poor creatures were found murdered in the most brutal manner.

It is gratifying to know that the statement was entirely unfounded. The truth, however, which is bad enough, may be briefly stated. It appears that about nine o'clock on Sunday morning week, the steamer reached the quay of Londonderry with the greatest part of her cabin fittings broken and destroyed. In consequence, and the authorities having taken possession of the vessel, immediate steps were taken to ascertain how matters really stood. On examination of the steamer, the cause was found to be a most terrible one. From information in the steerage the dreadful spectacle was exhibited of seventy-three dead bodies piled on each other.

After the lapse of some time, a respectable Jury was empanelled by the City Coroner, when, the witnesses being examined, it appeared that the steamer left Sligo for Liverpool on Friday evening, having on board, besides cattle, nearly 150 passengers, the greater part of whom were on their way to America. The evening became so boisterous that none but the crew could keep the deck, and the passengers were accordingly ordered below. The hatch or companion was drawn over; but from the close and heated state of the steerage, the unfortunate people below were subjected to the horrible and lingering death of suffocation. One passenger, more fortunate than the rest, succeeded in gaining the deck, and having alarmed the crew, an effort was made for their relief, but too late. Human beings having ceased to exist.

It took a few hours and a half to cast the dead out of the vessel; and as putrefaction had begun, the smell was so offensive that spirits were given to men to keep them in a state of half drunkenness to get them to go below. The place in which the poor creatures met their fate was about 20 feet long, 14 feet wide, and 7 feet high. It had capacity for about 30 persons, but was crowded with that the dead lay four deep on the floor.

The incidents and bereavements are deeply affecting. A little girl was saved who was coming to her father in Liverpool; the rest of the family were with her, to the number of nine persons, and all except herself perished. Strong men as well as children were among the victims, and their efforts to escape appeared to have been great—one man's coat being torn completely from the sleeves in his unavailing attempts for deliverance.

The suffocation has been attributed to the fact of a tarpaulin having been thrown over the companion to keep the water out

The following is the verdict of the Coroner's Jury, which sat on the body of one of the sufferers:—"We find that Catherine Cassidy came to her death in consequence of the gross negligence and total want of the usual and necessary caution on the part of the captain, Alexander Johnston, Richard Hughes (first mate), and Duncan Crawford (second mate); and we therefore find them guilty of 'Manslaughter.' And we further consider it our duty to express, in the strongest terms, our abhorrence of the inhuman conduct of the remainder of the seamen on board on the melancholy occasion: and the Jury beg to call the attention of proprietors of steamboats to the urgent necessity of introducing some more effectual mode of ventilation in the steerage, and also affording better accommodation to the poorer class of passengers."

The captain and all the crew are committed to gaol. About 80 others were landed alive, and all are in custody for examination.

How the story arose of these poor people having been murdered by their fellow-passengers for the sake of plunder, or falling in a deadly conflict, after which the captain and crew were obliged to submit to the orders of the "pirates," is quite unfounded.

The following letter of a correspondent in Londonderry, however, throws some light on the subject: "The night coming on exceedingly boisterous, the most part of the poor people were forced to take shelter themselves, either by the captain's orders, or by their own accord (which has not yet been disclosed), to go below, into what you know is called the fore-cabin of these boats; and since the days of the Black Hole of Calcutta, I have never read or heard of such a den to cram, pack, or stow so many human beings in. The effect of this was dreadful, but more dreadful is it when the crew came and fastened a tarpaulin over the hatch or companion door, which took down to the place. The consequence was that many of the poor unfortunates were suffocated soon, and others afterwards; and it has been told by one of the survivors, that the scene more resembled a battle-field of mangled mutilated human corpses than any thing else that could be described. On questioning some of them relative to the story about the infamous deception which had been circulated, he said that it arose from the fact that many of the passengers had boxes of needle materials, and that they formed them into their terror, with the view of obtaining a light. This fearful scene continued till one or a few succeeded in reaching the deck, and alarming the mate and crew. Assistance was then rendered, but, alas! too late."

THE LORD-LIEUTENANT.—His Excellency arrived in Dublin on Tuesday last from the country. He was accompanied by the Countess of Clarendon and three of their Excellencies' children.

GOVERNMENT RETRENCHMENTS.—The abolition of the office of paymaster of civil services, the head of which was the Right Hon. T. F. Kennedy, has been already announced. Seven of the pensioners also have been withdrawn, and the business will be done under the Treasury by a clerk or two in Dublin Castle. Sir James Dombrain has proceeded to London on that account, and the department, of which he was the head—the Irish Coast Guard services—will be transferred to London also. The office of Irish Secretary to the Post Office will exist no more, Mr. Cuddy having retired on full allowance. The head of the money-order office will also be dispensed with. The Board of Works has been weeded to a very great extent, and the whole of the employés there, with two or three exceptions, dispensed with. The permanent staff, and two or three parties whose services are valuable in various departments, alone remain.

DUBLIN MAYORALTY.—Mr. Dunne was re-elected Lord Mayor of Dublin on Friday so tonight for the remaining portion of the present year. He was not opposed.

KILKENNY.—The Corporation of Kilkenny have elected Dr. Cane as Mayor of that city for the ensuing year. The doctor had just been released from prison, where he was confined under the Habeas Corpus Suspension Act.

MR. DUFFY'S BANKRUPTCY SUPERSEDED.—The attempt to make Mr. Duffy a bankrupt has signally failed. The claim which Mr Duffy objected has been withdrawn, and the commission of bankruptcy superseded, at the cost of the person on whose affidavit it was issued. Mr. Duffy is now the only political prisoner in Newgate. Messrs. James Gayan, Eugene Martin, Lalor, Haverty, and Dr. M'Carron, have been liberated on their personal recognisance. Smith, the last of the Ballingarry men (except a man in hospital), has also received a letter from the Castle, admitting him to bail—making a complete gaol delivery.

MR. DUFFY'S TRIAL.—Mr. Duffy has received a formal notice from Mr. Kemmis that from bills would be sent against him to the Grand Jury of the city of Dublin on the opening of the commission. It is inferred that the bills found against him last commission, by the county of Dublin Grand Jury, have been abandoned by the Crown.

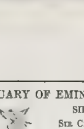
FOOT-LAW EMIGRATION.—The Poor-Law Commissioners have sanctioned a meeting of the rate-payers in the Davidstown electoral division of the Athy Union, for the purpose of making a rate for pauper emigration. The precedent will, no doubt, be followed by other unions in well-circumstanced districts.

EXCLUSION OF CATHOLICS FROM JURIES.—A memorial is in course of signature throughout the city of Dublin, and numerous names are being attached to it, protesting against the exclusion of Roman Catholics from juries, as against the spirit of the Emancipation Act. This document will probably reach the hands of Lord Clarendon on his arrival.

SUBMARINE COMMUNICATION BETWEEN ENGLAND AND IRELAND.—The speedy transmission of intelligence across the Irish Channel, and improved means of communication between that sister island, will be secured by the determination of the Government to take advantage of the facilities afforded by the submarine electric telegraph. The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty have given permission to Charles Blunt, Esq., civil engineer, to effect a communication by laying down his submarine electric telegraph between Holyhead and Dublin. The telegraphic wires will be connected with the lines of railway radiating from the Irish metropolis, and with the Chester and Holyhead Railway at Holyhead, and we understand that convenient positions at both the termini have been chosen and marked out where the wires will terminate. The Admiralty are desirous of furnishing Mr. Blunt with the necessary aid, and for that purpose have authorised Captain Fraser, R.N., the commanding officer of her Majesty's naval establishments and dockyard at Holyhead, not only to permit the former gentleman immediately to commence his operations, but also to afford every assistance which he may require in the performance of his undertaking. Its desirable advantages will, form ere long, a great link in the great chain of communication between the two countries. By its means space will be annihilated, and in a few minutes the most important political intelligence, the minutest detail of business, will be conveyed between the capitals of England and Ireland. The towns of Liverpool and Manchester would also be benefited, as the telegraphic communications would be at least twelve hours in advance of the ordinary mails.—Morning Post

THE LATE C. BULLER, ESQ., M.P.—On Wednesday last, the day of Mr. Buller's funeral, all the shops were closed by all parties in the town of Liskeard, which he represented—a mark of respect, irrespective of politics, which he well deserved.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.



SIR CHARLES WENTWORTH BURDETT, BART.

SIR CHARLES BURDETT, an officer in the military service of the East India Company, represented one of the oldest families in England, founded at the period of the Conquest by Robert de Burdett, Lord of Lonesby, county of Leicester, a Norman knight, who came over with Duke William. Sir Francis Burdett, [illegible] and succeeded to the Baronetcy at the decease of his uncle, Sir Charles Wyndham Burdett, in 1829. He was born 26th December, 1805, and married, 31st December, 1834, his cousin Harriett, daughter of William High Burgess, Esq., by whom he leaves two sons and two daughters, the elder of the former being now Sir Charles Wentworth Burdett, seventh Baronet, of Burthwaite, county York, a minor, aged 13.

IBRAHIM PASHA.

IBRAHIM PASHA, the son of the great Mehemet Ali, was born at Cavalla, in Albania, in 1789. His father, from the humble occupation of a water-carrier, had risen to take rank among the leading men of the Ottoman Empire as a statesman and a warrior. The young Ibrahim, at the age of seventeen, joined his father's army, and though always inferior in a civil capacity to his sire, he soon proved himself more than Mehemet's rival in the field. In 1816, he went into Arabia against the Wahabees—an heretical sect of the Mahommedan religion, and he subdued them after a harass ng war of three years. He wrested the holy towns of Mecca and Medina from their hands, and re-established the regular course of the caravans. On the 11th of December, 1819, he was received in triumph at Cairo, on returning from his victorious adventures; and the Sublime Porte then conferred upon him the high title of Pasha of the holy cities. In 1824, Mehemet Ali undertook for the Sultan the quelling of the Greeks, who had commenced their memorable struggle for freedom. Ibrahim Pasha commanded the troops sent against them, and sailed from Alexandria for the Morea, with a fleet consisting of 163 sail, 16,000 infantry, 700 horse, and four regiments of artillery. The war which Ibrahim waged in the Morea was one of great success and cruelty, sufficient, had it been a Christian soldier, to have tarnished his reputation for ever. But, until lately, an Ottoman, with arms in his hand, was quite ignorant of mercy, and Ibrahim is to be judged by the standard of his rank. The battle of Navarino, the 20th of October, 1827, annihilated Ibrahim's fleet, and cut short his sanguinary proceedings in Greece.

The following years found Mehemet Ali in open and effective rebellion against the Porte, and its independent sway over Egypt. His ambition was to add Syria to his dominions; and his son Ibrahim, in carrying out this object, achieved his greatest glory. With 24,000 infantry, 5000 regiments of cavalry, and forty pieces of artillery, Ibrahim and his lieutenant, Soliman Pasha (the French Colonel Sèves) overran the Syrian territory. Gaza, Jaffa, Caiffa, and Acre—the Acre of Saladin and Napoleon—consecutively fell into their power. The victory of Konlah, in 1832, laid the approaches to Constantinople defenceless before them; when Russia interfered, and, with 20,000 troops, protected the capital of the Ottoman Empire. But Drumon retained and ruled Syria for having subsequently confirmed his power by the victory of Nizeh, in 1839. This triumph was, however, to be his last.

The four nations—England, Austria, Russia, and Prussia—jealous of the increasing potency of Mehemet, combined to restore Syria to Turkey. Ibrahim at once sank before their attack: the bombardment and occupation of Acre, the 3d November, 1840, in the space of four hours, showed the Pasha and his father the vanity of resistance; they made the best terms they could with the Sultan, Syria was surrendered, and Mehemet became recognised hereditary Viceroy of Egypt. Since that period Ibrahim Pasha has led a comparatively retired life, devoting his attention to agriculture and the internal improvement of Egypt. His memorable visit to London is in every one's recollection. In consequence of Mehemet Ali's recent incapacity, from dotage, to longer govern Egypt, Ibrahim was nominated by the Sultan Viceroy in his stead on the 1st of last September. The sceptre, after a brief interval of two months and ten days, has passed from Ibrahim's hands.

The Pasha closed his mortal career on the 10th ultimo; of a death being the combined results of bronchitis and abscess of the lungs. He is succeeded in power by his nephew Abbos Pasha, the eldest living male member of Mehemet Ali's family. This succession is strictly pursuant to the Sultan's firman of 1841, by which the government of Egypt is to descend in direct line in Mehemet Ali's descendants, from the elder to the elder among the male sex.

Ibrahim was interred with military honours, but with little ceremony, on the day of his death, in Mehemet Ali's family tomb, near Cairo. Ibrahim leaves three sons, Achmet Bey (born in 1826), Ismail Bey (born in 1830), both now pursuing their studies in Paris, and Mustapha Bey (born in 1832), at present in Cairo.

Endowed with inferior capabilities for governing in time of peace, Ibrahim Pasha was in war the armed right hand of his father Mehemet. He was a soldier and a good one, but he was little more. In private he was serious and reserved; but selfishness and gratification appear to have been his motives in some measure redeemed by his unalterable affection for, and devotion to his father.

SAMUEL COOPER, ESQ., F.R.S.

This eminent surgeon died on the 3d inst., at Shipperton, in the 68th year of his age. He was member of the Council of the Royal Society, lately President of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, Professor of Surgery at University College, London; author of the celebrated "Dictionary of Surgery," and many other popular works. His abilities commanded universal respect, and are highly commended by Professor Gibson, of the University of Pennsylvania, who, in his "Sketches of Eminent British Surgeons," mentions Mr. Cooper as "deservedly well known all over the world for his variety and extent of his professional information."

Mr. Cooper was admitted a member of the Royal College of Surgeons so long ago as 1803. Soon after he entered the army, and became a Staff Surgeon. In 1809 he received the Jacksonian prize for an elaborate "Treatise on Luxations," and in 1832, on the anniversary of the birth of Hunter, he had the honour of delivering the annual Oration in commemoration of that illustrious man, and in 1843 he obtained for the second time his learned profession, the President's Chair of the College of Surgeons. With University College and Hospital Mr. Cooper was connected for seventeen years as a most popular teacher, but resigned his appointment there in April last, consequent on a difference with two of his colleagues.

THE WEATHER.

The weather during the past week has been rough. The wind has been blowing at times heavily, and mostly from the S W; they has been mostly covered by clouds; and rain has fal en frequently. The following are some particulars of each day:—On Sunday the sky was clear from cloud, nearly from 7 A.M. till noon, and overcast both before and after these times; the direction of the wind was W.S.W., and the average temperature of the air was 42°. Friday, the sky was overcast, with very slight exceptions, and rain fell heavily at times: near midnight some hail fell; the directions of the wind were S. and W.S.W.; and the average temperature of the air was 41°. Saturday, the sky was for most part cloudless; the direction of the wind was S.W., and the average temperature of the air was 40°. Sunday, the sky was mostly overcast; the direction of the wind was S.; and the average temperature of the air was 41°. Monday, the sky was partially clear for a short time during the evening; the direction of the wind was S.W.; and the average temperature of the air was 44°. Tuesday, the sky was overcast in the morning, and mostly clear after noon; there were several squalls of wind and rain during the day; the direction of the wind was S.W.; and the average temperature of the air was 44°. Wednesday, the sky was overcast, and there were frequent squalls of rain and wind; the direction of the wind was S.W., and blowh strongly; the average temperature of the air was 46°; and that for the week ending this day was 43°.

The following are the extreme thermometrical readings of each day:—

Thursday,	Nov 30, the highest during the day was	47	deg., and the lowest was	deg.
Friday,	Dec. 1,	47
Saturday,	Dec. 2,	46
Sunday,	Dec. 3,	42
"	" 4,	47
Tuesday,	" 5,	47
Wednesday,	Dec. 6,	51
Thursday,	Dec. 7, 1848.			J. G.

RECEPTION OF AN AMERICAN MAN-OF-WAR IN BRITISH WATERS.—The American frigate St. Lawrence came up Southampton Water and anchored abreast Netley Abbey on Sunday. When she dropped anchor, the Admiralty superintendent's boat, with the Royal pendant flying, pushed off from the pier to convey Lieutenant Brady, R.N., who, in the absence of Captain Sir J. [illegible], Bart., first officer of the ship, came to pay his respects to Captain Paulding, of the St. Lawrence, and to offer him the civilities of the port. Lieutenant Brady was received [illegible] politely, and the most respectful courtesies were exchanged between the American and British officers. At 10 o'clock on Monday morning the slumbering monks of Netley must have been almost startled by the reverberating echoes of a salute of twenty-one guns from the frigate. This was answered by a salute of twenty-one guns from the British garrison platform, which was fired amidst a great concourse of people. The United States consul, now sent on to the frigate in official costume, and returned to the pier about 12 o'clock, accompanied by several of the officers of the ship. The captain was detained on board by Lincas. The weather was very tempestuous, but a number of gentlemen were on the pier, and welcomed the American officers very cordially to Southampton. The Mayor's carriage has been placed at the disposal of Captain Paulding, who will be entertained at a banquet to be given by his Worship. Numerous flags were hoisted, and the church bells rang merrily during the day.

SHIPWRECKS.—On Monday evening last, about six o'clock, a large Spanish vessel, with a cargo value over £10,000, was driven ashore near Wexford, and was totally lost. Crew saved. The ship went to pieces immediately, and the cargo was completely destroyed.—Friday se'nnight the Xenocrates, Jones, master, left Cork in ballast for Swansea. The weather was boisterous, and on her getting outside the harbour, she missed stays and went on the rocks, between the Cow and Calf. She remained until Saturday morning beating forcibly, when, being no longer able to hold together, she went to pieces, and shortly after not a vestige of the vessel was to be seen. The Hermatia was a new vessel, not more than nine months built, and arrived from New York on the 8th ult., with 1600 qrs. of maize, which she discharged at Cork. The captain and crew were with considerable difficulty saved by the Coast Guard, who rendered every assistance that it was possible any body of men could afford.

GOLD CUP PRESENTED BY PRINCE WALDEMAR TO THE 50TH REGIMENT.

GOLD CUP PRESENTED TO THE 50TH REGIMENT.

THIS splendid testimonial, the gift of Prince Waldemar of Prussia, was presented to the officers of the 50th, Queen's Own Regiment, on Wednesday week, at a dinner given in the Mess-room of Dover Castle. Colonel Petit officiated as chairman, and the company numbered about fifty guests. The Mess-room was tastefully decorated with flags, arms, &c. In front of the Chairman were placed the almost bare poles of the flags borne by the regiment at the battle of Vimeira and Almaez; on his right and in the rear were hung three flags taken from the Sikhs; and on his left were displayed the new colours of the Regiment; while around were grouped arms in various devices. The Chairman was supported on his right by Viscount Hardinge, and on his left by E. R. Rice, Esq., M.P. for Dover.

After the customary loyal toasts had been duly honoured, Mr. Latham, the Prussian Consul, handed the presentation Cup to Lord Hardinge. His Lordship then rose, and said that it became his pleasing task, at the request of his Royal Highness the Prince Waldemar of Prussia, to present the Cup to the officers of the 50th. His Lordship added: "They were all aware that his Royal Highness did not only entertain kind feelings to the 50th, but that he acted with them at Moodkee, Ferozeshah, and Sobraon, where our forces highly distinguished themselves by their bravery in storming the Sikh batteries. On the occasion when Dr. Hoffmeister, the Prince's personal attendant, was shot, his Royal Highness, after jumping from his horse, and pressing the dying man to his breast, rejoined the troops, and bravely prosecuted his duty. The Prince was an honour to his country, and possessed in an eminent degree the heroic qualities of his celebrated ancestor, Frederick the Great." The gallant Viscount then went on to describe the bravery of the Prince, with Sir W. Gilbert and Sir H. Smith, at the storming of the intrenchments at Sobraon. His Lordship next read the inscription upon the cup, which was—"As a token of remembrance of the happy days spent among the officers of the 50th Regiment at Loodiana, and the following glorious campaign on the banks of the Sutlej, this Goblet is presented by his Royal Highness Prince Waldemar of Prussia." The Cup was then filled with wine, from which all the company drank the health of the Royal donor.

Mr. Latham, the Prussian Consul, returned thanks on behalf of Prince Waldemar.

Colonel Petit then rose, and said he hoped Lord Hardinge would convey his gratitude, and that of the other officers of the 50th, to his Royal Highness; and the gallant Colonel concluded by proposing the health of Lord Hardinge, which was drunk with rapturous applause.

Lord Hardinge thanked the company; and after a few other toasts had been drunk, his Lordship retired.

The Sergeants of the 50th entertained the Barrack Sergeants and a few friends in their mess-room at the Heights, in honour of the occasion.

The Cup is of novel design, and, we believe, of foreign manufacture. The foot is of silver, the supporting palmtrees richly gilt: the bowl, itself of silver, bears a representation of the siege; around the mouth is the inscription; and the lid is surmounted with a group of Sikh trophies, in gold.

BLOOMSBURY BAPTIST CHAPEL.

THIS Chapel opened for public worship on Tuesday last, December 5th, is one of the very best, in point of design and character, lately erected in the metropolis. The Chapel stands on a square plot of ground in Bloomsbury-street, between the neat Gothic Church belonging to the French Protestants, and the tasteless pile of building known as Bedford Chapel, the latter acting as a good foil to set off the elegant character and design of the new Chapel, which is in the Lombardic style of architecture.

The front of the Baptist Chapel shows a central portion flanked by two lofty spires, which project slightly from the main building. The centre is divided into two stories, of nearly equal height; the lower story projecting nearly to the level of the towers, and a pediment is formed by the gable. An arched corbel table runs along this lowest story; and on the bevelled roof is a neat style of ornamentation. Three doorways, nicely moulded, and sunken, are in this portion of the building, the central one, taller and more decorated than the others, being enriched with zig-zag and other ornaments; the pediments of all three have a leaf pattern wrought in them. In the second story are three windows, the central a large circular window, eighteen feet six inches in diameter. This window is of exceedingly beautiful design, the ornamentation appropriate, and elegantly carried out; and those on either hand are round-headed and enriched by mouldings. A series of small arches forms a striking and characteristic decoration to the gable, in the centre of which is a recessed and moulded window, filled with brick-work, set in a neat pattern. The towers are divided into four stories, two of which correspond to the stories of the main building, and the two uppermost are of equal height. The upper stories have openings in them, composed of a tall central arch inclosing two lights; and on either side are arches filled with brick-work, set in pattern. A bold corbel-table runs round the towers; and a dentil cornice above it gives great effect to the whole. The spires are covered with ornamental tiles, designed in keeping with the style of architecture of the building and, being red, an excellent and striking feature is gained without any additional expense. This example is well worthy of study: and our architects would do well to try how colour could be effectively used in exterior decoration, without adding to the cost of the structures they are called on to design. In this building the pale red of the spires has an admirable effect. The height of the spires is 117 feet. The interior of the chapel is peculiarly chaste and elegant—the ceiling being truly simple and beautiful. The ceiling is divided into panelled compartments, a large circle in the centre being coved and richly ornamented; and a pendant, pierced for ventilation, adds to the decorations. A large chandelier hangs from the pendant; and, as it is upon Professor Faraday's principle, the Chapel is thoroughly ventilated through the pendant, the vitiated air being carried off into the upper part of the towers, where it is discharged. There are galleries (to which accasis gained by staircases in the towers) on three sides of the Chapel, giving accommodation to 470 persons in the pews; and a gallery for schools attached to the Chapel accommodates 250 children. There is an organ gallery on the south side of the Chapel, containing a very fine-toned instrument. The pews on the ground-floor will hold about 460 persons.

The walls of the Chapel are destitute of enrichment; but the window casements lend their aid in adding to the beauty of the place, as they are very prettily moulded in octagon and lozenge-shaped patterns, the glass being richly ornamented with embossed design.

There are two vestry-rooms attached to the Chapel, and the basement of the building is divided into two schools, for boys and girls: access to them being gained by staircases from the towers.

The building covers a superficial area of 5150 feet. The span of the roof, clear of the walls, is 65 feet; and from the floor to the ceiling it is 39 feet in height. The building is of white brick; the dressings of Caen stone.

We may mention, the building was erected for the sum contracted for, £8700, including the fittings, but exclusive of the site; and we believe S. M Peto, Esq., M.P., has been a most liberal benefactor to it. The design of the Chapel reflects the highest credit on its talented architect, John Gibson, Esq., of Westminster, and the builders are Messrs. Locke and Nesham.

The opening of the Chapel, on Tuesday, was attended by a great many Dissenting ministers of eminence, and a number of clergymen of the Church of England. The great source of attraction was the popularity of the preacher, the Rev. Dr. Harris, President of Cheshunt College, and author of "Mammon" and various other works. The Rev. Dr. Goodwin, of Oxford, preached in the evening, when the audience was again large. The Rev. Mr. Brock, of Norwich, has been appointed the regular minister of the chapel. Upwards of 1800 persons crowded into the Chapel, and numbers were disappointed. A dinner was given in the school-rooms underneath to 300 persons.

BLOOMSBURY BAPTIST CHAPEL, OPENED ON TUESDAY.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

SECESSION OF THE HON. AND REV BAPTIST NOEL.

It being understood that the Rev. Baptist Noel would on Sunday last deliver his farewell sermon to the congregation of St. John's Chapel, Bedford-row, in which he has ministered for the last twenty two years, a large concourse of persons occupied the avenues to the chapel doors long before the usual time for commencing morning service. When the doors were opened, the church was instantly occupied in every part, and numbers had to retire disappointed. The reverend gentleman did not, as many anticipated he would, make the slightest allusion to the particular causes which led to his secession from the Established Church.

At the opening of his discourse, he said he would not on that occasion, or in the evening, waste the time of the congregation by any explanations respecting himself. His views would shortly be published, and these would sufficiently explain his present position.

At the close of his sermon the rev. gentleman announced, that he should be followed next Sabbath, in that place, by Mr. Archdeacon Dealtry, who, for some time at least, would occupy that pulpit.

At the evening service, the same interest was exhibited on the part of the public. The chapel doors were besieged by an eager crowd as early as four o'clock. They were opened at intervals, and a limited number admitted each time. Tremendous crushing was the consequence; and the frequent screams of females seemed to indicate that this mode of arranging the admission was attended with considerable danger. The hon. and rev. gentleman, who was the object of all this curiosity and excitement, selected as the text for his evening discourse, 17th John, 24th verse; and, having preached a most eloquent sermon descriptive of the future happiness in reserve for the elect, gave a farewell exhortation to the different classes of which it was composed.

This chapel has been the frequent scene of schism from its first construction. It was built, it appears, for Sacheverel; was subsequently occupied by a clergyman named Cecil, whose low-church doctrines created much interest at the time they were propounded; and the immediate predecessor of Mr. Noel was the Rev. Mr. Sibthorp, whose frequent changes of opinion have formed the subject of newspaper comment. The Rev. Dr. Dillon, who obtained so unenviable a notoriety, was at one time a lecturer in this chapel.

The Rev. Daniel Wilson was for many years a preacher in St. John's Chapel before his appointment to the living of Islington, whence he was raised to the prelacy, as Bishop of Calcutta, in 1832. The Rev. Baptist Noel's successor, the Very Rev. T. Dealtry, was Archdeacon of that see.

THE inauguration of the new Lord Rector of Glasgow University (the Right Hon. T. B. Macaulay) is to take place in January, but the precise day has not been fixed.

THE Rev. J. C. Robertson, M.A., Oxon, who seceded some years since from the English Establishment, and has been officiating as minister of the Scottish Episcopalians at Dalkeith, Scotland, has finally joined the Roman Catholic faith, having been received into that communion a few days since by the Rev. Mr. Brownbill.

DECIMAL MEDICINE.—Dr. Marshall Hall has suggested, through the Lancet, the institution, in these realms, of a national decimal pharmacopœia; or a pharmacopœia having the authority of the Royal College of Physicians and of the Government, in which all energetic or dangerous medicines shall be so compounded that ten minims or ten grains shall be the medium dose for an adult. It is proposed that hydrocyanic acid and strychnine, for example, be so diluted that ten minims of the liquid containing the former, and ten grains of the powder containing the latter, shall be a safe dose in general: that dose being, of course, augmented or diminished in practice according to the experience of the prescriber. It will be a question for the chemists, by what materials this dilution shall be effected.

VIEW IN THE NEW COLONY OF LABUAN.—(FROM A SKETCH BY A CORRESPONDENT.)

M. MATHIEU LOUISI.

This gentleman, a Negro, is one of the representatives of the colony of Martinique in the National Assembly of France, and took his seat about a month since. In the sitting of the Assembly yesterday week, M. Louis was prominent in the debate on the military service of the colonies, when, M. Levasseur having expressed his doubt whether universal suffrage could be the basis of elections in the colonies with security for property, M. Louisi declared that "he thanked France for the liberty which she had given to his brethren; he thanked, in particular, the abolitionists, who were blessed amongst the negro population. They would," he said, "receive their reward before that heavenly tribunal where the colour of men was not regarded. He trusted that what the Constitution had given them would not be withdrawn. At the moment," he added, "when the Republic announced our freedom, the white race dreaded that we should come and demand an account from them of their past acts towards us. But we demanded nothing—we were generous, and we stretched forth to them the hand. Our conduct, however, did not produce the effects that we consider it ought; some days after, the situation was no longer the same. There was a reaction among the whites. They who possessed journals attacked us—treated us like brutes, like savages. We asked permission to reply, and that permission was denied us. In whatever way matters may go, we will remain calm, for we do not want to compromise ourselves with the mother country; we will wait with confidence to see it defend us against the wicked."—(Loud marks of disapprobation.)

M. MATHIEU LOUISI, ONE OF THE MEMBERS FOR MARTINIQUE, IN THE FRENCH NATIONAL ASSEMBLY.

In reply to M. J. De Laysterie, expressing his regret at the expressions just used, M. Louisi assured the House that his observations were intended to apply to the proprietors of certain journals who had made these attacks, and not to the planters.

THE NEW COLONY OF LABUAN.

This Sketch of the new Colony of Labuan, founded by our enterprising countryman, Sir James Brooke, was made in the month of August last, by the medical officer (Dr. Startin) of the honourable East India Company's war steamer Phlegethon, lately on a cruise in the Indian Archipelago, in search of pirates, thirty of whom she succeeded in capturing, and carrying to Singapore; these men forming the residue of the crew who seized and destroyed the General Wood, and murdered several hands and passengers on board, about a year and a half ago.

In the Sketch, the buildings shown upon the banks are the Government bungalows and guard-house; the navy well, left of the flag-staff; and, further left, the bath-house and other offices of the Phlegethon steamer, in front of the picture.

The following very interesting letter from an English officer at Sarawak appeared in the Times of Saturday last:—

Sarawak, Sept. 16.

"I arrived here the day before yesterday in the Auckland steamer, from Singapore; we anchored close to the Meander, about 12 miles down the river. I went on board, and Captain Keppel very kindly promised to take me in his gig to Sarawak when the tide turned. We had not left the frigate ten minutes before the rain came down in a perfect deluge, accompanied by the most vivid lightning I ever witnessed. We landed at Sarawak at half-past one at night, or rather morning, and found the Rajah and household in the land of dreams.

"I find Sarawak just what I expected. The prints give you an excellent idea of the place. The Rajah's bungalow is cool and comfortable. Yesterday we had a large party of the officers of the Auckland: I lionized the place with them. The fort, which mounts six guns, is in excellent order. The garrison went through their manœuvres in a style that did them great credit. I examined the antimony factory, which is rather a large establishment. I am writing in the hall of the bungalow; one of the Pangerans and a son of the late Rajah Muda Hassim are sitting by my side, amusing themselves with THE ILLUSTRATED NEWS. Mr M'Dougall and the other missionary, Mr. Wright, are living in the Court-house on the other side of the water, and I hear are making great progress; they have a school of 50 adults and children. M'Dougall widely diffuses the benefit of his medical science. Both are much liked by the inhabitants. They have not yet begun to proselytise. We sat down yesterday to a dinner party of fourteen; after dinner in walked about thirty of the noblesse, brothers, sons, and nephews of the late Muda Hassim, with their swordbearers and suite. I was presented to them, and shook hands with the gentlemen all round.

"Now for a little of Borneo politics. We have an expedition out against Sadong consisting of 90 Meander's men and 500 Sarawaks. The Sadong people have been in communication with pirates. Crookshank, who commanded the natives, has orders to make prisoners of the Sadong men, and bring them to Sarawak for examination. On the return of the expedition, we are to give a grand feast to the native chiefs and officers of the ships in the river—the spectacle to be such as will make an enduring impression upon the natives of Sarawak. Immediately afterwards we sail in the Meander for Labuan, stay there a month, and then proceed on a mission to Soolo to negotiate a treaty with the Sultan of Soolo; afterwards we are to have an expedition to Sakarran and Sarebas, which tribes have returned to their old habits of piracy; thus, you will see, there is a good deal of work cut out for us. I fully expect we shall have another bombardment of Brunei. The Sultan is said to be dying, and the villain Macota (the abettor of piracy) is again in power and carrying on his intrigues. I hear that Sir James Brooke is drawing up a treaty, which will be entered into by all the chiefs of the rivers between this and Brunei, acknowledging him as their chief and protector—an union for mutual assistance against piracy.

"Sept. 18.—The expedition against Sadong returned on Sunday, having effected their purpose and thoroughly frightened the inhabitants of that river: they have brought back several prisoners, who will be severely lectured and sent back again to Sadong. To-day we are to have the feast in honour of the Rajah's return to Sarawak, when the Sarawak flag will be hoisted. I have not told you of our boar hunt. Mr. Hentig's garden has been for a long time haunted by an enormous boar; everybody in the settlement had seen him, several had had shots at him; all differed as to his size—some said he was as big as a buffalo, others said as a donkey; the Malays declared that he had a charmed life, and that nothing but a silver bullet could kill him. However, on Saturday night, I sallied out about one o'clock, with my rifle and sword, and, in company with a middy of the Meander, took up a position in the porker's crusing ground. Here we found two other men awaiting the arrival of the monster; one of them, who knew the animal's beat, stationed himself at the gap in the fence, and did not wait long before the brute appeared. He first took barrels into him, and rolled him over; I came up in time to see Paddy kicking on his back, and shoved my sword through his heart, and put him out of his misery. He is a most extraordinary animal; we intend sending the head to the British Museum. He stood about three feet six inches high, and about eight feet from tip of tail to snout, with enormous tusks."

FALL OF RAILWAY ARCHES AT HOMERTON.

On Monday morning, at about 11 o'clock, a deplorable accident happened on the railway in the course of construction called the East and West India Dock Junction. It appears that as some workmen were employed clearing out the arches just completed, near Bridge-street, Homerton, three of them gave way, and, and to say, the men were buried beneath the ruins. Two poor fellows were taken out quite dead; they were literally crushed to pieces; and another man, who is severely injured, has been sent to the hospital. There were also two horses killed by the occurrence, as well as some carts destroyed. The cause of the accident is supposed to have arisen from removing the shores too soon, as the arches were only struck last week. Mr. Jackson, of Hoxton, the contractor, immediately began clearing away, in order to ascertain if any one or anything is still buried under the ruins. The bodies of the two deceased men were removed to the Woolpack public-house; and on Thursday an inquest was held, when the jury returned a special verdict of "Accidentally Killed; and that the arches, being injured by rain, the centres had been removed too early."

Of the structure little more than the piers remain, as shown in our Illustration.

REMAINS OF THE RAILWAY ARCHES, AT HOMERTON.

The directors of the Eastern Counties Railway having conveyed, free of charge, 99 of the German emigrants shipwrecked in the Barjundy, off Harwich lately, have received a letter from the Consul-General of Saxony and the Hanse Towns, expressing his gratitude for this liberality, an act, he says, of friendly sympathy, which will be sincerely felt and appreciated by their countrymen in Germany and in every part of the world.

Extraordinary Feat of Strength.—A few days ago one of those not unfrequent creatures of alarm in the streets, an over-goaded cow, escaped from her drivers, and was plunging madly along, when a tall handsome Highlander, of the name of Macrea, a gamekeeper with Glenmorriston, happened to pass. He at once threw himself before the enraged beast, seized her by the horns, tumbled her, and held her firmly pinioned there till the drivers came up, and effectually secured her with ropes. This feat of strength excited the astonishment of many an on-looker.—Inverness Courier

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

The Military Medals.—The distribution will take place in the present month. The manner of distribution is understood to be as follows:—The issue will take place under the auspices of Mr. Lindsay, and from the Commander-in-Chief's Office. All officers will receive their medals on application direct to the Military Secretary at the Horse Guards. The staff officers of pensioners will be called upon to furnish lists of the whole of the claimants (whether pensioners or otherwise) within their districts, and on receipt of these lists the metal for each claimant will be forwarded to the staff officers for delivery.

Naval Medals.—The Admiralty have issued a notice, in which "it is requested that claims for a naval medal, according to the forms shown in the Gazette of the 7th of June last, be forthwith sent to the Admiralty." The notice further adds, "it is not, at present, intended to limit the time for receiving applications, but it is desirable they should be sent in by the 15th inst. This notice has no reference to claims which have been already preferred."

Apprentice Marriages.—The attention of the Board of Admiralty having been called to the fact that many of the apprentices in her Majesty's dockyards have married at an unusually early age, their Lordships have directed the following order to be issued:—"Admiralty, Dec. 4, 1848.—It having come to the knowledge of my Lords that marriages have been contracted by apprentices at the age of 17, and even 16—in contravention of the terms of their agreement, which states that they shall not contract marriage during the period of their indentures—I am to desire you will make known to the apprentices that the clause upon this subject will in future be strictly enforced, and that no apprentice will be placed upon the establishment should he marry before he has served his time. My Lords are satisfied that both physically and morally this restriction will be a benefit to all parties. By command, H. G. Ward."

Admiralty Railways.—Notices have been served, by direction of the Admiralty, during the last few days, upon the necessary parties at Portsea and other places, with a view to the commencement of operations in laying down the system of short railways or tramways at the various arsenals and harbours.

Lamartine's "Jocelyn" and Louis Napoleon.—The library of Louis Napoleon has been sold by auction, and amongst the books was a handsome copy, bound in morocco, of Lamartine's poem of "Jocelyn." The value of the work was much enhanced by the fact that on the inside of the cover appeared the following words in the handwriting of the Prince, in French:—"Undertook the reading of this book at Florence, Sunday, the 7th of May, 1837. Abandoned it as being too sublime for me. Undertook the reading for the second time, Monday the 8th, without being more fortunate. Recommenced by a new effort, Tuesday the 9th, and abandoned it definitively." Considering the present position of the author and the critic as rival candidates for the Presidency of the French Republic, this anecdote is somewhat curious.

CHRISTMAS, 1848.

ON DECEMBER 23, WILL BE PUBLISHED,

A GRAND

DOUBLE NUMBER

OF THE

ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS,

CONTAINING A SERIES OF

BEAUTIFUL ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE PICTURESQUE FESTIVAL OF CHRISTMAS,

BY THE MOST EMINENT ARTISTS.

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY-LANE.—THE LAST WEEK.—M. JULLIEN'S CONCERTS.

M. Jullien has the honour to announce that, the Theatre being let at Christmas for the performance of Italian Opera, his National de Paris (he present is most positively the last week. During these our last Nights all the most popular Quadrilles will be performed, including the National Anthems, and the Army Quadrille [illegible]

MONDAY, DECEMBER 11.

On MONDAY, Dec. 11th, M. Jullien will produce a new Quadrille, on which occasion he will also play, for the first time, the new Valse [illegible] composed expressly for the occasion. M. Jullien will have to announce [illegible] of presenting a copy of a New Polka to every lady visiting the dress circle or pit [illegible]

BAL MASQUE

The Grand Bal Masque will take place on MONDAY, Dec. 18th, and terminate the Season

ROBERT-HOUDIN.—ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—M. ROBERT HOUDIN will have the honour to resume his Soirees at the St James's Theatre during the ensuing Week, and will continue to present his SOIREES FANTASTIQUES on MONDAY, TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY EVENING, until the end of the Christmas Vacation. Doors open at 8. The Programme will include numerous Experiments, many new, composed and executed by Robert Houdin expressly for these first Soirees. Boxes and Stalls may be secured at Mr Mitchell's Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street; and at the Box-Office of the Theatre from 11 till 5

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—DUMBOLTON'S SERENADERS.—This celebrated troupe, whose performances have excited universal admiration throughout the United States, will repeat their popular ETHIOPIAN ENTERTAINMENT at the above Theatre every MONDAY, WEDNESDAY, and FRIDAY EVENING The Programme will include a variety of Original songs, Glees, &c. entirely new to this country written and composed expressly for this company.—Doors open at 8.—Boxes 4s.; Pit, 2s Boxes and Stalls at Mitchell's Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street; and at the Box-Office of the Theatre.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—LECTURES on AGRICULTURAL CHEMISTRY by Dr. RYAN, at Half-past Three daily and on the Evenings of Monday, Wednesday, and Friday at Nine o'Clock. A Lecture on Voltaic Electricity and the Electric Light on the Evenings of Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, at Nine o'Clock, by Dr. [illegible] Also Dr. Ryan's Lectures daily, at Two o'Clock. The Microscope at One o'Clock daily. The Dissolving Views, with Historical Descriptions The Chromatrope at One o'Clock daily. The PHANTASMAGORIA, by Childs, at Eight o'Clock. Diver and Diving Bell. Working Models explained. Admission, 1s; Schools, Half-price

EXETER HALL.—WEDNESDAY CONCERTS.—The FOURTH of these CONCERTS will be held on WEDNESDAY EVENING NEXT, Dec. 13th.—Vocal Performers: Mrs. Alexander Newton, Miss Poyo, Miss L. Pyne, and Herr Reichardt. Violoncello, Mr. Lucas. Pianoforte, Mr. Kuhe. Conductor, Mr. Land. Reserved Stalls, 7s.; may be had at No. 4, Exeter Hall, and of all music-sellers and librarians

WEIPPERT'S SOIREES DANSANTES, PRINCESS'S CONCERT ROOMS.—MONDAY, DEC. 11, being the last Soiree previous to Christmas A Subscriber of Two Guineas is entitled to an admission for himself and lady any six nights during the Season Single Tickets 7s each. Weippert's Palace Band as usual, conducted by himself. M C., Mr. Cowie. The Refreshments will be under the superintendence of Mr. Eleven, consists of Three Tickets and Programmes at 21, Soho-square; and of Mr Cowie, 59, Great Marlborough-street

WALHALLA.—SALLE de VALENTINO, Leicester-square. The Assembly Saloons have been fitted up in the magnificent saloon the no plus ultra of decoration and execution. The arrangements are contracted to four professors of dancing to Her Majesty's Theatre and consequently comprise some of the first instrumentalists in the Metropolis. Conductor, Mr. Hall. The Juvenile Promenade Concerts, under the direction of Mr. Jupiter and Eclipse Weather, will commence on Monday, the 11th inst., on which occasion the orchestra will be considerably augmented.—Doors open at a quarter past 8, dancing commencing at half-past, and continue up without intermission till half-past 11.—Admission, 1s

THE MISSISSIPPI and MISSOURI. By BANVARD.—[illegible] Mississippi and Missouri, and will be exhibited every Evening at the [illegible] Piccadilly, for a few weeks only, when it will be removed to the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly, for the remainder of the season. Mr. Banvard has been to the Source of the Mississippi, and has taken sketches of the Scenery on the Banks of New Orleans, being by far the largest picture ever painted, and will be found to contain upwards of 12 miles of canvas. Open from 10 o'Clock [illegible] Admission, 1s. Children under 10 years of age, half price.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, Dec. 10.—Second Sunday in Advent. Full Moon at 11h. 44m. A.M.
MONDAY, 11 Jupiter rises at 4h. 47m. A.M.
TUESDAY, 12 Saturn rises at 5h. 7m. P.M.
WEDNESDAY, 13 Lucy. The length of the day is 7h. 56m.
THURSDAY, 14 Day breaks at 7h. 56m., and twilight ends at 5h. 36m.
FRIDAY, 15 The Sun rises at 8h. 2m., and sets at 3h. 50m.
SATURDAY, 16 Ember Days. Cambridge Term ends.

During the month of December there are many eclipses of Jupiter's satellites; for a list, see the "Illustrated London Almanack." Saturn is in the constellation Pisces. He is an evening star, and sets, on the 1st, at 5h. 12m. A.M.; on the 15th, at 11h. 16m. P.M.; and on the last day, at 10h. 12m. P.M. He rises at about noon, and souths at an alt itude of 32° every day; on the 1st, at 6h. 39m. P.M.; on the 15th, at 5h. 43m. P.M.; and the last day, at 4h. 46m. P.M. His motion among the stars is eastward throughout the month. No bright star is near him throughout the month. The ring is still visible.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING DECEMBER 16

Sunday		Monday		Tuesday		Wednesday		Thursday		Friday		Saturday
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
1 15	1 40	2 3	2 30	2 50	3 15	3 45	4 7	4 30	4 55	5 15	5 40	6	6 30

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"P. V. Yvesanion." It may be deposited as collateral security for your note of hand, but can only be regarded as an different security, from the contingencies arising with regard both to life and property in the payment of premiums.

"Money."—It is the same as a bank-note if correctly endorsed by the payee; and, like a bank-note, is payable whenever demanded, however great the lapse of time.

"W. B."—On the 19th of May India Stock gave 283½; and on the 27th of April, 228. India Stock pays 10½ per cent.; consequently £1000 India Stock will produce £105 per annum.

"Clueless."—We cannot advise you.

"M. R. W."—Certainly not.

"Jo[illegible], Somerset."—We do not know. Who's work may be had, by order, of any bookseller; [illegible] and 10s 6d.

"Constructor."—Address, Her Majesty's Theatre.

"Cork."—We do not undertake to answer.

"Lindley Rey."—Barkentine, should consult the "Jersey Guide."

"Lize."—Address, 15, Essex-street, Strand.

"T. G."—Have forwarded."—Apply to Mr. Wells, 9b, High Holborn.

"J. E. F."—Apply to Barker and Thwaite, silversmiths, Fleet-street

"Wellesley."—The records of fossils having been found in stone and the hearts of trees are yet disputed by naturalists, although in many instances they are circumstantially authenticated

"Simple Country Cousin."—Cut two narrow bands in the card-board, and introduce the coin beneath them.

"W. S. M."—The name of the opera of the "Huguenots" is published by Cramer, Beale, and Co., Regent-street

"A. P."—The guide-books of the districts, of which there is little choice.

"W. J."—Wrington." and "C. M. S."—We do not take fire at questions at our le

"J. G. L." Dorchester, is thanked for his pains, though we cannot adopt his suggestions

"Endymion." The price of the "Navy List" is 2s.

"W. K." A will may be made at any per od of the l.stame of the testator, after he has attained the age of 21.

"Canis," Liverpool.—Declined.

"Hellas."—The agent who supplies your paper can alone explain the delay.

"X. Y. Z." An heiress, in her own right, is a lady who has no brother, or whose brothers have either married women of fortune, or have no male issue; the issue of her mother, in case the latter was an heiress. The children of an heiress have the right to quarter her arms, and to use the quarterings she was entitled to. In a selection of the quarterings of the maternal grandfather's would seem to us preferable.

"Alpha" shall receive a reply by post.

"Ambition" should apply personally, or by letter, to G. R. Harrison, Esq., Heralds' Office, Doctors' Commons

"Fi Fi." See Neale's "Feasts and Fasts."

"A Reader." Cranbrook The annual cost of a Hawker's License, on foot, is £4. Apply at Somerset House.

"Aspho." Leamington, should be left to the work

"E. G." Inside master.—Not at present

"Charles Jumper" had better show his picture to Messrs. Smith, 137, New Bond-st.

"Woodpecker," Oxford.—Address "F. S.," 196, Strand.

"C. A."—Who is Mr. Stone?

"W. O." We are not aware of Mr. Whitesides's defence of Mr. Smith O'Brien having been published separately from the newspapers.

"C. Sylvanus."—See the "Illustrated London Almanack"

"Pa Pa," Exeter. The security will be liable only for the first year.

"Cyrus." 85, Hatton Garden.

"W. E." The notice must be regulated by the mode of payment of the rent.

"J. K.," Clifton.—Drawing received.

"W. G. H." By interest with an East India Director.

"D. Y." We cannot advise you

"Locomotive." There is a "Wine and Spirit Merchant's Guide" published by Sherwood and Co., Paternoster-row

"I.," Bangor.—The "Forest Maiden," is in German, may be had, by order, of Williams and Norgate, Henrietta-street, Covent-Garden.

"A Staffordshire Subscriber."—We can not.

"G. W.," Hull. We cannot spare room

"A Constant Reader," Manchester, had better consult a Solicitor.

"A G.," North Shields. The Silver Denarii, of which you have sent wax impressions, are of Trajan, 851 870. Flavius Julius Constantius was the second son of Constantine the Great, 350—361.

"An Old Subscriber."—We are not very certain of her Majesty's present surname

"Fidus," Oxford.—For our correspondent's mother have no brother, or if her two there have died without issue, then will be entailed, at her death, to quarter her arms. The descent, or inheritance of property, has nothing to do with heraldic honours.

"Well- Wisher," Berkeley-square, is thanked for his polite letter. We will not enter on the pedigree of the family in question.

"H. H. M.," Cuddington.—Children become legitimate, to all intents and purposes.

"E. S. A."—The pay of a Captain, in the Royal Artillery, is eleven shillings and a penny per day; in the Royal Horse Artillery, sixteen shillings and a penny.

 Replies to several Correspondents are unavoidably deferred.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1848.

ABDICATION OF THE EMPEROR OF AUSTRIA.

The lull in the affairs of Austria that followed the defeat and submission of the Viennese has been succeeded by an announcement of no less importance than the abdication of the Emperor, and of his brother, the Archduke Francis Charles, the next heir of the Imperial Throne, in favour of the Archduke Francis Joseph, the son of the last-mentioned Prince. The proclamations of the late and of the present Sovereign are before the world. The late Emperor takes an impressive farewell of his subjects, and in freeing the various people of his Empire of their duties towards him, he sole nly, and before the face of the world, transmits all his duties and rights to his nephew, as his legitimate successor; and recommends his people to the grace and especial protection of God. He prays that the Almighty may vouchsafe to restore them to domestic peace, guide the misled back to their duties, and enlighten those that are foolish; that He may re-open the dried-up fountains of prosperity, and bless Austria with His richest blessings, enlightening and strengthening his successor, the Emperor Francis Joseph I.; that he may prosper in his solemn and arduous vocation, for his own honour, for the glory of the Imperial house, and the welfare of his people. Then ew Emperor, who is but eighteen years of age, expresses his conviction of the necessity and the value of free institutions, and enters with confidence on the path of a prosperous reformation of the Monarchy. On the basis of true liberty, on the basis of the equality of rights of all the nationalities of Austria, the equality of all citizens before the law, and on the basis of their equally partaking in the representation and legislation, his Majesty trusts that the country will rise to its ancient grandeur; that it will acquire new strength to resist the storms of the time, and that it will be a hall to shelter the tribes of many t ngues united under the sceptre of his forefathers. Jealous of the glory of the crown, and resolved to preserve the dignity unimpaired, but ready to share his privileges with the representatives of the people, his Majesty hopes by the assistance of God and the co-operation of the people to succeed in uniting all the tribes of the Monarchy into one integral state. He relies on the immediate establishment of legal order, on the fidelity of his troops, on the loyalty of the people, and concludes: "People of Austria! It is an awful time in which we mount on the throne of our fathers. Great are the duties of our office, great is its responsibility. May God protect us." Vienna remained perfectly tranquil on the receipt of these proclamations, which are dated at Olmütz on the 2nd instant. The greatest praise is due to the Archduke Francis Charles, whose unpopularity would in all probability have rendered him an unsafe successor to the throne to which he was legally entitled; and whose renunciation of the Imperial dignity is a self-sacrifice which should receive the gratitude, as it must merit the praise, of the Austrian people. The late Emperor has left Olmutz for Prague, where he intends for the future to reside, and where he will doubtless receive the affectionate care which is due to the amiability of his character, and the greatness of his calamity under which his mind has been so long darkened. Prince Windischgratz and Baron Jellachich have been summoned to Olmutz by the new Emperor. His youth, and the difficulties of his position, will cause the best and the wisest minds of Austria to gather around him and support him by their counsels. He has a mighty task before him, but he enters upon it untrammelled by any previous acts or opinions, and unimpeded by any unpopularity. The best wishes of the friends of safe and rational liberty in all countries will attend him if he brings, as we must suppose he does, honesty of purpose to his aid. At all events, under his guidance there will be a greater chance of repose for Austria than it could have hoped for under the nominal rule of a Sovereign, whose unhappy state of mind rendered it unavoidable that others, and often irresponsible persons should govern for him.

The same mail that brings this intelligence brings the almost equally important announcement that the King of Prussia dissolved the National Assembly on the 5th inst. It was the only possible means of untying the knot into which Prussian politics had twisted themselves, by the mutual obstinacy of the Ministry and the Assembly. The King alleges, in the decree of Council by which this step is notified to the people, that he dissolves the Chamber with some regret, but that he acted on the advice of the Ministry, and on the conviction that it was impossible to carry on the work of the Constitution with the present Chamber, with any regard to the dignity of the Crown. By another decree his Majesty grants a Constitution to the Prussian States. The Ministry has been slightly modified: M. Von der Heydt is appointed to the Finance Department; Von Bulow, Foreign Affairs; Von Pommersche, Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Public Works; but the Count de Brandenburg is to retain office.

The overland mail from India, with dates from Calcutta to the 23rd, Madras the 24th of October, and Bombay the 2nd of November, brings but little further intelligence of the war before Moultan, and of the state of the Punjaub generally. That little is not of a character to inspire belief in the unimportance of the new Sikh rebellion. Shere Singh, who, it will be remembered, had gone over from the British and joined the Dewan Moolraj in Moultan, slipped away on the night of the 9th of October. General Whish, who is securely encamped at a distance of four miles from Moultan, restrained from pursuing him, on the ground that the attack would have been a night one against artillery; and that our army, which was moreover deficient in cavalry, would have been exposed to an attack on the rear by the forces of Moolraj. Shere Singh has penetrated into the Hazerah country, where his father, Chuttur Singh, has a large force; and we shall, doubtless, hear by the next mail some further particulars of the extent of the rebellion, and of the plans of these and other Sikh leaders. It is supposed that a combined attack upon Lahore is contemplated, a result for which our authorities are quite prepared. Orders from the Commander-in-Chief have appeared, dated Simla, October 13th, by which he constitutes a force of 30,000 men, to be designated the army of the Punjaub, and of which Lord Gough will immediately take the command in person. His Lordship has left Simla, hastening forward to Ferozepore, vid Loodianah, with such rapidity as to be obliged to renounce a contemplated interview with the Governor-General before placing himself at the head of the army. All these facts are significant of a great danger. They are, however, equally significant of the promptness to meet and to arrest it. The Sikhs need a new lesson, and it is probable they will obtain it.

In times less momentous than the present, the death of such a man as Ibrahim Pasha would have employed the pens of half the journalists of Europe. But, amid the stirring events of our European politics, the disappearance from this worldly stage of a person who held so high a position, and ran so remarkable a career, receives but the obituary notice bestowed upon all whose names have been public property; and attention, for awhile disturbed by the recollection of the dead, is fixed with renewed eagerness upon the deeds of the living. And yet the death of Ibrahim Pasha is an event which should excite more notice. Mehemet Ali has for some time been in a state of utter dotage, and on the 1st of September last Ibrahim was formally nominated by the Sultan to the Pachalic of Egypt. His actual governorship has, therefore, been but of short duration, but virtually he administered affairs for a considerable period prior to his official elevation by the Sultan.

Ibrahim Pasha has left three sons—but the Viceroyalty of Egypt will not devolve upon either. The new ruler of that country is Abbas Pacha, son of Tussoon Pacha, Mehemet's second son, who died of the plague in 1816. He succeeds as being the eldest living male of Mehemet Ali's family. He is said to have had and to desire little communication with Europeans, to have no sympathy with European ideas or arts, and to be a strict Mahomedan. Too little, however, is known of him to justify any speculations as to the kind of Sovereign he will make; but for the interests of Europe as well as of Egypt, it is to be hoped that he has sagacity enough to pursue that policy towards Christendom by which Mehemet Ali and Ibrahim rendered their names so illustrious and conferred so many benefits on Egypt. Though Ibrahim was a man of blood, he is not to be judged by the standard of our ideas in that respect; and in recording his death, we may affirm notwithstanding all the cruelties of his career—that he was not only one of the most remarkable men of this remarkable era, but a wise ruler, who understood, at the same time, his own people and their neighbours. It is not every Eastern Sovereign upon whom such an eulogium could be passed with justice.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT OSBORNE.

On Sunday morning the Queen and Prince Albert, accompanied by the Countess of Gainsborough, Lord and Lady J. Russell, Col. B. Drummond, and Col. Bouverie, attended divine service at Whippingham Church.

On Monday, Lord and Lady John Russell, who had been on a visit to her Majesty, left Osborne for Southampton in her Majesty's yacht the Fairy, and returned to Pembroke Lodge, Richmond Park.

The members of the Royal family take their accustomed open-air exercise every morning on the sea beach.

FUNERAL OF VISCOUNT MELBOURNE. The funeral of the late Viscount Melbourne took place on Friday afternoon (last week), when the remains of the deceased were removed from Hall, near Welwyn, for interment in the family vault in Hatfield Church. Viscount Melbourne (Lord Besavale) was prevented by the state of his health from assisting in the obsequies of his deceased brother. Viscount Beauvale, Lord Ashley, Earl Cowper, the Right Hon. Edward Ellice, and the other relatives and personal friends of the late Viscount, were present at the ceremony.

THE ROYAL EXCHANGE.—The case of her Majesty's Attorney-General v. William Strange, Jasper Tomsett Judge, and Jasper Augustus Frederick Judge," and also that of his Royal Highness Prince Albert against the same defendants, has been appointed to come on for argument in Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce's Court, Lincoln's Inn, on Saturday (this day). From the great number of affidavits which have been put upon the file of the Court by the complainants, and the voluminous nature of the answer to the information and bill which has been filed on the part of the defendants, the arguments and speeches of counsel are considered likely to occupy the Court the greater part of the day. This case, from its extreme novelty and the many important points which are involved, excites the greatest interest, not only in legal circles, but throughout the country.

THE STATE APARTMENTS IN WINDSOR CASTLE are open gratuitously to the public on Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays. The Lord Chamberlain's tickets may be obtained in London, gratis, of Messrs. Paul and Dominic Colnaghi, printsellers, No. 14, Pall Mall East; Mr. Moon, printseller, No. 20, Threadneedle-street; Mr. Mitchell, bookseller, No. 33, Old Bond-street; Messrs. Ackermann and Co., printsellers, No. 96, Strand; Mr. Wright, bookseller, No. 60, Pall Mall. Of whom, also, guide-books may be obtained, for one penny each. The tickets are available for one week from the day they are issued. They are not transferable; and it is contrary to her Majesty's command that payment for, or in reference to, them be made in any manner whatever. The hours of admission to the state apartments are, from 1st April to 31st October, between 11 and 4; and from 1st November to 31st March, between 11 and 3.

PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE BUSINESS FOR THE SESSION.—Tuesday was the day appointed at the Private Bill Office, in the Committee-room of the House of Commons, for public inspection of the plans and sections for railways and new works intended to be applied for in the ensuing session. There are 29 lodgments of plans and sections for railways, 23 for works of a miscellaneous description. Of railways there are plans and sections lodged for three new lines—that of the Brentwood, Chelmsford, and Pitsea Railway, intended to unite the Eastern Counties, Great Western, and London and North-western Railways; the Faversham and Chatham Railway, to unite with the South-Eastern Railway; and the Belfast and Ballynahinch Railway, to unite with the Belfast and Ballymena. There are plans and sections for eleven new branches in connexion with existing lines; seven for new extensions, and seven for deviations and abandonments of lines and branches already granted. Besides these, there are upwards of twenty measures for amalgamations, one of which ceases is that of the proposed amalgamation of the Newmarket and Chesterford with the Eastern Counties Railway. Of the deposits of a miscellaneous character, ten are for Waterworks, six for Navigation improvements, six for Improved Drainage, five for Gas Companies, six for Docks, three for Insurance Companies, two for Iron Companies, one for Sewers, and one for Baths only requiring a formal deposit.

THE SERPENTINE. The Commissioners of Woods and Forests have decided upon draining the Serpentine in Hyde-park, and having it cleaned.

RETURNS OF AN OFFICER'S WIDOW AND CHILDREN. On Tuesday an inquest was held at the Red Lion, Robert-street, Grosvenor-square, on the body of Mrs. Jane Brown, aged 36, who was the late Captain Charles Brown, of the 72nd Highlanders, who was killed while in the discharge of duty in Sutlej. The deceased had for some years been in reduced circumstances, and had for some time past acted as a small beer retailer at No. 7, Robert-street, Portman-square, but had been unable to work for the last few weeks, owing to her confinement, which took place on the 1st inst., but had died that morning. Deceased was the daughter of Mr. Robert Hall, late of Bath, and had married the deceased against the wishes of her friends, who had refused to have anything to do with her on account of her marriage with a soldier. Deceased had left a paper on the table which she had written upon the day before her death, and which was addressed to Mr. Hall, her father, in which she implored forgiveness for her conduct, and begged that he would take charge of her two children. In a postscript she requested that her father would send her a mourning ring. The following heart-rending words: "God bless you all. Remember me. Distress, disappointment, wretchedness, and despair drive me to this unhappy end, and are the cause of all." Verdict, "Temporary Insanity."

FIRE AT THE LIVERPOOL GAS WORKS. Some excitement was caused in Liverpool, on Thursday, in consequence of its becoming known that the premises of the Liverpool Gas Works were on fire, and a fear of explosion generally prevailed; but we are happy in being able to state that, although there was at one time considerable danger, no loss of life occurred. The fire was confined to some outbuildings on the premises. The damage sustained by the company's works is said to be considerable. Nothing is positively known as to the origin of the fire.

POSTSCRIPT.

DREADFUL ACCIDENT AT HULL.

A most disastrous occurrence, involving the lives of seventeen individuals, has taken place at Hull. On Tuesday morning, about a quarter to six o'clock, a number of men, women, and children, who were employed at the Kingston Cotton-mills, and who resided in the neighbourhood of the Groves, got into a boat, as usual, at the bottom of the York street, and proceeded to the other side of the River Hull to the Kingston Cotton-mills. Besides the ferryman, Charles Ireland, there were upwards of twenty-five persons in the boat, consisting of men, women, and children, the latter from five to twelve years of age. The boat was very full, and the tide running strong; and when they had got a few yards across the river, the current, which was impeded by a vessel moored close to immediately heard a cry, and a simultaneous movement by the passengers — being made to the other end, the boat capsized, and every soul was precipitated into the stream. The shrieks of the unfortunate people brought several persons to their assistance; but, in being carried by the tide, little help could be extended to them. Eight only were saved out of the twenty-six who were in the boat. The boatman managed to reach the shore with the greatest difficulty, and was saved, but in a very dangerous state. The others who were saved were all more or less injured in coming in contact with the vessels, stones, and pieces of timber in the river. Several bodies have been recovered since.

CHARTIST TRIALS.

Chester Spring Commission.—On Wednesday, at the special commission, which had been opened on the preceding day, by Baron Alderson and Mr. Justice Erle, George Joseph Mantle, aged 22, a carver, was indicted for conspiring, with other evil-disposed persons, at Hyde, with force and arms, to subvert the laws, and also for uttering certain seditious language in the course of a meeting there held. The Attorney-General (Sir J. Jervis), Mr. Welsby, and Mr. Daniel appeared for the Crown. The prisoner defended himself. On the indictment being read, the prisoner applied for a chair, table, and writing materials, to be placed in the dock for his accommodation. — The Judge said he must be treated as other prisoners, and requested him to pay attention to the indictment. — The prisoner said he could not take notes unless this accommodation were provided. The Judge persevered in disallowing any accommodation. The prisoner, having pleaded "Not Guilty," applied for a copy of the depositions. The Judge said he had no power to give him a copy. The Attorney-General said he would give him one as a matter of favour, and handed it to him. The Attorney-General, in an able speech, opened the case for the prosecution. He said the defendant was not a native of this county, but a hired propagator of sedition from Birmingham, and he was charged with uttering a seditious speech on the evening of the 8th of August, at the Chartist Rooms in Hyde, to about 1500 persons. It was the duty of our constitution that persons were permitted to discuss all matters of Government, and all grievances of their own, real or imaginary; but they were not allowed to excite and inflame the populace by parading them to subvert, by an appeal to force, the laws and institutions of their country. The Attorney-General then read the speech imputed to the prisoner, and commented on it at considerable length.

Three witnesses were called, who deposed to the language used by the prisoner at a meeting at Hyde, on the 8th of August, which contained the usual topics of the Chartists read about that period. The prisoner then read a long rambling speech, which occupied the Court for about two hours.—The learned Judge went over the whole of the evidence, expounding the law applicable to political offences, and applying it to the facts as detailed by the witnesses. The Jury, after a brief deliberation, returned a verdict of "Guilty."—Sentence deferred.

Society of Antiquaries.—On Thursday evening, M. Guizot and the Chevalier Bunsen were admitted Honorary Fellows, on the introduction of the Marquis of Northampton and Sir George Staunton. The President (Viscount Mahon) was in the chair, and addressed the illustrious foreigners with remarkable grace and propriety, referring to the excellent labours of both in the field of antiquities, and especially to the Chevalier Bunsen's late learned work on Egyptian History. M. Guizot returned thanks with great energy of manner, promising to attend the meetings of the society frequently, and the Chevalier Bunsen expressed how happy he should be at all times to contribute to the progress and prosperity of the society. They were received with much cheering.

Bank of England.—Another specimen of ingenious fraud has been discovered at this establishment. A few days ago a note for £1000 was presented for payment. An inspector examined it, found it genuine, locked to the numbers it, she stopped notes, and, seeing that the note presented was not among them, two £500 notes were given in exchange, for which gold was procured almost immediately. On the following day it was discovered that the leading figure of the number had been dexterously changed, and that 94825 was altered to 04825. It required the eye of a chymist to detect the change. The figure was so well inserted that ordinary examination was equal to its discovery. The notes that were sent in formed one of a series of which a bank clerk was defrauded a few years ago. The clerks engaged in the transaction have been ordered to pay the money between them.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

AUSTRIA.—ABDICATION OF THE EMPEROR.

Our latest advices from Vienna contain news of a most important character. The Emperor Ferdinand has abdicated in favour of his nephew, the son of the Archduke Charles, who, as the legitimate successor of the ex-Emperor, has waived his right to the Imperial throne, which he has yielded son, who is only eighteen years of age, ascends the title of Francis Joseph I.

The manifesto in which the ex-Emperor announces his abdication is dated Olmütz, the 2nd instant (saturday last) His Majesty, in assigning his reasons for this all-important step, expounding the law applicable to political offences, and applying it to the facts as detailed by the witnesses. The Jury, after a brief deliberation, returned a verdict of "Guilty."—Sentence deferred.

Society of Antiquaries.—On Thursday evening, M. Guizot and the Chevalier Bunsen were admitted Honorary Fellows, on the introduction of the Marquis of Northampton and Sir George Staunton. The President (Viscount Mahon) was in the chair, and addressed the illustrious foreigners with remarkable grace and propriety, referring to the excellent labours of both in the field of antiquities, and especially to the Chevalier Bunsen's late learned work on Egyptian History. M. Guizot returned thanks with great energy of manner, promising to attend the meetings of the society frequently, and the Chevalier Bunsen expressed how happy he should be at all times to contribute to the progress and prosperity of the society. They were received with much cheering.

Bank of England.—Another specimen of ingenious fraud has been discovered at this establishment. A few days ago a note for £1000 was presented for payment. An inspector examined it, found it genuine, locked to the numbers it, she stopped notes, and, seeing that the note presented was not among them, two £500 notes were given in exchange, for which gold was procured almost immediately. On the following day it was discovered that the leading figure of the number had been dexterously changed, and that 94825 was altered to 04825. It required the eye of a chymist to detect the change. The figure was so well inserted that ordinary examination was equal to its discovery. The notes that were sent in formed one of a series of which a bank clerk was defrauded a few years ago. The clerks engaged in the transaction have been ordered to pay the money between them.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

AUSTRIA.—ABDICATION OF THE EMPEROR.

Our latest advices from Vienna contain news of a most important character. The Emperor Ferdinand has abdicated in favour of his nephew, the son of the Archduke Charles, who, as the legitimate successor of the ex-Emperor, has waived his right to the Imperial throne, which he has yielded son, who is only eighteen years of age, ascends the title of Francis Joseph I.

The manifesto in which the ex-Emperor announces his abdication is dated Olmütz, the 2nd instant (saturday last) His Majesty, in assigning his reasons for this all-important step, expounding the law applicable to political offences, and applying it to the facts as detailed by the witnesses. The Jury, after a brief deliberation, returned a verdict of "Guilty."—Sentence deferred.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

PUBLIC MEETINGS

Agricultural Society and the late Lord G. Bentinck.—At the annual meeting of the Society for the Protection of Agriculture and British Industry, held, on Thursday, at the society's rooms in Bond-street, it was stated in the committee's report that £31 was given by the society towards the erection of a memorial to the late lamented Lord G Bentinck, for which a subscription is present being collected.

Sir Giles's Ragged Schools.—The fifth annual report of the committee of this benevolent and useful institution was read on Monday evening, at a public meeting of its supporters, in the Store-street Rooms, the Hon. and Rev. H. M. Villiers in the chair. The report stated that, during the year, 318 boys were [illegible] into the school, the average number of attendance being 92. In [illegible] school was attended, the average attendance being between 50 and [illegible] three paid, and forty volunteer teachers. In the winter months of the [illegible] year. The school has lately been removed to George-street, St. Giles's, the former site being required for other purposes. A [illegible] Ragged School, in Carter-street, Lambeth, under the superintendence of the gentleman attending the meeting, for the purpose of raising a fund to enable them to build [illegible] premises of which is estimated at about £600, of which £240 only has as yet been collected together. The Government grant, during the last year, has sent out to Port Philip 16 of the most promising of the boys and young [illegible] attending this school, at an expense of £320; and, others will, it is expected, be sent out in the same manner next year.

Coachmakers' Benevolent Institution. On Wednesday evening, a general meeting of the members and subscribers to the above institution, founded for the relief of aged, infirm, and distressed coachmakers, coachsmiths, and harness makers, their widows and orphans—was held at the Red Lion Tavern. The report congratulated the members on the steady increase, the committee having been able to invest a further sum of £50 towards the funded capital. After the necessary expenditure, there remained a balance in favour of the society of about £25. The report concluded by an earnest appeal to the trade for support.

Association for the Relief of the Poor of the City of London. On Wednesday evening the annual meeting of this association was held at the London Coffee-house, Ludgate-hill, Alderman Sir Peter Laurie in the chair. It was stated that the City Kitchen was open for the sale of coals for eleven weeks between January and March. Within that period 26,979 cwt. was delivered at 6d per 112 lbs., free of carriage within the City boundaries. The donation was still encumbered with a portion of the debt incurred in 1847, and owed £190. The report concluded by calling on the subscribers to exert themselves on behalf of the poor for the approaching winter and season. The auditor's report stated that there was a balance at the bankers', at the close of last year, of £17 10s 8d; £5,866 5s. was received during this year, and there was a balance at the bankers' of £21 13s. 9d. The report and auditor's account were received and adopted On the motion of the Rev. Mr. Harding, it was resolved, that the system of administering relief by coals only be continued. The various officers of the association were re elected.

Exeter-buildings Ragged Schools—First Anniversary.—The first annual meeting in support of this institution was held on Tuesday evening, at the Cadogan Rooms, Sloane-street, Chelsea, Ashley Cooper, Esq., in the chair. The meeting having been opened with prayer by the Rev. — Rashdall, the chairman addressed the meeting. The secretary read the report, from which it appeared that during the last year (the first of its existence), at the Exeter buildings Ragged School, the attendance of children, who had previously wandered about the streets, had gradually increased from 30 to an average of 70, and there was every hope of a further increase. There was a marked improvement in the habits of the pupils, and there was nothing necessary to complete success but an increase in the funds. At first the children were so intractable that they could be occasionally to be called in, but a mixture of firmness had gradually brought them to a better state of feeling. They had received last year about £180, including a grant of £19, of which the balance remaining was only £3 14s. 3d. The [illegible] had averaged about £1 for each child. Increased building accommodation was necessary, and this only could be effected by more liberal contributions from the district. The report, after making a short reference to other operations in support of the institution having been passed, the meeting separated.

Reformation of Juvenile Offenders.—It appears by the report of the committee of the Philanthropic Society for the Reformation of Juvenile Offenders, that an eligible farm of 140 acres has been purchased at Potters-bar, near Barnet, and it is hoped, by the erection of the necessary buildings as speedily as possible, to transfer the establishment of the society from its present London site in St George's-fields. The plans of Mr. Moffat have been selected, and, as the Royal Highness Prince Albert has consented to lay the foundation stone, immediately after the ceremony, the building will be commenced. Cards for admission to see the ceremony will be issued, and it is hoped that he should see the public duly support the exertions.

Improved Dwellings for the Poor.—Her Majesty the Queen Dowager has forwarded £50 to the fund now raising in St. James's parish, Westminster, for the erection of improved dwellings for the poor of the locality. The benevolent example of her Majesty has been followed by the Duke of Cleveland, Lord Overstone, Esq., and Hudson Gurney, Esq., who have contributed the amounts. A local fund has already been fixed upon. It has been resolved to commence the buildings with abundance of water, and every necessary convenience for domestic comfort and cleanliness. The project has met the approbation of all parties. The Bishop of London has sent £20, and the Bishop of Winchester £20. Already £500 has been contributed, and it is expected that in a few days the works will be begun.

The Conduit in Cornhill.—On Wednesday a pump, bearing the following inscription, was placed at the south-east angle of the Royal Exchange, on Cornhill:—"On this spot a well was first made and a house of correction built by Henry Wallis, Mayor of London, in 1282. The well was discovered, much enlarged, and this pump erected in 1799, by the contributions of the Bank of England, East India Company, and the neighbouring Fire-offices, together with the bankers and traders of the ward of Cornhill." Round the head of the pump are the emblematic devices of the fire-offices. The well, which is of considerable depth, is situate in the centre of Cornhill, fronting the south entrance to the Royal Exchange. It was opened on Wednesday and cleansed Betting Lotteries.—On Tuesday, at the Court of Aldermen, the Town Clerk read a report from a committee which had sat, to devise the means of suppressing these lotteries, which recommended that notices be issued by the Clerk of the Peace to all licensed victuallers within this city, informing them of such practices, and cautioning them against any such practices being carried on in their respective houses as contrary to law. Alderman Copeland opposed the report, and a discussion ensued. On a motion for its adoption being put, the same was held up in the favour, except that of Alderman Copeland. It was therefore adopted, and immediately acted upon by the Town Clerk.

Fire in Tottenham-court-road.—On Wednesday night, about half-past ten o'clock, a fire broke out upon the extensive range of premises in the occupancy of Mr. Clarke, wholesale bed and furniture warehouse, Tottenham-court-road, at the corner of Store-street. The firemen succeeded in confining the flames, which arrived with great violence, to the premises in which they originated. The fire was not extinguished until half-past twelve, it having by that time destroyed the whole of the costly stock-in-trade, and nearly gutted the building. The houses on either side in Tottenham-court-road and Store-street have sustained material damage by fire, water, and hasty removal of furniture

Fire in Spitalfields.—On Thursday evening, about six o'clock, a fire broke out in a cane and wicking-stick manufactory belonging to Mr. Thomas Sowerbutts, in Duke-street, Spitalfields. The premises, which were three floors high, and extended back a considerable breadth, and at each floor contained some hundred pounds' worth of stock, independent of the lathes and working tools. In spite of the utmost exertions, the firemen were unable to save the extensive building. Mr. Sowerbutts's factory was completely destroyed, and the upper floor of the private dwelling-house burned out. The adjoining, in the same street, belonging to Mr. Wilder, farrier, is also extensively damaged to the tune of £300, but no insurance, as also is partially injured. Mr. Sowerbutts was insured for only £260, not more than one-half of his loss. The other sufferers [illegible]

Births, Deaths, and Diseases.—[illegible] the Registrar-General of Births registered in the [illegible] during the above week were 1371, of which 700 were males, and 671 females. This number is greater by 5 than the number registered in the preceding week. The number of deaths registered was 1167 (597 males and 570 females), being 40 less than the deaths of the preceding week, and 104 less than the births. It exceeds, however, the weekly average of deaths by 13. These excesses must be considered trifling. Seventeen was assigned for only £260, not more than one-half of his loss. The other sufferers [illegible]

Births, Deaths, and Diseases.—[illegible] the Registrar-General of Births registered in the [illegible] during the above week were 1371, of which 700 were males, and 671 females. This number is greater by 5 than the number registered in the preceding week. The number of deaths registered was 1167 (597 males and 570 females), being 40 less than the deaths of the preceding week, and 104 less than the births. It exceeds, however, the weekly average of deaths by 13. These excesses must be considered trifling. Seventeen was assigned for only £260, not more than one-half of his loss. The other sufferers [illegible]

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC

The French Government received on Monday an announcement that Austria, after a given affirmative answer as to the proposed conference at Brussels upon the affairs of Sardinia and Lombardy. The Austrian Government would immediately select a Plenipotentiary. Austria was the only Power [illegible] stated while it had not sent in its adhesion to the conference.

The Prussian Staats Anzeiger contains the official announcement of the abdication of the Duke Joseph, of Saxe Altenburg, in favour of his brother Prince, in consequence of the continued misunderstanding between himself and the reigning prince, and his desire that it should terminate amicably.

The Committee of Council on Education have appointed the Rev. J. W. Kennedy Inspector of Schools for Lancaster, Westmoreland, and Cumberland.

The memory of Blum has hitherto been attained with an accusation of having ordered two Croats to be shot during the late insurrection at Vienna. Mr. Hampler, a refugee student from that capital, denies in these terms the truth of that allegation. "Two Croats were lying wounded in the street; the people were pouring burning pitch into their wounds, when Blum, having pity on them, said to us, 'Come, finish them with a musket.'"

With the exception of the Red Republican and Socialist journals, the press of Paris seems to be almost unanimous as to the intervention on behalf of the Pope, and the credit gained by the French Republic in offering an asylum to the head of the Catholic Church.

The clock at the Horse Guard does not appear to indicate that punctuality and regularity of movement which so characterises the great soldier who presides there. On Saturday last Lord Denman, on taking his seat in the Court of Queen's Bench, observed that the clock at the Horse Guards had stood at six all the week, which was really a public nuisance, and he trusted the proper authorities would take notice of it.

At the meeting of the Marylebone Vestry on Saturday, it was finally decided that the accounts of the Commissioners of Baths and Washhouses should be submitted to the surveillance of the parish board of auditors.

At Heidelberg, a man, named Heck, has murdered the antiquary Lieber, crying out, "Robert Blum, you are revenged!"

Bills are again posted calling the shareholders of the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company together, to stop the Halifax line from being carried out.

The railway from Torquay to Newton will be opened about the 11th inst., the only impediment to its being opened on the 30th ult. being the incompleteness of the station.

A few days since, the Suffolk police apprehended a bridegroom and his father-in-law while they were eating the wedding dinner, which was composed of the carcass of a sheep or ewe that they had stolen from a field belonging to a farmer at Lidgate, and both have since been committed to take their trial.

The inquiry into the expenditure of the Treasury, the Home, Foreign, and Colonial Offices will be conducted by Sir Charles Trevelyan, Mr. Gibson Craig, and Mr. Herman Merivale

The new law of the French Republic on the jury, by which all classes of citizens were made liable and duty of serving, came into operation last week. In the Court of Assizes of the Seine several workmen and others demanded to be excused on the ground that they could not afford to lose their daily wages. The excuse were admitted.

The bill of charges of the late solicitor to one of the southern railway companies contained 10,000 folios, has occupied 12 months in the process of taxation, and amounted to £240,000

According to advices from Malta to the 27th November, no case of the (pretended...) Asiatic cholera, according to some of the faculty, of bilious diarrhoea according to others, or indeed disease of any kind of a suspicious nature, had occurred for ten days previously, and the public health was never known to be more satisfactory.

The Committee of Legislation of the French National Assembly has agreed to a report in favour of associations of workmen and attempts at raising or lowering wages, on [illegible], threats, &c. The articles of the Penal Code relating to such acts, and which... for a year, are to be repealed after a month from the promulgation, and a fine from 100f. to 2,000f. for such offences, have been approved of by the committee

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has received from "R. K." halfpence for £24 on "account of income-tax." He has also received from "An African Slave-catcher" £57, which will be paid into the receipt of the Exchequer.

The Edinburgh and Northern Railway Company are constructing a floating railway, as it is styled, for the purpose of crossing Tay at Broughton Ferry, where the waterway is a mile and a half broad. This vessel, or platform, will be of 300 feet long and 80 feet wide, and, having three lines of rails on the deck, will hold a train of 300 feet in length.

Last week, some bills were forwarded to the neighbourhood of Devonport for circulation, purporting to be a circular from John Arthur Roebuck, to the electors, but there was certain internal evidence that it was a hoax.

The seven district churches now in process of erection in Plymouth and Devonport are expected to be completed, consecrated, and in use, within five years of the present time.

A cargo of French potatoes has been recently imported into Barnstaple by Mr. R. S. Baker. They were entirely free from the epidemic which has done and damage to the root in this country, and have been sold at the rate of 10½d per peck. Arrangements are being made for keeping up a constant supply of this article of foreign produce during the winter.

A meeting was held, last week, at Shrewsbury, for the purpose of considering the propriety of [illegible] Salesbury church, to close it, and to obtain a temporary place of worship.

A gentleman who was robbed by footpads, near Glasgow, in November last, had a pawn-ticket for his watch sent to him by the post the other day, the sum of £3 having been advanced upon it.

By a recent order of the Governor of Fayal, all vessels arriving at that island from the ports of Great Britain are not allowed pratique, and are ordered [illegible] to perform quarantine at that port, in consequence of the report of cholera prevailing in England.

The road from the French frontier to Madrid has become [illegible] in consequence of the appearance of several Carlist bands in the [illegible] the mails and diligences are escorted from stage to stage by strong bodies of cavalry.

A grand funeral service was celebrated at Milan on the 23rd ult., in honour of General Latour. The whole of the garrison was under arms. It consisted of 26 battalion of infantry, composed of 13,000 men, 1800 cavalry, and 800 artillery and [illegible] 16,000 men

It is stated on good foundation, that an inquiry is ordered into the income, expenditure, &c., of the Ordnance Department. It is to be conducted by Lord Hardinge, Sir Willoughby Gordon, Sir Randoph Routh, and Mr. W. Holl.

William Frederick Desbarres, Esq., has been appointed Puisne Judge for the Province of Nova Scotia; and Alexander Macdougall, Esq., is to succeed Mr. Desbarres as Solicitor General of the colony.

Mr. Shelley, Comptroller of the Customs at Manchester, has been appointed Collector of the port of Falmouth; Mr. White, Comptroller at Barnstaple, has been appointed Collector at Barnstaple; Mr. Beckhardt, Comptroller at Newhaven, has been appointed Comptroller at Cowes.

The Governor of Chelsea Hospital, General the Hon. Sir Edward Paget, although somewhat better, continues in a very precarious state of health.

A Paris evening paper states that "The People's Estate" at Mathon, purchased by Mr Feargus O'Connor, is about to be brought again to the hammer, in consequence of that gentleman declining to complete the purchase. The same paper insists that Mr. Feargus O'Connor's own terms of the income derived from subscription to the Land Company since the publication of the accounts taken respecting its affairs by the Select Committee of the House of Commons.

The Electoral Congress of the Department of Paris has declared in favour of M. Ledru Rollin, as candidate for the Presidency, in preference to M. Lamartine. It is said that the Parisian Congress is composed of Red Republicans and Socialists, but it is still thought that many of the Socialists will give their votes to M. Raspail.

The opening of a new Roman Catholic Church, Liverpool, took place on Monday. This edifice has been upwards of three years in course of erection, and is the first in Liverpool in connex on with the order of the Jesuits. The building, which is an exceeding y large one, will cost, when completed, upwards of £20,000

The country is about to experience the great advantage of Steam communication between Dublin and Milford Haven. Mr. W. Hayes, the Conservative Secretary, has written to inform Sir J. B. Burch, the member for Liverpool, that the Lords of the Treasury are negotiating with the Irish and Milford Steam-packet Company for the conveyance of mails between Kingstown and Sydney for a period of not less than seven years.

The Queen Dowager has been pleased to nominate H. T. Harrison, Esq., to be Secretary to her Majesty's Treasury.

Lord Fitzwilliam has written to Lord W. Fitzgerald, in reply to his circular, that he deems the project of rotatory parliaments futile, and the agitation mischievous.

A new idea may be formed of the use of the Chester and Holyhead Railway for farming produce, from the fact that during the last four months 2,000 sheep, 400 oxen, and upwards of 80 trucks full of [illegible] with 25 pigs, or altogether 2000 in the whole, all from Ireland

According to the Rheinish Gazette, it was announced, by mistake, that the body of Robert Blum had been dissected. A letter from Vienna says that it has been given up to his wife, who is about to convey it to Leipsic for interment. It was then sent to the Suffolk Chronicle, from this town: "A friend of mine, a farmer, a prince of peasants, and a head of birds, all packed within a trunk, which measured 51 inches in circumference."

Three fires in New York recently destroyed property to the amount of 200,000 dollars.

A new and magnificent church, dedicated to St. Peter, has just been completed in Cheltenham. It will be consecrated immediately after Christmas by the Lord Bishop of Gloucester and Bris

Sixty thousand Russian troops, under General Sass, are in motion, and will be concentrated on the Russian frontier from Radzivyllow to Ostrolgorsk.

THE SMITHFIELD CLUB CATTLE SHOW.

GENERAL VIEW OF THE CATTLE SHOW.

On Wednesday, this great Exhibition was opened to the public at the Bazaar in King-street, Portman-square. The private view took place on the preceding evening. Much has been written of late years in ridicule of the excessive fattening of cattle; and the satire appears to have worked well, if we may judge from the proportions of the animals in the present Exhibition.

"The former exhibitions were characterised by an assemblage of animals, many of them disgustingly fat, and looking, at least to the uninitiated observer, like anything but specimens of good, or, at any rate, wholesome feeding. There was, in fact, this admitted defect, either in the breed, or in the feeding, that they ran too much to waste meat, many of the bulkiest specimens producing, in fact, less butcher-meat than others of more moderate proportions. For some years back, the attention both of breeders and feeders has been turned to this subject, and, as the specimens of this year will attest, with the happiest results. The object has been not to produce the bulkiest animals, but to produce in each the largest quantity of meat which can be used as human food. In attaining that object, a great stride has been gained within the past year. Indeed, in this respect, the exhibition of the present is not a little in contrast with that of last year. Those who remember the unwieldly monsters which last year lolled helplessly on their sides, unable to rise and wheezing apparently in asthmatic agony [illegible] quite relieved, on paying a visit to it this year, on seeing the majority of the animals on their feet, few of them rendered shapeless by fat, and all of them looking lively and healthy. A great point has thus been gained: they have brought less waste and more useful meat with them, on this occasion, on their bones. It appeared that this desirable improvement is chiefly attributable to a better system of feeding: for meat of the prizes have been awarded to the feeders. There are more entries this year than last, although there have been larger exhibitions than that now presented. The animals are divided into different classes, as heretofore although on a principle somewhat different from that formerly adopted. The restriction as to weight has been done away with, and it is this year constituted no element in the award of the judges. The restriction has been removed because it was found to be worse than useless, for, so long as it lasted, it gave an advantage to such as were not sufficiently scrupulous to adhere to its words of course put been more conscientious competitors at disadvantage in attempting to rival them. This being the case, the society has done well to remove it, particularly as it had no efficient means at its command of enforcing it. The show, on the whole, this year, does not strike one as much greater than that of last, but it will be found, on closer inspection, that the different classes are better filled up. The award of prizes by the judges is [illegible]."

On Wednesday, a meeting of the Committee of the Smithfield Cattle Club was held at twelve o'clock in the clubroom at the Bazaar, for the purpose of drawing up the annual report of the Club; his Grace the Duke of Richmond, the President in the chair. Amongst the other noblemen and gentlemen who visited the Bazaar during the day were the Duke of Rutland, the Duke of Leeds, the Earl [illegible] Earl of Yarborough, the Earl of Chichester, Lord Southampton, the Earl of Aylesbury, Earl Radnor, Earl Spencer, Major-General Wemyss, Sir Francis Lawley, the Hon. Dudley Pelham, Sir Thomas Lennard, Mr. Pusey, M.P., Colonel Sibthorpe, M.P., Colonel Challoner, &c.

During the afternoon the Duke of Richmond, accompanied by several of the above-named, visited the painting by Mr. Ward, the Royal Academician, of the Alderney bull, cow, and calf, at which they expressed the highest gratification.

MR. WARD'S PICTURE OF ALDERNEY CATTLE.

This Picture, by the way, is a very attractive and well-timed addition to the Show. It is the work of Mr. James Ward, R.A., and was painted by him twenty-five years since. It represents an Alderney Bull, Cow, and Calf, with other

THE IMPLEMENT ROOM.

THE SMITHFIELD CLUB CATTLE SHOW.

PRIZE CATTLE.—DRAWN BY HARRISON WEIR.

MR. GRIFFIN'S HEIFER. FIRST PRIZE, SEVENTH CLASS, £20 AND SILVER MEDAL.

PRINCE ALBERT'S HEREFORD OX. FIRST PRIZE, FIRST CLASS, £30 AND SILVER MEDAL.

cattle; the size of the picture being sixteen feet by eleven. It was taken to America soon after it was painted, and has been exhibited there ever since; so that it is now shown for the first time in England. The central animals are very finely painted; the fire of the eye, the folds of the hide, and the brindle in the hair of the Bull are well executed, whilst the grouping is highly artistic. Among the accessories, the beech-tree is most successful. The Bull is relieved in light against the sky, being exactly the reverse of the celebrated Bull of Paul Potter, at the Hague. It is a [illegible] to place Mr Ward's picture so near living specimens, but [illegible] work stands out bravely. It is, certainly, a [illegible] it is exhibited by gas-light, and the effect of [illegible] and striking. We have engraved the picture upon our front page.

THE SHOW—THE PRIZES.

The highest prize, the gold medal, has been awarded to the Earl of Leicester, for a Devon ox. This is a beautiful animal, possessing all the chief points of a well-bred ox. The Devon is the favourite breed of the Earl of Leicester, we believe—indeed it is the only one he keeps; and if he continues to produce such

THE EARL OF LEICESTER'S NORTH DEVON STEER, 1ST PRIZE, CLASS V.—£15 AND SILVER AND GOLD MEDALS.

THE DUKE OF RUTLAND'S SHORT-HORNED STEER, 1ST PRIZE, CLASS III.—£25 AND SILVER MEDAL.

specimens as he has furnished to the present Show, he will attain the highest reputation as a breeder. Another ox of the same breed (No. 42), belonging to his Lordship, which has gained a prize of £20 and a silver medal, is a very fine animal: he was an object of general admiration for his different qualities, particularly the smallness of the bone, on which he had accumulated so much meat of a consumable kind. His coat was sleek, and he looked one of the liveliest animals in the room.

The first prize in the first class was adjudged in favour of an animal of the Hereford breed, being No. 14 in the order in which they were arranged, bred by Mr. P. Davis, of Milley, Pembridge, and fed by Prince Albert on mash, roots, bean-meal, hay, and green food. Age, 4 years 6 months. The prize is £30, and is awarded to the feeder. The Prince was not so fortunate in some other classes in which he also competed.

Passing to class 2, we found the first prize, of £30, adjudged in favour of No. 36. This animal is of the Hereford breed, fed by Mr. T. Trinder, of Wantage, on hay, roots, meal, and cake, and bred by Mr. Monkhouse, of the Stow, Hereford; age, 3 years 10 months. In addition to the first prize to the feeder, this animal also carried off the silver medal, for his class, to the breeder. He was a noble beast, scarcely requiring a practised eye to point out the fine qualities which made him conspicuous amongst his fellows. In this class, although no prize was awarded to him, we could not fail to notice a noble beast of the Hereford breed, fed by the Earl of Radnor, on hay, roots, bean-meal, and cake; age, 3 years 11 months.

In class 3, the first prize, of £25 to the feeder, was awarded to No. 34, an animal of the short-horn breed, fed by the Duke of Rutland, on Belvoir Castle farm, on hay, vegetables, linseed-cake, boiled linseed, barley, and bean-meal, and bred also by his Grace; age, 2 years 11 months. In addition to the prize to the feeder, this animal carried off the silver medal, for his class, to the breeder. With the exception of the gold medal ox, he appeared to be the smallest horned animal in the room. His other qualities were pronounced to be excellent.

In class 4, the first prize, of £20, was awarded to the feeder of No. 49, an animal of the North Devon breed, fed by the Earl of Leicester, on turnips, mangold wurzel, hay, linseed cake, lentils, and pea-meal, and bred by the Earl also; age, 3 years, 6 months, 21 days. In addition to the prize to him as the feeder, the silver medal was also in this case awarded to the noble Earl as the breeder.

In No. 5, the first prize, of £15 to the feeder, was, as already noticed, awarded to No 33, in addition to the silver medal to the breeder, and the gold medal to the same animal as the prize ox of the exhibition.

In class 6, the prize, of £10, was awarded to the feeder of No 63, of the West Highland breed, fed by Mr. J. D. Robb, of Catton, Thirsk, on straw, turnips, grass, and cake, and bred by the same party; age, 4 years.

Classes 7, 8, and 9 consisted of cows and heifers.

In class 7, the first prize, of £20, was adjudged to the feeder, as was also the silver medal to the breeder of No. 69, a remarkably fine animal of the short-horn breed, fed by Mr. T. Griffin, of Borough Farm, Peterborough, on linseed cake, bean-meal, vegetables, and hay; bred by the same party; age, 3 years 4 months. In this class Prince Albert was an unsuccessful competitor; a fine cow, No. 84, of the short-horn breed, fed by him, bringing no prize.

Passing on to class 8, we found the first prize, of £20, awarded to the feeder, as also the silver medal to the breeder of No. 5, a fine animal of the short-horn breed; fed by Mr. C. Bosworth, of Desbley, near Loughborough, on turnips, hay, meal, and cake, and bred by Mr. C Scaife, of High Harrowgate, Yorkshire; age, 3 years 3 months.

In class 9, the first prize, of £20, was awarded to the feeder, as was also the silver medal to the breeder of No. 103, a fine cow of the Durham breed, fed by Mr. John Mann, of Fenstanton, near St. Ive's, on linseed, hay, linseed cake, and bean meal, and bred by him also; age, 9 years.

In the nine different classes no less than 102 animals were exhibited. There was some extra stock in the inner room, but which did not elicit any particular attention

The sheep generally, both long and short-woolled, are good specimens: among the former may be particularised No. 120, the property of Mr. Stoman; and among the latter, most of those shown by Mr Samuel Webb, of Babraham, near Cambridge, who has gained several prizes, and one lot belonging to the Duke of Leeds, for which his Grace has also obtained a prize.

The show of pigs is very good. There is one pen of the Chinese breed which will attract notice. But there are three Berkshire pigs—which, by the way, is the purest stock of most breeds for the present competition. They have been bred by, and are the property of, Mr. Pusey, M.P.

In sheep and pigs the present Show greatly surpasses any of its predecessors; and the perfection to which these classes have been brought reflects the highest credit on the enterprise, skill, and science of the agricultural of England. It is impossible to overpraise the part of the Exhibition, and, as usual, the Prince Consort, the Duke of Richmond, and other patrons agriculturists, who have done so much to give an impetus to the farmers of England, sent numerous and meritorious animals.

The sales of the cattle and other stock were, for the first day of the show, more numerous than ever previously known, and with regard to some of the principal prices a great deal of competition took place.

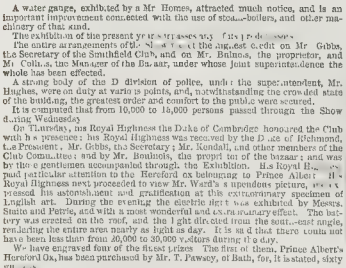
THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

We have engraved, besides Mr. Ward's fine pictures, a general view of the Oxen, a Sketch from the Pig Pens, and the Implement Room. In this department there were a very numerous assemblage of articles, and several novelties. Among the latter is the application of grits to agricultural purposes.

A curious illustration of its capacity to receive and maintain any degree of elasticity or solidity, is shown by contrasting the flexible riding-whips, which lie side by side with the model of a horse's hoof.

The show of seeds by Messrs. Gibbs attracted particular notice, and the perseveringefforts of these gentlemen to perfect certain vegetables for feeding and game all purposes, are entitled to every encouragement.

We have engraved from this department the York Prize Archimedean Root Washer. The roots to be washed are placed in the cylinder at the farthest end from the man, the cylinder being partly immersed in water. By turning the handle in one direction the roots are washed; and when sufficiently cleaned, by turning it in the contrary direction, the Archimedean screw inside the cylinder instantly empties out the contents, as shown in the illustration.



YORK PRIZE ARCHIMEDEAN ROOT WASHER.

A water gauge, exhibited by a Mr Homes, attracted much notice, and is an important improvement connected with the use of steam-boilers, and other machinery attached.

The exhibition of the present year surpasses any of its predecessors.

The entire arrangements of the Show, and of the magnificent Cattle on Mr Gibbs, the Secretary of the Smithfield Club, and on Mr. Brinton, the proprietor, and Mr. Colman, the Manager of the Bazaar, under whose joint superintendence the whole has been effected.

A strong body of the D division of police, under the superintendent, Mr. Hughes, were on duty at various points, and, notwithstanding the crowded state of the building, the greatest order and comfort to the public were secured.

It is computed that from 10,000 to 14,000 persons passed through the Show during Wednesday

On Thursday, his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge honoured the Club with his presence; his Royal Highness was received by the Duke of Richmond, the President. Mr. Gibbs, the Secretary; Mr. Kendall, and other members of the Club Committee; and by Mr. Boulnois, the proprietor of the bazaar; and was by the gentlemen accompanied throughout the Exhibition. His Royal Highness paid particular attention to the Hereford ox belonging to Prince Albert. His Royal Highness next proceeded to view Mr. Ward's stupendous picture, recently purchased at his astonishing price of £1,500, for the extraordinary specimens of English art. During the evening the electric light was exhibited by Messrs. Staite and Petrie, and with a most wonderful and extraordinary effect. The battery was erected on the roof, and the light distributed from the south-east angle, rendering the entire area nearly as light as day. It is said that there could not have been less than 40,000 to 50,000 visitors during the day.

We have engraved four of the finest prizes. The first of these, Prince Albert's Hereford Ox, has been purchased by Mr. T. Pawsey, of Bath, for, it is stated, sixty guineas.

The Ox of Leicester's North Devon Steer has been sold to Mr. White, Wormwood-street, City, for, it is said, £50.

The Duke of Rutland's Short Horned Steer has been sold to Mr. Bottrill, Rackstraw-row, Westminster, for £40.

Subjoined is a complete list of the prizes:

OXEN OR STEERS

CLASS I.

The first prize, of £30, to No. 14, viz. to H.R.H. Prince Albert

A silver cup to the breeder, viz. to Mr. P. Davis, of Milley, Herefordshire

The second prize, of £15, to No. 5, viz. to the Right Hon. Earl Spencer, of Althorp Park, Near Northampton.

The third prize, of £5, to No. 15, viz. to Mr. J. Beasley, of Chapel Brampton, near Northampton.

CLASS II.

The first prize, of £30, to No. 30, viz. to Mr W. Trinder, of Wantage, Berkshire

A silver medal to the breeder, viz. to Mr J. Monkhouse, of the Stows, Hereford

The second prize, of £15, to No. 17, viz. to Mr. J. Phillips, of Arlington, near Wantage, Berks

The third prize, of £5, to No. 18, viz to Mr. Stratton, of Manningford Bruce, near Pewsey, Wilts.

CLASS III

The first prize, of £30, to No. 34, viz. to his Grace the Duke of Rutland, of Belvoir Castle, Grantham

A silver medal to the breeder, viz. to his Grace the Duke of Rutland.

The second prize, of £15, to No. 37, viz. to Mr. J. Glover, of Kirtling, near Newmarket.

The third prize, of £5, to No. 35, viz. to Mr. H. Stratton, of Salthorp, Wilts.

CLASS IV.

The first prize, of £20, to No. 42, viz. to the Right Hon. the Earl of Leicester, of Holkham-hall, Norfolk

A silver medal to the breeder, viz. to the Right Hon the Earl of Leicester.

The second prize, of £10, to No 45, viz. to Mr. J. Manning, of Harpole, Northampton.

CLASS V.

The first prize, of £15, to No. 53, viz to the Right Hon. the Earl of Leicester, of Holkham-hall, Norfolk

A silver medal to the breeder, viz. to the Right Hon. the Earl of Leicester.

The second prize, of £5, to No 61, viz. to Sir R. G. Throckmorton, of Buckland, near Faringdon.

CLASS VI

The prize of £10 to No. 63, viz. to Mr. J. D. Rob, of Catton, near Thirsk.

COWS AND HEIFERS.

The first prize, of £20, to No. 69, viz. to Mr. T. Griffin, of Borough Fen, near Peterborough.

A silver medal to the breeder, viz. to Mr. T Griffin.

The second prize, of £10, to No. 83, viz to Sir T Lawley, Bart., of Mollington-hall, near Tamworth

The third prize, of £5, to No. 72, viz to Mr T. Batson, of Kynaston-house, near Ross.

CLASS VIII.

The first prize, of £20, to No. 90, viz to Mr. C. Bosworth, of Dishley, near Loughborough.

A silver medal to the breeder, viz. to Mr. C. Scaife, of High Harrowgate, Yorkshire.

The second prize, of £10, to No. 93, viz. to the Right Hon. Earl Fitzwilliam, of Wentworth Wood-house, near Rotherham.

CLASS IX.

The first prize, of £20, to No. 102, viz. to Mr J. Mann, of Fenstanton, Hants.

A silver medal to the breeder, viz. to Mr J. Mann

The second prize, of £10, to No. 94, viz. to Mr. W. Allatt, of Glinton, near Market Deeping.

LONG-WOOLLED SHEEP.

CLASS X

The first prize, of £20, to No. 112, viz. to Mr. T. Twitchell, of Wellington, near Bodford.

A silver medal to the breeder, viz. to Mr. T. Twitchell.

The second prize, of £10, to No. 109, viz. to Mr J. G. Bosworth, of Greetham, near Oakham.

The third prize of £5 to No. 108, viz. to Mr, R. L. Bradshaw, of Burley-on-the-Hill, near Oakham.

CLASS XI

The first prize, of £20, to No. 116, viz. to Mr. J. Wood, of Hodsock, Notts.

A silver medal to the breeder, viz. to Mr. J. Wood

The second prize, of £.0, to No. 115, viz. to the Most Hon. the Marquis of Exeter, of Burleigh Park

The third prize, of £, to No. 113, viz. to Mr. R. Newman, of Harrowden, near Bedford LONG-WOOLLED SHEEP (Not Leicester).

CLASS XII

The prize of £10 to No. 120, viz. to Mr. R. Beman, of Donnington, near Stow-on-the-Wold

A silver medal to the breeder, viz. to Mr. R Beman.

(Continued on page 364.)

LITERATURE.

THE BOOK OF BEAUTY; or, Regal Gallery for 1849 Edited by the COUNTESS of BLESSINGTON. Bogue

The series of the Lives of the Queens of England, commenced in the "Book of Beauty" for 1848, is resumed in the superb volume before us The roll of contents includes Isabella of Angoulême, Queen of John of England; Marguerite of France, second Queen of Edward the First; Isabella of France, Queen of Edward the Second; Anne of Bohemia, first Queen of Richard the Second; Catherine, consort of Henry the Fifth; Margaret of Anjou, Queen of Henry the Sixth; Katharine of Arragon, Queen of Henry the Eighth; Mary the First, Queen Regnant of England; Elizabeth, Queen Regnant; and Anne, Queen of James I.

To each Memoir is prefixed a Portrait, from drawings by Bourlier, E. Corbould, J. W. Wright, H. Weekes, and H. Warren. The Frontispiece is a magnificent plate by Bacon, from Sir William Ross' exquisite miniature of Queen Victoria, one of the finest works of contemporary art. The other portraits are, so to speak, historical portraits of queens who lived in the most eventful times, and succeed in conveying to us the characteristics of the Queens, whose lives present many a chequered chronicle of stately suffering and regal splendour. Thus, Isabella of Angoulême appears "pensive and in a glittering grief, and wearing a golden sorrow," as the consort of John, "one of the meanest, most cruel, and evil-disposed monarchs, that ever wore the circle of royalty upon his brow:" Marguerite is the presentment of beauty and tenderness of affection strengthened by the long absence of her Royal husband, Edward I., "one of the goodest personages that could be seen." The costume of Marguerite is elegantly simple; the kirtle made rich in the neck with a jewelled collar, and the mantle fastened on the shoulders by cords, are the chief features she bears in her band a roll of the period, as indicative of her intellectual taste. Isabella of France is a very impersonation of the gaiety and splendour of a chivalrous age; yet, what a mournful drama was the life of this Queen of our second Edward. Anne of Bohemia is in her costume scarcely elaborate enough for one who intended so many fantastic fashions, as did this Queen of Richard II.: yet she wears the côte-hardie or sparcer-like Bohemian vest: she is very beautiful, and one whom a King might well love, "even to a kinds of madness." Catherine, consort of the Fifth Henry, wears the regal crown, and so the ugly head-dress of the period is got rid of by the artist; the mantle differs but little from that of the last century: the Queen is portrayed as very handsome and very young—at about the age of her marriage with the hero of Agincourt. Margaret of Anjou, Queen of Henry VI., is the "pathetic bride, save in the fatal dower of beauty and talent;" the fine Cobb house, which was crowded. He gives his mélange, "Paddy's Portfolio," containing old Irish and New American impressions, sketches of travel, birthtail national reminiscences, and Mr Lover's own songs, with some entirely new compositions. He opened his Portfolio at eight o'clock, and kept his audience highly amused until past ten. The performance consisted of a series of amusing anecdotes of Irish and American life, interspersed with songs and recitations, Irish to native, and, of course, excellent. His selection of anecdotes happily chosen and amusing. A recitation, called the "Irish Fisherman," a story of heirloom, was most feelingly given and loudly applauded. His American stories are not so happily told, or they were new. He was overwhelming. The "Flooded Nut," as a serious story, and the "Reception of General Taylor," were admirable. Mr. Lover will repeat his lecture on the 16th.

costume is superb—a sort of somewhat of fur, and a richly embroidered and furred robe, with sleeves. In the lineaments of Elizabeth of York, we may trace the fine qualities and sweet temper of the Queen of the Seventh Henry, who had his second wife in her. Yet poor Lady Blessington tells us, in the memoir, that Henry felt not her less as her virtues deserved, is best proved by the desire he evinced to supply her place soon after; and if his matrimonial speculations were not carried into effect, it was not for want in the want of desire to wed." Elizabeth wears a closely-fitting robe, trimmed with ermine, and a mantle; and her fair hair floats down her back, confined to her head by a circlet of precious stones. Katharine of Arragon, the first of Henry VIII.'s Queens, in her sombre features foreshadows the melancholy of his eventful life, from her early marriage with Prince Arthur, soon after she had attained her sixteenth year, to her death in Kimbolton Castle, immediately after she had dictated a farewell to Henry, which is said to have made the monster weep. Katharine's costume is dark, trimmed with pearls, and a circlet of the same; the jacket, bable-shirt-like; and the hooded or coif-like cap of the period. Mary the First is represented not precisely as the handsome child, of a lively disposition, as she is described to have been at the Palace of Richmond, but rather as grave from over study and precocious learning. The costume is rich, but moderately characteristic; and altogether the portrait presents nothing of the conventional idea of the cruel bigot Queen. Elizabeth, proverbially mannish, is here feminine: early life wearing a gorgeous riding costume, of dark material richly embroidered, with a laced mantle; ropes of pearls depending from her neck, and strings of the same confining the high-set ruff. The head-dress, a laced and jewelled hat and feather; the gloves are embroidered, and on them is worked the regal crown. The portrait is evidently of superior to the unpromising of looking-glasses in the palace. Anne, Queen of James the First, is the last picture in the gallery of beauty: her costume is close fitting, and is balanced in this respect, that it gave no idea as to what a Queen Consort was looking like—or "stuffy" to the middle of her shoulders, so to low she went bare" her expression, too, is shrewish, and "her skin far more amiable than her features it covers."

The memoirs are by various hands; the ladies' being most successful. The notices of Elizabeth of York, Katharine of Arragon, and Mary the First are from the accomplished pen of the Countess of Blessington, and are attractive specimens of historic memoir. As we said last year, the plan is a considerable advance upon the old "Annual" style of literature, and the volume before us is a very interesting extension of the improvement, which is likely to survive the year whose date it bears.

MIDDLESEX HOSPITAL.—In addition to Lady Murray's munificent bequest of £10,000 to this excellent charity, it is understood that the gratifying intelligence that another large bequest has been conferred on it, which, it is hoped, will considerably exceed even Lady Murray's. A retired physician, who had long held an honourable professional appointment in Dublin, acquired an ample fortune by marriage. Some time ago, he accompanied a noble and zealous governor of the first tuition through the wards of Middlesex Hospital, when he was so struck with the care and benevolence apparent in the cancer wards, under the superintendence of that eminent surgeon and physiologist, Mr. Shaw, the nephew and favourite pupil of Sir Charles Bell, that, in remembrance of a dear relative who died of that most afflicting disease, he vowed in the inwards of his heart to leave the bulk of his property—the whole of which is at present in the funds, and is expected to realise £50,000 or £60,000.

MUSIC.

FOREIGN MUSICAL NEWS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday Night.

The closing of the Théâtre Italien, Salle Ventadour, has been the absorbing question of interest in the musical circles. The application of the ex-lessees, M. Dupin, for a grant of money, has been formally refused by the Government; but it is disposed to make an advance to some new speculator. There have been many suitors at the Ministry of the Interior for the leasehold, amongst whom are the well known Escudier brothers, the proprietors of the defunct France Musicale. Benoît, the theatrical agent, has been consulted on the subject by the authorities, but he had to capitalist ready for the venture, as, in addition to the deposit of a large sum of money as security, it is exacted that the debts of the theatre be paid.

In the meanwhile, the artists, vocal and instrumental, have attached the property for their claims. All kinds of combinations have been suggested, such as the reunion of the London and Paris Italian Opera houses, but up to the hour I write nothing definitive has been arranged. It is not at all probable that either Mr. Lumley or Mr. Delafield, who are both here, would, under existing political circumstances, seek to have the Italian Opera house, although at more auspicious periods the junction might be useful, if only to keep down the monstrous salaries demanded by principal singers. The closing has, of course, created great misery in many families; and to the amateurs it is the deprivation of the last attraction left in this gloomy capital, once the centre of refined art. M. Vatel, who so cleverly got rid of the theatre after the "glorious" February days, has realised a large fortune by his undertaking. A day after the proclamation of the Republic, he remarked to a friend, "Yesterday I was worth £8000 a year by this theatre, now it is not worth a sou." He found M. Dupin, who is a man of letters, and one of M. Scribe's factotums, to take the speculation off his hands; and as the former had not a farthing, and instead of having a subscription of £16,000, opened with about a sixteenth part of that sum in box and stalls letting, the result is not surprising. It must also be borne in mind that the decay of composers in Italy would have greatly undermined this establishment, for the old repertoire is pretty well worn out.

Writing the word "decay" reminds me of a performance of Rossini's "Otello" which I had to endure last Friday at the French Grand Opera (Théâtre de la Nation). A more deplorable exhibition I have rarely witnessed. Habeneck's music, which the orchestra has fallen off in a remarkable degree. The chef, or conductor, M. Girard, is an able professor, and there are some fine talents in the band, but the ensemble a tame and colourless—in tone it is brassy, and the attack generally weak and uncertain. The chorus plays appear to have, in general, very poor instruments, as to quality. The chorus execute well, but lack brilliancy, and the basses are scarcely heard, the metallic being predominant. The choruses are slowly; tenors and sopra. can be clearly heard; the bass voices are very good. As for the cast of the opera, no description can adequately afford the notion of its badness Poor Dupres, a complete wreck, made a most painful exhibition of a first act, so that the apologist of the theatre had, at its termination, to claim the indulgence of the audience, on the conventional plea of indisposition. Strange to state, broken down as the once great tenor is, in one passage, at the end of the duo with Iago, he had one of his magnificent bursts, and electrified the public by a tremendous display of vocal and histrionic force The Brabantio, Iago, and Roderigo, especially the last-mentioned part, were wretchedly sustained. The débutante, Mademoiselle Lagrange, a daughter of the Marquis of that name, who was Desdemona, vocalizes skilfully, and has a voice extending to D in alt to the low B flat; but it is a voice without charm, and she is quite destitute of dramatic feeling. Mdlle Lagrange was known some years since in the Parisian circles as an amateur, and in 1840 made her début at the Renaissance, at the part of the Duchesse de Guise, in the opera of "Henri III." Her success at this amateur effort—it was for the benefit of the Poles—caused her to go to Italy, and in that country she had prodigious popularity a proof how destitute the land is of singers, in one passage, at least, of moderate merit.

The rencarsals of Meyerbeer's "Prophète" are continued regularly, under his direction. An offer has been made to him, by the Committee of the Birmingham Festival, for 1849, to compose an oratorio for that occasion; but, owing to his engagements, Meyerbeer has been compelled to decline it for this year. He is, however, strongly disposed to compose a work in the sacred school.

The two pretty sisters of Mdlle Marie, the young and handsome contralto, was recorded in my last letter. She made her début, and the next day awoke and found herself once famous; for the directors of the Italian Operas in New York, Madrid, Naples, London, &c., were besieging her with offers. The Royal Italian Opera has gained the victory in the field of temptation; and it is London, therefore, which will have the advantage of having, next season, one of the finest and most sympathetic contraltos I have ever listened to. Mdlle Marie, although born at Paris, and educated in Italy, has her English rights, for she is the daughter of Mr. Glossop, and is half-sister to Mrs. Gilbert A'Beckett, who has composed operas. Mdlle. Marie Glossop is a vocalist with the finest school in England, France, Italy, and Germany; and her daughter has had the advantage of maternal tuition as well as a first-rate musical education.

Mr. Mitchell left Paris to-day for London, to prepare for his French Comic Opera campaign at the St. James's Theatre. It is not impossible that Auber may visit London to mount a work for Mr. Mitchell Meyerbeer, at the Opera Comique, is drawing immense houses. Mr. Beale, who is here, has purchased the copyright and right of representation for England; and Herr Bock, the editor of the Berlin Musical Gazette, is the part of the Duchesse de Gerolstein.

Considerable sensation Las been produced here by the execution of Dr. Becker at Vienna. He was born in Manchester, and was a distinguished amateur and musical critic, and had received the diploma of Doctor in Music

Mdlle. Rachel has made her peace with the Théâtre Française, and will shortly resume her professional duties.

Labadens has just received a very liberal offer to go to Berlin, but he will winter in Paris, whatever may be the result of the present negotiations to reopen the Italian Opera.

HANDEL'S MESSIAH. The Sacred Harmonic Society, with Costa as Conductor, and Mr. Surman's London Sacred Harmonic Society, have given four performances of Handel's Messiah, and on each occasion Exeter Hall has been crowded to excess, as proof of the increasing popularity of that sublime oratorio.

MUSICAL CHAT.—The third Concert of the Society of British Musicians will take place on Monday, as also the second meeting of the Choral Harmonists.—The fourth miscellaneous concert will take place at Exeter Hall on Wednesday.—On Friday will be given at Exeter Hall, Mendelssohn's "Elijah," for the scholarships to be founded in Leipsic. Mademoiselle Lind will sing for the first time in English the other vocalists will be the Misses A. and M. Williams, Miss Dolby; Messrs. Sockey, Phillips, Benson, Smythson, and Novello. Mr. H. Smart will preside at the organ, and Mr. Benedict at the pianoforte. The Chorus will be selected from the Sacred Harmonic Society and Messrs. Surman's Choruses. Sir G. Smart is chairman, Mr. J. Lucas, treasurer; and Mr. C. Alungemann, secretary of the Committee of Management, which includes the names of Messrs. Benedict, Bennett, Hullah, G. Hersley, J. W. Davison, and H. F. Chorley.

MR. SAMUEL LOVER. On Wednesday, Mr. Samuel Lover gave his first lecture since his return from America, in the large Concert-room of the Whittington Club house, which was crowded. He gives his mélange, "Paddy's Portfolio," containing old Irish and New American impressions, sketches of travel, birthtail national reminiscences, and Mr Lover's own songs, with some entirely new compositions. He opened his Portfolio at eight o'clock, and kept his audience highly amused until past ten. The performance consisted of a series of amusing anecdotes of Irish and American life, interspersed with songs and recitations, Irish to native, and, of course, excellent. His selection of anecdotes happily chosen and amusing. A recitation, called the "Irish Fisherman," a story of heirloom, was most feelingly given and loudly applauded. His American stories are not so happily told, or they were new. He was overwhelming. The "Flooded Nut," as a serious story, and the "Reception of General Taylor," were admirable. Mr. Lover will repeat his lecture on the 16th.

THE ARCTIC VOYAGERS. Subjoined is a letter lately received by the mother of Dr. Rae, the second in command in Sir John Richardson's expedition. No later intelligence can possibly arrive from the party until their return to winter quarters next spring: "Athabasca Lake, Half-past Three A.M., July 11, 1848. "I have a little time to scribble you a few lines, as the Mackenzie River have just hove in sight, on their way to the Long or Methy Portage. It is true I might have written a day or two sooner, but I hoped to have reached Fort Chipewyan before the boats passed, as the expedition party are quite well, excepting two or three of the suppers and miners, who have got sore limbs; their exertions on the portages is the cause of most of their sores. We have been travelling with the current down the Athabasca River, with the numerous rapids so numerous that we could get no sleep. On entering the lake (Athabasca), the first object that struck our attention was the sails of the boats at a distance; and as the wind was dead ahead, it was not long before we were alongside of them. We then proceeded for a narrow channel that leads to a shorter but more intricate route into the Athabasca River, so that had we been an hour later we should have missed them altogether."—John o'Groat's Journal

THE ROYAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY has very wisely availed itself of the present convergence in London of the leading veterinary surgeons, and other persons of practical knowledge of stock, to offer them some highly valuable information on the subject of the skin diseases to which cattle and sheep are liable. Two lectures have been prepared for the express purpose by Professor Simonds, of the London Veterinary College, the first of which was delivered on Wednesday morning, at the society's rooms, Hanover-square, in the presence of the Duke of Richmond and a numerous assemblage of gentlemen and farmers; the Earl of Chichester being in the chair. The lecture of Wednesday evening was introductory only, and, as such, merely embraced the ordinary topics of texture and structure of the skin of the ox, and the causes of disease. On another occasion Mr. Simonds developed his views respecting that most dangerous and, at the same time, most interesting subject, the small-pox in sheep, and also offered some information as to the best mode of treating animals which may have become infected.

JOHN MESTERS, Esq.—This gentleman, so well known in the literary world as having married Lord Byron's "Mary," is, we regret to hear, in a state which precludes all hope of his intimate recovery. As a first rate sportsman, he many years kept a pack of hounds, and hunted in the adjoining county of Nottingham, and for two years hunted the North Wold hounds. His gentlemanly manners in the field, and his hospitality at his mansion, gained him innumerable friends; and those who remember "Handsome Jack," as he was called some thirty years back, will read this announcement with considerable regret.—Lincolnshire Times.

THE THEATRES.

COVENT-GARDEN

On Wednesday, Mr. Bunn produced, with great splendour, the long-announced opera of "Quentin Durward;" the libretto by Mr. Fitzball, who has ingeniously constructed it so as to ensure the recurrence of striking scenes and tableaux in the appropriate places, including the dispersion of the combats, processions, &c., and thus relieving the love passages and the dead level of operatic action, and producing a good me.dramatic whole. After the approved fashion, the opera opens with a spirited hunting chorus; after which "Quentin Durward (Mr. Harrison) sings a pretty aria, "I came from the land of the mountain," in which he was encored. In the second scene, Mr. Borrani (Louis XI.) sings in the manner of the "Fleur de Lys" a song in his character of Maître Pierre. The melody is lively, but not very refined. It was encored. A duet following shortly after, between Isabelle (Mrs. Donald King) and Quentin Durward, is prettily written, and was charmingly sung. The whole of the finale to the first act, commencing with the chorus of the Scotch archers, "Frae the land o' heath and heather," is full of spirit and vigour

In the portions of the concerted music given to Isabelle there is much beautiful writing, which contrasts pleasingly with the louder and more martial music sung by the rest. Towards the close of the second act Isabelle has an opportunity, of which she avails herself admirably, of displaying her powers. There is much spirited and characteristic music, varied by a prayer of the terrified women, in which there is an organ accompaniment, well managed to heighten the effect.

The third act comprises the meeting of Louis and the Duke of Burgundy, the escape of Quentin and Isabelle, the discovery and punishment of Trustan (by whose means the attack of the Boar of Ardennes and the revolt of the Liegeois have been brought about), and the final destruction of William de la Mark by Quentin, who receives for his reward the hand of Isabelle. Mr. Borrani threw much emphasis, and more dramatic effect than is usual with him, into his delivery of Burgundy. A pretty duet, in which the young couple, between Isabelle and Quentin, in their flight, was admirably sung by Mrs. D. King and Mr. Harrison; and the latter sang his ballad, "Alone I am in sorrow," at the end of the scene with considerable feeling. It flowing naturally from the feeling and the accuracy than usual. The finale, by Isabelle, "Like crystal streams," is a light, bounding air, expressing naturally the sentiment of joy of which it is the vehicle. It was sung charmingly by Mrs. Donald King

The opera was successful—partly as a spectacle, and partly from the merit of the music, which, although ambitious, indicates promise of more, and of a higher order, hereafter. The airs are ballads, so that the young composer (M. Lennard) has a fine ear for melody, and indicate that he should trust more to his own resources. The accompaniments throughout the opera, although from time to time noisy, are nevertheless in keeping from first to last; and, especially in the more striking situations, it is evident that M. Laurent is imbued deeply with dramatic feeling in what he writes.

PRINCESS'.

On Wednesday a new fairy ballad was produced here with success. It is entitled "Robin Goodfellow," and is the composition of Mr. Loder. Of the ten or twelve pieces charmingly executed by Miss P. Cle, two are sure to become favourites—"Not for the sunny strand," and "Oh! were not this a world of bliss." The Titania of the fairy scenes has also several pretty airs as signed to her. Mr. Charles Braham has a sentimental ballad, "When in happier days," not particularly new in its general material, but pleasingly elaborated, and well executed; and a song of a more jocund turn, which comes off roundly. Mr. Weiss has several songs—one of them effective enough—"Among me the songs of old." The choruses are good, and well sung.

The story of the piece is briefly this: Puck, or Robin Goodfellow, having incurred Queen Titania's displeasure, is expelled the realms of Fairy Land, and his banishment is to be perpetual, unless within a given time he find out what is dearest to a woman's heart. He is allowed three guesses: the future of the fact is to find a home. He repairs to earth, in the time of the Commonwealth, and the plot takes a turn somewhat after the fashion of "I Puritani." The third experiment alone is successful, when Robin ascertains, that to have her will is dearest to woman's heart; and Titania owning the soft impeachment, Robin Goodfellow is received into the bosom of his family, and so the piece ends. The scenery is very pretty, and the piece well put on the stage.

MARYLEBONE.

On Monday evening, a two act drama, by Mr. Charles Selby, was produced at this theatre, and was entirely successful. It is called "The Wife of Westdemere," and this is the only fault we have to find with it: since, with much attention, we could not exactly make out what connexion the plot had with the title, except that there was a pretty view of the lake in the first act, nicely painted by Mr. Dayes The story is very simple A village coquette throws over her rustic lover for a London footman; but, on the occasion of a boat upsetting on the lake, the countryman displays such courage, while the gentlemanly conduct of "flunkeynia" proves to be such a poltroon, that the former is immediately restored to the good opinions of his mistress. There is scarcely enough in this for two acts: it will be readily conceived; but Mr. Cockshaw, as Robert Hardy, was so amazingly funny, in spite of a severe cold that almost took away his voice, that he could have carried anything. A scene in which, driven to despair, he takes some champagne (which he has been told is poison), and then tells a gipsy thereon believes he is "going," was greeted with continuous roars of laughter His anxiety, also, to make himself genteel in the eyes of his lady love, by constantly studying the "Book of Etiquette," was quite delicious. Mrs. Fitzwilliam was, as she always is, "telling" and natural; but the part of a girlish coquette is not so much in her line as characteristic rôles like Polly O'Neill and similar creations. A word should be given to Mr. Saunders for his excellent gentleman the beau ideal of "Jeames." Mr G Cooke, who returned to these boards from the Princess', was most enthusiastically received.

"Shipping Parties," "A Rough Diamond," and "Binks the Bagman" completed the programme, which was sufficient to satisfy the most inordinate playgoer.

At the HAYMARKET, on Monday evening, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kean appeared as Clifford and Julia, in "The Hunchback," and were eminently successful in these delineations. The characters otherwise well cast, especially by Miss Julia Bennett as Helen, and Mr. Webster as Modus. The house was fashionably attended, and the principal actors had to reappear at the fall of the curtain

The MESSRS. Brough, whose burlesque of "The Enchanted Isle," has been so successful at the Adelphi, are engaged upon a Christmas piece for the HAYMARKET

The OLYMPIC has closed this week, to re-open at Christmas with all sorts of novelties. The season, up to the present time, has been very successful.

The STRAND theatre is again closed, the speculation having ended, as we anticipated, in utter failure. If requires but little experience in theatrics, matters to tell, at the first, whether an enterprise will succeed or fail; and we think it as well, not to the public as it is unkind to the management, to lead hopes still deeper into the mire by praising up entertainments which the critics must be convinced nobody would ever pay to see.

A little later, produced with great success at SADLER'S WELLS, and called "The London Lady," is written by Mr. Greenwood

There is a furious rot in the theatrical world of America now going on, at Philadelphia, which equals our "Monte Christo" row. A regular party has been organised to "put down" Mr Macready, it is supposed, by the friends of Mr. Forrest, as both these gentlemen are playing in the above-mentioned city. Hitherto, all other visitors have been liberally distributed to both houses, but those who, as at the same time, a large number of friends. Brother Jonathan is not behaving well in this riot, more especially as when American performers have had anything given them, or American authors have brought over any comicality worth securing, the English have always been most liberal in their patronage and support. General Tom Thumb, the Chinhmans, Van Amburgh, Forrest, Mr. Dreyspoon, Mrs Mowatt, all hosts of other artists have been received in England with the greatest favour. We shall hope to hear, by the next accounts, that an amnesty has been concluded

The approaching Windsor THEATRICALS, by desire both of her Majesty and Prince Albert, are to be strictly private

A new company of Ethiopian serenaders, under the command of Mr. Dunbolton, the great transatlantic importer of curiosities, appeared, for a private performance, at the ST. JAMES'S THEATRE, on Monday evening. They are six in number; and their instruments are three banjos, an accordion, tambo.rine, and bones. They are all admirable singers, and some of their harmonised airs were very beautiful. There was a proper proportion of comicality, and "Bones" was, as he ought to be, particularly great. In a duet with the accordion he almost shook himself to pieces.

A new five act play, called "The Justina," by Mr George Bennett, the well-known actor, was announced for representation at the Birmingham Theatre on Thursday evening. The chief object of the author, as he avers in his preface, has been to furnish Miss Cushman with a character written to elicit her peculiar powers She performs the character of Inez, a daughter of Alvaro, king of Arragon.

A MONSTER WRIT. In the list of causes for the last week, in the Secondaries' Court, was one, in which the defendant's counsel sought to recover from one of the secretaries of an officer in his service the amount of a writ for 10*l*., in consequence of an alleged breach on the part of the officer. The writ, the learned Secondary told the jury, was 47 yards long.

THE BAHAMAS. J. Gregory, Esq., an experienced public servant, who has been 27 years in colonial employments, is appointed Governor of the Bahamas, in succession to Captain Matthew. Mr. Gregory is the eldest son of the late Rev. William Gregory, w. ose memory is held in the deepest respect by the parishioners of St. Andrew and St. Mary Bredman, Canterbury. He was educated at Eton, at Christ Church, Oxford, and afterwards studied medicine, distinguished in Scotland, for centuries past, in medicine, sciences, and literature SINGULAR EFFECTS PRODUCED BY THE AURORA BOREALIS.—On the evening of Friday, the 7th ult., a nurse in the workhouse, Stonehouse, named Jane Crossman, went to the infirmary window, and on seeing the extraordinary appearance which the atmosphere presented, immediately exclaimed, "The world is on fire, and I for my sins shall receive everlasting damnation!" fell into fits, which have constantly recurred up to the present time. she has also been quite insane, no sym tom of either malady having ever before been shown. Mr Furzey, the surgeon to the house, has been unremitting in his attendance to the case, and entertains great hopes of her recovery.—Plymouth Gazette.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

" P. G. R."—Try Enigma No. 304 again.

" Puz." Have you set it up correctly? Who is the author?

" J. P." It is ingenious, but not at all difficult. Try again.

" Tim" " J. F." seriously imagine there is anything problematical to establish a position?

" H. W." It may be solved thus:—White: 1. Q to her 7th; Black 1. R to K 4th sq. best 2. Kt to Kt 6th, 3. P to K R 4th; 3. Q to K B 6th; 3. P to K R 3d; 4. Q checks, and mates next move

" W. I." Too obvious, with such overwhelming force on White's side.

" M. Mayo" Your solution comes unfortunately a day after the fair

" F. C." Keep the Problem by you for a few days' examination, and then send it, with the solution. We have no time to spend on the correction of doubtful positions.

" Noland" 1. The Kt mates. 2. The notation adopted in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

" J. T." Blackburn—The Indian Problem forms the subject of the diagram which has appeared for the last three or four years on the wrapper of the Chess-Player's Chronicle. It is vastly considered the most beautiful four-move Problem extant

" A. T." Problem No. 254 is correctly stated.

" A. Z. R. V."—1*st.* R. believe you are right. 2*nd. It will appear shortly*

" Johannes" The Chess match between Captain Kennedy and Mr. Lowe took four to terminate like the three previous matches between the same players, in favour of Captain Kennedy, who has already won three games and drawn one, while Mr. Lowe has scored but a single game.

" Peter"—In the smart contest between Mr. S. Williams and Mr. Hannah, of Brighton, the former has proved victorious. The score, at the conclusion, being: Williams, 7; Hannah, 4.

" A. G. Mott" It is against our rule to look at any Problem which is sent unaccompanied by a solution. " A. G. Mott" may rely upon it, we have a host of correspondents who would discover the most difficult three-move position ever invented in ten minutes.

" G. S." Douglas—Can it not be done in one move less, by taking Q with Q on the third move?

" M. S. H."—Try No. 389 once more. The other you have solved correctly

Solutions by " S. A. Q." " A. L. M." " Otho." " Mole." " P. V." " A. H. A." " W. T. P." " American." " Jordan E." " J. H. N." " E. P." " Punch." " Sepia." " G. M." " A Constant Reader." " I. C." " Kukeney." " F. G. R." " J. T." " Woolstonhens." " W. J." " G. E. R." " Abbot's-bury." " R. W. H." " Kern." " S. U." " E. P." " G. S." Douglas, " B. V." " M. E. R." " P. W. J." " T. W." " G. R. V." " Bath Dun." " G. S. J." are correct. Those by " F. W. J." " S. U." " S. J." " E. R." " T. V." are wrong.

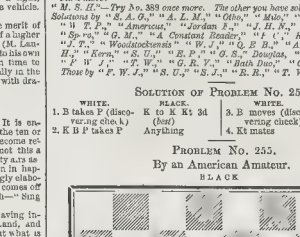
SOLUTION OF PROBLEM NO. 254.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. B takes P (discovering check.)	K to K Kt 3d (best)	3. B mates (discovering check)	K to B 4th or R 4th
2. K B P takes P	Anything	4. Kt mates

PROBLEM NO. 255.

By an American Amateur.

BLACK



WHITE.

White, playing first, can mate in four moves.

CHESS WITHOUT SIGHT OF THE BOARD.

The two following Games, played simultaneously, came off before a numerous assemblage of amateurs, a short time since at Brighton Pavilion, between Mr. Harrwitz (who played the two games together without Chess-board or men) against three or four leading members of the Brighton Chess Club.

(King's Gambit declined.)

WHITE (Mr. Harrwitz.)	BLACK (The Allies.)	WHITE. (Mr. Harrwitz.)	BLACK. (The Allies.)
1 P to K 4th	P to K 4th	34 K to B 3d	K R to Q B 7th
2 P to K B 4th	P to Q 4th	34 P to Q Kt 3d	Q Kt to Q sq
3 P takes Q P	Q takes P	35 P to K R 4th	Q R to K Kt sq
4 Q Kt to B 3d	Q to K 3d	36 P to K Kt 3d	K R to B 6th (ch)
5 K Kt to B 3d	P takes P (dis ch)	37 K to K Kt 2d	R to B 7th (ch)
6 Kt to B 2d	B to K to 2d	38 K to K R 3d	K to B 3d
7 K B checks	P to Q B 4d	39 R to K R sq	Q to K R sq
8 R to K sq	Q to Q 3d	40 P to Q Kt 3d.	K to Q 4th
9 B to Q R 4th	Q Kt to K 3d	41 P to Q Kt 4th.	P to Q R 4th
10 P to Q 4th	Kt to Q 4d	42 R to Q Kt sq	P to Q Kt 4th
11 B to Q Kt 3d	Castles	43 R to K B sq	B to Q 6th
12 B takes B	P takes B	44 K to Kt 2d	K to Q B 5th
13 Q Kt to K 4th	Q to Q B 2d	45 R to Q sq	R takes Q R P
14 K Kt to Kt 5th (a)	B takes Kt	46 P to Q 5th	R to Q 6th
15 Kt takes B	Q Kt to K B sq	47 R takes R	R takes R
16 Kt to K 4th	K Kt to B 3d	48 K to K B 3d	K to Q B 5th
17 P to Q B 3d	P to K B 3d	49 K to Q 4th (c)	K to K B sq
18 R takes Kt	P takes R	50 K to B 5th	K takes P
19 Kt to K 4th	P to K R 4th	51 K to Kt 5th	K to B 8th
20 Kt to Q B 6th	P to Q Kt 3d	52 K takes R P	P to Q Kt 8th
21 Kt to Q 3d	Kt to K 3d	53 K to Kt 6th	R to Q Kt 2d
22 Q to Q Kt 3d	K to Q R sq	54 P to K R 6th	P to Q Kt 6th
23 K Kt to Q 4th	P to Q R 4th	55 P to K R 7th	P to Q Kt 7th
24 K Kt to Q Kt 4th	P to Q R 4th	56 P to K R 8th	P to Q Kt 8th (Q)
25 Kt to Q 2d	P to Q B 4th	57 P to K 6th	P takes P
26 Kt to K 5th	Q to Q 4th	58 P to K 7th	B takes P (ch)
27 Castles	P to Q 5th	59 K takes R	P to K 7th
28 P takes P	B to Q B 3d	60 P to Q 7th	P becomes a Q
29 Kt to Kt 5th	Q takes Q	61 P becomes a Q	P to B 8th (dis ch)
30 Kt to K 4th	R to Q sq	62 K to R 6th	Q to K R 8th (ch)
31 B to K 5th (b)	P takes P	63. K to Kt 5th	P to K B 6th
32 P takes P	K R to Q B sq

And White drew the game, by giving "perpetual check."

(a) White has managed not only to keep the attack, but to get a free well-opened game a point of no little importance when playing without sight of the game table

(b) Very ingeniously played to win. Mr Harrwitz now makes a distant stand, and fights with consummate skill and skill to the end

(c) To a casual observer of White's play, the reader must always bear in mind that it is a mental fiction; "pawn to queen's fourth" was played by him from memory alone, and white entered into the spirit of playing bindfold game

(d) Had they played B to Q 2d, the obvious move, White would have given mate in three moves

(King's Gambit accepted.)

WHITE (Mr. H.)	BLACK (The Allies.)	WHITE (Mr. H.)	BLACK (The Allies.)
1 K to K 4th	P to K 4th	13. Kt takes R	B takes Q R
2. K Kt to B 3d	Q Kt to B 3d	14. Q to K Kt 5th (ch)	P to K B 3d
3. K B to Q B 4th	K Kt to Q B 4th	15 Q takes K R P	Q Kt to Q sq
4. P to Q 4th	B takes K P	16 Kt to K B 6th (ch)	B takes Kt
5. P to Q B 3d	B to Q R 4th	17. B to K B 7th (ch)	Kt takes B
6. P to Q 4th	P takes P	18. Q takes Kt (ch)	K to Q sq
7. Castles	P to Q 3rd	19. Q to B 8th (ch)	Q to K sq
8 P takes P	B to Q Kt 3d	20. R to Q sq (ch)	Kt to Q 5th (c)
9. Q Kt to B 3d	K Kt to K 2d (a)	21. Q takes K B (ch)	Q to K 2d
10. K Kt to K 5th	P to Q 4th	22. R takes Kt (ch)	B to Q 2d
11. Q Kt takes P	K B takes Q P	23. Kt to B 7th (ch.)	K to K sq
12. Kt takes B P (b)	Q to Q 4d (c)	24. R to K 8th	Q takes R

And White mates in three moves

(a) The drawback at this point is anything but well played, and allows the amusing lawyer to find a tenable if overwhelming power upon the K side in a few more moves

(b) Pretty play.

(c) Taking in this way the King would have been still worse off and left in a position of great difficulty, but we see no other way to save the board at all while conducting another blindfold game, to do so as will not expose the board at all while conducting another blindfold game, to do so as will not expose the board at all while conducting another blindfold game, to do so as will not expose

OUR MAGAZINE COLUMN FOR DECEMBER.

GENERAL CAVAIGNAC.

AT first sight you would say he was older than he really is, that "in a short time he had consumed many years," and this may have given ground for a common belief that he suffers somewhat from illness; but he is only forty-five, and his health is much better than what is generally supposed. His quick walk, and the activity with which he flings himself on horseback, belie these rumours, there is nothing of the exhaustion of a worn-down constitution, though African suns and Algerine achievements have not been encountered with impunity. His general appearance is very much what one sets up for their ideal, in reading or hearing of him. He does not impose, but he encourages. You do more than respect, you confide in him. He has the calm self-reliance of a general or chief, not the lofty bearing of a sovereign: a man of activity, business-like habits, and experience who is what he is, through and by himself—and cares not to appear, and disdains to be taken, for anything but what he is. Nature has given him a slight but nervous figure, we I put together in all its parts, an intelligent and even expressive expression of feature, a well-marked structural development of hand: his forehead is full and frank: his eyes large, black, and commanding, lit with a tranquil but constant lustre; this, with a handsome aquiline nose, a mouth well but decided, and a pale but not sickly complexion, brown hair and brown moustachios, make up his signalement. His manners are much in harmony with these externals. Grave, but not formal, more occupied about things than appearances, he is direct, earnest, unrestrained, but not demonstrative—Bentley's Miscellany.

THE SHABBY CAPTAIN

"Faith, sir," said he, "the bailiffs were scarcer with me than it used to be, as is the case with many a good fellow. I won six hundhred of 'em in a sing e night, sir, when me kind friend, his Royal Highness the Duke of Kent, was in Gibraltar." And he straightway poured out to Pen a series of stories regarding the claret drunk, the bets made, the races ridden by the garrison there, with which he kept the young gentlemen amused until the arrival of their host and the supper-bell. Then H. was good to see the Captain's endeavour before the dewilled turkey and mutton chops! His stories poured forth unceasingly, and his spirits rose as he chatted to the young men. When he got a bit of sunshine the old lieutenant basked in it: he penetrated into the mysteries and pass splendour, and all the Lords, Generals, and Loyd-Lieutenants he had ever known. He described the death of his darling Bessie, the late Mrs. Costigan, and the affectionate letter he had sent to Captain Shuney Dancy, of the Slashers, for looking rude at Miss Fotheringay as she was on her kyar in the Phaynix; and then he described how the Captain apologised, gave a dinner at the Kildare-street, where the Lords Bank twenty-one bottles of claret, Sir, he announced that to set with two such noble and generous young fellows was the happiness and pride of an old soldier's existence; and having had a second glass of Curaçoa, was so happy that he began to cry. Altogether we should say that the Captain was not a man of much strength of mind, or a very eligible companion for youth; but there are worse men, holding much better places in life, and more dishonest, who have never committed half so many respectable sins as he. They walked out, the Captain holding an arm of each of his dear young friends, and in a maudlin state of contentment. He winked at one or two tradesmen's shops where, possibly, he owed a bill, as much as to say "See the company I'm in—sure I'll pay you, my boy." The History of Pendennis.

STARVING A JURY INTO A VERDICT.

We grant it to be an absurd and monstrous custom—a mere senseless relic of barbarism to keep the jury, while in deliberation, without any reasonable degree of refreshment. It originated in a desire to keep the Jury free from intemperance. Spelman tells us that the Council of Nice ordained that "judices non nisi jejuni leges ex judicia decernant;" that Charlemagne ordained, let "judices ejuni caussa sudiant et discernant:" "and from these ancient rites of the church and Empire," he says, "is our law derived, which prohibiteth our jurors, being judices de facto, to have meat, drink, fire, or candle-light, till they be agreed of their verdict." There can surely be no reason for continuing this absurd usage at the present day; it ought, certainly, to be in the power of the Judge, as well to order the Jury refreshment, after they have retired to consider their verdict, as he does all through the trial, in cases where they are not allowed to separate. Beyond doubt, he ought to have a discretion in the matter, so as to guard against the indulgence being abused, as he has now a discretion as to the time which he may keep the Jury before they are discharged. But this practice of keeping the Jury without food is wholly distinct from that of requiring them to be unanimous in their verdict; the one may be retained, and we conceive it should be: and we may yet retain all the security for a careful investigation, for a just Judgment, and for an administration of justice as once merciful and efficient, which is provided for us by the other.—Dublin University Magazine.

JERICHO'S IDEA OF PROPERTY

"A very noble house," said Jericho, his eye sweeping the reception-rooms. "And what a lovely prospect!" said Mrs. Jericho, approaching a window. "What an undulation of hill and meadow! What a prospect!" "Thee, Mrs. Jericho," said the Monied Man, "is my prospect. This I can make my own; this is property: in its essence, I may say, property. But where's the property in what you call a lovely prospect; that any beggar may look at as well as I?" Any vagabond tinker—or poet or any ragamuffin of that sort—may pitch his tent, and boil his kettle, and smoke his pipe, and take his pleasure of the prospect, and so if it was his own—upon lawful enjoyment, his own. This, I own it—this interferes with my righteous sense of property. What belongs to a man, belongs to him. If the sun goes down upon my property, I've a clear title to that sunset: if the clouds over my land are remarkably fine, I carry are my clouds; and it's a sort of moral larceny—though, unhappily, there's no law for it—but a moral larceny it is to all intents and purposes—for any beggar at his pleasure to enjoy what is over my land; to have, as the term is, the usufruct of that sunset—of those clouds."—A Man Made of Money

M. DE MONTALEMBERT ON THE HISTORICAL MONUMENTS OF FRANCE

It is impossible not to be struck with the contrast which the actual world presents with the world at that period (the middle ages), in reference to beauty. The beautiful is one of the wants of man: one of his noblest wants: a want that is less satisfied from day to day in this our modern society. I imagine that one of our barbarous ancestors of the fifteenth or sixteenth century would complain bitterly if, returning from the tomb, he compared France such as he had left it, with the France that we have made it: a country then dotted over with innumerable monuments as marvellous for their beauty as for their inexhaustible variety; that whose surface is now becoming daily more and more flat and uniform; those châteaux on every hill, and abbeys in every valley, with our shapeless manufacturing masses; those churches and chapels in every village, abounding with sculptures and colossal pictures, with the hideous nakedness of official architecture in our times! Let us, then, at least leave things as they are; the world is sufficiently ugly and monotonous of itself: let us guard, at least, the too rare vestiges of its ancient beauty, and hinder a senseless vandalism from continuing to obliterate the recollections of our history, and officially grub up and clear away those monuments that have been painted on the soil of our country by the strong hands of our forefathers.—Dolman's Magazine.

BEAUTIES OF SURREY

If we take a Greenwood's map of Surrey, and thus get a bird's-eye view of our ample domain, we shall see at a glance how diversified and deep are its picturesque features, and remain be. [illegible] Nor need we travel far to find ourselves [illegible] Not inward runs the noble [illegible] to afford to Windsor, and—half of it, the fairest half—to claim for Surrey a vast share of Runnymede. Ours are Southwark and its vicinage, with their living and immortal hundred thousands. Richmond—who has not pleasant recollections of Richmond? and Virginia Water and its attractions to add here?—those are amongst our royalties. Where are finer panoramas to be found than those presented by the heaven-seeking hills of Leith, and Box, St. Martha's, and St. Ann's, Cooper's, and St. George's, and evidently famous Merrow? Much as where you can the mountains, oaks, and beeches of Surrey sylvan Evelyn's Surrey, name a third county-town for beauty and cleanliness and all that makes a place pleasant, worthy to be numbered with Dorking and Guildford? and Leatherhead, and Ockham, and Dorcham, and the old Gower, and the sweet and gentle Surrey amongst our constellated poets? are not Chaucer's "Tabard Inn," and Swith's "Steil," and Scott's "Waverley," and Cobbett's "Rural Rides," to be chronicled amongst our literary interests? Sharpe's London Magazine.

MAR LODGE, ON THE DEE.

Mar Lodge belongs to the Earl of Fife, and is occupied as shooting quarters by the Duke of Leeds, whose Scotch title is Baron Dunblane. He resides there for two or three months at the close of summer, and has rendered himself quite popular in the district, partly from his attachment to old Highland customs, and partly from his knowledge of Highland games and sciences. The great floods of 1829 committed tremendous ravages on the property at Mar Lodge A very beautiful bridge was swept away by the torrent, which covered the vale from bank to bank, and threatened the house with the fate of the bridge. Sums to the value of very costly embankments have been raised to protect the property against similar visitations Nineteen years had passed away, however, and the bridge was not repaired; when, in last August, the Duke of Leeds was informed that her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Royal Family would occupy Balmoral, which stands fifteen miles farther down the river. The gallantry of Sir Walter Raleigh, who spread his cloak on a carpet for Queen Elizabeth to walk on, has a place in history. It was, however, a sorry compliment when compared with that paid by the noble Duke to Royalty. Anticipating the honour of [illegible] Majesty, he built a bridge over the Dee, opposite the Lodge, at a cost of at the spot where the ferry-boat was placed, in order to save the Royal party from the necessity of adopting the usual and less convenient access to the Lodge. It is a substantial, and, we presume, handsome structure, but we trust, to stand long before it experiences the fate of his predecessor. We take it to be the best bridge ever known to built for her Majesty's use in the course of her journeys; and it is probably the most rapidly built bridge of any respectable length in existence.—Tait's Edinburgh Magazine.

AN INCIDENT FROM THE INUNDATION OF PEST

As the waters receded from the suburb street, the corpse of the old miser was found still clinging to his chest; and within that chest, along with his darling treasure, now the sad heritage of his daughter, was found also the written confession of the old pryg, which fully established Kalman's innocence. From beneath the ruins of the miser's house was dug out also the body of the Count Ra[illegible]; and in that one the widow I countess became the wife of her lover, with the trust, as she had said, that she had redeemed the error of earlier days by a bitter expiation.—Fraser's Magazine.

PAT PIGS.—DRAWN BY DUNCAN.

THE SMITHFIELD CLUB CATTLE SHOW.

(Continued from page 363.)

CROSS-BRED SHEEP

CLASS XIII.

The first prize, of £10, to No. 188, viz. Mr. J. Hitchman, of Little Milton, near Wheatley.
A silver medal to the breeder, viz. to Mr. J. Hitchman.
The second prize, of £5, to No. 136, viz. to Mr. J. R. Overman, of Burnham Sutton, near Burnham-market.

CLASS XIV.

The prize of £10 to No. 142, viz. to the Right Hon. the Earl of Leicester, of Holkham-hall Norfolk.
A silver medal to the breeder, viz. to the Right Hon. the Earl of Leicester.

SHORT-WOOLLED SHEEP.

CLASS XV.

The first prize, of £20, to No. 157, viz. to Mr. S. Webb, of Babraham, near Cambridge.
A silver medal to the breeder, viz. to Mr. S. Webb.
The second prize, of £10, to No 151, viz. to his Grace the Duke of Richmond.

CLASS XVI.

The prize, of £10, to No. 164, viz. to Mr. Samuel Webb, of Babraham, near Cambridge
A silver medal to the breeder, viz. to Mr. Samuel Webb.

CLASS XVII.

The first prize, of £20, to No. 165, viz. to his Grace the Duke of Richmond, of Goodwood, near Chichester.
A silver medal to the breeder, viz. to his Grace the Duke of Richmond.

The second prize, of £10, to No. 167, viz. to Mr. Webb, of Babraham, near Cambridge.

PIGS.

CLASS XVIII.

The first prize, of £10, to No. 182, viz. to Mr. W. M. Barber, of Uxbridge.
A silver medal to the breeder, Mr. W. M. Barber.
The second prize, of £5, to No. 178, viz. to Mr. E. Whitfield, of Snaresbrook, Essex

CLASS XIX.

The first prize, of £10, to No. 188.
A silver medal to the breeder.
The second prize, of £5, to No. 191, viz. to H.R.H. Prince Albert.

CLASS XX.

The prize of £5 to No. 194, viz. to Mr. Pusey, M.P., of Pusey, near Faringdon
A silver medal to the breeder, viz. to Mr. Pusey, M.P.
The gold medal for the best ox or steer in classes Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, to No. 83, viz. to the Right Hon. the Earl of Leicester, of Holkham-hall, Norfolk.
The gold medal for the best cow or heifer in classes Nos. 7, 8, and 9, to No. 102, viz. to Mr. J. Mann, of Fenstanton, near St. Ive's, Huntingdonshire.
The gold medal for the best pen of long-woolled sheep in classes Nos. 10, 11, and 12, to No. 116, viz. to Mr. J. Wood, of Hodsock, Nottinghamshire.
The gold medal for the best pen of short-woolled sheep, in classes 13 and 16, to No. 157, viz. to Mr. S. Webb, of Babraham, near Cambridge.

EXTRA STOCK.

The silver medal for the best beast in extra stock to No. 48, viz. to the Right Hon. Earl Spencer, of Althorp Park
The silver medal for the best long-woolled sheep in extra stock to No. 129, viz. to the Right Hon. the Earl of Radnor, of Coleshill.

The silver medal for the best short-woolled sheep in extra stock to No. 176, viz. to Mr. S. Webb, of Babraham, near Cambridge.
The silver medal for the best cross-bred sheep in stock to No. 146, viz. to Mr. Hitchman, of Little Milton, near Wheatley.
The silver medal for the best pig in extra stock to No. 206, viz. to Mr. G. Turpin, of Uxbridge.

COMMENDATIONS.

Class xv.—No. 149: Mr. Sainsbury's pen of Southdown sheep.—No. 158: The Right Hon. the Earl of Chichester's pen of Southdown sheep.
Class xvii.—No 166: Mr. Foljambe's pen of Southdown sheep.
Extra Stock Short wools.—No. 169: Mr. Sainsbury's Southdown wether.
Class xviii.—No 185: Mr Pote's pen of pigs.
Class xix.—No. 189: Mr. M. Newman's pen of pigs.—No. 192: Mr. E. G. Barnard's (M P.) pen of pigs.
Extra Stock Pigs No. 205: H.R.H. Prince Albert's pig.—No. 196: The Earl of Radnor's pig.—No. 201: Mr. W. M Barber's pig.
Judges of Cattle and Long-woolled Sheep—Messrs. Chapman, Umbers, and Lee.
Judges of Cross-bred Sheep, Short-woolled Sheep, and Pigs—Messrs. Denman, Lugar, and Saxby.

B. T. Brandreth Gibbs, Hon. Sec.

REMARKABLE HYBRID.

This remarkable filly (seven months old) was found a short time since in the New Forest, and is evidently of a mixed breed, between the horse and the deer. Her mother (a pony mare) was observed to associate with some red deer stags in the New Forest for some months, and, at last, this foal was seen by her side. The character of the deer; legs slender and distinctly double; hoofs pointed, and partly double; colour brown, lighter under the belly; and tail like a deer.

This extraordinary animal is the property of T. G. Attwater, Esq., of Attwater, at the village of Sodenham, three miles from Salisbury. Dr. Fowler, of that city, has inspected the Hybrid, and is quite satisfied of the correctness of the preceding statement; and Colonel Buckley (a Keeper of the New Forest) has likewise seen the animal, and is of a similar opinion.

BANVARD'S PANORAMA OF THE MISSISSIPPI AND MISSOURI RIVERS.

This is just the season for prodigies; and, opportunely enough, a painting of this class was opened on Monday for exhibition at the Egyptian Hall, in Piccadilly. The picture is stated to be painted on three miles of canvass, exhibiting a view of country of 3000 miles in length, extending on the Missouri and Mississippi rivers, through the very heart of America, to the city of New Orleans. We must take the artist's voucher for the dimensions of his work; but we can answer for its having occupied nearly two mortal hours in unrolling from off cylinders, on Saturday night last, when a private view was given of the pictorial wonder. It is shown in what is termed the "diorama" fashion, with the aid of strong gas light, the picture being inclosed in a sort of dark prosenium; and the apartment in which the audience are seated is a-ke darkened. Upon a platform in front is seated Mr. Banvard, who explains the localities, as the picture moves, and relieves his narrative with Jonathanisms and jokes, poetry and patter, which delight his audience mightily; and a piano-forte is incidentally invoked, to relieve the narrative monotony

The painter, in his catalogue, modestly tells us that he does not exhibit this painting as a work of art, but as a correct representation of the country it portrays; and its high reputation at home is based upon its remarkable accuracy and truthfulness to nature. The picture has much of these characteristics; here and there bits are very effectively painted, but the majority is of the level of scene-work; though, on this account, the better fitted for exhibition by artificial light. The river scenery is of greater variety than might have been expected; and its flatness is relieved by many episodal groups which illustrate the manners, customs, and modes of life, of the dwellers on the banks. Now and then, we have the incident of a steamer upset by "snags," and left an useless log upon the waters; and then, a well-freighted vessel, steaming in all the pride of a river race, with a wonderful prodigality of steam and human life, imparts great animation to the scene. Then we have bluffs, bars, islands, rocks and mounds, points and cliffs, without number, and of fantastic varieties of form; encampments and war-dances; hunting-grounds and burial-places; prairies with their giant grasses, perchance burning to the very horizon; log cabins and villages, sometimes nestling in natural amphitheatres, and at others perched upon the rock tops; and a great variety is imparted to the Exhibition by showing it under different influences, as night and daybreak, moonlight and coming storm. The principal places on the rivers are St. Louis, a French-built town, with a host of steamboats and river-craft, "bound to all points of the boatable waters of the Mississippi;" next is Cairo, which, from its geographical position, and the immense range of navigable rivers, all centering at this point, is destined to become one of the largest inland cities in the United States. From Cairo to the Gulf of Mexico the navigation is always open for steamers of the largest class. Above this point, the Ohio and Mississippi, in winter, are often closed by ice, and in summer impeded by low water. Hence the importance of the Central Railroad, commenced from this place by the State, to connect it with the Illinois and Michigan Canal, Galena, and Chicago; and which, whenever completed, will form the most direct, speedy, and certain route, at all seasons, between the South-Western and North-Western States. Memphis is beautifully situated, but does not justify its grand name. President's Island shows cotton plantations, with slaves at work, not forgetting the planters mansions, "the negro quarters," and the cypresses, the pride of the southern forests. Natchez is romantically placed on a very high bluff, and is much the largest town in the State of Mississippi; the upper town being 300 feet above the river level. Baton Rouge is now the capital of Louisiana - from thence, the river below, to New Orleans, is lined with splendid sugar plantations, and what is generally termed the "Coast"—a strip of land on either side of the river, extending back to the cypress swamps, about two miles. It will raise nearly all the tropical fruits—oranges, figs, olives, and the like; and is protected from inundations by an embankment of earth of six or eight feet in height, called a levee. Behind the levee we see extensive sugar-fields, noble mansions, beautiful gardens, large sugar-houses, groups of negro quarters, lofty churches, splendid villas, presenting, in all, one of the finest views in the United States. The picture-journey terminates with New Orleans. This is the great commercial emporium of the south, situated on the eastern shore of the river, in a bend so deep and sinuous, that the sun rises to the inhabitants of the city over the opposite shore. The harbour presents an area of many acres, covered with all the grotesque variety of flat-boats, keel-boats, and water-craft of every description, which line the upper part of the shore. Steamboats rounding to, or sweeping away, cast their long horizontal streams of smoke behind them. Sloops, schooners, brigs, and ships occupy the wharves, arranged below each other, in the order of their size, showing a forest of masts; and the whole, seen in the bright colouring of the brilliant sun and sky of the climate, presents a splendid spectacle.

REMARKABLE HYBRID, FROM THE NEW FOREST. DRAWN FROM LIFE, BY GEORGE LANDSEER.

Our Artist has selected for illustration the Bluffs of Semla, on the Mississippi; they have a very striking and majestic appearance, varying from two to four hundred feet in height; some of them resembling the façades of temples—the face of them having uniform arches and carved niches.

The painting of this Picture is a story of domestic romance and boyish ambition—though that of producing the largest picture in the world. Banvard made the first sketch for the Panorama just before he became of age, in 1840. To complete his drawings, he travelled thousands of miles in open skiffs, and experienced adventures such as would have terrified any but an enthusiast from so perilous a labour. However, single-handed, he has completed his work; and it is well worth the patronage of all who delight in doing justice to self-taught genius.

BANVARD'S PANORAMA.—THE BLUFFS OF SEMLA, ON THE MISSISSIPPI.

JEROME PATUROT
IN SEARCH OF THE BEST REPUBLIC.

ILLUSTRATED BY GAVARNI

(Continued from page 350.)

CHAPTER V.

THE MEDAL AND ITS REVERSE

You here, you here," repeated Oscar. "Who would have guessed it? And only know it by chance. It is wrong, Paturot. I would almost quarrel with you."

OSCAR.

Instead of replying to his exclamations, I was embarrassed. We had parted on cool terms with the artist, and the remembrances of our conflicts so were not unmixed; but gradually, as he spoke with me, and related several details, I felt the ice melt, and confidence re-establish itself between us.

"The ice once broken, the rest was easy. Oscar was still the same. He commenced to talk, and did not stop. He had never displayed so much wit and fascination; he wished to make a conquest of me, and succeeded. In less than twenty minutes we were as we had been. Various subjects were started and put aside according to whim.

"Apropos, Jerome," he said, after a pun, "has the fame of our exploits reached the provinces?"

"What exploits, Oscar?"

"Why, there are not so many, I think. The affair has caused some sensation. Confess that we have made a beautiful revolution."

"Indeed! were you in it too?"

"Why not? What belongs to nobody is everybody's. That is my right; it is clear as day."

"So it is. But yet this revolution deposes you."

"How so?"

"Were you not painter in ordinary to his Majesty?"

"Well, and what then?"

"You surprise me. Where there is no Majesty, there can be no painter in ordinary."

"Child! How little you know the history of humanity! Read the annals of the people. What do you see there? Kings fall, but never painters. True, I cease to be painter in ordinary to his Majesty; but I become painter in ordinary to the Republic. Paints have no opinions."

"Above all, green, which is so changeable."

"Paturot, Paturot, that is a pun. Well, I will take it. If I have faults, I shall atone for them. Some one has changed, you say. Let us seek the culprit. Is it I? No. Well, then, it is the Government."

Oscar was now one of the conquerors of February; he would not give up that title for any price. I conceded the point, and he took advantage of it. He immediately raised a new pretension—that of having been a Republican from time immemorial.

"Yes, I was a Republican," he cried, "before—during—after—always; a Republican by temperament, by birth—the most pure Republican possible."

"Then you concealed your feelings well?"

"That is the best with deep convictions, my friend; they escape the naked eye. Refer to history."

"You, so gay, so careless, had you even an opinion? Have madmen one?"

"Brutus' madness, Paturot. A stratagem of greatness of soul. It is evident you have never conspired."

"Did you conspire, then?"

"Whether I conspired!" said the painter, with the voice and attitude of a tragedian. "He asks whether I conspired! Why, Jerome, it is my element, my function, my honour, and my title. Can one live without conspiracy? Conspiracy is as necessary as air, my dear. Without it we should belong to the class of molluscous animals and rudimentary organisations."

My man got heated, and deceived himself by excitement. When the imagination is excited, it conquers truth; the mind ends by believing what it has created. What can one do? Why oppose it? Any controversy would have made matters worse. I felt that, and had recourse to silence as a last protest. But Oscar was not so easily resigned: the impulse once given, dragged him on.

"Oh, you doubted me, you doubted me; that is wrong, Jerome."

"Oh, no," I said laconically, to shorten the conversation.

"Tell the truth. You think I am not a Republican—that I have not Republican blood in my veins?"

"Oh, no, Oscar, I give up."

"Paturot, I do not accuse your heart, but your learning. I have twice referred you to history: now I must refer you to it a third time."

"Good heavens! let it rest."

"Consult history, I say, and you will see if all the great artists have not been Republicans. Where did the masters flourish? In Greece, a republic! In Rome, a republic! In Florence, a republic. In Venice, a republic! In Holland, a republic! I hope you are convinced. At all times, in all ages, the Republic has been the glorious parent of art. And you think I could have denied my natural parentage! And you think that I am not, that I have not eternally been invariably Republican! Jerome, the disorder of the age affects you! You are a sceptic, my friend."

"Come, Oscar, be calm; I agree; no more grand attitudes, pray. You make peoples are at us"

In fact, the painter's eccentric attitudes had attracted some idlers near us, and we were the centre of a crowd. I did not care for such an honour, and hastened to escape from it. Oscar was at last calmed; a peaceful serenity spread itself over his features. Besides, a new spectacle now absorbed him. We chanced upon a procession. Corporations of workmen filled the boulevards, and advanced towards us with flying colours. The trumpet sounded, songs filled the air. As far as the eye could see we beheld a moving mass, above which floated a thousand flags. Cries arose from it adding a significant commentary to the scene.

"It is my people," cried Oscar; "my great and noble people. I know them." The artist was again enthusiastic; his eye beamed, his beard glowed. The reserve had been but short.

"You see my people, Paturot; you see them?"

"Your people?"

"Yes, mine, Jerome. And whose should they be? Have I not cherished them in my artist's heart? Are they not the people of passion and genius? The nation of colour and drawing? of ochre and cobalt? There are only us two on the earth who understand them, and you do not admit they are mine? Whose then should they be? Speak!

"I deny nothing, Oscar."

"Yes, Jerome, they are mine—mine indeed; and the proof is that at any moment I use them, I alter them, and they don't protest. See how they tread the street! What a glorious sight! What a proud attitude! Oh, my people! my great and beautiful nation! You are strong, because you are good; you are good, because you are strong. You are good and strong, because you are strong and good. You are vigorous as an athlete, but you have the grace of ness of childhood. Jerome, in such moments as these, tears start to my eyes, when I think that this people belongs to me, really to me, its friend and painter. So much devotion for some palettes full of paint: you overwhelm me, generous people!"

"Then it is really your people?" I said to the artist, trying to enter into his ideas.

"Let us understand each other, Jerome. Others claim it; every one usurps the people, and speaks in the name of the people. Every scribbler pretends they back him. One convokes them to meet him at the Bastile; another, at the Champ de Mars. They are used for everything—for processions, proclamations, and bulletins. They are so good! But they are yet not everybody's. They belong only to two persons in the world—to me, and to some one I know."

The popular tide passed on; and when the artist had finished his harangue, the boulevard was empty. He sent a last blessing after the crowd, and accompanied me to my hotel.

In future, he did not leave me. We became almost inseparable. I, in vain, endeavoured to escape; he clung to me. He promised me that I should see the Minister; that he would smooth the way, and open the door of the Cabinet for me. Where else could I find so devoted a companion?

(To be continued.)

"IT IS MY PEOPLE."

COUNTRY NEWS.

THE MURDERS AT STANFIELD HALL, NORWICH.

During the several investigations into the circumstances of this deplorable tragedy, at Norwich Castle, to the gaol of which the prisoner, James Bloomfield Rush, charged with the assassination, had been committed for trial on Saturday night last, the proceedings, the object of which was the completion of the depositions, were conducted with closed doors, reporters not being admitted, and consequently the accounts of them which have reached the public have not the same authority which they would be found to possess if they could be correct, that "damning proof" of the prisoner's guilt which has been obtained for instance, exactly similar to that which the murderer were when he shot down his victims had been discovered in his house, carefully folded up in a newspaper.

Mrs. Jermy is slowly recovering, and hopes are also entertained of the ultimate recovery of the second wounded, Miss Chestney.

The inquest, also, has been adjourned from day to day.

On Tuesday the funeral of the deceased gentlemen took place. It was strictly private, the cortège consisting of two hearses, three mourning coaches containing the relatives of the deceased, and Mr. Colman and several of the family tenantry on horseback. The chief mourners were Mr. Thomas Preston, of Lowestoft, only surviving brother of the late Mr. Isaac Jermy, and Sir Thomas Beevor, Bart., of Hargham, the elder deceased's father-in-law. The coffins were of plain oak, severally bearing the following inscriptions on brass plates: "Isaac Jermy, Esq., died 28th November, 1848, aged 58" and "Isaac Jermy Jermy, Esq., died 28th November, 1848, aged 27."

At the church the funeral procession was met by Mr. Wayman Cubitt, the clergyman of the parish of Wymondham, were all shut, and the entire population appeared to have assembled in the village churchyard, to witness the mournful ceremony. On the arrival of the procession at the fine old parish church of Wymondham, the coffins were carried into the interior of the church and placed in the middle aisle under the pulpit. A portion of the funeral service was then read by the Rev. David Jones, curate of Wymondham, after which the bodies were removed to the outside of the church, where they were deposited side by side. Many of the auditory were moved to tears by the mournful spectacle.

Reform Club, London, Dec 1, 1848.

MY DEAR SIR,—Your letter, enclosing the flattering resolution of the Leeds meeting respecting myself, has caused many and conflicting emotions in my mind. I am at a loss to say what to pursue. I cannot for a moment entertain a doubt. And I merely to think of myself in this matter—I all that might and would be lost were my labour, anxiety, and time, I should have buckled on my armour, and taken the field at once without hesitation. But there were a chance of victory. But I am not to remember, that by such a proceeding I embark my friends in the contest. Their time, their labour, and assistance are to be considered, and also I believe it all to weigh the consequences to the great Liberal party, of my appearing as a candidate at the present moment. Am I to be told, that I have the right to act as I please? that has occurred, success is not probable. A part of the Liberal electors have been so anxious in the pursuit of a particular object, that they themselves for the moment (and I hope it is only for the moment) to forget and neglect the interests and wishes of that immense body from whom the great moral force of the Liberal party has been derived—the body of the non-electors. A sectarian, and not a national, flag has been raised. The watch-words of "Civil and Religious Liberty" have been, for the time, dispensed; and the grand native force of a generous patriotism has been disregarded and laid aside, in order to have its place supplied by the mere tinsel, but far less generous, for narrower feeling of religious antipathy. This, for many reasons, I consider most unfortunate. The immediate result will probably be the success of the Conservative candidate, the something more. But much more important consequences, may be the permanent separation of the Liberal party itself. To this latter effect I have more especially directed my attention, and to it would most respectfully solicit the attention of my friends (at the present moment also, while they entertained Liberal opinions, have resolved to adopt as a support a candidate, whose previously expressed political sentiments have been in direct opposition to mine). Upon this reckoning I will not presume on the present occasion to hazard an opinion, except so far as that opinion may be formed from my past conduct. I have, during the whole of my political life, been the steady advancement of rational freedom. From the pursuit of that object, no clamour, expediency, no personal ambition, no party or sectarian spirit, has made me swerve, and now I wish so to improve the present incident as to make it subservient to this great end of all my endeavours, by healing the differences between those who are in reality friends, and uniting them again into that bond of fellowship which has, in past times produced such results, and which, if it be maintained, may be productive of permanent benefit and admiration and gratitude. To be among my friends during the present contest, to state my political opinions how to a great contingency, and to solicit their votes as a candidate, whose previously expressed political

PUBLICATIONS, &c.

MR. DICKENS'S NEW CHRISTMAS BOOK
This day is published, price Five Shillings, elegantly bound in cloth, with [illegible]
I cloth and John Tenniel,
THE HAUNTED MAN and the GHOST'S BARGAIN: a Fancy for Christmas Time.
By CHARLES DICKENS.
London: BRADBURY and EVANS, 11, Bouverie-street.

[illegible]
with an Illustration,
CHRISTMAS EVE; or, the Story of Little Ann: a Tale for Christmas Time.
JOSEPH CUNDALL, 12, Old Bond-street.

Just published, price 1s. 6d., with five Engravings,
THE OLD YEAR and the NEW YEAR,
[illegible]
Year to his beloved Son Master New Year. Forming either a suitable Christmas present or an appropriate New Year's Gift.
London: WHITTAKER and Co., and Sold by all Booksellers.

CHRISTMAS CAROLS, BY ALFRED CROWQUILL. [illegible]
TWO CHRISTMAS CAROLS (with Music by Thomas Baker), entitled "The Yule Log," and "Christmas" [illegible]
One Shilling each. RAMMOND, Musicseller and Publisher, 9, New Bond street, opposite the Clarendon Hotel.

NEW POLKA — THE FESTIVAL POLKA, [illegible]
[illegible] Polka for the coming season, under the above title. It is a most spirited and fascinating production and will greatly extend the popularity of the author.—London: DUFFIELD HEDGECOCK, 65, Oxford-street.

NEW SONG — "DEAREST, THEN I'LL LOVE YOU MORE." Price 2s. (sent postage free).—This is an answer to "Will you love me then as now?" sung with rapturous applause by Miss Steele and one of the most successful Songs of the season. The melody and words of the present beautiful and original interesting and [illegible]
[illegible] Post Office Order, payable to Miss Steele, 2, Mount-street, Bond-street, London.

DEFUNCT MAIL, a song of the St James's Theatre and Haymarket, [illegible] published pieces of "Stop that Knocking [illegible]
[illegible] London: ROBERT COCKS and Co., New Burlington-street. [illegible] may be had at MITCHELL'S Musical Library, 33, Old Bond-street; and of all Music-[illegible] town and country.

NEW ELEGANT CHRISTMAS [illegible]
[illegible] Mazurka, [illegible] Waltz, [illegible] Polka, [illegible] Quadrille, [illegible] Galop, [illegible] Valse

GUERNSEY ROYAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

The handsome memorial which we have engraved, was presented to Harry Dobrée, Esq., by the Guernsey Royal Agricultural Society, at a public dinner, given at Marshall's Royal Yacht Club Hotel, Guernsey, on the 22nd ult.

The act of presentation was performed by the Chairman, William Dalgarnus, Esq., the President of the Society, who described the testimonial as a memorial of the respect and gratitude of the agriculturists and others of Guernsey. Mr. Dobrée had well earned this mark of public feeling. He had been one of the earliest friends of the society, and by his untiring zeal through many years' service in the office of President he had done more than any other individual to bring the agriculture of the island to its present state. He (the Chairman) had had the pleasure of co-operating with Mr. Dobrée, and he, as well as every other member of the society, had had ample opportunities of appreciating his kind and amiable disposition, and his ardent devotion to the interests of Guernsey. He therefore proposed the health of "Mr. Dobrée and his family." (Loud cheers.)

Mr. Dobrée thanked the company, and concluded a well-timed address, by proposing "Health and prosperity to the Members of the Royal Agricultural Society," which was drunk with enthusiasm, and the conviviality of the meeting was protracted till a late hour.

The testimonial is a silver gilt vase and cover, between eighteen and twenty inches in height, value £75. The designs are in dead gold, and the foliage and other enrichments are burnished. It is, altogether, a characteristic composition of Engraving of it is from a sketch by Mr. Nastel.

On the morning of the day of presentation was held the Winter Show of the Guernsey Royal Agricultural Society. In wheat and potatoes there was a considerable falling off; but a partial compensation has been derived from the crops of turnips, mangold-wurzel, parsnips, carrots, &c., which, owing to the humidity of the season, have yielded in unusual abundance, the produce in some instances having exceeded forty tons per acre. Other kinds of forage, such as hay, clover, lucerne, &c., have also been most abundant; and altogether the farmer has been supplied with ample means of fattening his stock and keeping up his dairy.

In addition to the samples of corn, roots, and hay, there was also a good show of poultry, giving evidence that this branch of rural economy, which, until lately, has been too much neglected, is now duly and successfully attended to. There was likewise an excellent display of butter, fully maintaining, by its flavour and colour, the pre-eminence which Guernsey has long enjoyed in regard to this produce, not only over England, but also over the other Channel Islands. M. Le Beir exhibited a remarkably fine hog, of the breed known by the name of Lord Western's.

Several ingenious agricultural instruments were exhibited on this occasion. That which possessed the greatest merit was an apple-mill, the invention of Mr. Torode. The great desideratum with cider-makers has ever been to find a means of effectually crushing the apples so as to extract the whole of the juice as well as the flavour of the seeds. Mr. Torode's invention consists of two wooden rollers, one of which is furnished with several rows of knives, and the other indented with corresponding grooves. These rollers lay hold of the apples, cut them in slices, and then transmit them to two stone-grinders which are placed beneath them; and these reduce the whole to a uniform pulp, which, on being pressed, readily yields the whole of its juice.

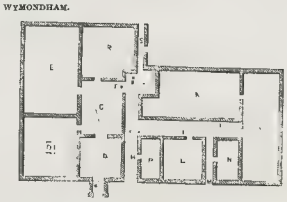
STANFIELD HALL, NEAR WYMONDHAM.

STANFIELD HALL.

We have engraved the scene of the recent assassination in Norfolk—Stanfield Hall, situated in a fine park, a short distance from Wymondham. The details of the tragedy were given in our Journal of last week; and the results of the several investigations into the circumstances will be found at page 356 of the present Number.

The Hall is a capacious edifice, in the Elizabethan style; it is surrounded by a moat, across which there is a stone bridge directly in its front, with an iron gate at the foot of the bridge. The principal entrance is by a porch in the centre, which leads into a large hall, and from thence to an inner hall, called the Staircase Hall, in consequence of its containing the staircase, and is lighted from the top. Around this are the galleries leading to the upper apartments. The dining-room door, as will be seen by the plan, is the first door on the left-hand side in the staircase hall, and the second door on the same side leads to the drawingroom. The study door is at the end; and the corner directly opposite is that where the younger Mr. Jermy, Mrs. Jermy, and the servant, were shot. The distance from the dining-room door to the corner is perhaps about twelve yards; the offices are to the right to which this passage leads, terminating in a small door in front of the hall, not more than ten yards from the principal entrance. It was by this door the accused was accustomed to enter when requiring to see Mr. Jermy, and it was by this door the assassin entered on Sunday.

We annex the ground-plan of the Hall, for which we are indebted to the Norwich Mercury. The view of the mansion is from an original drawing, by a Correspondent.



PLAN OF STANFIELD HALL.

A Entrance porch; the spot is where Mr. Jermy, sen., fell after being shot.
B Entrance hall; the dotted line the track of the assassin in.
C The staircase hall
D Dining-room. E The drawingroom.
F The small inner passage, where Mr Jermy, jun., Mrs Jermy, and the maid were shot and fell. ∴∴ Swan-shots and slugs were found in the wall opposite and in the dresser against it.
G The corner of the passage where the footman met the assassin. e Where the lighted lamp stood, about the height of a man's breast
H The footman's pantry door, from whence he saw Mr. Jermy, jun., shot.
I The passage through which the murderer came, leading to K Servants' offices.
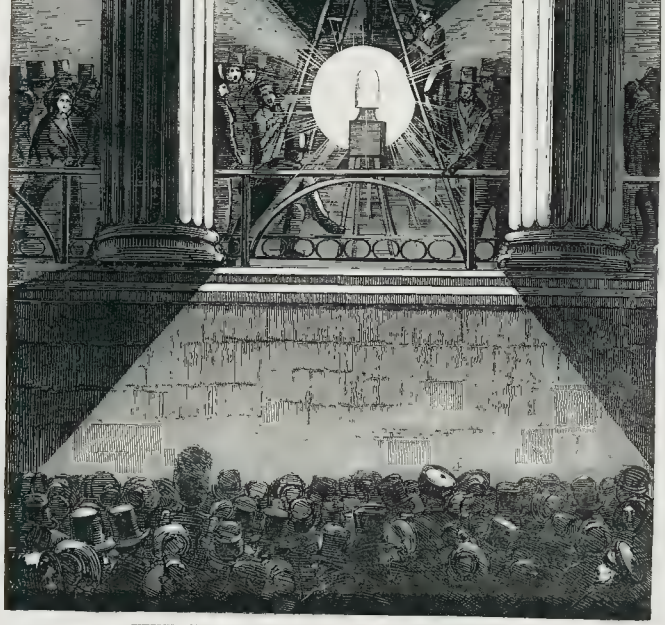
L Small sitting-room.
M The servants' entrance where he entered after shooting Mr Jermy, sen.
N Store-room. Q Staircase of servants.
O Servants' hall. R Study
P Pantry. S Passage.

SILVER-GILT VASE PRESENTED TO H. DOBREE, ESQ., OF GUERNSEY.

Mr Le Couteur, of the Forest, exhibited a remarkably powerful subsoil plough, on the principle of those used in England for deep ploughing, but with some improvements, invented by Mr. Le Boutillier, of Jersey. The chief superiority of this instrument over the great plough, at present used in Guernsey, is that it can be worked with half the number of oxen or horses which are required for the latter.



EXPERIMENTAL EXHIBITION OF THE ELECTRIC LIGHT IN TRAFALGAR-SQUARE

THE ELECTRIC LIGHT.

On Tuesday night there was a second public experimental exhibition of the Electric Light upon the raised steps forming the entrance to the National Gallery and the Royal Academy. There was a large attendance of scientific gentlemen and noblemen. Upon the summit of the steps a kind of easel was raised, beneath which were placed the battery and a small lamp. About a foot above the battery was the light produced burning upon two pieces of charcoal, backed by a single tin reflector, and the light enclosed within a glass case. The light produced was of a most powerful character.

In our last Number we entered briefly into the rationale of the Electric Light, and showed that it would be still a costly experimental toy. We have now to direct our attention more particularly to its practical application.

The Electric Light possesses no novelty. Year after year it has been exhibited at every course of philosophical lectures since the time of Sir Humphry Davy, and therefore really its practicability forms the whole subject for consideration.

For its practicability, the light must be continued without the aid of the human hand to guide it. We are not aware, however, that any person has yet pretended that he could give a steady light, without touching it, even for a single hour. If it be so, we have not seen the statement, and it does not suggur well for the tech. me for such information to be withheld.

During its exhibition, a large mirror has been employed, which, by reflecting the light, makes distant objects appear more brilliant than they otherwise would. Now, in the estimation of the value of the light, it would be advisable that it should shine forth with its own unaided brilliancy.

With respect to the battery, although we last week pointed out the results upon which it was necessary to be amply informed, no statement has appeared, making known the number of cells used, the kind of battery employed, and the labour and time required for changing them.

We again ask for information upon these matters. As strenuous advocates for the promotion of the application of Electricity for the wants of man, we feel bound to call particular attention to all these points. What is true of Staite's Electric Light is true of all other inventions in the same subject; for it will not do to come before the public with a brilliant light. That phenomenon is known. They must produce this brilliant light in a constant stream without continued attention, and at a fair price without extraordinary trouble.

We require to be satisfied upon the following points:—How long will the light remain without the illuminating apparatus being touched? What is the cost per hour of working the battery? What is the labour per day of attending the batteries? Is there any danger or excessive inconveniences in their application? If these questions can be fairly answered, the Light will certainly come into some use, but if there be a serious defect even upon one point, ruin would be entailed upon all who enter the undertaking. The Illustrated London News has facilitated the progress of the invention, by giving pictorial representations of the apparatus and appearance, but it is alike reasonable to show the points on which success or failure depend.

The Electric Light.—An exhibition of Chevalier Le Molk's galvanic light took place on Thursday night, from the summit of the Duke of York's Column upon which the apparatus was placed. Notwithstanding the unfavorable state of the weather, the Park, Pall-mall, Regent-street, and the vicinities were crowded with spectators. Shortly after nine o'clock the light was shown from the north-east corner of the capital; and subsequently its position was altered so as to throw its rays to different points. It was then shown up Regent-street. The apparatus employed was similar to that used on Tuesday night. Whether from the dampness of the atmosphere, the altitude of the light, or that the reflector was not so powerful, it did not appear so intensely dazzling as on that occasion.

London: Printed and published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand aforesaid.—Saturday, December 9, 1848.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 348.—Vol. XIII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1848. [Sixpence.

THE IRISH PEOPLE AND THE IRISH LANDLORDS.

The question of Irish misery thrusts itself before the British public in every possible way. There is no escaping from it. So great have been the social errors committed in the government of that unhappy isle; so much has Great Britain been to blame both in what she has done, and in what she has left undone, that it seems no more than a just retribution upon her to be plagued from year to year by the spectacle of Irish wretchedness. So pertinacious has been the misery; so multiform and so contradictory have been the remedies proposed; so useless, if not so mischievous, have been most of the means hitherto adopted to stay the continual cry for relief and charity, and so glaring has been the ingratitude with which the profuse liberality of Great Britain has been received by the bulk of those who clamour for it, that the very name of Ireland has been received with a shrug of melancholy impatience. Many people who perused newspapers, from the first advertisement in the first page to the imprint and date at the foot of the last column, made articles upon Ireland the sole exceptions to their reading, and turned instinctively away from the old story. It was not for want of feeling that they did this, but for want of hope; not from any indifference to the misery of the people, but for lack of comprehension of a subject so overwhelming. Still the subject has ever turned uppermost. It insists on being listened to. Irish misery is no false pretence. It is a mighty reality that forces itself upon our notice, whether we like the sight of it or not. We can no more escape from its effects, than we can from the operations of the law of gravity. The evil is not only on our side; it is tied to us. It oppresses us like an overburdened conscience. It is in vain that we strive to forget its existence. We are compelled to remember it, We are compelled to attempt the task, however difficult, of appeasing it; and until we shall do so, there will be no permanent repose or prosperity for this nation. Although we are happily safe from the convulsions of Continent, we have unhappily the perpetual sore of Ireland to harrass and to trouble us; and have to struggle with and to direct a social revolution, that has been working for the last half-century unknown to the actors in it, and quite unsuspected by ourselves, until the famine of the last three years revealed to us in its full intensity. Irish vagrancy overflows into England and Scotland, deteriorates our own people, competes with them in the labour-market, and brings along with it dirt, disease, and demoralization. Irish pauperism eats up our hard-earned millions of pounds sterling, and is none the better for them; and the introduction of Poor-Laws, which has been the salvation of England, is but the beginning of a good work which can do but little for the present generation, and which, in doing that little, will, in all probability, ruin the existing race of Irish landed proprietors.

VOTING FOR THE PRESIDENT OF THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.—FROM A SKETCH BY VALENTIN (SEE PAGE 37)

Nevertheless the deed must be done. There must be a commencement made for the regeneration of the Irish people. The social revolution must be made a peaceable, or it will make itself a violent one. The task may weigh heavily upon the energies and resources of the existing owners of the soil; but, whoever they may be, whether the nominal proprietors or the English mortgagees who have advanced them money, they must perform the same duties as English landlords perform, and make the practical acknowledgment that the poor have a lien upon the land prior to all other claims whatsoever. This acknowledgment has enabled Great Britain to pass unharmed through ordeals of the most serious kind. It will yet do the same for Ireland. The truth is, that the establishment of a Poor-Law, remote as its benefits may be, and harsh as its operation must be in too many instances upon the impoverished proprietors, is the only real remedy for the social miseries of Ireland. All other remedies, except in as far as they may aid and supplement that great and essential change, are purely illusory. Its principle must be strictly adhered to. The people of this country must listen to no representations or remonstrances intended to shake their faith in the efficacy of that enactment. At the same time, justice must be done to Irish landlords, and all possible aid must be given to them in the trying circumstances in which they are placed. Of themselves alone, they cannot do all that is required. The Government of this country having neglected for half a century to apply to Ireland a principle found essential here, must bear some portion of the penalty incurred by their neglect; and the Irish landlords have a perfect right to demand that this country should pay for past errors of its own committing, as well as they. Left to themselves, they will naturally seek to make the inexorable poor-rate as light as possible. If they were a wealthy body of men, they might lighten it effectually, by draining and otherwise improving their estates, and converting the paupers into labourers. But, as they are an impoverished body of men, they will endeavour to improve their estates by the means which they can employ. It does not require any very large or difficult expenditure of capital to clear them of the cotter population, and convert small holdings into large farms, to be cultivated in the English and Scottish style of agriculture. It is the easiest mode of improvement, and, therefore, poor landlords are compelled to resort to it. When there was no Poor-Law, these clearances or ejectments were cruel and unjust in the extreme, although perfectly legal. But now that a Poor-Law has been introduced, we have no right, how great soever the apparent or real hardship may be, to find fault with the landlord, or cry out against his cruelty for dispossessing and ejecting the miserable swarms who encumber his land, and drag him into a pauperism as bad as their own. They can neither cultivate land, nor pay the rent they have undertaken to pay; and ejectment, however horrible before the Poor-Law came into operation, has now become harmless. The ejecting landlord merely shifts, but does not remove his burden; and gains by the shifting a chance of such improved cultivation as will enable him to pay his share of poor-rate for the support of the people ejected. For these reasons we think those English journals to be in error, which continually hold up the ejecting landlords to the execration of the public. They should remember the difficulties of the landlord's position, and point attention to the real means of elevating the social condition of the bulk of the people, however tardy in their operation those means may be. The Irish landlords, with the screw of a Poor-Law upon them—a screw not to be relaxed—require to be aided, and not thwarted, in their efforts to bring their estates into a better cultivation, and to free the land of a useless and unproductive population.

There are two great aids which the landlords require, in order that the Poor-Law may not break down. These are Systematic Emigration, and the Cultivation of the Waste Lands. Considering how fearful the burden of the whole support of the poor would be, and how nearly it would amount to confiscation, the State is bound so far to repair the error it committed in neglecting to establish a Poor-Law a century or half a century ago, to diminish, by all the means it can employ, the pressure upon the poor-rates. Both emigration and the cultivation of the waste lands would have this effect. The landlords are justified in demanding the aid of the State for both these purposes. Even without emigration, a proper system for cultivating the wastes, and establishing upon them a race of peasant proprietors, would have the effect of saving both the landlords and the people from the fathomless abyss of poverty which at one time threatened to engulf them both.

An "Irish Peer," writing in the Times of Tuesday last, speaks of the bogs of Ireland as irreclaimable, and especially cites the north-western parts of Ireland as utterly useless for the purposes of husbandry, how great soever the expenditure of capital that may be made upon the soil. The districts he refers to are from Sligo to Donegal, about forty miles. "This portion of Ireland," he says, "is a lost country, and one which ought never to have been inhabited, and which never would have been inhabited if people could have discovered any other locality." No doubt his Lordship may be correct in stating that many persons who have endeavoured to reclaim bog land in this district have ruined themselves in the attempt; no doubt the country is rainy and stormy, as well as mountainous and swampy, with all its disadvantages of soil and position, it is beyond a doubt that its soil is reclaimable if the attempt be made by people who understand the business. An interesting pamphlet by Lord George Hill, entitled "Facts from Gweedore," a corner of this very district which is so utterly condemned by the "Irish Peer," shows what energy and common sense, supported by capital, can do; and how one of the most wretched parts of Ireland was converted into a thriving property by a patient, skilful, and solvent proprietor. Mr. Montgomery Martin, in the third edition of his pamphlet, on "Ireland before and after the Union," quoted in Blackwood's Magazine for the present month, says:—"Mr. Stuart French, of Monaghan, reclaimed 300 acres of mountain land in four years, and raised its value from two shillings to thirty-five shillings per acre. The entire ... of reclaiming the crops in four years." Even ... same county of Galway which the Irish Peer represents as ... hams ... Mr. Read, of Woodpark, according ... Montgomery Martin's authority, "reclaimed 500 acres of ... moorland, at a cost of from £10 to £17 per acre, ... was repaid by the crop of the second year. The land formerly ... two shillings and sixpence per acre, now pays twenty shillings." Mr. Read asserts that "there are in Galway 125,000 acres of such reclaimable wastes;" but in Galway thousands of people died of starvation during the year of the famine. It is all very well for ill-informed or uninformed people, especially if they lack energy of character, to fold their arms, and say that nothing can be done for the reclamation of Irish bogs; but, with such facts before our eyes as these, and hundreds of others that might be cited, we must cling to the belief that the resources of Ireland are as yet great, and almost undeveloped. Miserable as the people are, if the State would purchase the bogs from their present proprietors at their present value, and allow the peasantry, at a small fixed rental, payable in perpetuity, to cultivate them, we think that many thousands of wretched men, who now vegetate rather than live, in hopeless pauperism, would, in a very few years, be converted into industrious and comfortable proprietors. A proper and comprehensive system for the reclamation of the wastes is the necessary supplement to the Poor-Law. Such a measure was announced by the Government in 1847, but the bill was withdrawn without any satisfactory explanation. Its revival will be found to be imperatively called for, unless, as far as Ireland is concerned, we choose to "be behind the Chinese in the work of civilisation." They reclaim their wastes; the Irish proprietors and the Irish people must be taught to reclaim theirs.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, December 13, 1848.

When our forefathers used to talk of a nine days' wonder, they meant to infer how short a time any striking event occupied society. What would they have thought of the rapidity with which events now succeed and jostle each other—strike on men's minds, and then disappear with the celerity of a flash of lightning. The people here had hardly uttered, much less recovered from their dismay at the Pope's non-arrival, when the list of pensionnaires dragged before the Assembly made their hair stand on end; and the Government order for delaying the mails caused every one to ask, in fear and trembling, "Where will this despotism end?" What an impolitic—what an inhuman order! Impolitic for those who love it, because it deprives their own relations to friends of the news; and thousands of individuals, whose previously conceived fears of disturbance in Paris were changed into supposed certainties by the non-arrival of the usual couriers. To what mental horrors of agony were those who had husbands, fathers, children in the capital, thus recklessly exposed by a measure which Charles the Tenth would not sanction to save his crown, and which was refused to a distracted father's grief on the day that the late Duc d'Orleans met his untimely fate Writing from any other capital than this—(a capital which, by-the-bye, I yesterday heard designated, by a distinguished member of society, as one depending for its prosperity on luxury and frivolity) it might seem fabulous to relate that last week, while the gravest questions involving the avenir of the whole nation were agitating men's minds, soirées dansantes were by no means of rare occurrence. True, they were given by Russians; but their salons were filled by Parisians, who danced as gaily as though the question of the Presidency had been decided interminglingly, however, their thoughts and opinions on this subject with the figures of the quadrille; the chassez-croisez remaining unheeded while some cavalier was inquiring of his danseuse (she was a Cosmopolite, and "en mauvais lieu" standing still while some young and rosy lips were pleading the cause of Louis Napoleon.

If the returns already published may be taken as an assurance of the nation's choice, there is no need of further controversy. The Prince's election is certain. The decision yesterday adopted by the Chamber respecting the residence of the future President, cannot but be more agreeable to him than to either of his antagonists, removing to the Palais National, the former residence of his aunt, the beautiful Princess Borghese, will be to Prince Louis like taking possession of a family residence.

Les Italiens are " Il divided among themselves. The idea of Mr. Lumley uniting the two theatres, of London and Paris, under one management, is at least premature. The idea is an excellent one, and might be made to embrace a much larger field than the two above-named cities. Barbaja, of Naples, became the entrepreneur of all the Italian theatres in Italy. He found the plan admirable—the various publics were satisfied; and if such were the case in those days, when moving from place to place was attended with more or less difficulty and uncertainty, why now, that steam and railroads have obliterated distance, and reduced all journeyings to certainties as to time, why should not one manager form all the Italian operas become a fact?

The marriage of Miss Robinson, daughter of Lady Helena Robinson, with the Comte de Bondy, is fixed for the latter end of this month. The bride elect is said to be delighted with the prospect of her duties as belle-mère. The Countess, first wife (Lady Augusta Fitzclarence) left one little girl. The bride and bridegroom are immediately to proceed to Sweden.

Busy spirits are already arranging à leur gré, and predicting who and who are not to form the Napoleon ministry. As ministre de la guerre, Marshal Bugeaud's name is pronounced by every one with confidence.

SPAIN

Intelligence from Madrid to the 7th inst. states that the Government had made arrangements for receiving the Pope at Palma, in the Balearic Islands, in case he should think fit to proceed there.

The Duke and Duchess of Montpensier had left Cadiz, on the 2d inst., for Seville.

The Chaplain of Queen Christina's establishment had been honourably acquitted, by the tribunal, of the charge of the murder of his housekeeper, Josefa Martinez Mundo, who, it will be recollected, had been found murdered three months ago, in the day-time, in the apartment occupied by her in the Palace of the Queen-Mother. Serrano Bedoya, and Isaac Pulleda, had satisfactorily proved that he was absent at the time, and there was no doubt of his innocence.

From the seat of the Carlist disturbances, we learn that Concha had arrived at Igualada, in Catalonia, and been received with enthusiasm by the whole population.

On the 6th inst. a Royal decree had been published calling into active service 5,000 recruits of the contingent of 1846. This anticipated measure was grounded on the numerous vacancies left in the ranks of the army by the departure of the men who had completed their time of service, as also on the general situation of Europe, and of Spain in particular, which obliged her to dispose of a permanent force for the protection of the throne and the maintenance of public tranquillity.

GERMAN STATES.

FRANKFORT.—The section of the constitutional committee to which the question respecting the head of the German Empire was referred, has declared in favour of an hereditary Emperor with a civil list, the right of succession to be determined by primogeniture.

ITALIAN STATES.

ROME.—The Pope, at the date of our last advices, still remained at Gaeta, in the Neapolitan territory. On the 3rd instant, one of the Cardinals who remained at Rome had received from his Holiness a rescript, by which Pius IX. annulled, without any exception, all the acts of the Government newly formed by the new Ministry, ordered the dissolution of the Chambers, and confided temporarily, till an ultimate decision, the administration of his states to a commission, of which the members were Cardinal Castracane, M. Roberto Roberti, the Princes Rospigliosi and Barberini, the Marquises Bevilacqua, Ricci, and General Zucchi. The last was Minister of War in M. Rossi's Cabinet, and the Marquis of Bevilacqua, the deputy for Bologna, was one of the first to quit Rome after the violence done to the Pope.

All of those parties were absent at Bologna or in the legations. On the receipt of this despatch, the Cardinal Legate convened a meeting of the Council of the Chamber of Deputies, who immediately convoked an extraordinary sitting of the Assembly, which commenced at midnight. After a long discussion, it was decided that the rescript of his Holiness should be considered as of no effect. The principal motives assigned for this decision were, that the document was not countersigned by any responsible Minister, and that there was nothing to indicate that the Holy Father enjoyed full liberty of action in a foreign country. The Assembly also decided that a deputation, composed of members of the two Chambers, should be sent to his Holiness to supplicate him to return to Rome, where he would be treated with the most profound respect. Accordingly, on the next day five delegates had been sent to the Pope, to invite him to return to Rome. They were: MM. Furconi, Vice-President of the Chamber of Deputies; Notari, deputy; Prince Corsini, senator; Pieri and Avezzia, members of the Upper Chamber.

Some dissatisfaction was expressed in Rome at the Constitution of the Commission, because the men called to so delicate a mission belonged to the party, which had taken no part in the administration ever since the advent of Pius IX. and because many would attribute the decision of the Sovereign Pontiff in this respect to the pressure of the party of action.

The protest of the Pope, however, corresponded with the reactionary movement which had begun to manifest itself in the legations. Bologna was the chief place of resistance. M. Latour Maubourg, the Swiss Minister, and General Zucchi and Count Mastai, the brother of his Holiness, were at the head of the National Guard, and found every day increasing around them an enthusiastic crowd, which disapproved loudly of the acts of the Government of Rome [illegible] an Italian Constituent Assembly.

[illegible] cum that the Trasteverini were in a state of great agitation, and that the Council of Deputies [illegible] at the head of one party, ment to upset MM. Mamiani, [illegible] was said to be quite spontaneous

PIEDMONT.—The Sardinian [illegible] of Deputies by the Minister Pepetti, because recent votes in the Chamber had shown Ministers that their majority was not sufficiently decided to give them the support they required. Up to the date of our latest intelligence (the 5th inst.), the ministerial crisis continued at Turin. The King had sent for M. Collicon to compose a Cabinet of conciliation; but the two Ministers who were asked to retain their offices replied, that they would have nothing to do with the coup-état. M. Colligno having told the King that he could not form a Ministry if the Chambers were not dissolved, his Majesty refused to adopt that measure, and called in M. Moffa de Lisco, whose conditions did not appear to have pleased the King.

NAPLES.—The Royal family returned from Gaeta on the 30th ult., from visiting the Pope.

Mr. [illegible], the British Ambassador, has arrived on the 27th ult. at Naples; his coming [illegible] the Neapolitan Government of the Sicilian question, or the [illegible] British Government.

TUSCANY.—Advices from Lucca, of the 5th instant, state, that on that and the former evening the town had been the theatre of serious disturbances. Many persons were wounded, but none, it was believed, seriously. No details are given either as to the cause or result of these émeutes.

AUSTRIA

In our Postscript of last week we gave the intelligence of the Emperor Ferdinand's abdication on the 2nd inst., at Olmütz, in favour of his youthful nephew, Francis Joseph, the son of the Archduke Charles. Our accounts from Vienna this week state that neither the abdication of the ex-Emperor nor the accession of his successor, who is but eighteen years of age, had elicited any particular manifestation of public opinion, in approval or otherwise, from the inhabitants of the capital

After the first surprise caused by the unlooked-for intelligence, the people lapsed into a state of perfect indifference on the subject; the only question which appeared to interest them being that of the probable duration of the state of siege, on account of which the greatest bitterness of feeling was exhibited towards Windischgrätz, notwithstanding the great prevalence of espionage, that meanest and most Austrian of social vices. The merchants, however, were supposed to be in favour of the maintenance of the state of siege, as they were said to have drawn up a petition to that effect.

The military authorities treated the informers and their information with the utmost contempt.

In the sitting of the Diet at Kremsier on the 4th, the debate was on the Budget, which showed a deficit of 49½ millions of florins; of which 30 millions for the war, and 12 millions for the State Treasury, are under the head of extraordinary expences. A credit of 80 millions is proposed to be raised. The project has been submitted to a committee.

A tragical occurrence took place at Vienna on the 17th inst., on the departure of a rifle regiment for Hungary. One of the privates levelled his piece at a corporal and stretched him lifeless on the spot. The murderer was instantly marched out of the ranks and executed. He had been provoked to the perpetration of the deed by the infliction of a most cruel corporal chastisement; and it appears that the brutal severity of the Austrian military discipline is bitterly complained of by all the soldiers. One can seldom pass the barracks without hearing their piteous cries when undergoing the discipline of the "cat."

On the 8th the new Emperor, Francis Joseph I., was daily expected in the capital, and preparations for his reception were going forward in the Imperial Palace, and also at Schönbrunn

HUNGARY.

The war, which has as yet been confined to skirmishes, gives promise of being most obstinate and sanguinary, and its doubtful issue is said to render even Windischgrätz diffident.

In the meantime the Imperial troops are concentrated from all quarters upon the frontier, and the Hungarians are straining every nerve to meet the hour of peril in a state of preparation. They have fortified all their principal cities.

From Pesth, the capital, we learn that the Diet has unanimously resolved to accept the decision of the Emperor—in regard that act as a formal and unconditional resignation of the Crown and, accordingly, to refuse to recognise the Emperor Francis Joseph on the ground that his elevation to the Hungarian throne during his minority is a violation of the Pragmatic Sanction. The inevitable consequence in the execution of these resolutions would be the erection of a Republic in Hungary.

PRUSSIA.

The news of the dissolution of the Constituent Assembly by the King, and the granting of a Constitutional Charter by his Majesty, reached us last week only in time for insertion in the Postscript.

Our intelligence this week from Berlin represents it as probable, from the measures taken by the military commandant, that the state of siege would be continued at least till the end of January

Addresses were beginning to come up from the provinces, thanking the King for the grant of the constitution. A very numerous one, consisting of delegates from all classes of the population, had been received by the King at Potsdam on the 9th inst

General Wrangel had given permission to the local committees for the voluntary relief of the poor to reassume their functions. He had also rescinded his order changing the place of holding the Christmas fair. On the 10th the official declaration that the cholera has wholly disappeared in Berlin had been published.

The Frankfort Commissioners had received instructions to proceed to their stay in Berlin. It was reported that negotiations are pending respecting the election of the King of Prussia as head of the German empire

M. Schramm, one of the most active of the Democratic deputies, being no longer a representative, had been ordered by the police to leave the capital. Nearly all the deputies had left for the provinces.

The following is an extract from the report of the committee of the late Assembly on the Finance Administration of Prussia, from 1840 till 1848, had been published, and were exciting great interest. all former financial statements had proceeded from the deficient itself. The expenditure of the past year has enormously exceeded the revenue.

SWITZERLAND

Recent advices from Berne state that a circular has been sent out by the Swiss Government to the States of the Confederation, recommending that all refugees carrying on projects against the German States be sent inland, and that care be taken to prevent the refugees from actively engaging in offensive measures whilst in the Swiss territory.

PERSIA

Intelligence received from Persia, viâ Constantinople, is interesting. The Shah was crowned on the evening of the 24th of October, at half-past 7 in the evening, the time fixed by the astrologers. In Teheran everything was quiet.

The following were the nominations which had taken place subsequent to the coronation:—Mirza Takki, formerly Commissioner for the Erzeroum Conferences, was named Grand Vizir. Mirza Mesoud, Minister for Foreign Affairs with the following Ali Khan, who, on an extraordinary mission to Paris some twelve months back, was named First Secretary of Foreign Affairs. Mirza Agassi, the ex-Grand Vizir, has been sent on a special mission to Kerbella, equivalent to honourable exile.

THE UNITED STATES.

Advices from the States have been received this week, but they contain no intelligence of the slightest political interest

The Session of the Thirtieth Congress was to be opened on Monday, the 4th inst.

The most important of the measures for the consideration of Congress is the establishment of territorial jurisdiction over the newly-acquired territory of New Mexico and California, and the foreign and domestic postage system.

An effort is about to be made to grow tea in the states of Georgia and Alabama

The previous reports of the gold mines of California are confirmed.

The New York papers announce the death of Jonathan Goodhue, Esq., the head of the well-known firm who are owners of the oldest line of Liverpool and New York packet-ships, and also of the steamer United States

Mr Butler has commenced an action for divorce in the Court of Philadelphia, against his wife, Fanny Kemble Butler, which was part heard on the 27th ult. The allegation is that she has absented herself from her husband's house and family without lawful cause for upwards of two years which, by the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, is a reasonable cause for divorce. No other reason is assigned.

MEXICO.

The advices from Mexico represent the country to be in a very restless condition. Robberies upon the highways and in the streets were frequent; the police of the capital were inefficient; the Custom-houses were unguarded; the Indians were desolating the frontier stations, and, finally, the Government was without funds, and consequently inactive. Congress adjourned on the 2nd ult. when shortly it was to be called. It declared no session closed. The adjournment of the Congress without dealing with the New Tariff Bill caused much discontent. An opposition to the reforms proposed by it was manifested in various quarters, as injurious to the interests of Mexican agriculture and industry.

The papers give a deplorable picture of the state of affairs at Tampico. The most frightful disorder is said to reign there, and brawls were continually occurring between the partisans of annexation and those who oppose it. A portion of the population of Tampico are said to have taken the streets at all hours with arms in their hands shooting and committing ravages.

Yucatan affairs continued in an unsettled state. Bacalar, which was still held by by the Indians, contained the treasure taken from the whites.

At Grounds much sickness prevailed, and the people were greatly distressed from the want of medical aid. A gold mine was said to have been discovered close to the sea-coast at Salt Key, belonging to the Governor of San Juan de Nicaragua.

A CHINESE CATHOLIC PRIEST.—Died, on the 13th of July last, the Rev. John Tachu, a Chinese Catholic priest, after a few days' illness, at the age of sixty-five years. The following is a brief sketch of his life:—The Rev. John Tachu was born in the province of Canton of a respectable Chinese family, his father being a literate Mandarin. He was, while young, by a [illegible] priest, [illegible] for the clergy, and [illegible] to Macao, [illegible] and [illegible] his ecclesiastical ministry by opening, [illegible] he became very flourishing. The bishop of the mission, the Right Rev. Dr. H. Courvezy, seeing how great was his zeal for the propagation of the faith, ordained him a priest in 1826, and sent him to Singapore in the following year, that he might put the Chinese mission in this place on a good footing. During his stay of nine years at Singapore, he has with great zeal and much success preached the Christian religion to his countrymen, and baptised many of them. The Rev. John Tachu was a well-informed man, thoroughly versed in all Chinese sciences, most skilled in teaching and preaching religion to the Pagans, and so amiable in all his demeanour that he was loved and revered by all those who knew him. His loss has, therefore, been much felt, and the many tears which were shed on the day of his funeral showed how much the good priest was held in veneration.—Singapore Free Press.

COUNTRY NEWS.

POLITICAL TRIALS.

At the Liverpool Assizes, on Monday, F. O'Donnell (a surgeon), J. Cuddy, M. Somers, R. Hopper, E. Murphy, J. O'Brien, M. Dowell, P. R. Delamere, G. Smyth, and J. West, were indicted for conspiracy at Liverpool. The indictment charged that the prisoners had conspired to purchase arms to transmit for rebellious purposes to Ireland; also an intent to raise an insurrection in Ireland, and to procure arms for the purpose of overturning the law in this country.

The Attorney-General stated the case against the prisoners, and called the following witnesses:—

Peter M'Anally, a police-officer, had searched the house of the prisoner Murphy, in Pooter-street, and found a minute-book. A musket was also found in a clock-case, and a pike-head in a locked cupboard.

A number of witnesses to prove the handwriting in the minute-book were next called.

Mr. Knowles read over seriatim the various entries in the minute-book. It showed that the military chest never contained more than £3. One minute was, that any one who failed to give a satisfactory assurance that he was possessed of arms and ammunition, should be disqualified from sitting on the committee. Dr. Reynolds had stated at one of the meetings that a detective officer had called upon him for a situation as a drill-sergeant, representing himself as a dismissed officer, and cautioned the members against such characters.

Mr. Charles Aldred, a shorthand writer, attended a meeting in the Music Hall on the 31st March. He reported the prisoner Somers to have said, "It was not a week since the dastardly hirelings of Government had invaded the rights of public meeting, by intimidating a set of as worthy democrats as ever the light of heaven shown upon. He asked them not to revenge themselves that night, but if to their next petition they got a nay, let them present one on the point of the bayonet. (Tremendous applause.) Let them swear that night to one common cause of the Charter of England and the Repeal of the Union; and, if so, the day of this tyrannical Ministry will be very brief. (Cheers.) The press did not like the fraternity of the English and Irish. He saw this in the press of the town in that elavish paper the Mercury. He had commenced with the Mercury, but there was another paper, edited by a countryman of his own, and, if anything, its principles were more dastardly than the other—the paper to which the alluded was the Liverpool Journal. (Cries of 'That's Whitty—false-hearted Whitty!' and disapprobation expressed towards the Journal.) Moral force was a humbug. The only way to proceed was with a musket over the shoulder and a pike in the hand. (Tremendous cheering.) They were asked what they would do if there should be a massacre of the men of Liverpool. would they revenge [illegible]—and how? (Mooney) No—not likewise. He would ask those what money they could spare to buy weapons? He could tell them that there were good muskets to be had in Liverpool at five shillings each, a bayonet included, if necessary." (Great approbation.)

Mr S. Harker, another shorthand writer, spoke to having attended a meeting at the Music Hall, on the 14th April, at which both Doctor Reynolds and the prisoner Somers delivered very violent speeches. The first announced that he had begun to deal in pikes, &c.; the second held out a threat that the news should not be four hours in Liverpool of a massacre of his countrymen in Ireland till the skies should be reddened with the blaze of the Babylons of England.

Mr. Roche, a third shorthand writer, deposed to some other violent speeches.

On Tuesday the evidence for the prosecution was continued, showing that firearms, pikes, bayonets, cutlasses, gunpowder, &c., were in the possession of the prisoners last summer, for the purposes mentioned in the indictment.

At the close of the case for the Crown the prisoners' counsel severally addressed the jury, and called witnesses to character.

The Attorney-General replied, and after the close of the learned gentleman's address the court adjourned.

On Wednesday his Lordship, at the sitting of the court, summed up, and the jury having retired for about an hour, returned, bringing in a verdict of guilty against all the defendants, with the exception of Peter Herbert Delamere, whom they acquitted.

Mr. Pollock, on behalf of the defendants Murphy, O'Donnell, Hopper, Cuddy, and Somers, then moved in arrest of judgment. He contended that the indictment was bad, inasmuch as this, being a charge of misdemeanour, some of the counts amounted to charges of high treason; and it was a rule of law that a charge of felony and a charge of misdemeanour could not be made against one and not be joined together in the same indictment. The Jury were sworn in a different manner in the one case from the other, and besides, in cases of treason the prisoners were entitled to a copy of the indictment, which was not the case in misdemeanour. It was also a misjoinder of offences. The eleventh count charged a conspiracy to levy war with arms, &c.; and he (Mr. Pollock) contended that that count amounted to a charge of high treason.

Mr. Justice Erle overruled the objection, and said he was bound to consider whether the counts contained charges of misdemeanour. He thought that the indictment was not vitiated, although charges of high treason were also alleged. The charge of conspiracy being the essential part in the indictment, he did not think that the rest need be proved.

His Lordship then proceeded to pass sentence upon the prisoners, observing that they had conspired to put down the power of the law, by which means crimes of the very worst description would have become rife, especially as murder and theft had been to much in the habit of some of them. There was a considerable difference, however, between them, for some had addressed very violent language to large mobs, and presided at the meetings, while others of them had not taken so conspicuous a part in the proceedings. Under all circumstances, the end of that time to find sureties to keep the peace for two years longer; and each to be bound, himself in £100, with two sureties of £25 each. Upon Martin Hennedy (who had never attended the meetings) and Joseph Murphy, the sentence was, that they be imprisoned, with hard labour, in the gaol at Kirkdale for one year, and enter into their own recognizances in £100 each for one year. The sentence upon James O'Brien was six months' hard labour in the gaol at Kirkdale. And upon Edward Murphy the sentence was, that he be imprisoned and kept to hard labour for three months, having been a ready imprisoned since the last assizes, when he requested to be tried.

THE NORFOLK MURDERS.

WYMONDHAM.—The investigation instituted by Mr. Press, one of the Coroners for the county of Norfolk, relative to the shocking assassination of Mr. Isaac Jermy, the late Recorder of Norwich, and his son, Mr. Jermy Jermy, was resumed on Tuesday afternoon, at the King's Head Inn, in this town.

All the interest manifested at the previous inquiries was again evinced. The inquest-room was thronged. Mr. Cann and the Rev. Mr. Postle, two of the magistrates who have been engaged in the private examinations of the accused, were present, as also Colonel Oaks, of the Norfolk constabulary.

Evidence more or less tending to prove the prisoner's guilt was adduced. The inquest was again adjourned.

We regret to state, on the authority of Mr. Tunnally, the medical gentleman, that the unfortunate Mrs. Jermy, and her maid, Elizabeth Chestney, are not yet out of danger. It is right to mention, however, that they are recovering as far as their shocking injuries will permit.

In the course of the inquiry, Mr Cann, the committing magistrate, communicated to the reporters the intention of the magistrates to suspend sitting the court public on the next examination of the accused, Rush, when all the depositions taken by them will be made known.

Notwithstanding the vigilance of the search carried on by the police and a large number of auxiliaries since the night of the murder, not the slightest trace has been obtained of the firearms of the assassin.

REPRESENTATION OF LEOMINSTER.—On Thursday, it became known in the borough that Mr. Phillimore had retired, in order, as he says, that the Liberal interest in the borough may not be divided. Mr. Phillimore, in his farewell address to the electors, delivered at the Odd Fellows' Hall, expressed his intention of coming forward as a candidate on some future occasion. Mr. Peel continues to canvass with diligence, and his friends are exerting themselves unanimously. Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton has returned from celebrating his brother's marriage, and is resuming his solicitation of the electors. Mr. Barkly, the late member, has just issued a farewell address.

BOROUGH OF LUKEARD.—The Gazette of Tuesday night contained a notification from the Speaker of the House of Commons, that at the end of fourteen days he would issue his warrant to the Clerk of the Crown to make out a new writ for the electing a new member for the borough of Lukeard, in the room of the Right Hon. C. Buller, deceased. Mr. Sidgwick has retired from the field, finding that some but a Liberal candidate has any chance of success. Mr. Crowder's return is regarded as all but certain BOROUGH OF TAVISTOCK.—We understand that Mr. Humphrey Willyams, a gentleman of liberal politics, who resides in the neighbourhood of Truro, will probably be invited by the constituency of that borough to succeed the late Mr Turner, whose lamented decease has lately occurred.

EDUCATION IN SCOTLAND.—The Scottish Educational Institute has issued its second report, from which it appears that the body now consists of 366 fel ow, 193 members, 121 junior members, and 79 associates. The number is very considerable, and shows strikingly what teachers and other professional persons can do when, instead of waiting for external means of elevation, they take their cause into their own hands. The attendance at the Edinburgh University is more than usually numerous this session, the number of matriculated students exceeding by 102 the number that were enrolled at the corresponding period last year. The principal cause is the new law and literary qualification for teachers, and as soon as education, a school has been established in Edinburgh, where religious instruction is to be left to parents and guardians, and excluded from the subject taught.

BOUGHAM CASTLE.—It has been erroneously stated that the Earl of Thanet is about to make habitable this once magnificent and lordly fabric: such is not the case; the noble proprietor is merely repairing it as a mass, and endeavouring to save from further decay one of the ancient seats of his ancestors.

NOTICE TO SPECIAL CONSTABLES.—On the 6th of June last a considerable number of persons were sworn in at the Marylebone Police Court, to act as special constables should occasion require them to do so for the space of six months, and some hundreds of staves were supplied to them; they have not been restored, and it may be as well to remind the parties that under a clause in an act of Parliament 1 and 2 William IV., each person sworn in as above is liable to a penalty of 40s. in the event of his not returning his staff within a week after the expiration of the period for which he was appointed to serve.

IRELAND.

WORKHOUSES IN THE WEST.—The western unions are beginning to adopt the system so successfully carried out in some of the southern, mid-and, and northern counties, of productive and self-supporting employment in the workhouses and in farms attached to them. The Ballina Union appears to be a healthy branch that the example set by the Society of Friends in the west has not been unavailing. At the meeting of the governors of Swineford Union, on Tuesday, a committee was formed for the purpose of obtaining land in connexion with the workhouse, and rendering pauper labour available for its proper cultivation. At present the female paupers are employed in making clothing for the inmates of the establishment. In Ballina Union, the self-supporting system has been introduced into the workhouse by the vice-guardians; looms have been fitted up, and the paupers are employed in various branches of useful industry. This, as regards the western province, is a highly satisfactory symptom of well-born and well-directed energy, beginning with the humblest and most destitute class.

EMIGRATION.—The Monaghan Standard contains the following:—"One may imagine something of the extent of emigration from this part of the country, from the fact that in one small congregation or curein the neighbourhood, where the number of Episcopalian Protestants was 1800, a number exceeding 240 left this year for the Americas. This far exceeds a decimation of the population."

BANK OF IRELAND.—The general half-yearly meeting of the proprietors was held on Monday in the Board-room of the Bank. The chair was occupied by John M'Donnell, Esq., governor. The following report was read and adopted:—"That it is the opinion of the Court of Directors, that a dividend of 4 per cent. be made to the proprietors of the bank stock for the half-year ending the 26th of December. That public notice be given that payment be made at the bank on and after Monday, the 1st of January next." On presenting the foregoing report the governor said that he had been requested by the Court of Directors to state, that, in order to make the proposed dividend of 4 per cent., it appeared by the estimate that it would be necessary to take a sum of £9000 from the surplus fund.

HIBERNIAN BANK.—Tuesday the election of the governor and deputy-governor of this establishment took place at the Bank. Timothy Hutton, Esq., J.P., was elected governor, and Thomas Pagden, Esq., was elected deputy-governor for the ensuing year.

An affecting incident is related by a Donegal paper. A few nights since a young man and his sister returning from Pettigo, homeward, had to cross a mountain. The night was dark and stormy, and they lost their way. Next morning, both were found dead from the exposure. The boy and girl lay side by side the latter with her arms about her brother's neck, and her flannel petticoat removed from her own person, was wrapped round his feet.

MR. DUFFY.—The trial of this great man was fixed for Thursday, but the general opinion on that morning was that the day would be consumed in the preliminary skirmishes of the lawyers. As his imprisonment has lasted so long a few words in explanation of the circumstances of the case may here become necessary. He was imprisoned so long since as July, and as the ensuing commission in the same month true bills under the new Treason Felony Act were found against him, and he only escaped arraignment on them by an accident—a preliminary objection raised by his own counsel. Meantime Mr Smith O'Brien was arrested, and among his papers was found a letter from Mr. Duffy, which would seem to have shown the intentions of the Crown towards that gentleman, as the indictment was withdrawn notwithstanding Mr. Duffy's earnest application for a trial at that commission. At the late commission in October last, the former bills were quashed on the motion of the Crown, and fresh bills for felony against him sent before the county grand jury. These were found, but, in consequence of an informality in the construction of the jury panels or Jurors' book for the county, the case was not proceeded with. Mr. Duffy, however, received notice that he would be transferred to the custody of the county sheriff. Subsequently he was noticed that all former proceedings against him would be void by the Crown, and fresh bills against him sent by the city grand jury. This frequent change of proceedings and custody have not pleased any portion of the public, who think that Mr. Duffy's case has not been treated, a it assuredly ought, like any other case. Meantime Mr. Smith O'Brien, having reference to the sentiments expressed by the Solicitor-General at the commission in Clonmel, in which he spoke of Mr. Duffy as having nigged forward that unhappy gentleman, has addressed a letter to Mr. Duffy's counsel, on this subject, which he expresses a desire should be used on Mr. Duffy's trial. It is understood that in this document Mr. O'Brien denies, in the strongest terms, his having been, in any sense or degree, privy to the plot laid by Mr. Duffy, and the letter, if read, will place Mr. Duffy's conduct, in reference to Mr. O'Brien, in a very different light from that in which the public, in consequence of the Solicitor-General's observations, very generally regarded it. On Wednesday the letter was found by the Dublin Grand Jury against Mr. Duffy.

THE LATE STEAM-BOAT TRAGEDY.—The Mayor and magistrates of Londonderry have refused to take bail for the Captain and Mate of the steamer, against whom a verdict of "Manslaughter" has been returned by the Coroner's Jury. Captain Johnstone has made a solemn statement in the nature of a protest before a notary, in which, after detailing the violence of the weather, he states: "The man who kept the watch forward came to appear, and informed him the companion-lid of the steerage had worked off with the pitching of the vessel, and could not be some. Appeared to him the second mate to have the tarpaulin off the luggage and cover it over the companion, to prevent the water from going below, which was accordingly done, and about half-past seven o'clock the wind veered from W. to W.N.W., and the sea rose, causing the ship to pitch and roll greatly. Appearer, obliged to keep constantly near the wheel, directing the management of the ship, ordered the helm to be up to the main to endeavour to keep her end on, and see the ship's way. At this time the mate came to appearer, and informed him that the weather had carried the tarpauling again off the companion, and that he had taken a handspike and, at the steerage, from the tempestuous state of the weather, and from heavy sea-sickness experienced by the passengers, and bad air arising from the number congregated together in so small a place, and being unable to leave the steerage from their extreme debility, and the tempestuous state of the weather."

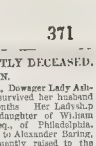
ADDITIONAL CURATES FUND.—The Bishop of London has addressed the following circular letter to the clergy of his diocese, to which he begs to call an important but ill-supported society:—"Reverend and Dear Sir,—Suffer me to call your most serious attention to the statement which accompanies this letter. I need not, I am persuaded, point out to you the necessity of the proposed by the Additional Curates Society towards diminishing the fearful amount of spiritual destitution which prevails in our great towns and populous districts; nor how much still remains to be done in that direction. Important as it is to provide additional churches for those who are without the means of attending public worship, it is still more important to multiply labourers in the neglected corners of the land, to search out and minister to the spiritual wants of the people who are perishing for lack of knowledge, and who must be sought out in the hiding-places of poverty, and ignorance, and vice, and won over to the cause of their own salvation. But, in the present limited state of the Church, numbers are actually employed in the pastoral care of large parishes, the benefits of whose ministry are becoming to be felt and appreciated, shall or shall not be continued after the withdrawing of some pecuniary assistance, which has been continually increasing harvest field which lies around us is a contingency which cannot be contemplated without the deepest anxiety. A sum of £2000 added to the society's funds this year will be sufficient to meet the demand, at least for another year. Suffer me to request your cordial and active assistance towards raising the required amount. A plan and forcible statement of the present facts of the case will surely indispose any well-disposed person whom Providence has entrusted with the means of advancing the glory of God in his gospel and church, to contribute something towards the attainment of this most important object. I remain, reverend and dear sir, your affectionate friend and brother, C. J. LONDON. Fulham, Dec. 4, 1848."

EXTENSIVE FIRE IN REGENT-STREET.—On Sunday morning last, between six and seven o'clock, a fire, attended with the destruction of many thousand pounds worth of property, broke out in Little Portland-street, Regent-street. The flames commenced in a range of sheds, which were fitted up as stores for Mr. Samuel Peall, the shirt maker, and upholsterer, of Sun street. These sheds, situated at the rear of No. 3 in the above-mentioned thoroughfare, and, in the course of a few minutes, the whole were in a general blaze. These premises being occupied by the manufactory of Mr. W. Austin, lace and fringe maker, that property also was attacked, and the flames extended thence with such rapidity that the private house, in the occupancy of Mr. Davis, was fired at the back. The inmates of most of the houses were at that period in their beds asleep, but fortunately no lives were lost, and, after several hours' unremitting exertions, the progress of the flames was stayed. The cause of the fire was traced to some lime placed in the sheds, which, heating, set the timbers on fire. On Saturday and Sunday last, independently of the above serious fire, the engines of the London Brigade and West of England Company were called out to no fewer than ten fires. Fortunately in all these cases the amount of damage was but trifling.

The postal arrangement between this country and the United States is completed, and the convention is likely to be signed immediately.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

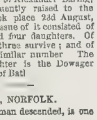
THE DOWAGER LADY ASHBURTON.



ANNE LOUISA, Dowager Lady Ashburton, has survived her husband but seven months. Her Ladyship was eldest daughter of William Bingham, Esq., of Philadelphia. She is written to Alexander Baring, Esq. (subsequently raised to the Peerage), took place 23d August, 1793. The issue of it consisted of five sons and four daughters. Of the former, three survive; and of the latter a similar number. The second daughter is the Dowager Marchioness of Bath.

ISAAC JERMY, ESQ., OF STANFIELD HALL, NORFOLK.

THE family of Preston, from which the unfortunate gentleman descended, is one of respectability in Norfolk, and is represented, through an heiress in one of its branches, by the present Sir Jacob Henry Preston, Bart., of Beeston St. Lawrence.

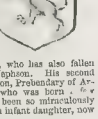


Mr. Jermy was the son and heir of the late Rev George Preston, and assumed the surname of Jermy, on succeeding to Stanfield Hall, near Wymondham, at the decease of a great-uncle. He was born 23rd Sept., 1789, and received his education at Westminster School, and Christchurch, Oxford. He subsequently became a student of Lincoln's Inn, and was called to the Bar by that Society. For some time he practised with success at the Norfolk Circuit, and was eventually appointed Recorder of Norwich.

He married, first, Mary Anne, elder daughter of the late Sir Thomas Beevor, Bart., and by her, who died in 1823, had a son, Isaac Jermy Jermy, who has also fallen by the assassin's hand; and one daughter, Mrs. Jephson. His second wife was Miss Jephson, daughter of the Rev. Mr. Jephson, Prebendary of Armagh, and by her he had one daughter, aged thirteen, who was born a few weeks before the death of her mother, and whose life has been so miraculously preserved. Mr. Jermy, Jun., was married, and has left an infant daughter, now heiress to the family property.

THE HON. MISS HARLEY.

THIS amiable and excellent Lady died a short time since, at her residence in Harley-street. She was sister of the present Earl of Oxford, being daughter of the late Hon. and Right Rev. John Harley, Bishop of Hereford.



GENERAL SIR HECTOR MACLEAN, K.C.B.

THIS veteran soldier, who died on the 11th inst., at his residence, 3, Northwick-terrace, in his ninety-third year, was third son of Hugh Maclean, thirteenth Laird of Coll, by Jannette his wife, eldest daughter of Macleod, of Talesker. Early in youth he obtained a commission in the military service of the East India Company, and left home to join his regiment in 1775, just seventy-three years ago, in the same ship with Lord Pigott, then proceeding to take charge of the Government of Madras. His subsequent conduct in India gained him fame and distinction. He took part in the siege of Pondicherry, in the operations against Hyder Ally, and at the storming of Seringapatam; and in 1800 was attached to the forces of Colonel Arthur Wellesley, under whose orders he commanded for three years a brigade of the army; gaining distinction for his gallantry and military skill more especially in the capture of the strong fortresses of Asseer Ghur and Gawilghur, and at the famous battle of Argaum. After this he held the command of the forces stationed in the vicinity of Hyderabad, until 1805. In 1811 he was promoted to the rank of Major-General, and in 1815 received the insignia of a Knight Commander of the Bath. For many years previous to his decease he had retired from the service, and had resided in London, highly esteemed and respected.

The house of Maclean, from which the gallant officer descended, has held for many centuries a conspicuous place in the history of Scotland, for independence of bearing and disinterested loyalty.

"Where wrong is sounding and bonnets are free, Maclean and his clansmen be ready to be."

EDMUND TURNER, ESQ., M.P.

THIS gentleman died suddenly, on the 10th inst., at the house of his son-in-law, W. C. Beasley, Esq., 7, Victoria-square, Pimlico. He was a magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant for Cornwall, and had, since 1837, represented his native town of Truro, in which he was an influential banker. Under the Corporation Act, he was elected by the greatest number of votes to the Municipa. Council, and unanimously chosen first Mayor of Truro. In politics he advocated Liberal measures, and supported generally the Whig party.

He was born 29th January, 1792, the son of Edmund Turner, Esq., also of Truro, banker; and married 16th July, 1817, Mary, daughter of Henry Hagar, Esq., of Redruth, by whom he leaves issue. His brother, the late Charles Wallingham Turner, Esq., distinguished himself in India as a soldier and a scholar.

THE CITY OF PRAGUE.

THE retirement of the Emperor of Austria to Prague, immediately after he had signed his abdication, has again directed public attention to this ancient city, but a short time since the scene of a fierce siege.

The strong line of demarcation by which the hand of Nature has separated Bohemia from the surrounding countries, have doubtless contributed to keep alive the feeling of nationality in the Czech population. The affections can more readily lay hold of a spot which is thus clearly defined—as we see in the case of islanders. On the north the Erzgebirge slope gradually upward from Saxony, but descend abruptly to Bohemia, encircling it like a huge wall; and from their summit a magnificent view may be obtained of a wide undulating and beautiful country, covered with towns and villages, and fields watered by sparkling rivers; and bounded again in the far distance by mountains towering to the skies

From this circling wreath of mountains there flow from east, and west, and south, streams which are the life-sustaining arteries of the land; and in the centre rise the hills of Prague, on which almost every great event of the history of Bohemia has stamped its indelible mark, either in the shape of still-enduring edifices and monuments, or of ruins and wide-spread desolation. In external appearance Prague may be considered as the greatest of the cities of Germany; this we may venture to say, not having, at the present moment, the fear of the Czechs before our eyes, who will by no means endure its being classed as a city of Germany at all. Prague is divided into four quarters, two of which, called the Old and New Town, lie on the right, and two on the left bank of the river Moldau, which flows through the city. The buildings rise gradually, slope after slope, from the water's edge to the summit of the eminences by which it is surrounded. The houses are mostly of a grand and massive character, but somewhat gloomy and heavy in their architecture, besides being blackened with age and dirt. The streets of the Old Town are narrow, dark, and winding; those of the New, separated from it by a ditch, more open and spacious; and in this quarter is the hill called the Wisschrod, mentioned in Bohemian chronicles as that on which the prophetess and Queen Libussa is said to have taken her stand, when in the year 722 she announced that Prague should become "a sun among cities," and where Ptemysl Ottokar II. planted his standard to bombard the Castle of Wisschrod. Of thirteen churches and all its ancient glories, nothing now is left but dust and rubbish, with the exception of one church and a fragment of the wall of another. It is flat on the summit, and abrupt on the sides, so that it is convenient for building and easy to defend. There are an arsenal and some barracks, but a great part of it lies waste. About its foot are clustered the dwellings of some of the poorest of the inhabitants.

On the opposite, or left bank of the Moldau, is the quarter of Kleinseite and that of the Hradschin, or "Palace on the Hill," the residence of the ancient Bohemian Monarchs. The Kleinseite contains most of the Government offices; it is the quarter of the aristocracy, and is covered with gardens and shrubberies, rising terrace above terrace to the summit of the hills. Although it is included within the city, one of these gardens, that of Count Salm, is large enough to employ twenty gardeners, besides a chief or head, and has an immense and splendid collection of plants. Probably many of these gardens have now been destroyed, as this part also was occupied by artillery and 25,000 men.

The palace of the Hradschin is a vast edifice, continuing, it is said, 240 rooms, but is chiefly remembered by strangers for one, from the windows of which, in 1618, were thrown the imperial Commissioners, Slawata and Martinitz, who had preached some, but was saved from destruction by the exertions of canons, though its beautiful columns, statues, and Gothic ornaments were mutilated. But scarred, and weather beaten, and worn as it has been by fiercer injuries of war, the Cathedral contains immense treasures and mines, and hundreds of priestly vestments decorated with costly jewels. Amongst these may be noticed one made from the coronation robes of Maria Theresa; and another, presented by Prince Schwartzenberg, and decorated with bunches of golden grapes and leaves—and, moreover, with all the buttons of his wedding coat, each being a precious stone of great value; besides a piece of

THE CATHEDRAL OF BRANDENBURG.

BRANDENBURG CATHEDRAL.

The removal of the sittings of the National Assembly of Prussia from Berlin to Brandenburg has been so prominent a feature of the recent intelligence from that country, as to render the new location a subject of interest to our readers. This adaptation of "the House of Prayer" to secular purposes was, to say the least of it, a most unscrupulous conversion.

The Cathedral is built of stone, at various periods, ranging from the foundation in the thirteenth century to the last restoration in 1836. It is part Byzantine, and part Gothic, in style: the interior, which is modern, is plain and unimpressive. The edifice gives its name of the "Dom" to one quarter of the town of Brandenburg, and the Chapter has a peculiar jurisdiction over half of the island on which it stands.

Our Illustration shows the western end of the Cathedral, with the principal entrance; and the house on the right was the temporary abode of General Brandenburg.

GOLD IN CANADA. The New York Express states that Professor B. Silliman, who has recently made an exploration of the "gold region" of Canada, gives an account of his examinations of masses of gold found in the valley of the Chaudière. They were firmly imbedded in what appeared to be slate, but which is probably a concrete of detritus, cemented by oxide of iron. The presence here of mineralogical features similar to those observed in other gold regions, affords grounds for the hope that it may become a rich auriferous region. As yet no excavations have been made on any scale of magnitude sufficient to warrant an opinion of the actual wealth of the deposit. A few tons of gravel have, however, been washed in a rude way with the Berks rocker, which have yielded about four dollars of gold to the ton of gravel.

DEATH OF SCHWANTHALER, THE SCULPTOR.

We regret to record the death of this eminent sculptor, in his forty-seventh year. He had long been a martyr to gout, which, in all probability, led to the breaking up of his system at this early age. Schwanthaler showed at an early age a love for the arts. He was first destined to the study of the sciences; and employed himself, when a boy, in the deepest study of Homer and the Greek tragedians. The death of his father compelled him to take to the business of statuary a profession which had existed in the family for generations, and which was that o his father and uncle. In the Academy of Arts at Munich, Schwanthaler did not find that support which he deserved. The director, Langer, a pedantic man, considered him too free and independent in his notions; and it was in opposition to that person's opinions that Schwanthaler followed the lectures on archæology at the Lyceum of Thiersch. The quickness with which he became a proficient in drawing from the antique, and the talent he possessed for composition, are shown by the first great work which he undertook. This was a large silver Iperyne, a commission from King Maximilian I. It was to be placed in the midst of a plateau, with a border of upright figures, to represent the procession of the Gods of Olympus to the Palace of Jupiter. Schwanthaler began the work; but before it was near being completed King Maximilian died. That portion of it, however, which was finished is described as being very beautiful. King Ludwig and the Duke Maximilian now extended their patronage to Schwanthaler, who executed for the latter the myth of Bacchus, in a series of relief compositions for the frieze of a room in his palace. King Ludwig, however, was his greatest patron; he entrusted to Schwanthaler the execution of all his most favourite ideas in connexion with sculpture; including the statues of painters in the Pinakothek, the protectors of antic art in the niches of the Glyptothek, the dramatic poets on the staircase of the theatre at Munich, and the compositions for the pediments of the Glyptothek, the Industrie-gebaude, and the Walhalla; besides many other relief pieces also at the Glyptothek and in the Royal Palace.

SCHWANTHALER, THE SCULPTOR.

Schwanthaler resided mostly at Munich, where his large atelier was always filled with numerous works for the various European Sovereigns, nobility, &c. The atelier is situated in the Leuben-strasse, on the way to the Theresien-wiese. It is divided into two parts, one on each side of the street, and it occupies no less than six saloons of considerable size, besides the dwelling-house. The reader has already become familiar with some of Schwanthaler's works in England, especially by the casts of the statues of Goethe, Mozart, Richter, and other productions. But by far the greater number are unknown in this country; and too many of them are necessarily of so local an interest as to have but few attractions except for Bavarians, who may be well acquainted with the details of the history of their own land. Among his statues of colossal size are those of the ex-King Ludwig, of Duke Albert of Bavaria, of Marshals Tilly and Wrede, Kriesmayer (the jurist), Rodolph of Hapsburgh, Jean Paul Richter (a delightful work, full of character and intellectuality), and the Margrave Frederick Alexander of Brandenburg. There are also in the sculptor's atelier models of the monuments erected to commemorate the completion of the Grand Canal of the Maine and Danube, of the bas-reliefs and groups which are to adorn the exterior of the Ruhmeshalle, and also of four magnificent figures representing the four provinces of Bavaria.

Among the works executed for foreign monarchs, nobles, cities, &c., are, the grand statues of Goethe (for Frankfort) and the Grand Duke of Baden, and a noble fountain, with five statues. This is one of the finest works of the sculptor. Each statue represents one of the rivers flowing into the Danube, and the artist has with astonishing skill rendered in the several figures the peculiar characteristics of each river. There are also colossal statues of Mozart, of Bernadotte, and of many others. Among the statues of the natural size are a Madonna; two nymphs dancing; two other nymphs; a group, "Flore and Mercure;" and a number of statues of Bohemian heroes.

Among the most remarkable things to be seen in the other saloons is the model of a colossal group of 18 statues, representing the Battle of Arminius with the Romans. This adorns the exterior of the Walhalla. There is immense spirit in this work. Besides this, there are also very many figures of various kinds, that adorn the new triumphal arch at the entrance to the town at the further end of the Ludwig-strasse.

Schwanthaler has also executed a very large group for the Duke of Devonshire, and a Nymph, ordered by the Earl Fitzwilliam, and now at Wentworth House. Among the sculptor's works, too, is a series of very fine bas-reliefs, taken from Hesiod—most of which were ordered by the Emperor of Austria, the King of Prussia, and the King of Wurtemberg.

Schwanthaler held, of course, a high position among contemporary artists in Germany he was placed at the head of the sculptors of the day, but it is always difficult to pronounce a judgment on such subjects. It appears to us that although he will be hereafter most known in connexion with his illustrations of Bavarian nationality, yet that his genius suffered by having been obliged to devote his mind so exclusively to the ideas and forms of the middle ages, when his own natural taste led him to the study and emulation of the ancients. Still, he was undoubtedly an artist of great genius, but his works were characterised rather by grandeur than beauty. A series of statues of Czech heroes and heroines, which he had been commissioned from Bohemia to execute, are interrupted by his death.

The remains of the sculptor have found a resting-place provisionally in the tomb of General Heidegger, until that shall be completed which the King was building for him and his friend, the late Director Görtner.

We annex a Portrait of Schwanthaler—a good physical likeness, and something more. there is a fine intellectuality in his face, and especially in his forehead.

We have engraved two of Schwanthaler's finest works—his statue of Goethe, at Frankfort, in No. 135 of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS; and the sculptor's colossal statue of "Bavaria," very vividly described in one of our Travelling Contributor's "Flying Sheets," dated Munich, Nov. 12, 1847, in No. 290 of our Journal.

PRAGUE.—THE OLD TOWN.

embroidery from the fingers of a Queen of the fourteenth century, in which it is calculated there are thirty miles of needlework in gold thread.

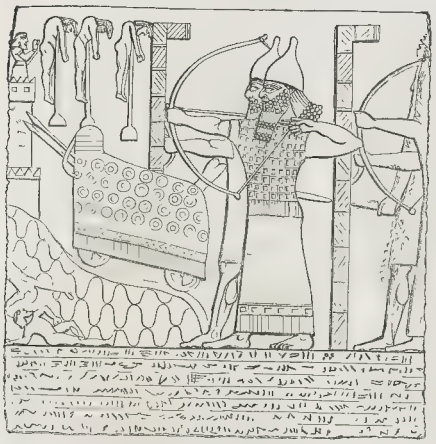
Prague is full of palaces, but many of them have a most desolate appearance, as their owners are absentees, and reside in Vienna. The University, too, which, in the beginning of the 15th century, contained more than 20,000 students, counted, in 1840, not more than 1700.

Of the four millions of inhabitants in Bohemia, three millions are Czechs—that is, of Slavonic origin; the rest are Germans and Jews, the latter of whom amount, in Prague only, to ten thousand—that is, nearly a tenth of the population. They occupy a crowded district of the Old Town, called the Jews' Quarter, which also includes an extensive cemetery, and the streets of which are frightfully narrow, crooked, and dirty. The people here are so crowded together, that three or four families often live in one room. During the late bombardment this quarter was set on fire by rockets; many of the people were killed by the fall of houses and the insurrection has added many heavy items to the list of injuries the city of Prague has sustained from war. Few countries have suffered so much from this cause as Bohemia. The desolation brought upon it by the Thirty Years War is eloquently described in mere figures. Out of 736 towns there remained 130; of 3,000,000 of inhabitants, 780,000; and of 34,700 villages, no more than 6000.

PRAGUE.—SKETCHED AFTER THE LATE BOMBARDMENT.

DARING BURGLARY NEAR BIRMINGHAM. On Friday morning se'nnight, a daring burglary took place at a farm-house, called Winfield, about seven miles from Birmingham, on the Stockton road, in the occupation of Mr. Thomas Sly, a man of eccentric habits, about seventy-eight years of age; his only company in being Mrs. Mary Shaw, his housekeeper, not a great many years his junior. The old man sold some houses, a few months ago, to the Stour Valley Railway Company, for about £700, which sum he insisted on having in gold; and, thinking that notes were dangerous, and banks unsafe, he kept the sovereigns in his house. The burglars, of whom there were several, seem to have been acquainted with Sly's habits and the state of his purse; and about two o'clock on the night mentioned they entered his house through the window of his own bedroom, and, while one of the ruffians held him down and bound him, enjoining silence by threats of death from pistol, and another imposed similar conditions on the aged housekeeper, a deal box by the old man's bedside was broken open, and the whole of the sovereigns extracted. The robbers then decamped. Four men are in custody on suspicion.

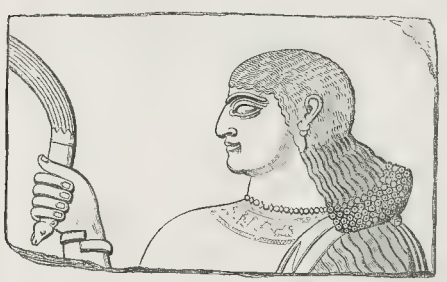
THE NIMROUD SCULPTURES LATELY RECEIVED AT THE BRITISH MUSEUM.



THE SIEGE.—IMPALEMENT OF PRISONERS.

THE NIMROUD SCULPTURES.

In accordance with our expressed desire to convey precise Illustrated Information upon subjects which but for the means we present would be unattainable by a large portion of the British public, we resume our former articles on the Sculptures from Nimroud, by describing those which have recently arrived; and regret that the impediments thrown in the way of our artists by the British Museum have hitherto retarded an account which we were desirous of supplying some weeks ago. As it is, we owe our acknowledgments entirely to the courtesy of Mr. John Murray, who, after expending several thousands in getting up two extensive works upon the subject "Layard's Illustrations of the Monuments of Nineveh" (with 100 folio plates), and "Layard's Narrative of Researches and Discoveries in Nineveh"—has most generously placed such drawings as we required at our disposal; notwithstanding that by so doing he affords us an opportunity of preceding the publication of the works in question by some days, and we thus cordially thank Mr. Murray for his liberality.



THE CUP-BEARER TO THE KING OF NINEVEH.

The fruits of Mr. Layard's excavations which we have now under notice, were sunk in the Jumna during their voyage to England, and are stated to have suffered considerable damage from their submersion; whilst we ourselves can vouch for the irreparable injury to the smaller and more fragile remains—such as glass and ivory—the consequences of careless unpacking and repacking; nevertheless, enough has been preserved to confirm the interest which already attached to these Scriptural antiquities.

The present importation comprises twenty bassi-relievi, four slabs of cuneiform inscriptions, a black marble obelisk, terra cotta vases, many of which have a blue vitrified glaze, like that used by the ancient Egyptians; fragments of bronze platings of arms and legs of chairs; elegantly carved fragments of sculptured ivory, some of which are gilt; three engraved rolling seals, one being of transparent glass; an Egyptian ornament, some cornelian and other beads, a silver ring, bronze nail with gilt head, one small bronze statuette of a sheep, two ditto of stags, and seventeen of crouching lions, varying in size from one inch up to twelve inches in length.

In our former papers, it may be remembered that we attempted an arrangement of the friezes, by which a consecutive story was made out, and our notion was, in some instances, supported by the fact of some of the slabs being consecutive pieces of the same history. The new friezes are not as suggestive of a regular story, but still we will try to follow out a similar arrangement, and suppose that the connecting links may yet be forthcoming, or may be found amongst the engravings from Mr. Layard's drawings, which are now about to appear. The relievi consist of four subjects illustrative of the attack and conquest of several fortified places, representations of divisions of the Great King's army, figures of divinities, and several fragments of sculpture of similar stamp.

The first relievo represents the attack on a fortress by the army of the Great King, typified by two bearded and one beardless figure: two of the figures, habited in long robes, are discharging arrows at the citadel; whilst the third, who wears a short tunic, holds in his right hand a dagger, and with his left sustains a high moveable breastwork, which extends from the ground to considerably above the heads of the besiegers, who are thus effectually screened. Immediately in front of this breastwork are three trees, two being of the palm kind, which are growing out of what we assume to be water, if the same conventional mode of representation is carried throughout; but, as it is not the nature of such trees to grow in water, and the termination is singularly abrupt, we conclude that there is no intention to signify a city surrounded by water, but that a stream has been suddenly turned against it by the enemy. Only one man is upon the walls, and he is discharging his arrows at the besiegers.

The next relievo is a continuation of the attack, and most interestingly indicates that the military operations of this early period closely resemble those of the present day, for the assailants are fighting in ranks under cover of a moveable wicker breastwork, and immediately before the troops is a war-engine on wheels, and covered by a hanging. This engine is impelled against the walls up a levelled roadway on the rocky ascent upon which the city is built; and the two spears attached have already effected a breach in a tower, upon the top of which a man stands with hands extended, as if asking for a truce. In front of the walls, and within view of the citizens, are three men impaled, as a warning to the besieged; and below, as if fallen from the walls, are a dying man and a headless body, the head having doubtless been removed for the purpose of numbering the slain, as in modern eastern warfare. The shield-bearer, as in the last frieze, is clad in a short tunic, whilst the bowman wears a long fringed dress, and a breast-plate: both have a form of cap not before shown on these remains. This slab having been curtailed on the right side, the rearmost figures are only partially indicated, and cannot therefore be described; but, like the last, it shows the cramp and drill-holes by which it was secured to the wall, and to the slabs above. (See Engraving.)

The third frieze is unquestionably the final assault upon the city, the citadel of which is strongly fortified by double ranges of embattled walls, the lowest even being higher than a full-grown date-tree seen on the outside. The city is built in a plain, and surrounded by a moat. The determined activity of the besiegers is shown by the artificial earth-work which they have raised to elevate their wheeled tower and enable it to command the walls, whilst, farther off, the soldiers are felling the fruit trees, devastating the country, and advancing with spear and shield. The fight is vigorously maintained on both sides; the bowmen in the moveable castle, and the besieged behind within the battlements, display equal and fatal earnestness, as is intimated by the dead falling into the ditch beneath.

THE OBELISK.

THE PASSAGE OF THE RIVER

The next fresco mingles, in the order of subject, conclude the history of the last described, as it represents a city built in a plain, and may therefore refer to the same conquest. The city contains a high citadel, and the walls are defended at regular distances by towers, both towers and walls being armounted with battlements, and farther protected by a moat. All the entrances of the city by battlements, and farther protected by a moat. All the entrances of the city are closed but against the principal gate are directed two of the before-mentioned moveable war engines, though apparently inactive, as there is no one to work them; neither are there any people within the city, where the only thing visible is a solitary date-tree in full bearing. At a short distance outside the walls, and as if issuing from some unimportant gate, is a car, drawn by oxen, and conveying a young man, with, for the first time in any of the sculptures that we have seen, a woman and child carrying household utensils; the whole design intimating, as we conceive, the total desolation and abandonment of the city, neither man, woman, nor child being left within it: "And behold the day they are a desolation, and no man dwelleth therein." (Jeremiah, c. 44, v. 2.) In the space above the car stands a man attired in the long fringed robe and other particulars of the costume of the subjects of the Great King, carrying a wand, from which we infer he is a herald or messenger, and that the evacuation of the city is not a voluntary act, but by command of the conqueror.

The fifth relievo represents a beardless person introducing four bearded prisoners, whose hands are tied behind them. The hands and a foot of another figure are seen behind, showing that the slab is imperfect; and, on examination, we find that the side, top, and bottom margins, have been chopped off. It is unnecessary to describe the dress of the beardless figure, or eunuch, as it is the same as we have so minutely detailed in our former papers; but his attitude is quite different, the left arm being raised, as if commanding a halt in the presence of some superior, who, we may suppose, would be found in the ad.oining frieze. The prisoners are simply habited in a short kilt, having neither cap nor fillet on the head, nor sandals on the feet. The whole execution of the work is of the rudest character.

The next frieze gives us a novel and most interesting scene—the passage of a river by the army of the Great King and his allies. The eunuch seen, by the accompanying Engraving, that the men of all ages encumbered by clothes or accoutrements, which, as well as the war chariots, are being conveyed in boats; the horses, likewise relieved of all trappings, are guided by swimmers, all of whom, whether soldiers or grooms, are supported by skins, which they hold with the left hand, and inflate as they progress, the right hand being used to propel and direct their course. Immediately preceding the boat with the chariots is another rowed by two men, and containing domestic furniture.

The succeeding five relievi represent winged men, or divinities, two of them holding in the left hand a basket, and presenting with the right a pine cone; the dress and attitude being precisely like that of the larger divinity we formerly described. Of the remaining three, two only have the horned cap, whilst the third has a circlet of rosettes round the head. The right hand of each is elevated, as if in the act of prayer; and the left holds a branch of five pomegranates dependent from one stem a symbol which may indicate that this divinity has some affinity to that of Damascus, to whose temple the King of Syria used to lean on the hand of the captain of his host, in prostrating himself before the l.r.-.-.ite word "Rimmon," the name of that divinity, signifies "pomegrante." (2 Kings, v. 18.) This apparent relationship to the divinity of Damascus would lead us to infer that these figures are from a more ancient palace, or at least an older part of the same structure, than that in which the vulture-headed god was found; nevertheless, the style and freshness of the sculpture lead us to draw an opposite conclusion, and to conjecture that this pomegranate-emblemed divinity, became the prevailing worship after the death of Sennacherib, perhaps during the reign of Esarhaddon.

The twelfth frieze represents two of the cavalry of the Great King, armed with bows and spear, and wearing the conical cap with ear-pieces; coats of mail, or breast-plates; their legs encased in plates armour, over which they wear boots: each holds the reins of his horse in the left hand, in readiness to mount at the word of command.

The thirteenth frieze displays another division of the King's army, likewise awaiting the word of command. The appointments resemble those of the last, excepting that they carry a sword in addition to the bow and spear. "The horseman lifteth up both the bright sword and the glittering spear" (Nahum, c. 3, v. 3.) The background of both these slabs is entirely covered with a succession of regular conical figures, like a diapering, and here and there a slanted tree. We conceive that the intention is to signify a mountainous and barren country, its great extent being indicated by the whole background being covered, but after bill filling up the space as far as eye can reach. It is worthy of remark that the mountain is represented on Egyptian monuments before the building of the Temple of Karnack, and that we do not know of any representation of Egyptian cavalry whatsoever, though a stray horseman or two are occasionally met with amongst the long-robed ancients of the Pharaohs in the battle scenes upon some of the temples Number 14 contains a bowman, with his shield-bearer; and behind them is a rank of slingers, bearded, and their robes having a pendent fringe un like any we have before seen on these sculptures. The slingers are armed with short swords, and each holds a stone in his left hand, ready to supply the sling. The bowman is clad in a conical cap with ear-pieces, breast-plate reaching to the waist, and greaves. His companion, the shield-bearer, is in similar costume, except as regards the greaves and beard. The shield is curved, and the top and bottom are protected by shields.

The rest of the frieze consist of the following fragments:—A bearded head, with a rose-decorated fillet the black paint of the hair and beard still remaining; a well executed head of the King; the King, umbrella-bearer, and charioteer; head and neck of a colossal human-headed bull, with wings Similar figures have been found as the entrances of the chambers of the assumed palaces of Nimrud. The legs of another bull, while are in the present collection, the head having arrived with the first importation. The head and shoulders of an individual of the conquered nations, wearing a turban of three folds, bracelets, armlets, and ear-rings: he has a short beard and woolly hair; his hands are upraised in the attitude of awe and submission in the presence of the Monarch. And, lastly, the head and shoulders of a beardless man, whose robes are richly embroidered.

We have given an Engraving of this, as we esteem it the portrait of an officer of high rank in the Assyrian court—no less a person, indeed, than the King's cup-bearer, if we may judge from what we can see of the insignia of his office, and his embonpoint: one to whom was appointed "a daily provision of the King's meat, and of the wine which he drank," in order that he might appear fat and fair, a quality seemingly as essential in the officers of the court of the King of Assyria, as in those who stood before the King of Babylon in the time of Daniel. (Chap. 1, v. 5.) The figure of a divinity, embroidered on the hem of his robe, intimates that he was named after that god, if we may argue from our knowledge of the unvarying customs of the East. (Dan. c. 4, v. 8.)

Having thus completed the details of the friezes, we now turn to that monument which has excited the most curiosity and expectation, as being atonce the most lofty, the most interesting and comprehensive in itself—we mean the Obelisk, one side of which our Artist has selected for particular examination. The Obelisk, one side of which our Artist has selected for particular examination. The Obelisk, one side of which our Artist has selected for particular examination. The allowed a crest. A younger son has a right to the full arms and quarterings of the family from which he derives. When two crests are correctly borne, it is either from the nearer having taken a second surname, or from a specific grant.

"Erectheus."—Sir Frederick Thesiger did, we believe, formerly practise at the Prince Court, as one of admitted Barristers.

"B. M."—A communication may be obtained after the age of 18.

"Amicus" kindly corrects an error in our memoir of Sir John Barrow. The wife of the present Baronet is sister of Mrs Croker, and not niece of the Right Hon. J. W. Croker.

"E. S. T." The introduction of some superior officer is usual, but not absolutely necessary. Tuesday is, we believe, the day.

"F. J. F. B." Burke's "Landed Gentry" forms three volumes, and costs two guineas and a half.

"A Weymouth Correspondent."—Otho, King of Greece, is married to Maria Frederica Amelia, daughter of the Grand Duke of Oldenburg

"Patria."—Rubens came to England, on a diplomatic mission, in the reign of Charles I. A reference to the Almanac de Gotha of this year, will ascertain all the titles borne by the Royal family of France

"An Old Subscriber," Leicester.—We will look into the interesting point suggested, and endeavour to supply the required information

"A Constant Subscriber," Wells. Charles II. was the first to coin copper farthings for England. Queen Anne's farthings are not difficult to obtain. Mr. Webster, 17, Great Russell street, Covent garden, has several.

"Marie"—The Empress Faustina, wife of Antoninus Pius. Worth from 2s. to 3s.

"Herefordensis" not only misunderstands, but misquotes the article which he criticises. If we will read it again he will find that the contradiction, which to one sentence he calls apparent, and to another real, does not exist, either in the spirit or the letter . . . and that we made no pretensions to expound prophecy, either scriptural or unscriptural.

"A Constant Reader."—Mehul's song, from "Joseph," "Ere infancy's bud," may be procured at any music-seller's

"Nabucco or Nino."—Verdi's "Nabucco" was styled at Her Majesty's Theatre "Nino," the names being changed on account of the objection to perform an opera drawn from biblical history

"C. C.," Oxford.—Any music warehouse in London will undertake to supply the organs required.

"J. N. B."—The numbers of Mozart's trios vary in the German, French, and English music sellers: we have not an edition to refer to.

"Bottle."—Marie is the Count of Candia, and was born in Sardinia. He was an officer in the Guards, and his family is one of the oldest in Italy.

"Stockport."—Cramer, Beale, and Co., Regent-street, could supply the words of the "Stabat Mater."

"J. H."—Inquire of any music-publisher in Edinburgh, or Duff and Hodgson, Oxford-street.

"Heraldicus."—Our correspondent is evidently a wag; but we cannot afford time to answer his jokes about Verdi's operas

"Ernani."—Verdi is alive, and is under engagements to produce operas in Paris and St. Petersburgh. He is now in the former capital. His "Jerusalem" was the "Lombards" story, with additional music. As to the comparative merits of Herold, Halévy, Auber, and Verdi, we rank the last as justly placed in our correspondent's list

"A Correspondent." Snipes are not game; you may shoot them upon your own ground without a license, but you must not trespass to do so

"A Constant Subscriber."—Not ultimately, if the holder proves that he has a good title to the notes

"Anna."—Sal volatile and ammonia are not the same; sal volatile containing ammonia, combined with aromatics.

We are authorised to contradict the statement made in our Foreign Musical News of last week, that Mdlle Meric is the half-sister of Mrs. Alcock: it.

BOOKS, &c., RECEIVED DURING THE WEEK.

Cobbold's Voice from the Mount.——Life of W. Collins, R.A.——Post-Office London Directory.——The Art of Illumination.——The Shakspere Almanack ——Menzel's History of Germany.——Miller's Philosophy of History.——Lamartine's Three Months in Power.——The Preacher.——Winds and the Waves. ——Jenkins on Education.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1848.

The results of the Presidential Election in France, as far as they are yet ascertained, show a large majority for M. Louis Napoleon Bonaparte. In most of the districts, the number of suffrages he has obtained are as two, three, and even four to one, compared with those registered for General Cavaignac. In some towns, as Amiens, the electors are unanimous in favour of M. Bonaparte. The votes offered for M. de Lamartine, M. Ledru-Rollin, and M. Raspail are few, and would not merit notice, except for the significant proof they afford of the fickleness of popular opinion with regard to M. de Lamartine, once the idol of the nation. M. Ledru-Rollin and M. Raspail can scarcely have been called candidates. Had they formally solicited votes for their adherents, they would undoubtedly have stood in a higher position; especially M. Raspail, who would have received the support of the Communists, Cabetists, and Fourierists, who swarm in Paris, Lyons, Rouen, and other populous towns. There is no reason for the belief that any returns from remoter districts, or the final summing up and verification of the votes, will alter the relative numbers for the two candidates-M. Louis Napoleon may be considered as the elected President of the French Republic. The nation has pronounced;—and for good or for evil, has nominated for its chief ruler a man of whom no one in France knows anything that is not foolishly ambitious, except that he is the nephew and representative of the greatest tyrant that ever ruled over France, and the most mischievous man that was ever permitted to be the scourge of humanity. Never did the principle of universal suffrage receive a greater blow than has been administered to it by this proof of the reverence paid by the French multitude to the memory of Napoleon—a man whose name, had he not died in exile and captivity, would have been as execrated, even by Frenchmen, as it is now adored. "Il nous faut un nom," sings M. Barthélémy, the author, who, in conjunction with M. Méry, some twenty years ago, wrote the notorious poem, "The Son of the Man;" and whose Bonaparti affections have broken out again with more than their pristine virulence. "We must have a name," he exclaims; and the French have got it.

We hope that it will be of the service they expect, and that in addition to the name which they have chosen they will find an honest man attached to it. However this may be, it is certain that the great Democratic Republic has expressed its dislike or distrust of the principle that called it into existence, by making choice of an individual whose only claims are derived from his hereditary descent, when it had the power and the opportunity to support a principle more in accordance with its origin. We must not, however, do M. Louis Napoleon injustice. Though he have been chosen by a glory-loving people merely because his uncle gained battles for their fathers, it is possible that the elected may prove wiser than the electors. He may rise to the height of his own position. He may be animated by the best intentions. He may desire sincerely to found upon a stable basis the Republic of which he is the creature; and he may possess abilities which he has never yet had an opportunity to display. We sincerely trust that it will prove so. Even as he will have a difficult game to play, if he attempt to play false with the Republic. The men who made the Revolution have not shown themselves very fit for the task of governing a great nation. In office they have been little. In opposition they may be great. The unpopularity that always follows power like its shadow has adhered to them. They will now, if they be wise, retire into constitutional opposition, and respect the choice of the people. If they do so the unpopularity of power will, in due time, settle upon their successors, and General Cavaignac, M. Marrast, and their friends will become popular in their turn. The odium of taxation and the blame of all the distress and calamity that the French nation is fated to undergo before it can settle down into its old quietude and industry, will be laid upon the shoulders of the new President and his ministers; the Republican phalanx, composed of leaders who now differ from each other on minor points of policy, will on the other hand postpone or forget their differences and become firm and united. They will be a power in the Assembly and in the nation, which Louis Napoleon, and M. Thiers, and all the statesmen of the old régime whom he will gather around him, will find it inexpedient to outrage or despise. In fact, if Louis Napoleon be honest, he may prove a better President than his competitor for that perilous dignity. As it would be unjust at present to throw doubts upon his honesty, let us presume that he is so. Yet we must confess, that whatever we may be disposed to think of him, we should have thought much better of the French people if they had not elected him.

The differences between the Pope and his subjects seem to increase. His people, while they express the warmest attachment for his person, take care to treat his orders with disobedience, if not with contempt; and the Pope himself fulminates proclamations, which read more like religious bulls denouncing wrath against unbelievers, than the political state papers of a constitutional Sovereign. Shortly after his arrival at Gaeta his Holiness despatched an ordonnance to Cardinal Castracani at Rome, declaring void all the acts of the Mamiani Ministry, and superseding the Chambers and the Government by a State Commission. Cardinal Castracani communicated the document to the President of the Chamber, and a meeting hastily convoked assembled at midnight on the 3rd inst. to consider it. No sooner did the gentlemen named in the State Commission hear of the honour intended for them, than they either declined it, or fled from Rome. The President, in introducing the rescript, stated that it came before them in no official form. It was dated from a fortress in a foreign territory, and he had yet to learn that a Monarch absent without leave from his dominions could expect deference from his constitutional subjects. The Pope had alleged that he was under restraint in Rome, and that he had fled to be at liberty, but his people were not satisfied that he was more free under the guardianship of Neapolitan bayonets. He could not even consider the rescript as the spontaneous emanation of the Pope's own mind. The Chamber, after deliberating all night, issued a proclamation in the morning declaring its unanimous opinion that the rescript addressed to Cardinal Castracani was informal and invalid, as it was countersigned by no responsible Minister. The proclamation added, that the Chamber had no personal wish to thwart the Pope's will in acting under restraint, and that a deputation of both Houses should be appointed to wait on his Holiness and request his return to his own dominions.

Had the Pope proceeded to Malta, as was his original intention, his flight might not have produced an injurious effect on his personal popularity. The democracy of Rome, Ancona, Foglino, Perugia, Forli, and other towns, look, however, with jealous mistrust on his residence in the Neapolitan territory; and the praises lavished by the Pontiff, both in his public prayers, and in his short addresses to the King and Royal Family of Naples, upon the "faithful army" of that State, betoken a reliance upon physical force for the re-conquest of his lost position, which is far from satisfactory to his people. M. Mamiani has announced to the Chamber of Deputies that the Ministers, in order to fulfil the promise they made to the people on assuming office, have determined to proclaim forthwith a Constituent Assembly for the whole of Italy. He, in consequence, demanded of the Chamber the necessary authority to commence negotiations with the other Italian States for this purpose, beginning with Tuscany. The mission of the Constituent Assembly will be to frame a federal pact, which, whilst it shall respect the existence of isolated States by leaving their form of Government and their fundamental laws unchanged, will secure the liberty, the union, and the absolute independence of Italy. The draft of a bill to this effect has been received, and ordered to be printed for distribution among the members.

Rome remains perfectly tranquil, and all the principal towns of the Papal States have given in their adhesion to the Ministry.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT OSBORNE.

On Saturday last, the Duke and Duchess de Nemours arrived on a visit to her Majesty.

On Sunday, the Queen and Prince Albert, with the younger branches of the Royal Family, and the Duke and Duchess de Nemours, walked in the grounds in the morning. The Queen and Prince Albert, accompanied by Viscountess Canning, as Lady-in-Waiting, the Hon. Miss Dawson, Colonel Birkel-Drummond, and Colonel Bouverie, attended divine service subsequently at the Whippingham Church. The Duke and Duchess de Nemours went to the Roman Catholic Church at West Cowes.

On Monday morning the Queen and Prince Albert drove to Cowes. Colonel Birkley Drummond, the Groom-in-Waiting to her Majesty, left Osborne during the morning. Lord Elphinstone, Lord in-Waiting to her Majesty, arrived at Osborne in the afternoon, to be in attendance during the period of the Court remaining at Osborne

On Wednesday Prince Albert embarked on board the Fury, at Osborne Pier, and proceeded on board the Ajax steam guard-ship, to witness the experiments with the new steam propeller, fitted in that vessel.

Lord and Lady John Russell are staying at Woburn Abbey, Bedfordshire, on a visit to the Duke and Duchess of Bedford

The Earl and Countess Grey have gone on a visit to the Duke and Duchess of Bedford, at Woburn Abbey

Viscount Palmerston is staying at Brighton.

Windsor Castle.—The preparations for the forthcoming dramatic representation at this Royal residence are rapidly approaching completion. The room selected for the purpose is the apartment looking over the North Terrace, formerly called the "King's Drawing-room," but since her Majesty's accession to the throne designated "The Rubens Room"—a number of the chefs d'œuvre of that master decorating the walls, which are hung with crimson silk damask, bearing the initials G R. within the motto and garter of the order of that illustrious fraternity. Across the northern end of the room the proscenium will be erected, the recess of the noble oriel window, which occupies nearly the whole of that end of the room, adding great depth to the stage The southern half of the apartment will be furnished with tapestry, forms, and ottomans for the use of her Majesty and the Court, with the Royal visitors. From the dimensions of the room, it is evident that the audience is not expected to be a numerous one.

Marriage of Sir Henry Lytton Bulwer.—The British Minister at Madrid, and the Hon. Georgiana Charlotte Mary Wellesley, youngest daughter of the late Lord Cowley, and niece of the Duke of Wellington, were married on Thursday evening last, by special licence, at Hatfield House, the Marquis of Salisbury's seat, in Hertfordshire. The Rev. Gerald Wellesley, assisted by the Rev. F. J. Faithfull (rector of Hatfield), and the Rev. B. Stanley, performed the ceremony, the bride being given away by her noble and gallant uncle, the Duke of Wellington. The bride and bridegroom, after the usual attestation of the marriage, left Hatfield House, in a chaise and four, for Knebworth Hall, the country seat of Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton, Bart., near Stevenage. The nuptial festivities were kept up until midnight, when the distinguished company invited to witness the ceremony separated.

Arrival of Effects belonging to the Duc d'Aumale.—Lately a number of packages belonging to the ex-Royal Family of France arrived at Folkestone from Paris, and were forwarded to the Queen's warehouse in London, under the official seal of the Customs. The Duc d'Aumale was present last week at the examination of the cases, which contained, besides a variety of miscellaneous articles, some valuable old china, richly-ornamented African saddles and horse trappings, together with swords, daggers, guns, pistols, &c., all of a very costly description. Several of the arms were of the most elaborate workmanship, and highly ornamented with diamonds and other precious stones. The Duke explained that many of these had been made presents to him by the friendly chiefs of Algeria, during his residence there as Governor of the province.

Remarkable Meteors.—A most brilliant and singular meteor was seen at East Linton on Sunday evening last, about half-past six. It was first observed near six degrees to the east of the spot of the Great Bear, and descended in a particular line till it reached the edge of a dark cloud, a little above the horizon, immediately before reaching which it seemed to stop in its progress, and burst in the most grand and brilliant manner, lighting up the whole northern hemisphere for an instant, as splendidly as any aurora we ever witnessed. To the eye, when falling, it appeared of the size of the planet Venus when seen through a telescope of very high power. About eleven o'clock on Tuesday night a large ball of red fire was observed at an elevation of from two to three hundred feet above the Partick-road, Glasgow, rapidly moving northward, and, on reaching over Sandyford-place, it exploded with the sound of a hard-shotted large cannon's discharge, shedding a stream of brilliant white light, and a shower of fire, like falling stars, scattered all around. The night was very dark at the time, but when the explosion occurred it became for an instant bright as day. About twenty-five to thirty minutes after, another ball, in size and splendour as after, after streaming along the same rays, burst, with a corresponding noise, light, and a shower of star y materials, over Sandyford-place House, so that part of the meteoric fragments alighted above the roof of that residence. Glasgow Courier.

POSTSCRIPT.

We understand that Dr Bowring, whose eminent qualifications as a linguist are so well known, has been appointed her Majesty's Consul at Canton. The learned gentleman has long been in a state of health which required his residence in a warmer climate. We believe Mr Bowring will succeed Dr Bowring in the representation of Boston in Parliament.

At the Liverpool Assizes, on Thursday, James Kelly, a young man of 24 years of age, who was charged with having, on the 15th of September last, murdered Elizabeth Norris, at Stockport, because she had rejected his addresses, pleaded guilty to the charge, and was sentenced to death.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE.

The Presidential Election.—The official returns for Paris and the environs render Louis Napoleon's majority greater than that represented by the non-official returns of the poll previously published in the journals, the numbers being—For Louis Napoleon, 295,484; and for General Cavaignac, 95,558; out of 341,829, the aggregate number polled: the rest being divided among the other candidates, Ledru-Rollin, Raspail, Lamartine, &c. The returns from the provinces continued in favour of Napoleon.

On Thursday, M. Marrast was re-elected President of the National Assembly

PRUSSIA.

In Berlin, the law establishes on the 5th inst., decided that the new Constitution is not to have the force of law until it shall have been confirmed by the Chambers; and, until then, that the old laws shall remain in operation.

ITALY.

Rome.—From Rome we learn that at the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies on the 4th, M. Mamiani having expressed a desire to resign the office confided to him by the people and the Assembly, the Prince of Canino (Lucien Bonaparte) energet cally combatted his resolution, and urged him to convoke a Constituent Assembly, elected by universal suffrage, which would be the sovereign judge of the question at issue between the people and the Pope. The President afterwards read a letter from M. Lunati, resigning the Ministry of Finance. M. Sereni, Minister of Justice, had also retired from the Cabinet; and the portfolio of Finance devolved on M. Sterbini, and that of Justice on M. Muzzarelli.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

Licensed Victuallers' Protection Society.—On Tuesday the fifteenth annual meeting of the members of this society was held at Radley's Hotel, Bridge-street, Blackfriars; Mr George Bennett in the chair. The committee, in their report, stated that 190 rewards had been distributed to persons instrumental in the detection and conviction of offenders against the members of the trade. There had been received, during the year ending the 31st of October, including £711 14s. 6d. collected on the excursion to Brighton, and £100 from the Wine and Spirit Dealers' Society, the sum of £1448 18s. The disbursements, including £402 9s. 11d. parliamentary expenses, amounted to £1[illegible]. A balance of £[illegible] was in favour of the society amounted to £3072 7s. 5d., being an increase of £168 2s. on the preceding year. The report, after a short discussion, was agreed to, as were also votes of thanks to the chairman and committee for their efficient services during the parliamentary struggle. The officers for the ensuing year were then appointed, and the meeting separated

The Charterhouse.—Celebration of the Founder's Day. On Tuesday the 5th anniversary of this ancient institution was celebrated by the usual ceremonies. The attendance of old Carthusians was numerous, and composed of distinguished personages. Divine service was performed at four o'clock: the sermon being preached by the Archbishop of Canterbury. At the conclusion of the sermon, the company retired to the great hall, where Mr. Charles Greenwood Floyd, the senior scholar, delivered a Latin oration, which he concluded with a graceful compliment to Sir Robert Peel, who had placed him on the foundation. At the close of the proceedings a large number of old Carthusians dined together, the stewards being Sir R. Peel, Bart., M.P., the Hon. J. G. Talbot, T. T. Pelgrave, Esq.; the Rev. C. Lushington, the Rev T. James, and the Rev. T. Darling. Several excellent speeches were delivered. Mr. Floyd, who delivered the oration, is about proceeding to Christ Church, Oxford, on the Charterhouse foundation.

City Commissioners of Sewers.—At a court held on Tuesday at the Guildhall, Mr Deputy Peacock in the chair, the report upon the gas bill about to be introduced into Parliament was brought up. It recommended that the bill be adopted. Mr. Alderman Lawrence opposed the project of turning the corporation into large gas manufacturers, and insisted that monopoly might be prevented by admitting other companies Mr. Kemp denied that that would supply a permanent security against imposition. Mr. Stacy said the Court did not contemplate the manufacture of gas by the corporation, but aimed with the powers which the bill would give them, they would be possessed of the best means of checking all gas monopolies. Mr. Harrison considered that all that was wanted was the power to purchase the pipes and mains; he moved an amendment which Mr. Dixon seconded, excluding the power to purchase gasworks or erect works. The Remembrancer, being appealed to, expressed an opinion that Parliament would not sanction a bill of so limited a nature, upon the ground of the injustice of thus dealing with a company established at a great expense. After much discussion, in which the example of Manchester and Liverpool was cited in support of the application recommended by the report, the amendment was negatived by 10 voices against 7, and the report was received. The bill will be prepared and submitted to Parliament without being referred to the Court of Common Council. Before the Commissioners adjourned, Mr Simon, the City Officer of Health, reported that the epidemic was rather on the decline for the last week, and that he had heard of no case of cholera in the city.

Fenchurch and Oriental Steam Company.—The eighth annual meeting of this company was held on Wednesday, at the company's offices; Sir J. Pirie in the chair. The secretary read the report, which stated that for the year commencing 1st October, 1847, and ending 30th September, 1848, the position of the company had improved, as compared with the corresponding period of the previous financial year, both as regards its income and its profits. The tender side by the company to Government for establishing a monthly communication between Singapore and Sydney, with full-power paddle-wheel steamers, instead of sailing schooners with auxiliary screw-propellers, had been declined, and last advices from Australia to the most explicit terms, that they were in no way responsible for the discontinuance of the conveyance of the India mail, or the 3d of the month, from Southampton. A dividend of 4 per cent, clear of income-tax, for the half-year ending 30th September last, was declared, and made payable on and after the 23rd instant.

Oriental Bank.—The annual meeting of this company was held on Thursday, when it appeared that the profits of the year's opera tions were to the extent of £292,91[illegible] 13s. 9d. The bank had incurred losses to the extent of £32,000, which were, however, amply covered by the large reserve fund. The dividend on this occasion made up, with the June dividend, 8 per cent. for the past year. The report of the directors was adopted

Battersea New Park.—Active operations for the formation of the new park at Battersea are now in progress, and the inhabitants of the metropolis may hope, in the course of a year or two, to be in undisputed enjoyment of a most healthful recreation ground. The site chosen for the park extends from the Red House nearly to Battersea-bridge, is remarkably level, smooth as a bowling-green, and capable of producing shrubs, trees, or flowers in the greatest luxuriance. At the present time it is occupied to the very verge by its industrious occupiers, the agriculturists and market gardeners of the neighbourhood. The frontage next the Thames is cut up into numerous small properties, and for years past has been let to no productive purpose. When the tides run high, the water overflows the adjacent lands. This contingency her Majesty's Commissioners of Woods and Forests propose to provide for by the purchase of the frontage property, and the conversion of it into a noble marine terrace; but the difficulty of completing the various negotiations has hitherto prevented the commencement of the works. As in many other cases, private enterprise steps in, and anticipates the tardy movements of the executive. Messrs. Cubitt, Chabot, Payne, Procter, and others are embanking their respective frontages. For more than two months past about three barges have been daily employed in conveying the dredgings of the streets of the metropolis to Battersea, where several men are employed in conveying it from the vessels and depositing it on the embankment Mr. Chabot, in like manner, draws his supplies fro m the London Docks. The soil is particularly soft and slushy when first deposited, but soon consolidates, and forms a fine, firm, substantial stratum. The embankment, which is about 5 feet above high-water mark, and is about 70 or 80 yards in width, starts from near the Royal Flag, and is carried on regularly to the chemical works near Battersea Bridge.

Flood Tide in the Thames.—On Tuesday afternoon the river Thames continued to flow for a considerable time after the period fixed for high water, and at half-past three the low grounds on either bank were completely under water, the Bishop's-road, Chelsea, and Pimlico, and Grosvenor, Lambeth, being inundated to a great depth, a number of which were employed to ferry the inhabitants to and from their dwellings. The basements of the houses in Fore-street were completely flooded, and considerable damage and loss is consumed. The tide overflowed the Hungerford and Adelphi Wharfs, and washed over the Templegardens embankment. At all the steam boat piers the passengers had to clamber over planks. The Essex, Woolwich, Wandsworth, and Battersea marshes were replaced under water. Much damage is reported to have been sustained on the south bank of the river, though no loss of life

Serious Accident.—On Tuesday evening an accident occurred in the Strand, in consequence of the driver swapping on his horses before the passenger had alighted on the ground from the omnibus. A lady and gent-eman were getting out of the omnibus, opposite St Mary le-Strand Church. The lady reached the ground safely, but the gentleman was just gaining the foot-board when the omnibus went on rapidly, flinging the gentleman on the pavement. In his fall his leg doubled under him, and was fractured The sufferer, who endured the most excruciating agony, was conveyed to the hospita. in a cab. It is not known [illegible]ing lady was, from a similar cause, pitched out of an omnibus on her back in Regent-street

Births, Deaths, &c. The total number of deaths in London during the week ending Saturday last, December 9, was 1116, or 5 under the average. Scarlatina is still very prevalent and fatal. During the seven days included in the return that malady destroyed 117 lives, or nearly six times as many as [illegible] deaths during the week numbered 1389

ELECTION OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.

OFFERING THE CANDIDATES' NAMES TO THE VOTERS.

NEWS-BOYS SELLING PORTRAITS AND CARICATURES OF CAVAIGNAC AND NAPOLEON.

The long-looked for Presidential election commenced on Sunday last in Paris and the provinces; the polling continued throughout the day, and having been resumed on Monday, was finally closed on that night at nine o'clock. The proceedings were not marked by any disturbance or breach of the peace, and the crowds in the streets of the capital, though noisy and abounding in partisan speech-makers, could not be regarded as disorderly considering the occasion.

During the first day Paris presented the aspect of a public fête. The weather was beautiful, and all the thoroughfares and places were crowded with promenaders in gay attire. Nothing in external appearances indicated alarm, notwithstanding the excitement exhibited by the attroupements in various quarters of the capital on the previous evening (Saturday), on which occasion, until past midnight, the Place Vendôme presented a dense crowd, composed almost entirely of the lower classes, and the Rue St. Honoré was intercepted in several places by groups and assemblages, in which animated discussions were going on. The Boulevards, from the Rue de la Paix to the Boulevard Poissonnière, also formed the theatre of like discussions, and the Porte St. Martin and the Porte St. Denis were as usual crowded, as well as the Boulevard du Temple. In this latter neighbourhood menacing shouts were heard against the Garde Mobile, some detachments of which were stationed at the post "Conservatoire des Arts et Metiers," in the Rue St. Martin. At one time these were called out, and showed an attitude so determined that the crowd became silent and retired. Patrols of police officers traversed the Boulevards during the evening. The Faubourg St. Marceau and the Place Maubert on the same night were the scenes of disorderly manifestations. To remove all pretext of disorder, the Garde Mobile, which had occupied the barrack of the Place Maubert, evacuated it, and the Quartier Latin was traversed by patrols during the night.

It was those indications that caused the friends of order to look to the election on the following day with apprehension; but, as already stated, they were agreeably disappointed, all things having passed off quietly, with the exception of a collision between some Gardes Mobiles and soldiers of the line on Sunday night, at half-past twelve o'clock, just outside the Barrière du Trône, at one of the petty ball-rooms, which for a considerable distance line the road to Vincennes. During some time those parties have cherished a secret grudge towards each other, and on this occasion they came to blows. The Mobiles, being the minority at first, were beaten. They sought the assistance of their comrades, and returned reinforced, when a battle commenced between them with side-arms, in which two soldiers were killed, and several on each side wounded. This riot would not merit particular notice were it not indicative of the species of feeling that exists in the corps in question. On the one hand the soldiers are jealous of the superior pay and rations enjoyed by the Mobiles. The latter, proud of their achievements in June, are somewhat presumptuous; while, to fan the flame, for the last two or three months the Red men have been flattering the troops on every possible occasion, by cries of "Vive la Ligne!" and have been insulting the Mobiles, by calling them "Cavaignac's butchers." There are efforts in progress to reconcile the soldiers and the Mobiles. Three battalions of the latter, and some battalions of the former, in the great court of the Tuileries, which are exercised under the same command.

In the course of Saturday afternoon a proclamation was posted, addressed to the people, in which it was declared that, whatever might be the result of the election, the Government was resolved to maintain order, and cause the votes of the people to be respected.

During the two days' voting, a Section was established in the Salle des Conferences of the Assembly, where the votes of the members were taken. One of the votes given at this polling-place was in favour of Abd-el-Kader. The Univers says it was given by the Marquis de la Rochejaquelin, who could not make up his mind to vote in favour of either of the other candidates.

An accurate return of the votes was not possible until the publication of the official list, which was expected to be made known on Friday (yesterday); but all accounts concur in representing the state of the ballot throughout the departments as being almost universally in favour of Louis Napoleon, who, it was considered, had obtained, not only the comparative, but also the absolute majority of the votes over his rival, General Cavaignac.

The other candidates, Raspail, Ledru-Rollin, and Lamartine, were never considered as likely to obtain more than a fraction of the people's suffrages.

In Paris Louis Napoleon had a majority in all the twelve arrondissements, the returns from which give the following:—

Prince Louis Napoleon	131,134 votes.
General Cavaignac	74,129
Ledru-Rollin	22,279
Raspail.	12,506
Lamartine	3,144

In the second, the most important arrondissement of Paris, when M. Thiers presented himself to vote, three or four electors who had not yet polled made way for him, and, as he advanced among the throng, he stated publicly that he was about to vote for Louis Napoleon, whereupon two-thirds of those present tore up the billets they were prepared to give for General Cavaignac, and, taking those of Prince Louis, voted for him

The returns show that, counting the votes given for General Changarnier, Marshal Bugeaud, the Prince de Joinville, Arago, Larochejacquelin, Louis Blanc, Dupont (de l'Eure), Proudhon, Considerant, De Montol, Eugène Sue, Hyde de Neuville, Jerome Bonaparte, Berryer, Marshal Soult, Beranger, Abd-el-Kader and even Vidocq (!), which in all amount to 114, and may be considered in the HOTEL OF GENERAL CAVAIGNAC.

ELECTION OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE FRENCH REPUBLIC:

OUVRIERS PROMENADING THE BOULEVARDS AND SINGING "A BAS CAVAIGNAC!"

GARDIEN DE PARIS TEARING DOWN THE ADDRESS OF LOUIS NAPOLEON.

light of votes thrown away, Louis Napoleon had in Paris, on the gross poll — which consisted of 342,476 votes—an absolute majority over all his competitors of nearly twenty thousand (19,832).

In the Banlieu (environs) of Paris the following votes were given for

Prince Louis Napoleon	26,209
General Cavaignac	[illegible]
Ledru-Rollin	[illegible]
Raspail	1,058
Lamartine	221

These show a majority for Louis Napoleon over Cavaignac of 20,[illegible] votes, and an absolute majority of 16,411 out of the 36,007 votes polled for all the candidates.

The votes polled for MM. Ledru-Rollin and Raspail, which amount to 34,935 in the city of Paris, and 3601 in the environs, in all 38,536, may be held to give the measure of the Red party in the capital and its vicinity; and consequently indicate that the Socialists, Communists, and ultra-Republicans constitute in all little more than one-eighth of the population of the city of Paris and its banlieu.

From the provinces the returns which had reached Paris were equally favourable to Louis Napoleon. The latest accounts received state that the number of votes known amounted to 1,240,000. Of these, 782,000 were for Louis Napoleon, and 268,000 for General Cavaignac.

On Sunday Louis Napoleon, accompanied by his uncle Prince Jerome, and his cousin Napoleon Bonaparte, paid a visit to M. Odilon Barrot, at Bougival, his country seat in the neighbourhood of St. Germains; and, after a long interview with that gentleman, they returned to Paris, and dined with M. Thiers. The object of both visits was to consult as to the formation of the Ministry.

On Monday the Prefect of Police issued a copy of the decree of the 7th of June, forbidding rassemblements, so as to put an end to the noisy crowds in the thoroughfares. The clubs, also, were ordered to be closed.

In the Chamber, on Tuesday, it was decided that in case it be found that the majority shall be such that the votes of Algeria cannot affect the election, the President shall be proclaimed without waiting for those returns; and that the residence of the President shall be the Palais National.

At the same sitting the following representatives were elected by the standing committees of the National Assembly, to form a committee to examine the returns relative to the election of the President of the Republic:—MM. Armand (de l'Ariège) Tranchant, Carnot, Moth, Vaulabelle, Sarrans, Buchez, Waldeck Rousseau, Pleignard, Baune, Leichtenberger, Baroche, Charton, Ferdinand Barrot, Conti, Goulhade-Chanoin Ducos, Beaumont (de la Somme) Astouin Jules Richard, Nachet-Abbal Petitelier, Durand-Savoyat, Charlemagne, Cavaignac, Woirhaye, Chauffour, Laissac, Santayra. The President and officers of the National Assembly are to act with this committee.

A large proportion of the army is understood to have voted for Louis Napoleon and his popularity amongst them is said to be very great. On Monday evening a collision, which had nearly produced lamentable consequences, took place amongst the troops posted in the Esplanade des Invalides. A soldier, having cried "Vive Cavaignac!" was instantly attacked by several of his comrades, who, crying "Vive l'Empereur," rushed upon him and were about putting him to death, but a number of officers rushed through the infuriated soldiers and saved him.

On the same evening, on the Boulevard Poissonnière the mob seized a carriage in which were a million of billets for distribution in the name of General Cavaignac, and burned them, one of their party having ingeniously discovered in the ornamental border that surrounded them a lily and a crown.

In support of what is stated to be the general feeling of the provinces, it may be mentioned that at Bar-le Duc on Saturday last the population carried the buss of the Emperor Napoleon through the town, crying "Vive Louis Napoleon!"

TAKING THE BALLOT-BOXES TO THE HOTEL DE VILLE.

The Prefect anticipating such a movement sent for a squadron of cavalry to Verdun. The troops arrived at the moment the multitude were dispersing with cries of "Vive Louis Napoleon!" when, to the dismay of the authorities, the troops were hailed in the popular cry.

"Vive Louis Napoleon!"

The news there was demonstration against General Cavaignac, on the 10th. The General was hanged in effigy at the Croix-Rousse, notwithstanding the presence of the police and of the municipal authorities, who were unable to prevent it.

The works of the fortifications of Lyons had been suspended in consequence of the agitation which had prevailed in that city for some days previously.

It was generally understood that both candidates had provisionally nominated their cabinets. In that of General Cavaignac, M. Dufaure would be President of the Council; M. Armand Barrast would be Vice-President of the Republic.

When Louis Napoleon's return began to appear certain, various Ministerial combinations were mentioned as likely to be made by him. The following was the list of Louis Napoleon's first Ministry, which was supposed to have the best chance of being adopted:—M. Léon de Malleville, Minister of the Interior; M. Achille Fould, Minister of the Finances; M. Drouyn de Lhuys, Minister of Foreign Affairs; M. Léon Faucher, Minister of Commerce; M. Barthélémy St. Hilaire, Minister of Public Instruction; M. Odilon Barrot, Minister of Justice and Keeper of the Seals; and General Oudinot, Minister of War. It was thought that General Changarnier would retain the command of the National Guard of Paris; that Marshal Bugeaud would be appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Army of the Alps, and that Marshal Thayer (the son-in-law of General Bertrand) would be appointed Prefect of the Seine. M. Emile de Girardin was said to have proposed himself as Prefect of Police, but that both M. Thiers and M. Odilon Barrot opposed his appointment to any office.

None of the former Ministers of Louis Philippe, except M. Odilon Barrot (who held office for half an hour), will for the present accept of place. M. Thiers will not, it is believed, accept the Vice-Presidency of the Republic, as it would disqualify him for the Presidency on the next occasion. Although not in office, they (and M. Berryer and his friends) will, it is understood, support the Government.

On Wednesday the list was slightly modified thus:—M. Odilon Barrot, President of the Council and Minister of Justice; M. Achille Fould, Minister of Finance; General Oudinot, of War; M. Barthélémy St. Hilaire, of Public Instruction and Ecclesiastical Affairs; M. Léon Faucher, of Public Works; M. Bineau, of Commerce and Agriculture; Admiral Cecille, of Marine; M. Léon de Malleville, of the Interior; M. Drouin de Lhuys, of Foreign Affairs. Messrs. Duvergier d'Hauranne and Hyppolite Passy had refused the Finance department. The clergy objected to the appointment of M. Barthélémy St. Hilaire; and M. Falloux was again talked of for the department of Ecclesiastical Affairs.

General Cavaignac was to leave for the south of France immediately after the proclamation of the President, which was expected to take place on Monday next. M. Louis Napoleon intended to offer him the government of Algeria, or the command of the Army of the Alps. Paris continued tranquil.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

The annexed Series of episodical Illustrations of the Election are from Sketches by MM. Valentine, Forest, and Gays, the Parisian artists, who, throughout the contest, visited its principal localities, in order to convey the most characteristic points of a French Election. They have alike portrayed the business and humorous of the event.

In the Engraving upon the front page, we have the interior of the Mairie, with the form of taking the Votes. The form of voting is thus: the Voter gives his bulletin to the President of the bureau, who, after he has examined the carte électorale, gives the Voter a ticket, on some formality, into the box, in the presence of the voter, who then retires, and gives place to the next.

The next Illustration shows a group of followers, exclaiming, in the plenitude of partisanship, "For Louis Napoleon," or "For for General Cavaignac."

Then follows the proceeding of the offer of the Candidates' names to the Voters, as they entered the Committee-rooms.

In the next, a marchand is turning the event to common social account by vending portraits and caricatures of the Candidates, to tempt the grave or the gay, as the case might be.

The Burial of General Cavaignac, a focus of great interest, is shown in the next scene, with Gardes Mobiles, troops of the line, dragoons, &c., ex masse and a dragoon issuing from the gate with dispatches.

A group of Ouvriers—Anti-Cavaignacs—is next portrayed, traversing the Boulevards, shouting with all the vigour of French lungs, "A bas Cavaignac!" the yelling intensity of which was very striking.

In the adjoining Cut, a Gardien de Paris is removing from the wall the address of Louis Napoleon.

The series closes with a nocturnal procession the business of carrying to the Hôtel de Ville the boxes containing the votes. The blazing of torches, and the presence of Gardes, make this a very effective scene.

SCIENTIFIC PATENT ELECTRIC LIGHT.

(To the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.)

SIR,—We are indebted to you for several scientific notices of our operations in the field of Electric Illumination. It would be, indeed, a boon, if an important invention, which threatens to disturb great vested interests, were not to meet with a measure of misapprehension, not to say misrepresentation.

The main difficulty, hitherto insurmountable, in obtaining a continuous and self-sustained light from electricity, having been perfectly, and beyond all doubt, surmounted, in the body of his late article in your journal, and called a mere "secondary matter" "a trifling mechanical difficulty:" while another objection is stated in its place, viz. "the trouble and difficulty of working the battery," and which, you say, has been "a much alarmed cry" a mere assertion in general terms, intended as a set off against the declared results of a vast number of experiments made with instruments, whose perfect accuracy can be depended upon; which, according to an unit of electricity of our own establishment, measures the precise consumption going on in the battery at any and every moment during the action of the unit. This may seem strange to many, even the learned in electrical science; but it is not the less true. The quantity and intensity of this current were matters of mere guess-work, and not capable of being accurately and exactly ascertained, except by our batteries and unit, the application of our experiments of electricity to lighting would be sure to fail in practice. The result of the cost may at once be briefly stated. Assuming the present market prices of materials, it amounts to less than three-farthings per hour for every volume of light equal to that from 100 standard wax candles, three to the pound, that is, supposing the product of the battery to be wasted, and not stored for sale, as recommended, as it may be, when exclusive lighting is in operation. And the above datum supposes the quality of the electrode to be one of the least economical; for, in putting forth an authoritative statement of this nature, truth is our first care. We have nothing to conceal: we court enquiry: it is our best reliance, provided it be a serious, impartial, and business-like enquiry, and not mere declamation or vexatious opposition.

The batteries have been much misrepresented. It is surely unnecessary to say that we have never contemplated using any battery that emits "noxious fumes" of any sort, neither for private lighting (where the battery might perhaps be on the premises), nor indeed for any sort of illumination. For experimental illustration we use whatever form of battery suits our convenience at the time. The spec fication of Mr. Staite's last patent (due in January) will explain the particulars, and convince the most sceptical that we are no longer to deal with any formidable difficulty either in the way of labour or cares; those arrangements will be made, in the first instance of general lighting, to a proper care and fair play.

So far from the action of the Patent Batteries being analogous (as was imagined) to "burning the candle at both ends," it is rat or a parallel to the process of fortifying the oil with the rents of its own spring.

We are happy to be reminded, by an expression in your article, of that important matter, the peculiar economy of light obtained as the electric light is, by great concentration of action, or high temperature with very small quantity of heat; it is a source of economy which can compensate for any sacrifice of means to obtain it, not to mention the purity of light which arises from the same cause. It may be explained that the amount of radiant light increases in a much greater ratio than the increase of temperature. We have before us a series of curves showing the relative increments of temperature, tad ant heat, and light, from a solid body "per power as far as experiments have been carried," when the radiant light increases as the sixth power of the excess of temperature above 960° Fahr.—that is, if the temperature of a common candle flame be a little below 960°, then a body raised to a white colour 1020° will give 120,000 times as luminous; which experiment proves to be the actual luminosity of the Electric Light, although the fact would otherwise be incredible

We are, Sir, yours respectfully,

W. E. STAITE,
W. PETRIE

P.S.—In your last Number you say, "We are not aware that any person has as yet pretended he could give a steady light without touching it even for a single hour." The best answer we can give to this is that not only the public on several occasions, but at the exhibition, in Baker-street, we had the light in action for hours together without any touching whatever, and the rissands can testify in the fact. We shall soon, however, have a public light in action, which will be lighted up at dusk every evening and continue in action until midnight. This will at once set at rest such unfounded statements, and prove to all classes that we have completely succeeded in obtaining a pure, perfect, and continuous light from voltaic electricity, and we will prove also, at the proper time, at a cost which defies competition.

London, December 11th, 1848.

[It is manifest that the public cannot judge of things which are to be—they can only draw an inference from facts as they find them at present. Now what was detected at the National Gallery the deadly fumes of nitrous gas, about which there can be no mistake. There are, moreover, awkward statements which are reported of injury to several workmen in the manufacture of the battery. We are great advocates for the Electric Light, and in our former article held out a hope that, possibly, if the voltaic power was so employed that light alone was produced, it might not be found so expensive as to preclude its use in some cases. When the patentees can furnish us with the means of ascertaining for ourselves the facts as they have stated them, we shall have the greatest pleasure in laying them before the public. At present, although wishing the adaptation every success, we must hold that the patentees have not given any sufficient grounds for supposing that electricity can be practically and advantageously applied for the generation of light.—Ed.]

MUSIC.

SOCIETY OF BRITISH MUSICIANS.

The third Chamber Concert was given on Monday night, at the Hanover-square Rooms. The scheme opened with a MS. trio in E minor, for pianoforte (Miss Calkin), violin (Mr. Watson), and violoncello (Mr. W. L. Phillips), composed by Mrs. Romer, a better known as Miss Caroline Orger, who, like the ci-devant Mrs. Kate Loder, has distinguished herself in chamber composition. The trio is well constructed, but is formed on too familiar models to qualify it as an original production. Miss Pyne obtained an encore for a song by Mr. J. W. Davison's talliement," to Shelley's words; the Misses Pyne were encored in a duet by Macfarren, "Let us haste to the river;" and Miss Dolby was similarly honoured in a MS. song by Mr. W. L. Phillips, "Summer Night." Mr. Sloman's Serenade performed his suite de pièces, Op. 24, the charming No. 3, a Rondo Piacevole, being encored. A MS. quartett, in D major, No. 2, for two violins (Messrs. E. W. Thomas and Watson), tenor (Hill), and violoncello (Mr. F. Reed), composed by Mr. C. E. Horsley, was also executed, and much applauded. Mendelssohn's "Variations concertantes," Op. 20, for stringed instruments, was spiritedly rendered by Messrs E. W. Thomas, N. Mori, Reading, Watson, Hill, Weiske, W. L. Phillips, and W. F. Reed. Mr. Robert Barnett accompanied the vocal music.

JULLIEN'S CONCERTS

Drury-Lane was on Monday evening crowded even more than usual by eager thousands, attracted by the programme for the benefit of Monsieur Jullien. All tastes had been consulted. For the lovers of "high art" the director had selected Cherubini's overture to "Les Deux Journées," and the allegretto from Beethoven's Symphony in F; whilst for the general audience there was the usual enlivening dance music. Two new sets of quadrilles, the "Maid of Honour" and the "Caledonian," were very successful; and the Drum Polka, as usual, set everybody's feet in motion, in spite of themselves. Sainton performed a solo on the violin, in which he was encored; Richardson played a solo on the flute, rich in all his usual brilliant passages; and the extraordinary Vivier astonished everybody by his wonderful effects on the horn. In addition to all this, we had the beautiful selection from "La Sonnambula," with its splendid solos; and the five bands, with their crash of loyalty in "God save the Queen." Nothing could surpass the enthusiastic applause and excitement of the audience.

The concert season is drawing to a close. Saturday and Monday the annual magnificent bal masqué will take place, which, from the number of people in town, is expected to be unusually gay.

LONDON WEDNESDAY CONCERTS. At the fourth concert at Exeter Hall, Vivier, the horn-player, was added to the attraction of Thalberg. The vocalists were Miss Messent, Miss Bassano, Mrs. A. Newton, Miss Dolby, Messrs. Lawler and Lockey. Ballad singing is evidently the great attraction at these concerts.

THE MENDELSSOHN SCHOLARSHIPS AT LEIPZIC. The performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," at Exeter Hall—with the disappearance of Mdlle. Jenny Lind, to sing the principal part in English, took place on Friday (last night) at Exeter Hall. For some days previously every ticket had been sold. Benedet conducted, and Mr. H. Smart was the organist. Our notice must be deferred until our next publication.

MUSICAL EVENTS. The Choral Harmonists had their second meeting last Monday night, at the London Tavern. The sixty-second meeting of the Glee Club will commence this evening at the Freemasons' Tavern. On Monday next, the Classical Harmonist Society at Bristol, with professional aid, will perform "Elijah," and on the next day at Bath.—Mdlle. Lind will sing on Tuesday and Thursday next, at two concerts, in Manchester, for the benefit of the Royal Infirmary. On Thursday next, at Exeter Hall, the "Landa Sion," performed at the Liège Festival, by Mendelssohn, and Handel's "Alexander's Feast," will be performed, under Mr. Hullah's direction.—On Wednesday, at the same place, will be the fifth concert, under Mr. Stammer's direction.—Miss Julia Bleaden gives a concert at the London Tavern on Tuesday next.—Mr. Frederick Lucas's Theatre, the 12th annual "Concert Monstre" at the Princess's Theatre, on Wednesday next, a host of talent, including Mdlle. Nissen, Misses Birch, Lucombe, Miran, Ransforth, Poole, Bassano, and Mdme. F Leblanche; Messrs Sims Reeves, Harrison, Travers, Allen, C. Braham, Phillips, Lefler, F. Labbeche, Rissell, and the Dumbleton Serenaders; Mdme Dulcken and Thalberg, Richardson (flute), Chatterton (harp), Regondi (concertina), and Thirlwall are to be the soloists.—The concert given at Lewes on Wednesday by Mdlle. Lind, for the ban-fit of the Conductor and Band who accompanied her during her late tour, realised a considerable sum.—Panofka, the violinist and composer, has arrived in London for the season.—Mr Macfarren, the composer of "Don Quixote," and "The Devil's Opera," is shortly expected in town from the United States.—Handel's "Messiah," conducted by Costa, will be performed for the last time on Saturday next (the 23rd), by the Sacred Harmonic Society, at Exeter Hall.

FOREIGN MUSICAL NEWS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

The benefit for the pension-list of the Théâtre de la Nation, given last Friday, was brilliantly attended. It is a long time since a greater audience had been collected. Lablache, Ivanoff, Gardoni, Mario, and Grisi, the great trio, "whitewashed," and with a large bergerette, returning the curtsies, and as I imagined savage, glances cast at him by the pittites and occupants of the balcon. Within a few hours of him was our countryman, Lord Normanby, who in the course of the evening joined Cavaignac, an attention which was strongly commented upon in the foyer, as being mal apropos just on the eve of the election. A Napoleonist, however, declared that the visit was of little consequence, as Lord Normanby was just as civil to Prince Louis when he met him at the Princess Demidoff's soirée. Little Thiers, with his huge pectacles, was in the house, and was gifted with a song, Madame Garcia Marrast, with his English cara sposa, were in another box, and in aristocratic cut, to the open avowed indignation of the parterre. In the foyer, politics and not music and the Beaujolais were discussed in groups—the Cavaignacs being in numbers few, and the Bonapartists are.

As for the performance, nothing could scarcely be worse. It opened with the first act of Auber's Lac des Fées, a thing I suppose got took for last season's burning "Elisir d'Amore." In this act the famed Levasseur, who created the parts of Bertram and Marcel in Meyerbeer's "Huguenots" and "Robert le Diable," reappeared after a retirement of some years. The veteran bass was cordially greeted; and when he uttered the first lines of the part of the quack doctor, "Vous me connaissez tous, du moins je le suppose," there was a fresh burst of cheering. Although Levasseur sings since a man who has lost his teeth, there is a distinction in his style which still renders him far superior to all the modern artists, and it's management has deemed it politic to re-engage him. He sang during the evening in the third act of the "Huguenots," and in the fifth act of "Robert le Diable." Of the tenors, Barbot, in the "Philtre," and Guaynard, in the gamings from Meyerbeer's works, it would be in vain to afford you a notion, as execrable was their singing.

Of the prima donne, Mdlle. Grimm, who sang in Auber's work, and of Mdlle. Lutzer, who was the Valentine and Alice, there is something to be advanced in the way of exemplary severity: Mdlle. Lutzer has a fine voice, especially in its upper notes, in which her sustaining power is remarkable; but she has not a particle of dramatic feeling.

A piece of news that will create no ordinary sensation in your musical circles, I am enabled to give on the best authority. Grisi, the incomparable Norma, Semiramide, and Juccarda, bids adieu to the Italian Opera in London next year (1849), which will be her farewell season.

THE THEATRES.

Beyond our usual anticipatory notice of the Pantomimes, we shall have nothing to record in the dramatic way during the week. Covent-Garden, the Lyceum, and the Olympic are closed, and the others are running on to their terminus with such impetus as they have acquired, waits all their mechanism is at work for the Christmas pieces.

The horses will be at Drury-lane; but what will take place at Covent-Garden is not altogether settled. The Haymarket, Lyceum, and Adelphi produce burlesques; and the Princess's, Surrey, Marylebone, and Sadler's Wells, pantomimes.

It is worth adding regret that we announce the failure of another attempt to establish the English lyric drama in London. Mr. Bunn opened Covent-Garden Theatre on the 9th of October, and on the 8th of December was compelled to give up the undertaking, we may add that the closing is definitive, and that there can be no renewal of the attempt to perform English operas this winter.

The SURREY Theatre has been re-decorated in a most splendid manner, and will be one of the handsomest houses in London. It will open on Boxing-Night with a new drama by Mr Webb, and a pantomime. Amongst the company are Mr. Emery, Mr. Lyon, Mr Neville, Mr. H Widdicombe, Mr. Rogers, Mrs. Pownall (from Brighton), the Misses Lobatt, and a numerous corps de ballet.

Young Musard, the famous enfant terrible of the Parisian dancing orchestras, has been engaged at the WALHALLA to conduct the band, so Terpsichore will be in greater force than ever after Christmas.

It is, we believe, definitively settled that Mr. Bickstone goes back to the HAYMARKET at Christmas, on the conclusion of his engagement at the MARYLEBONE.

M. Robert-Houdin was announced to commence his Soirées Fantastiques at the ST. JAMES'S Theatre on Thursday. As the Emperor of all the Magicians, and really the originator of the various tricks performed by the other wizards, she will worth a visit.

LECTURES ON THE DRAMA. Mr Samuel Lover's Lectures at the Whittington Club, this evening, will be followed by one on the Drama, its origin and history, by Mr. Samuel Emery, to commence on Monday next.

THEATRICAL WARFARE IN AMERICA.—The Daily News correspondent at New York writes as follows:—"Theatrical matters are going on now in this city, as is the quarrel between Forrest and Macready. I alluded, in a preceding letter, to the attempt made in Philadelphia to hiss the latter from the stage, which was defeated. Mr. Macready made some explanation of his views in relation to the matter, to which Mr. Forrest replied in a rude, ill-tempered, and vulgar note, containing personal allusions of the most uncalled-for character. Every one was surprised, and the press, without an exception that we remember, has condemned his conduct. To the assertions of Mr. Forrest Mr. Macready has [illegible] In the meantime the English tragedian is honoured with larger audiences than ever, and Mr. Forrest has lost much of the ground over which with his huge limbs he so sturdily strode."

LITERATURE.

THE LADY'S ALBUM OF FANCY WORK.—Grant and Griffith.

This is a small quarto volume of the art and mystery of Knitting, Netting, Crochet, and Embroidery. The directions for working the several patterns are clear and explicit. The patterns and designs are novel and elegant; they include music-stool covers, berthes, sofa cushions, d'Oyly's, vase stands, trayclothes, polkas, lace collars, handkerchief corners, and cuffs; anti-macassars, hat nets, lamp mats, wafer-pockets, card-baskets, net ties, night-caps, gloves, slippers, purses, &c., all beautifully fitted to a colonne. Time was, and that not long since, when a purse, a watch-pocket for a bed, or a set of d'Oyleys, were the extent of the fancy-work of this class; but of late years taste has multiplied these ornamental articles almost ad infinitum.

Nothing can be more cleanly in use, or elegant in appearance, than these home manufactures; and, besides their "household" use, they indirectly cherish the affections of the hearth and home, and not one seldom act as straws thrown up to tell which which way the wind blows. The making of them is so women what angling is to the stronger sex, neither work nor play, but an incentive to both. We [illegible] great recommendation in such tasteful labours: and from the perils when King David and the poet Homer sang of the arts to the present day, we question whether so artistic a collection of designs has been made so well and in this "Album." To complete the ensemble, the binding is a beautiful lace pattern, exquisitely printed. We may add, that a more attractive present at this season could scarcely be devised: it is worth a score of "Annuals" volumes in their silken sheen, and the "Album" is useful in the same proportion that it is tasteful, artistic, and elegant.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The Squire's neck or nothing. Old Song.

A nobleman—of whose sporting career it may be truly said, nihil quod tetigit non ornavit—in his early days used to complain bitterly that nothing was fast enough for him. "Hounds were too slow, gentlemen's horses too fast," he would mutter; "how I should like to be fired out of a cannon, just to feel what speed really is—for once." This was previous to the introduction of seventy miles an hour on the Bridgewater level, or of express trains generally. The taste having become popular, means for ministering to it were sought in a quarter notorious for cultivating the pace—and the steeple-chase was imported from "——Connaught." At first we had it in the genuine compound of "hair-breadth 'scapes," with a spice of mischief to give it flavour. It has since advanced regularly in the same direction, and may now claim the degree of neck or nothing in the class of British Sports. . . . . .

During the present week, an anticipated of the science was held at Wolverhampton. The fact had been anticipated by some emphatic theory concerning the cutting up. The handicap was "considerable objection;" and certainly it looked a puzzling proposition, even after the acceptances were declared. Of the thirty-seven named, seventeen were left in, three of which carried three stone less than the rest of the weight. It is very difficult to understand the policy of offering the same premium for bad horses as for good. Two animals—one of them carrying nearly half a hundredweight more than the other—meet to contend for a prize, over four miles of country. As the case may stand, the stakes represent the bank, and the horses two players, whereof the one "sets" with gold, and the other with Brummagem brass. To be sure, your handicap promises a full field, of which comes a full book; and what is a sporting gentleman without his speculations? Alas! that fashion, whose cynosure is the ring, should seem to be falling upon evil days. It was but Wednesday last that the "National Betting Company," according to the police reports, was presented at Bow-street, under the Vagrant Act. Imagine the firm of Fitz-Sweepstakes and Co. getting three months on the mill as rogues and vagabonds!

On the 12th instant, aided by most flattering "adley influences," the Wolverhampton Annual Steeple chases came off. The most accountable race was that for the Handicap Stakes of 20 sovs each, 100 added, with all conditions, penalties, and so forth. It has been said 37 were named, and seventeen accepted. It remains to be said that thirteen ran. The betting was 7 to 2 against Richard the First, 1st. 8lb., and 5 to 1 against Prince George, 10st. 6lb., and the same against the Victim, 11st. The Prince—with the prince of steeple-chase jockeys, Tom Oliver, on him—won with all ease; the second and third being little other than coursed in the hunting phrase, as they were set down. Captain Peel, on Proceed, 12st. 8lbs., stopped at the end of two miles the wonder being that he could "proceed" so far. The Selling Stakes Little Fanny won, receiving half a sovereign for the Handicap Stakes of 20 sovs each, 100 added, with five subscriptions, penalties, and so forth. It has been said 37 were named, and seventeen accepted. It remains to be said that thirteen ran. The betting was 7 to 2 against Richard the First, 10

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS

"Balp."—Get the "Chess-Player's Handbook," published by Bohn, York-street, Covent-Garden.

M. S. E.," Devonport. See the notice above to "Balp."

J. B.," Richmond. The only monthly periodicals on Chess now published are the Chess-Player's Chronicle and the Berlin Schachzeitung. The first is one abiding and cheapest per Number; and the other can only be obtained by becoming an annual subscriber. Apply to Williams and Norgate, foreign booksellers.

"P. G. R." The correct derivation of the word "check-mate" we take to be "shah-mat," the King is dead." In reply to the other question, we refer you to the notice above to "J. L."

G. S. T."—Concentrate your powers upon one good three or four-move Problem; it will be worth a hundred such milk-and-water productions as those alluded to

"Mozu," Foru, is thanked for his courteous offer; we have, however, an English translation of "Oreus," by Lewis, which is greatly superior to the French one, and can be got for a mere trifle.

"H. B. P."—1st. A King can Castle after he has been in check, but not when he is checked. 2nd. A Pawn can only take in passing, as his first move.

"F. W. M."—Captain Kennedy's encounter with Mr. Lowe will be decided when other party has true seven games

"Argus"—You have been misinformed. Articles on Chess were published in the Lancet, under the sanction, we believe, of Sir Astley Cooper, himself no mean proficient in the game, as far back as 1824

"S. B. R. T."—"The Strategems of Chess" is in no respect a valuable work. It is obtainable in London for 1s. or 1s. 6d.

"J. O. N."—You must be at the pains to write out the Problem in question.

"E. D."—1st. A Piece cannot be taken in the act of Casting. 2. You will find a great deal of information on the origin and history of Chess in the earlier volumes of the Chess-Player's Chronicle.

"R. H. A." Send only the best moves for the attack and defence; never mind the unimportant ones

"J. R."—Send the notice above to "H. B. P."

"Jarejh" is again thanked for his obliging letter.

"G. B. P." A King can Castle after he has been checked. A Pawn cannot be taken en passant by anything but a Pawn.

"Domus."—See "Chess-Player's Handbook," published by Bohn.

"H. V."—See our reply to "F. G. R."

"C. P." Next week.

"Lucius."—It shall be given next week.

"Otho." We think No. 254 a very ingenious Problem, notwithstanding there are two solutions.

"F. C. R."—The forty-eighth move in Mr. Harwicke's first game, last week, is K to B 4th.

Solutions by "Belus," "Jordan F.," "R. R.," "S. U.," "Alpha," "Woodstockiana," "W. J.," "J. H. N.," "F. H.," "F. R. S.," "Old Joe," "J. B. war," "W. L.," "Canro," "Ferdinand," "S. L. K." "H. V." "G. A. H.," "T. W." Alphington," "W. P." "Omega," "Punch," "Semper Recrus," "G. M." "A. L. M." "F. G. R." "J. B" "B. V." Dereon, "R. R." "M. E. R." "S. S. H.," are correct. Those by "W. M'Q.," "Gelo," are wrong.

 The answers to several communications are unavoidably deferred, from want of space, this week.

 Any Amateur willing to play a Game at Chess by Correspondence may meet with an antagonist by addressing to the following: "L. K. X.," Post-Office, Canaburgh-street, Regent's Park.

MATCH BY CORRESPONDENCE,

BETWEEN THE CHESS CLUBS OF LONDON AND AMSTERDAM.

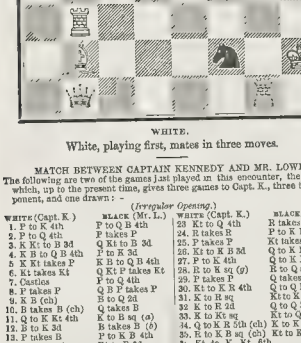
WHITE (Amsterdam).	BLACK (London).
21. K R to K sq	21. P to Q R 4th

Amsterdam to play.

PROBLEM NO. 255.

This very clever little stratagem is the device of Mr. A. G. McC., of Glasgow.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White, playing first, mates in three moves.

MATCH BETWEEN CAPTAIN KENNEDY AND MR. LOWE

The following are two of the games just played in this encounter, the result of which, up to the present time, gives three games to Capt. K., three to his opponent, and one drawn:—

(Irregular Opening.)

WHITE (Capt. K.)	BLACK (Mr. L.)	WHITE (Capt. K.)	BLACK (Mr. L.)
1. P to K 4th	P to Q B 4th	24. R takes R	R takes R
2. P to Q 4th	P takes P	25. P takes P	P to K Kt 5th
3. K Kt to B 3d	Q Kt to B 3d	26. R to K B 3d	Kt takes P
4. B to Q B 4th	P to K 3d	27. P to K 4th	Q to K Kt 6th (f)
5. K Kt takes P	K B to Q B 4th	28. R to K sq (g)	Q to K B 5th
6. Kt takes Kt	Q Kt P takes Kt	29. P takes P	R to Q sq
7. P to Q 4th	P to Q 4th	30. Kt to K R 4th	Q to Q B 4th (ch)
8. P takes P	Q B P takes P	31. K to H sq	Kt to K B 7th (ch)
9. K B (ch)	B to Q 2d	32. K to R 2d	Q to Q 3d (ch)
10. B takes B (ch)	Q takes B	33. K to Kt sq	Kt to Q 6th
11. Q to K Kt 4th	K to B sq (a)	34. Q to K R 5th (ch)	K to B sq
12. B to K 3d	B takes B (b)	35. R to K B sq (ch)	Kt to K B 5th
13. P takes B	P to K B 4th	36. Kt to K 4th (ch)	K to R sq
14. Kt to Q 1	Kt to B 3d	(ch) (h)	Kt to R 2d
15. Q to K Kt 3d	P to K R 3d	37. Kt takes Kt	P to K 4th
16. P to Q B 4th	Kt (Kt 4th) to Q 2d	38. Q to K 4th (ch)	K to R sq
17. P takes P	Q takes P	39. Kt to Kt 6th (ch)	K to R 2d
18. Kt to Q Kt 3d	Kt to K 4th	40. R to B 7th (ch)	K to Kt sq
19. Q to K B 3d (c)	Q to K 4th	41. Kt takes P (discovering ch)	K to R sq
20. Q to K 2d (d)	Kt to K B 3d	42. Q to K Kt 7th	Mate.
21. Q R to Q B sq	Kt to K B 3d (e)
22. P to K R 3d	P to K Kt 4th

(a) P to K 3d 4th seems less disadvantageous

(b) If P to Q 5th, White might have answered with R to Q sq, &c

(c) Q to K Kt 6th would also have been good play.

(d) He might have played Kt to Q 4th; and then, if Black replied with Kt to Q B 7th, have moved Q to her Kt 7th without danger; we believe, although this course of play looks somewhat hazardous

(e) Threatening the gain of a Pawn at least.

(f) He declined winning the K Pawn from apprehension of afterwards losing the Q R Pawn.

(g) Well played.

(h) The simplest and most effective plan would have been to take the Kt with the R (ch), winning the Q at once.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 305.—By N. M., of Cork.

White: K at Q R 8th, R at K 8 6th, B at Q 3d, Kt at Q B 4th, P at Q Kt 7th.
Black: K at Q B 3d, Q at K Kt 7th, R at Q B 8th, B at K R 8th, B at Q 2 2d, Kt at Q R 5th; P's at Q 3d, Q Kt 3d, and Q R 4th.

White to play, and mate in four moves

No 306 —By Messrs. KLING and SHORT

White: K at his B 6th, Q at K B 8th, B at K B 2d; P's at h 7th and Q Kt 3d
Black: K at Q 4th, Q at her B 3d, R at Q B 4th, B at K R 8th; P's at Q 3d and Q Kt 4th

White to play, and mate in three moves.

No. 307.—By MR. C. E. RANKIN.

White K at Q Kt 2d, R at K R 3d, B at K 6th, P's at K R 2d, K B 4th, and Q B 3d.
Black: K at Q R 4th, R at Q Kt sq, P's at K B 3d, Q B 5th, Q Kt 6th, and Q B 4th

White to play, and mate in five moves.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF VICE-CHANCERY.—(Before Vice-Chancellor K ight Bruce.)

THE ROYAL ETCHINGS

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. STRANGE.—PRINCE ALBERT v. THE SAME.—Wednesday the case came on upon the motion of the defendant Strange to dissolve the injunction. The motion was in the first instance only made in the suit in which Prince Albert is plaintiff.

Mr. Russell, in support of the motion, said that he moved in the cause of "Prince Albert v. Strange" to dissolve the injunction which had been granted in that case, so far as it restrained the defendant Strange, his agents, servants, and workmen, from selling or in any manner publishing and from printing the descriptive catalogue in the information mentioned, or any work being or purporting to be a catalogue of the etchings therein mentioned. The only question as regarded Strange was as to the right of his Royal Highness to prevent him from printing and publishing any catalogue. The Court could not fail to see that, whatever the merits of the case, Mr. Strange was presented by the bill to the world in a most questionable light. He was charged with obtaining a copy of the etchings surreptitiously. This he denied, specially, in his affidavit, denied, and he believed Judge had obtained them fairly from a person of the name of Middleton, by purchase, and said one, and only one of such impressions was sent to him for the purpose of being mounted. About the end of August in the present year Judge called upon him, and told him that he had in his possession impressions from etchings done by her Majesty and Prince Albert; in September Judge showed him those impressions, and proposed to enter into an arrangement with him to exhibit them, provided there was not the slightest objection on the part of her Majesty the Queen and Prince Albert. It was then arranged between him and Judge that they should join together to exhibit the impressions at the Egyptian Hall, or some other institution of equal respectability, and that the defendant should advance the necessary funds for that purpose, and that Judge should participate equally in the profits After the interview of the defendant with Judge, the latter wrote a descriptive catalogue of the impressions, which was printed by the defendant, and fifty-one copies, with the exception of one given away by Judge, and those sent to her Majesty and other persons, all the rest were at the present time in his hands. On the 15th of October last, the defendant received a letter from his solicitor, informing him that a gentleman named White had called on the behalf of her Majesty and Prince Albert, to express their disapprobation of the contemplated exhibition, this was the first intimation that the defendant received, that such exhibition was disapproved of by her Majesty and her Royal consort, and, until such intimation, he had no reason to believe that it would be objected to either by her Majesty or Prince Albert. Upon becoming aware that such exhibition was dis approved of by her Majesty and Prince Albert, the defendant, acting in accordance with the terms upon which alone he had entered into the arrangement for the exhibition, at once, and immediately, determined not to take any further steps to exhibit the drawings, and wholly abandoned it. Mr. Strange, however, appeared in that Court to defend a right, and it was to be hoped that the time would never come when to maintain the right of the subject would be held to be inconsistent with the most devoted loyalty to the Sovereign. With respect to the defendant's right to print and publish the catalogue in question, it was a known principle of that Court never to interfere except there was a right of property, and so far from a right of property having been shown or asserted in the catalogue, it was not, as shown by the case of the etchings themselves Mr. Judge had not a property in them; that he was not the bond fide owner of them; but Mr. Strange had nothing to do with that. He was not for a moment interfering with the question of the right of property there to be—in the etchings. But he (Mr. Russell) was at a loss to know how any knowledge of events, or circumstances connected with the acts which a person may write at, and may publish, in any book, can be interfered with—if it do not infringe upon public morals. That was the principle on which the Court always acted, and with respect to a right of property on the part of the plaintiffs in this catalogue, he (Mr. Russell) knew of no case which could establish it. This was the ground on which he rested his motion; and in concussion he should state that Mr. Strange was anxious and sought for the dissolution of the injunction, in order to relieve himself from the aspersions that had been made against him; and on behalf of that gentleman, he could assure his Honor that if he dissolved the injunction, he might rest satisfied that Mr. Strange would do nothing which her Majesty or her Royal Consort had the least dislike to.

Other counsel having followed on the same side, the Solicitor-General said he appeared for Prince Albert in support of the injunction, and that he wished to submit the case to his Honor on the same principles as those which would guide the case of the humblest individual. He submitted that he was entitled to the injunction. Mr. Strange and Mr. Judge entered into the speculation as the property of others, as their joint experiment, for their joint profit The case was like that of a private gentleman who sent an engraving to a printer to have proofs struck off. He had had some of the proofs struck off surreptitiously, and superiors that had been made against him; and on behalf of that gentleman, he could assure his Honor that if he dissolved the injunction, he might rest satisfied that Mr. Strange would do nothing which her Majesty or her Royal Consort had the least dislike to.

Mr. Sergeant Talfourd followed on the same side, and had not concluded when the Court rose.

On Monday Mr. Sergeant Talfourd resumed his argument, and was followed on the same side by Mr. James.—Mr. Russell replied

The Court having requested all the papers to be handed in, deferred its judgment.

POLICE.

MARLBOROUGH-STREET.

ALLEGED PLUNDER OF THE CHÂTEAU DE NEUILLY.—On Saturday, Eugene Sauter, otherwise Baron de Sauter, and Marie Delaide, otherwise Baroness Rolmond de Bazenn, were charged with having unlawful possession of a large quantity of valuable property, the property of the ex-King of the French.—Mr. Bodkin, on behalf of his Majesty Louis Philippe, stated that it had been recently communicated to the King that some articles of great value had been brought over to this country, and were in the hands of persons who were endeavouring to turn them into money by offering them for sale; and inquiries which had been made left no doubt that they were part of the personal property of the King, and had been stolen from the palace at Neuilly at the late revolution. A communication had been made to the police by M. Grellière, an interpreter, employed by the persons who were now charged, together with a Mr. Bond, to find a purchaser of wealth that he could not be brought forward. All the parties were staying at the Prince of Wales Hotel, Leicester-street. On the police officers going to the hotel, they found property to a great extent, but not of the value which was expected to be found; for among certain other things missing, there was a necklace valued at £10,000, the property of the King, or one of his family, but this could not be found. The officer seized some articles which were in the room where the principal was found. Some of the articles which had been worn by the Queen, such as shawls of great value, would prove their own identity, as such articles were only to be found in the possession of Royalty. In the room where the female prisoner was found, some articles which were also in the room where the female prisoner

EJECTMENT OF IRISH TENANTRY.

THE EJECTMENT

THE DAY AFTER THE EJECTMENT.

EVICTIONS OF PEASANTRY IN IRELAND.

A vast social change is gradually taking place in Ireland. The increase of emigration on the part of the bulk of the small capitalists, and the ejectment, by wholesale, of the wretched cottiers, will, in the course of a short time, render quite inappropriate for its new condition the old cry of a redundant population. But this social revolution, however necessary it may be, is accompanied by an amount of human misery that is absolutely appalling. The Tipperary Vindicator thus portrays the state of the country:

"The work of undermining the population is going on stealthily, but steadily. Each succeeding day witnesses its devastations—more terrible than the simoon, and more deadly than the plague. We do not say that there exists a conspiracy to uproot the 'mere Irish;' but we do aver, that the fearful system of wholesale ejectment, of which we daily hear, and which we daily behold, is a mockery of the eternal laws of God—a flagrant outrage on the principles of nature. Whole districts are cleared. Not a roof-tree is to be seen where the happy cottage of the labourer or the snug homestead of the farmer at no distant day cheered the landscape. The ditch side, the dripping rain, and the cold sleet are the covering of the wretched outcast the moment the cabin is tumbled over him; for who dare give him shelter or protection from 'the pelting of the pitiless storm?' Who has the temerity to afford him the ordinary rites of hospitality, when the warrant has been signed for his extinction? There are vast tracts of the most fertile land in the world in this noble county now thrown out of tillage. No spade, no plough goes near them. There are no symptoms of life within their borders, no more than if they were situated in the midst of the Great Desert—no more than if they were cursed by the Creator with the blight of barrenness. Those who laboured to bring those tracts to the condition in which they are—capable of raising produce of any description—are hunted like wolves, or they perish without a murmur. The tongue refuses to utter their most deplorable—their unheard-of sufferings. The agonies endured by the 'mere Irish' in this day of their unparalleled affliction are far more poignant than the imagination could conceive, or the pencil of a Rembrandt picture. We do not exaggerate; the state of things is absolutely fearful; a demon, with all the vindictive passions by which alone a demon could be influenced, is let loose and menaces destruction. Additional sharpness, too, is imparted to his appetite. Christmas was accustomed to come with many healing balsams, sufficient to remove irritation. If not to stanch wounds; but its place is usurped by other and far different qualifications. The howl of misery has succeeded the merry carol which used to usher in the season; no hope is felt that an end will soon be put to this state of wretchedness. The torpor and apathy which have seized on the masses are only surpassed by the atrocities perpetrated by those who set the dictates of humanity and the decrees of the Almighty at equal defiance."

East India Wheat and Flour.—We sometime since had occasion to allude to an importation of a parcel of flour from the East Indies, by way of Calcutta, into this country, which used not formerly to form a portion of the cargoes of vessels arriving from that part of the world, and therefore of more than common interest and importance. We find that the vessel Duke, arrived from Calcutta, has brought 300 sacks of flour; and the vessel Inglewood, also from Calcutta, has brought 300 sacks of flour as portions of their cargoes, the produce of East India. This notification of a continuance of the arrivals of flour from this quarter of the globe is of some moment. We observe, also, that an arrival of 30 casks and 227 bags of wheat has taken place by the vessel Golden Spring, arrived in the docks from Bombay, and consigned to the East India Company. This importation of wheat from the East Indies is, we believe, one of considerable, if not entire, novelty; and is, therefore, very remarkable and worthy of general notice.

The Army in Ireland.—The following is an official return of the troops in Ireland during the month of December:—1st Dragoon Guards, Cahir; 6th ditto Dublin; 2d Dragoons, Longford; 4th Light Dragoons, Athlone; 6th Dragoons, Dublin; 7th Hussars, Newbridge; 8th Hussars, Newbridge; 12th Lancers, Cork; 13th Light Dragoons, Dundalk; 17th Lancers, Dublin; 1st Foot, second battalion, Dublin; 2d Foot, Dublin; 3d Buffs, Limerick, 9th, Newry; 13th, Belfast; 26th, Cork; 31st, Athlone; 33th, Mullingar; 40th, Dublin, 41st, Buttevant; 43d, Templemore; 47th, Limerick, 48th, Dublin; 49th Templemore; 58th, Dublin; 97th, Enniskillen; 59th, Dublin; 64th, Clonmel; 68th, Galway; 70th, Cork; 74th, Dublin, 76th, Kilkenny; 83d, Fermoy; 85th, Waterford; 88th, Parsonstown; 92d, Limerick. In addition, there are the depôt companies of the following regiments, whose head-quarters are on Indian and colonial service:—7th Foot, Youghal; 19th, Mullingar; 34th, Boyle; 38th, Athlone; [illegible] Dublin; 73d, Fermoy; 79th, Nenagh; 88th, Kinsale;

There are also strong detachments of Artillery, Marines, Pensioners, and armed police, [illegible] upon 59,000 men. It is understood that the Coast Guard of Ireland, a body who can be also made available as fighting men when required, will shortly be placed under a variety of new regulations. All the highly paid and useless offices will be abolished as they become vacant, while the situations of the working officers and men will be rendered more permanent and advantageous.

Interments in London.—On Monday the Commissioners appointed under the Sewers Act, which comes into operation on the 1st of January next, issued notices to be served on the incumbents and churchwardens of parishes within the City precincts, warning them, under a penalty of £20, not to permit any interment within their jurisdiction, wherein the space from the top of the coffin to the surface of the grave is less than five feet; nor to allow any corpse to be placed in their church vaults or catacombs unless enclosed in a leaden coffin, or a double wooden one, having pitch half an inch in thickness between the outer and inner case. Undertakers aiding interments contrary to the above are liable to the same penalty.

THE WAR MEDALS.

The anxiety which has been, from time to time, expressed by various correspondents, as to the Medals promised to the Peninsular warriors, as well as to other British heroes, naval and military, assures us that the accompanying Illustrations of these artistic distinctions will be received with great satisfaction, as an earnest of the period of their distribution being very near at hand.

The Medals themselves are all struck at the Mint, and will add to Mr. Wyon's already high reputation. The Naval Medal has on the obverse the head, in profile, of the Royal and gracious donor of the distinction, Queen Victoria; and the resemblance is very truthful. On the reverse is exquisitely engraved Britannia, holding in her right hand a trident, and seated upon a noble sea-horse breasting the waves. The obverse of the Military Medal, likewise, contains the Queen's head; while the reverse exhibits a figure of her Majesty on the step of a throne, crowning with the laurel of victory the Hero of Waterloo and the Peninsula, who, classically robed, and wearing his military uniform and decorations beneath the toga, kneels to receive the reward. The likenesses (for the very small size) are admirable; and the graceful group is encircled with their brief but expressive motto, "To the British Army."

The business of striking the Christian and surname of each individual entitled to the Medal around the outer edge of the decoration, is now being performed at the Mint. "On the edge of each Naval Medal," states the United Service Gazette, "is likewise to be stamped the name of the ship the wearer served in at the action for which it has been granted. When the work is accomplished, and the rolls of the claimants are returned by the Mint, the whole of the medals will be sent to Messrs. Hunt and Roskell (late Storr and Mortimer), the silversmiths in Bond-street, to whom has been committed the business of engraving the bars which are to bear the names of the battles in which the wearers were engaged. These bars will cross the ribbon (the military being the same in pattern as the Waterloo ribbon, and the naval ribbon being of blue, with a white border) which is to support the medal at the breast, and will be terminated by a little ornament, elegantly connecting the medal to the ribbon. The medal is in size rather bigger than half-a-crown. The material is silver."

NAVAL MEDAL.

Messrs. Hunt and Co., it is calculated, will be able to turn out about 500 medals per day, or 15,000 a month. The claimants for the naval medals are above 15,000; but those medals which were granted for the actions enumerated in the Gazette of the 4th of June, 1847, will be distributed first, the rolls of names for them having been completed and already placed in Messrs. Hunt and Roskell's hands. There are 245 different sorts of clasps to the naval medals, and some of the veterans claim no less than eight. Some of the military vete rans will have as many as fourteen, but the average will be four.

ARMY MEDAL.

RENOVATION OF THE CHANCEL OF THE PARISH CHURCH OF ST. MARY, STOCKPORT, CHESHIRE.

The once beautiful and ancient Parish Church, of which this Chancel is the only existing relic, appears to have been erected in the fourteenth century, composed of the friable red sandstone of the neighbourhood, and consisted of a tower, nave, and side aisles, terminating in private chapels; a chancel, to the south of which was attached another private chapel or oratory, erected by the Vernons of Harleston and Hadden, lords of Marple.

It would appear from existing remains, and documents of reference recording its embellishments, that this chancel must have been a glorious specimen of parish church architecture, and a worthy substitute for the former building, which originally existed, and which appears to have perished during the troubles consequent to the arrival of the Normans in Cheshire. We infer, from the recorded painted inscription on the glass, with which the windows were emblazoned, and which referred to the following families—Grosvenor, Vernon, Grey of Wilton, Sandbach, Anderne, Kevelioc of Chester, that it is possible it was erected under the auspices of the then patron of the living, Johannes Anderne, who lived A. D. 1334, for whom and his wife Margery prayers and intercessions were solicited; Richard de Vernon being rector at that time, and whose effigy alone, through all the vicissitudes to which the structure has been subjected, is curiously preserved, under the canopy of those groined stone stalls which Mr. Pugin has designated, in the Dublin Review, as among the most beautiful existing specimens. The following inscription, now much defaced, circumscribed his tomb:

Jef gist Richard Vernonus, personne cest Eglise.

The original roof of the chancel appears to have been removed, and the present stone is presumed to have been substituted about the sixteenth century, when Warren was rector. At about the same date the existing obtuse arch under the north sacrarium window was formed, at each end thereof are placed the arms and quarterings of Warren, and in the centre those of Warren impaling Anderne. Underneath, probably, has been a recumbent figure.

The features of the church have been generally much mutilated or destroyed. The renovation (of which our Engraving is an external representation to the N.E.—the other elevation and interior being in the course of publication) has been confined to a partial renovation of those features destroyed which are consistent with the service of our Reformed Church. Such considerations, and the comparatively limited funds at the architect's disposal, preclude the possibility of its thorough restoration; nevertheless, it affords us much pleasure to refer all interested in church architecture to an inspection of what has been very satisfactorily accomplished, viz. a thorough ecclesiastical structure, consistent in its features, designed and executed in a spirit which must be gratifying to the Rev. C. R. Prescot, M.A., Rector, who has himself directed the work. We hope that he may be enabled to accomplish those other suggestions of internal renovation which yet remain so much to be desired.

Mr. Frederick W. Ordish, of John-street, Adelphi, London, is the architect.

We should, perhaps, observe, that a subscription is about to be set on foot for obtaining painted glass for those windows unoccupied, to which we direct attention; one beautiful compartment, prepared as a gift to the church, has been executed by Mr. J. A. Gibbs, of Camden Town. The subject is the sacrifice, in illustration of Abraham's faith in offering up Isaac; and in richness and harmony of its colours, and general character, is truly worthy of the highest praise.

It only, perhaps, remains for us to add that the existing modern tower, nave, and aisles were erected in or about the year 1815, under an Act of Parliament passed in 50 Geo. III. (cap. 69), and another in 1815 for enlarging its powers, whereby this church portion cost £25,000, with £20,000 additional for law expenses.

CHANCEL OF ST. MARY'S, STOCKPORT, RESTORED.

JEROME PATUROT
IN SEARCH OF THE BEST REPUBLIC.

ILLUSTRATED BY GAVARNI.

(Continued from page 365.)

CHAPTER VI.

THE TERRIBLE CHILDREN.

In the Minister's salons I found again the little old man whose company had been so agreeable to me, and an intimacy was formed between us. He belonged to an ancient family of Britanny, the Saint G * * *'s, who, returning in 1814, and ruined by a long exile, accepted as compensation some high legislative situations. When the elder branch fell, they resigned their posts and retired to the provinces, with a small income and an estate of a few acres. The family there became extinct; and of a long line, there soon remained none but my new friend, the Baron, who was reduced to means little short of poverty. He bore it gaily, as a man above fate. When the report of the late events reached him, he hastened to Paris—it was his day of revenge. He had refused everything from a King who was not his own; he did not blush to apply to the Republic. It deprived him of his title—he demanded bread.

The Baron had lived long enough to have witnessed in his youth the scenes of our first revolution. He was therefore well versed in the chapter of analogies and reminiscences. Any plagiarism from former times was immediately detected and denounced by him. "That is it—that is it," he said. "Clubs, motto, green leaves in your guns. I know you, sirs. Your names are Pétion and Camille Desmoulins. There is Bailly, who would put drags on the chariot-wheels, and crown it with the attributes of peace. Soon Danton will come, who will push him on to conquest, with blood up to the middle. Very well—every one his part. I find you all again, feuillants and Girondins. The Montagne must be near, since you are here. Come on—courage! To work, and quickly! Do your share—God will do his."

If the Baron's memory failed him in the details, he had some one near him who could refresh it. This was an old servant, whose age was shrouded in uncertainty, after having tired the patience of three generations. She was called Martha. She had resolved to follow her master to Paris, whether he wished it or not. Uncertain periods the parts are changed in domestics. The Baron belonged to Martha, more than she to the Baron. In the little lodging they occupied, nothing was done but as she wanted it. Everything was arranged by her and obedience was required. Monsieur had to go to bed at a certain time, get up at another, cat this or that. It was an arranged programme, and nothing could be altered. Half the day was passed in quarrels between the Baron and Martha, the other half in giving way to her. Thus their lives were identified, and could be separated only by the grave

"ROSSIGNOL IS THERE!"

Since Martha's arrival, one feeling had reigned exclusively in her mind: it was fear. One memory only she retained of her long career: it was of the scenes of the Revolution. Everything was effaced but that indelible stamp. The sight of them took her back to that time; she thought it had come again, and this was in future her fixed idea. No one could alter her convict on that the terror reigned abroad. She had seen the red cap on a bundle of arms; that was enough. She thought herself destined to take decisive measures; her master's safety required it. She arranged a hiding-place where he could fly during domiciliary visits; at the risk of his limbs, the Baron was forced to try it. Martha went further: she had always provisions for three days in the house, and, at the least noise, she doubled the stores. The Baron had brought with him a little money and some valuables; she seized them, put them into an old sack, and hid them among the sabots in the hayloft. As an extreme precaution, she spread a layer of soot over it. Here was a fertile imagination, which had lived through the wars of La Vendée and the reign of terror

One morning, when the bear near making some little purchases, the Baron saw her return in a state of terror and dismay that surpassed her usual disorder. Her face was deathly pale; she trembled in all her limbs; she put her hand against the wall, as if to find support, and fell on her chair with a deep sigh.

"Ah, sir!" she said with a faint voice, "I have seen him."

"Who, Martha?" said the Baron, with involuntary anxiety.

"I have seen him, I tell you, sir."

"I hear; but whom?"

"With his white waistcoat and his tricoloured belt. Oh! it was he, the wretch! I should have known him among a thousand."

"But, Martha, whom? Who? Explain."

"There are not two in the world who wear such a hat. With the feathers, and then such a look."

"But, Martha, Martha, I ask who? Are you mad?"

"Mad? Oh no! I have seen him, sir, as plainly as I see you. A pair of epaulettes like his. I can't be deceived."

"I shall get nothing out of her," cried the Baron. "For the tenth time, Martha, tell me who it is?"

"Who? What a question! Who could it be? How can it be any one else?"

"But tell me, then."

"Rossignol, sir. There are not two."

"Rossignol?"

"Himself: yes, Rossignol! He passed through the street with two aides-de-camp I think you will be denounced. You are a Vendéan, sir. He is sure to come here."

At last the Baron guessed whom she meant. It was General Rossignol whom the Convention sent to the west during the first wars in La Vendée. Martha had, no doubt, met one of those mountebanks who took the Revolution as a subject for travesty. She had seen two epaulettes and a plume of feathers, and of course it was General Rossignol. Her master could not dissuade her. She could not believe that, in sixty years, many generals succeed each other in this world, and, though purified by the Convention, Rossignol had died beneath the shades of the Indian Archipelago. In her eyes that was only an invention, and she considered herself obliged to defend the Baron from the fury of the Tamerlane of La Vendée.

As may be imagined, the old gentleman laughed at the hallucinations of his servant, but he shared her mania, though in a less degree. He could see only a counterpart of the first Revolution in the present one; nothing more or less. He drew a fatal circle round events, beyond which they could not move. It was the fixed idea of the old servant, only with other names and other persons. He foresaw the same follies, the same excesses, and prided himself on foretelling their return with the precision of a player who plays from his chess-book.

"But you don't see what passes, Monsieur Paturot," he said warmly. "It is only a second edition, and much revised or corrected. I was not deceived."

"Wait, Baron," I said.

"Why? Is it not plain enough? Except the guillotine, everything is already here, and we shall have that also."

"I dont know what we shall see, Baron. I am not a prophet. The chances of this world deceive even the wisest. But what I know very well is, that at the bottom of all these events there are great passions and generous instincts?

"You say this one is like the last revolution; the same aspect, the same prospect."

"Yes, but with the glass turned, Baron"

"What matter, if the results are the same?"

"No, they will not be. Great things are spontaneous, they cannot be made by imitation. Besides, where do you see elevated passions and generous instincts? All is vanity, ambition, cupidity of the lowest kind. Above all, impotence, the consequence of plagiarism. They copy because they can't create. That is your argument, Baron; well, you see that my argument is refuted."

"I should like to see you do it," said the gentleman, rather piqued.

"Where in all the annals of nations do you find one period of history counterdrawing the other? Then, how many important events, chiefs, personal elements were there. Where is the Bastile and its drawbridge? Where is Versailles and its King? And how many new combinations stand in place of the old departed ones? Why don't you count the constitutional parodies—from the cut of a coat, the motions of a club, and the name of a paper?"

"You abuse me, Monsieur Paturot; indeed, you abuse me. You will make me beg for grace."

"Baron, be convinced, the danger is not here. History never repeats itself. Would to heaven, we had no other problems to solve"

"Other problems? And what?"

"They are new, and I can recall the fable of Æsop only a world to carry on one's shoulder. I hope soon to solve it."

"You! Monsieur Paturot?"

"Yes, Baron. But don't question me; I could only give you a specimen. I am yet short of seven or eight combust ons"

"Indeed!"

"What I want to establish is, that the country has nothing to fear from these parades and thunders of the past. It is only a play of the terrible children."

"Then why permit it, sir? Why let murder reign in the streets, and fear penetrate the houses, in consequence of such puerile imitations? You say they are without real danger; but do you count for nothing the imaginary danger they create?"

"Do you count for nothing the destruction of trade, which has so much need of security? Do you count for nothing this constant excitement, which is authorised by fear, and which closes the most fruitful sources of trade? Do you count for nothing the agonies of the country, which asks to be reinstated as quickly as possible on its shaken foundations?"

"Who asserts that, Baron?"

"And if it is true that there is no depth in this exterior disorder—if it is true that Government is only opposed by a few madmen whence comes it that they have not acted more energetically, more unanimously? Did they, perhaps, like to see this agitation filling the minds of the people with alarm—de stroying credit, and annihilating business?"

"You are severe, Baron. The Government could only have had good intentions. They trust to time."

"And everything goes worse, sir, and runs are added to ruins That is what I complain of. In France power is only expressed in action. At the first moment the part of the Government was traced—energy only was wanted. Why did they not employ it?"

"It at least defended our flag"

"I honour it for that: that day was great; it was a splendid beginning; why did it not remain faithful to it? But it immediately invited disorder; it called itself citizen"

"What a crime!" I added, laughing

"I am not joking, Monsieur Paturot," replied the Baron. "There is more calamity in that word than you imagine. It was the sign of the new régime; and in accepting it they gave an example to all the parodies which we have witnessed. There are no more there! Every one has become a citizen; the clubs to trees of liberty, from them to revolutionary caps; and if that lasts, we shall see in the year 56 of the Republic the sansculottides and the feasts of reason commence"

"All that in the word 'citizen'"

"Yes, sir, yes," said the gentleman, growing animated. "Believe me, it wounded our people; it annihilated sentiments, and created others. I hate it on it: it was a bad beginning, and the germ for many follies and much corruption"

"Indeed! and how?"

"How? Monsieur Paturot. Let those confess who in public use 'citizen' with affectation, and let twenty you will find fifteen who do it from cowardice or cupidity."

Certainly the gentleman took the matter seriously; it would have been of no use to contradict. He was a Breton. Besides, Martha entered the room, and going straight to the Baron, tried to drag him away. A drum was heard in the street.

"Quick, sir," said the servant; "quick to your hiding-place. Rossignol is there; he seeks you, I am sure."

Anxious to leave nothing that could so terrify the woman, I went to the window.

"Where is your Rossignol?" I said

"Do you not see his stick and his plume; he is prominent enough."

It was a drummer of the National Guard. That was the man Martha had transformed into a sansculotte and devastator

(To be continued.)

REDUCTIONS IN PUBLIC OFFICES.—It is understood that the reductions in the Home Office are of a very extensive nature, and that, independently of those officers who will be recommended for permanent retired allowances, no less than 300 will be placed upon the redundant list, to be re-admitted into the service as vacancies may arise on the reduced establishment; and, until all these redundant officers shall have been provided for, no new appointment will be allowed to take place. The inquiry into the expenditure of the civil establishments in Ireland will be conducted with the same determination to enforce all possible economy in the public departments as in England; but no new commission is deemed requisite, as the persons employed in the leading departments in Ireland are almost entirely under the control of the central boards in London.

THE WEST RIDING ELECTION.

On Monday, the nomination of candidates for the representation of the West Riding of Yorkshire, in the room of Lord Morpeth, now Earl of Carlisle, took place at Wakefield. The town was, from an early hour, the scene of much bustle and animation. A great number of railways converge upon W kefield, or pass within a convenient distance of it; and each of these lines brought long trains of carriages filled with electors and others anxious to witness the proceedings. The influx of persons by other conveyances, as well as of pedestrians, was also very great. Still, the election below was conducted in a few flags and two or three of the cards were, however, very abundant; those of Sir Culling Eardley being orange, the old Whig colour of the Riding; and Mr. Denison's being white.

The hustings were erected in front of the Court-House, which forms one side of a sort of square. Wood-street running down on the left side. Mr. Denison's friends took possession of the square in front and to the right of the hustings, and found a deep and dense mass, occupying the whole area. Sir Culling Eardley's adherents gathered in the street to the left, and formed a much longer, but proportionally narrower body.

Shortly before eleven o'clock, Mr. Denison, accompanied by a long procession of friends, came upon the hustings, and was received with loud cheers by his adherents. Soon after the Sheriff, Mr. Bardsley, arrived, and was represented on this occasion by Mr. Bright, followed, when their partisans raised a counter-shout.

Among the friends of Sir Culling Eardley were—Mr. Bright, M.P.; the Mayor of Wakefield; Alderman Carbutt, of Leeds; Mr. E. Baines and Mr. F. Baines, of the Leeds Mercury; Rev. J. P. Lasaras, of Horling; Mr. Vincent, the lecturer on the suffrage; and a number of the Aldermen and Councillors of Leeds and the neighbouring towns.

Mr. Gray, the Under-Sheriff of Yorkshire, in the absence of the High Sheriff, then opened the proceedings. Sir E. Eardley was then nominated by Joseph Hamerton, Esq., of Holesfield Peel; seconded by Alderman Carbutt, of Leeds

The Hon E. Lascelles, M.P., proposed Mr Denison, and, in a caustic speech, showed that Sir Culling Eardley, when in Parliament, opposed both extensive and partial inquiry into the civil list. The hon. gentleman declared that, in his opinion, the question to be fought at this election was the separation of Church and State.

John Rand, Esq., of Bradford, seconded the nomination of Mr. Denison.

Mr Ironsides, of Sheffield, then nominated Samuel Kydd, the Chartist; and was seconded by Mr Brook, of Sheffield

Mr. Bright, M.P., then came forward, and read an address from Sir Culling Eardley, who was absent from illness; concluding with an assurance that, should he be elected, he would be found in the ultra-Conservative ranks of Lancashire and a faithful guardian of the electors' local interests.

Mr Bright then attempted to address the meeting, and, after much uproar, was allowed to proceed, though he was only heard by those immediately around him. He concluded a very spirited speech, by observing: "Don't let them be frightened because Lord Fitzwilliam had abandoned them Yorkshire was Yorkshire still. (Cheers.) Truth was truth still—(Cheers)—and the brotherhood of the Liberal electors, and of the population in the Riding, was yet strong enough to uphold the faith for which their father had struggled. They had worked together before now Yorkshire with Lancashire, Lancashire with Yorkshire, with their three millions of population—with the industry and intelligence and the union of the counties—with the help of the Liberal electors in every part of the kingdom, great things were yet in store for them; great principles were to be upheld great victories were to be gained—great happiness and content were to be spread over every part of the kingdom. In asking them to support Sir Culling Eardley, they asked their support to a cause for which he would strive so long as health, and reason, and voice were given to him. (Cheers.) Let them on this occasion do their utmost, and he believed the independence of the Riding would be preserved, and that Sir Culling Eardley would be returned their representative." (Cheers.) The honourable gentleman then retired.

Mr Denison then came forward to address the electors, and was received with loud cheers by his own friends, but the noise and uproar which had hitherto characterised his side of the hustings was nothing compared to the other, and the consequence was that the honourable candidate was almost as indistinctly heard as Mr. Bright had been He spoke at considerable length, and concluded with the assurance that, should he be elected, no personal solicitation should induce him to give a vote which would endanger our excellent constitution in Church and State, or which would tend to separate the Church from the State The honourable gentleman then retired amid loud cheers

Mr. Kydd then addressed the electors, and concluded by withdrawing his name as a candida

The Sheriff then took a show of hands For Sir Culling Eardley the show was much more narrow, extending down the street; for Mr. Denison the show was deep and dense in the square opposite the hustings, and it seemed difficult to decide were the majority really lay. The show for Mr. Kydd was decidedly inferior to that of the others

The Sheriff declared that in his opinion the show of hands was in favour of Sir Culling Eardley. (Loud cheers from that party.)

A poll was then demanded for Mr. Denison, which was fixed for Thursday and Friday.

On Tuesday morning the polling commenced, and was carried on vigorously for both candidates. At the close of the day the numbers polled were for Mr. Denison, 10,980; for Sir C. Eardley, 8191: majority for Mr Denison, 2789

On Friday Mr. Denison continued to maintain his majority At the close of the poll the total numbers were reported to the Sheriffs as follows:—

For Mr Denison	14,255
For Sir C. Eardley	11,120
Majority for Mr Denison	3049

The returns from Barnsley and Bierley had not been received.

Our Illustration of the nomination is from a Sketch taken from a window of the Wakefield Library, by Mr. Snow, of York.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

Consols on Monday opened at an improvement of ⅛ upon the closing prices of the preceding week, quoting 87⅞ to 8 A large speculative purchase in connexion with the settlement of the account further improved the price to 88⅛, but it afterwards receded to 87⅞ buyers, which proved the closing quotation. Tuesday was the monthly settling day, and money, although a trifle dearer, was sufficiently abundant to smooth difficulties. The account was consequently settled with comparative ease although it may be remarked that a large extent of transactions have been carried over besides extensive borrowing of stock being resorted to Consols opened at 87⅞ for money, advanced to 88⅛, afterwards receding to the former quotation. Prices on Wednesday improved during the day about ⅛ per cent, advancing at one period to 88⅛ for present transfer and next account, but closing at 87⅞ to 88 for money. The market on Thursday was steady, with a moderate business, at full prices. The fluctuations have, however, little or perhaps no connexion with the political events passing in Europe, but originate in the state of the Money Market in reference to Money Stock. The Bank Directors will, no doubt, keep a watchful eye on the Market will, of course, be more amply supplied, and a slight reaction may [illegible]. At present, the Market is remarkably bare of stock, the public purchases being now from English securities, from the desire existing to Shares and foreign investments. This, coupled with bearing operations, tends to make Stock very scarce, leading to an advance of prices when any large purchase is entered. The close of the week has therefore continued buoyant, at the following prices: Bank Stock, 185½; Reduced Annuities, 87 Consols, 88¼; New 3½ per Cent, Annuities, 87¾, Long Annuities, to expire Jan. 1860, 9⅛; India Stock, 260; Ditto Bonds, Small, June, 40 pm; Ditto, £1000, Small, March, 40 pm; Ditto, £500, March, 40 pm.

In the Foreign Market, business has been principally confined to Mexican Stock, which continues firm, at a progressive improvement Mexican or Dutch Debentures, 2½, but this has not since been fully supported, in consequence of realising. Dutch Three per Cents have advanced above one-half per cent since last week, and the market generally evinces firmer although dealings are on a very limited scale. The following are the closing prices:—Brazilian Bonds, 76; Buenos Ayres, [illegible]; Chilian, [illegible]; Columbian, [illegible]; Danish, [illegible]; Dutch, 2½, 64; Ditto, 5 per Cents, 103; Ecuador Bonds, [illegible]; Grenada Bonds, 1 per Cent. Deferred, 23; Mexican, 25 per Cents, 1846, 21¾; Ditto, Account, 21¾; Peruvian Bonds, 6 per Cents, 1849, [illegible]; Ditto, Account, 20¾; Portuguese 4 per Cents, 24¾; Russian Bonds, 104; Spanish 5 per Cents, 1840, 12½; Ditto, Account, 12½; Ditto, 3 per Cents, 25; Dutch 2½ per Cents, 12 Guild, 4 to 5; Spanish New, 16¼; Ditto, New, £17, 10; Hall and Selby, 98; Lancaster and Carlisle, Thirds, 81; Lancashire and Yorkshire, 68; Ditto, Fifths, 4¾; Ditto, New, Gua. 6 per cent., 8¾; Ditto (West Riding Union), 14; Eastern and South Western, 28¾; Ditto, Thirds (Consol), 26; Ditto, Fifths, 5 dis; Ditto, New Scrip 1848, Pref, 7 per cent. on deposit, and 1 per cent. on calls, par; Manchester, Buxton, and Matlock, 8; Midland, 79; Ditto, £50 Shares, 2½; Ditto, Consolidated Bristol and Birmingham, 5 per cent. 120; North British, 15; Ditto, Half-a, 6; Ditto, Quarters 3¼; Ditto, Thirds, 4; North Staffordshire, 9; Oxford, Worces er, and Wolverhampton, 50; Reading, Guildford, and Reigate, 9½; Scottish Central, 20¾; South-Eastern, 22½; Ditto, No. 1, 13⅝; Ditto, No. 2, 2½; Ditto, No. 4 Thirds, 6; South Wales, 7; York, Newcastle, and Berwick, 26; Ditto, Original New and Berwick, 24¼; Ditto, Extension No. 1, 12½; Ditto, Ditto, No. 2, 12½; Ditto, G.N.E. Preference, 6½; York and North-Midland, 50½; Ditto, Preference, 9; Boulogne and Amiens, 6⅝; Luxembourg, 2½; Northern of France, 7½; Orleans and Bordeaux, 2½; Rouen and Havre, 7½.

SATURDAY MORNING The Consol Market was again animated yesterday, Consols quoting 87⅛ ex-dividend, for the January Account. The Foreign and Share Markets were also firm; but without any material variation in prices.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—The arrivals of English wheat for our market this week, have amounted to nearly 9000 quarters, chiefly from Essex and Kent By land carriage the receipts have been on the increase, and the show of samples this morning was better than for some time past, coloured qualities of both red and white moved off steadily, at prices fully equal to those paid on Monday last In the middling and inferior kinds only a moderate business was doing, at late rates. A large quantity of foreign arrived—13,980 quarters—has been delivered, as most of it has been landed to bond. the supply on offer to-day was not [illegible]. There was a fair retail demand for most descriptions, at full rates of currency. [illegible] ing barley was mostly taken off as it came to hand, at very full prices, but grinding and distilling parcels were very difficult to sell The supply of malt was fully equal to the demand. Only the finest samples commanded attention Oats—the supply of which was moderate—were in steady request, at full prices In all other grain, including flour and meal, very little was done

Arrivals—English: wheat, 2980; barley, 4470 [illegible]; oats, 1200; flour, 3620, coast-wise, 3620, ditto, 1360.

Wheat—Essex and Kent, red, 40s to 45s; ditto, white, 46s to 50s; Scotch, red, 42s to 45s; ditto, white, 46s to 50s; Dantzic, 48s to 52s; Rostock, 48s to 52s; Pomeranian and Prussian, 48s to 52s; Baltic, 38s to 44s; rye, 28s to 30s; grinding barley, 18s to 20s; brewing ditto, 24s to 34s; malting ditto, 34s to 36s, Norfolk and Lincoln malt, 56s to 58s; brown ditto, 46s to 54s, Kingston and Ware, 56s to 60s; Chevalier, 60s to 64s, Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 17s to 20s; potato ditto, 19s to 22s, Youghal and Cork, black, 18s to 20s; ditto, white, 20s to 22s; Galway, Sligo, and Limerick, 20s to 20s; ditto, old, —s to —s; grey peas, 30s to 32s; maple, 32s to 36s, white, 32s to 37s; beans, 38s to 41s per quarter Town-made flour, 40s to 43s, Suffolk, 38s to 39s; Yorkshire, 36s to 37s per sack.

Imports into London this week—wheat [illegible] quarters; barley, [illegible]; oats, [illegible]; red wheat, [illegible] to —s; white, [illegible] to —s; rye, [illegible] to —s; peas, [illegible] to —s per quarter; flour, [illegible] sacks.

Seeds.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 7½d to 8½d of household do. 9d to 9½d per 4lb loaf.

Provincial Markets.—Generally Average.—Wheat, 42s 9d; barley, 31s 4d; oats, 19s 5d; rye, 28s 3d; beans, 35s 7d; peas, 32s 3d

The Gazette Average.—Wheat, 51s 6d. barley, 32s 10d; oats, 20s 3d; rye, 30s 5d; beans, 36s 10d; peas, 40s 1d

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 6s; barley, 3s 6d; oats, 2s 6d; rye, 3s 6d; beans, 2s 6d; peas, 3s 6d.

Hops.—Notwithstanding only a moderate business is doing by private contract, prices are well supported in every instance. The deliveries are reasonably good

Sugar.—Rather large transactions have taken place in the raw market, but we have no improvement to notice in value Refined goods are held at very full prices

Tea.—Rather more business has been done in this article, at full prices.

Coffee.—Fine qualities are in steady request, at full prices. In other kinds, exceedingly little business is doing.

Provisions.—The market for Irish butter continues in a very inactive state, at about last week's quotations. The stock is nearly 50,000 firkins, hence there is little or no prospect of any improvement in value. In foreign butter scarcely any business is doing, and the rates are a most nominal English butter the stock of which is increasing—rules dull, at 100s to 104s per cwt.; Belfast, 96s to 100s; Limerick, 96s to 98s per cwt. Fresh 10s to [illegible]. Bacon is a very slow sale, and is to 2s per cwt. cheaper Singed sides are [illegible]. Hams are very dull, at 60s to 70s per cwt. Lard is easier to notice, at [illegible]

Potatoes.—The market has become very flat, at drooping prices. P.Y.C. on the spot, is quoted at 46s 3d to 46s per cwt. For forward delivery, scarcely any business is doing. Rough fats, 2s 6d per 8lb.

Oils.—Sperm oil is tolerably steady, at full prices. Otherwise, our market is in a very sluggish state, at unaltered quotations.

Hay and Straw.—Old meadow hay, £2 8s to £3 14s; clover ditto, £3 10s to £4 14s, and straw, £1 2s to £1 6s per load.

Spirits.—Rum is still in very moderate request, at about last week's prices. Proof East India is selling at 1s 8d to 1s 6d per gallon. The stock of rum is now 1,000,000 gallons more than at the same period last year. Brandy is rapidly falling off Brandy and other spirits without alteration

Wool.—There is rather more business passing in the wool trade, but prices are well supported in every instance.

Potatoes.—The home supplies of potatoes are selling at 130s to 150s per ton. The inferior parcels are a slow inquiry

Provincial Markets.—Acorn Close, 16s 6d; Fenrath, 14s 6d; Chester Main, 15s 3d; Lyons, 17s, Haswell, 16s 3d, Shotton, 17s; Sidney s Hartley, 14s 9d per ton

Coals.—Market very dull, and but few sales effected, since the demand for them is steady, at fully last week's quotations. In all other kinds of hops scarcely any business is doing, and in some instances rather lower. The quantity of yearling and old hops in warehouse is large—Sussex pockets, £2 2s to £2 12s; Weald of Kent, ditto, £2 2s to £2 12s; Mid and East Kent, ditto, £2 2s to £3 3s

Smithfield (Friday).—There was a somewhat extensive supply of beasts on sale here today, the number exceeding 700 head, at least two-thirds of which were turned out unsold on the morrow. Generally speaking, the trade was with difficulty disposed of at from 4s to 4s 6d per 8lb In all other breeds next to nothing was doing, at, in some instances, a decline in the currencies of 2d per 8lb. Most of the beasts realised 3s 10d to 4s per 8lb. Sheep were tolerably supplied. Generally speaking, the mutton trade was in a very dull condition, at a decline in the currencies of 2d per 8lb. Lambs were very dull, at an improvement in value of from 2d to 4d per 8lb Pigs were in moderate request, at extreme currencies. Milch cows were dull sale, at from £14 to £18 each. Calves, 4s to 5s per 8lb.

Per 8lb to sink the offals:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 3s 4d to 3s 8d second quality ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; prime large oxen, 3s 10d to 4s; prime small ditto, 4s; prime Scots, 4s; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 8d to 3s 4d; second quality ditto 3s 6d to 4s 8d; prime coarse-woolled ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 6d; prime South Down ditto, 4s 8d to 4s 10d; large coarse calves, 4s 6d to 4s 8d, prime small ditto, 4s 8d to 5s 0d; large hogs, 3s 10d to 4s 4d; most small porkers, 4s 6d to 4s 8d. Suckling calves, 12s to 24s; odd quarter old store pigs, 16s to 21s each. Total supplies Beasts, 1760 cows, 142; sheep, 9240; calves, 338; pigs, 220. Foreign supplies. Beasts, 159, sheep, 710; calves, 72.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—These markets were very dull to-day, at barely stationary prices

Per 8lb to sink the carcass:—Inferior beef, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; middling ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d prime large ditto, 3s 10d to 4s; prime small ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d, large pork, 3s 6d to 4s 4d; inferior mutton, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; middling ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d, prime ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 4d; veal, 3s 10d to 4s 8d; small pork, 4s 6d to 4s 8d

ROBERT HERBERT.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, DEC. 12.

BANKRUPTCY SUPERSEDED

J WALTON Coventry, baker J HEBLOP, Ripon, Yorkshire, wine merchant.

BANKRUPTS

J DE LEVANTE, Wood-street, City, ribbon manufacturer W KEYS, Robert's-place, Commercial-road East, innendraper. W TRAP, Warm gate Wiltshire, mason. T PAGE, White Horse-street, Spitalfields, silk manufacturer. J TAFT, Arrow-road, Paddington, carpenter. J PARKIN, Sible Hedingham, Essex, brickmaker. A HEWLETT, Abbott's Ann, Southampton, surgeon. W WILDEY, Rotherhithe, Surrey, Nottingham stocking agent. J STEVENS, Dunchurch, Staffordshire, grate manufacturer. J HARVEY, Weston-super-Mare, Somerset, [illegible] builder JOHN MARSHALL, and JAMES MARSHALL, Rastrick, Yorkshire, fancy manufacturers. E DAVIES, Newtown, Montgomeryshire, flannel manufacturer. T RICHARDSON, North Shields, commission agent and mariner.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS

J HASTIE, Glasgow, brass founder. J HAMILTON, Neilston, Renfrewshire, spirit dealer. W LIDDELL, Glasgow, [illegible]. H MASKELL, Tallaker, Bradford, Isle of Sky, cattle dealer. G HUNTON, Leith, baker J MITCHELL, Glasgow engineer.

FRIDAY, DEC. 15

BANKRUPTS

Sub Lieut Dragoons; Cornet H A Searle to be Lieutenant, vice Wedderburn. W W Arbuthnot to be Cornet, vice Searle 10th: Cornet J Drummond to be Lieutenant, vice Parker; Fifth Lieut and Adjutant Militia, vice Drummond. 7th Foot: Ensign Sir Percy Herbert to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]; W O Burdett to be Ensign, vice Hutton. Scots Fusilier Guards: Capt P L C Pagett to be Lieutenant and Captain, vice Ingram.

1st Foot, Lieut H R Norman to be Captain, vice Hollingsworth; Ensign P B Lake to be Lieutenant, vice Norman; Ensign W Hutton to be Lieutenant, vice Wilkinson. Ensign W H Hepburn to be Lieut, vice Lowry. G P C Pocock to be Ensign, vice Hepburn. 46th Captain HG Smith from the Staff to be Major of Brigade at Malta, vice Hamilton, who Hurt Lieutenant and Captain, vice Hay. Lieut Hon H K Norman to be Captain, vice Hollingsworth; Ensign P B Lake to be Lieutenant, vice Norman. 54th Lieut and Adjutant J M Hamerton, C.B. to be Colonel, vice Lieut-Gen J Wardle. 55th Lieut and J M Hewett to be Adjutant, vice Lawder. 63rd: Lieut H Lee to be Captain, vice Shaw Ensign D C A Hamilton to be Lieutenant, vice Hamilton. 66th Lieut Macbean to be Captain, vice Rouse. Ensign J H Armstrong to be Lieut, vice Mitchell; G L C Smyth to be Ensign, vice Armstrong

2nd West India Regiment: Major W F Fuller to be Lieut-Colonel, vice Allen

UNATTACHED.—Lieut J K Wedderburn to be Captain, Lieut A Menzies to be Captain.

BANKRUPTS

J HARGWOOD, Thornham Magna, Suffolk, grocer. P SAMUEL, Hounslow, and Cannon-street, City, [illegible]. J WHEELER and J [illegible], Gravesend, Rochester-hill, City, [illegible]. T RADFORD, Cheltenham, Gloucestershire, [illegible]. T WOOD, Barlow Mill, Lancashire, flour dealer. F PILLOW, [illegible], Lancashire. T RODBERTS, Montgomeryshire, grocer J BANGAR, St Augustine-the-Less, bristol, cabinet-maker. T N HEYWOOD, Torquay, Devonshire. CARRICK, Hawick, Roxburgh, corn-dealer

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATION

H. SCOTT and CO. Glasgow, [illegible]. W BONG, Glasgow, bookseller. THE WESTERN [illegible] MILL COMPANY, Greenock, merchants. A MUNRO, Market place, Tain, innkeeper. P [illegible], Dundee, warehouseman.

BIRTHS.

On the 2nd instant, at Walsingham Rectory, the wife of the Rev John A Blackett, of a son.

At Bryngdyr, Newtown, Montgomeryshire, on the 8th instant, the wife of Mr Matthew Jones, of a daughter.—At Bloomsbury, the wife of the Rev Frederic Bridgeman Simpson, of a son.—At Sleyer-hall, Ryde, Isle of Wight, the wife of Captain T Newton, Esq, of a daughter.—At York, the wife of J E Bunnett, Esq, barrister-at-law.—At Burnell, Esq, honourable engineer, London-North-Western Railway, of a son At the Mount, Sheffield, the lady of John Chatfield, Esq, of a daughter.—At Bedford, the wife of the Rev Charles Wolley Francis, of a son.—At Alton, on the 2nd inst, the wife of Louis Leslie, Esq, of a son.—On the 12th, at Kampton, 1 ast Indies, the lady of Lieut W T Williams, 32nd Regiment, M N I, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

On the 7th, 1848, at Charles Church, Plymouth, Alfred Waring Bell, of Hallenbrook, Rhubarb, Cornwall, to Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Joseph Leigh, Esq, of Heriot—on the 12th of December, at Bournemouth, Southgrove, James Boyd Miller, Esq, 15th (King's) Hussars, eldest son of Boyd Miller, Esq, of Collier's Wood, Surrey, to Sophia, only daughter of William Haviland, Esq, Manor-house, Bournemouth last at St James's, Piccadilly, by his brother, the Rev W Chapman Haviland, Thomas Abraham Hawkins, Esq, of the Middle Temple, barrister-at-law, to Anne, eldest daughter of the late Robert Copeman, Esq, of Aylsham, Norfolk.—At the Cathedral, Madras, T H Dawson, Esq, H M I C S, to Emily Sarah, second daughter of the late Captain Alexander M'Gregor, of the Madras Native Infantry.—At Laymister Church, Sussex, the Rev Orbell Compton Oakes, second son of Henry James Oakes, Esq, of Newton Court, to Sophia, daughter of Thomas Evans, Esq, of Laymister.—At All Saints Church, Southampton, the Rev Henry Kenny, M.A., of Harrow Fellow of Queen's College, Cambridge, eldest son of the Rev W Kenny, rector of Nunnington, Yorkshire, to Mary, youngest daughter of W S Oke Esq, M.D, of Southam, ton

DEATHS

At Leghe, on the 6th instant, Thomas Kinloch [illegible] aged 6 Royal Hi[illegible]anders, aged 31 —At Kurrachee, Captain John J Marsden, 5th Regiment of Foot (King s), youngest son of the late Captain Marsden 7th Dragoon Guards, of Kingsbury, Worcestershire.—At Bellevue, in the south of Paris, Margaret daughter of the late Henry Dorset, Esq, surgeon, R.N, formerly of Gosport.—At Ryde [illegible] Ann Wynne, Esq, of Bedham, near Colchester, Essex, aged 80.—At Eagle-terrace, St Helier's, Jersey Gideon Nicholson, Esq, late Major in the Royal Marines, in the 70th year of his age.—At Leamington, aged 18, Felicia Anna, fifth daughter of the Rev Percival, S Wilkinson, of Mount Oswald, Durham —At the Rectory, Aswardby, the Rev Charles Brackenbury, eldest son of the late Charles Brackenbury, Esq, of Somerby Hall, in the county of Lincoln, and rector of Aswardby, in the same county.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

TO ADVERTISERS.—As we restrict the Advertisements to one Page only, to prevent disappointment two or three days' notice is necessary to ensure the insertion of an Advertisement. The Exhibitions will be found on page 374.

Just published, 2nd Edition, small 8vo., 5s.

THE OUT-STATION; or, Jaunts in the London Country. By [illegible]

Just published, on a large sheet, price 1s.

A CHART OF THE PUBLIC HEALTH ACT. By CHARLES E. BERNARD, C.E.

On the 1st January, price 2s 6d, bound,

WHO'S WHO IN 1849. (EVERYBODY'S BOOK.)

London: BAILY, BROTHERS, 17, Cornhill, and all Booksellers and Newsmen.

On the 1st January, with Two Etchings by Pilz to be continued Monthly, Price Nine shillings,

CONFESSIONS of CON. CREGAN; his Adventures on the Ladder of Life; how many rounds he climbed on which he stumbled, and how he reached the top. By CHARLES LEVER. London: W. S. ORR and Co. Dublin: JAMES M'GLASHAN. Sold by [illegible] Booksellers in and out of Town.

Now ready, price One Shilling, profusely Illustrated,

THE FIGHT of the BUDDLERS, a Comic [illegible] By G. P. R. JAMES, Esq. Author of "De L'Orme," &c. Illustrated by H. K. BROWNE.

D. BOGUE, Fleet-street, and all Booksellers.

In a handsome 8vo. volume, 10s 6d. cloth,

GAVARNI in LONDON. Sketches of Life and Character in the Great Metropolis. From the Original Drawings. Edited by ALBERT SMITH; assisted by the best Writers of the Day.

D. BOGUE, Fleet-street.

Now ready, in small octavo, price 1s. 6d.

THE SHAKSPERE ALMANACK for 1849; being an Event with a suitable Quotation from the Writings of "the immortal Shakspere," for each day of the year. The Frontispiece and Title-page from original designs by Kenny Meadows.

"An Author! a calendar! good lack, Phœbus—This is all moonshine; find out moonshine."—Midsummer Night's Dream.

D. BOGUE, 86, Fleet-street; and all Booksellers.

Now ready, [illegible] in a [illegible] cover, with [illegible] Plates, in Volume, on other Paper, post quarto, price 2ls., or 2l 2s. [illegible] 2s 6d postage free,

THE LADY'S album of FANCY WORK, [illegible] Netting, Crochet, and Embroidery, with Directions for working the patterns.

GRANT and GRIFFITH, corner of St. Paul's Churchyard.

Lately published in One Volume, 18mo., price 6s. cl. lp.

THE MODERN BRITISH PLUTARCH; or, Lives of Men Distinguished in the Recent History of our Country for their Virtues, Talents, or Achievements. By W. C. TAYLOR, LL.D.

"This attractive and comprehensive volume contains the lives of thirty-eight modern British worthies, written in an agreeable, intelligent, and instructive style."

"A work which will be welcomed in any circle of intelligent young persons."—British Quarterly Review.

GRANT and GRIFFITH, corner of St. Paul's Churchyard.

With Illustrations by FRANKLIN, small 4to, 4s plain, 5s coloured,

EARLY DAYS OF ENGLISH PRINCES. By MRS RUSSELL GRAY.

VISITS to BEECHWOOD FARM. By CATHERINE COUPER. Illustrated by JOHN ABSOLON. Small 4to, 3s 6d, coloured

TALES FROM THE COURT OF OBERON, containing the favourable Histories of "Puss in Thrum," Graciosa and Percinet," "Fairnitoe and Grace," and "Princess of the Wood." [illegible] ROWCROFT. Small 4to 3s 6d tinted, [illegible]

MRS. LOUDON'S GLIMPSES of NATURE and Objects of Interest described during a Visit to the Isle of Wight. With Notes on Cats. 3s 6d cloth.

GRANT and GRIFFITH, corner of St. Paul's Churchyard.

NEW WORK FOR THE YOUNG, ILLUSTRATED BY G. CRUIKSHANK.

KIT BAM'S ADVENTURES; or, The Yarns of an Old Sailor. By the Author of "COOPER'S CAVE," Author of the "Descendants to Shakspeare." Fcap. 8vo. 6s. cloth.

"A charming collection of marvellous adventures, calculated to delight the fancy and improve the heart of every boy and girl who [illegible]

A more captivating volume for juvenile recreative reading we never remember to have seen. [illegible] Standard.

Will be from the pen of one of the most [illegible] fiction."—Standard of Freedom.

THE DREAM of LITTLE TUK, and other Tales. By HANS C. ANDERSEN. Translated by C. POWER, with Engravings. Fcap 8vo. 5s 6d. gilt edges.

"Full of charming passages of prose and poetry, and such tiny dramatic scenes as will make the pages of young readers throb with delight."—Athenæum.

ANDERSEN'S TALES from DENMARK; with 30 Illustrations by COUNT POCCI. Small 4to, price 6s plain, 7s 6d. coloured; gilt edges.

"We prophesy for these Tales an immortality in the nursery."—Blackwood.

HOME AMUSEMENTS [illegible] of Riddles, Charades, Conundrums, Parlour Games, Forfeits, &c. By PETER PUZZLEWELL, Esq. price 2s 6d cloth.

GRANT and GRIFFITH, corner of St. Paul's Churchyard.

PRESENTS for YOUNG and OLD in great variety, consisting of the New Books of the Season, Illustrated Works, Church Services, Bibles, and Prayers, in elegant bindings, and an extensive assortment of Juvenile Publications.

GRANT and GRIFFITH, successors to J. Harris, corner of St. Paul's Churchyard.

NEW PUBLICATIONS FOR DECEMBER.

THE CHESS-PLAYERS' CHRONICLE for 1848. Edited by H. STAUNTON, Esq., containing upwards of 180 Games and Problems. Price 20s, handsomely bound in cloth.

II.

THE LITTLE SAVAGE; being the History of a boy left alone on an uninhabited island. By Captain MARRYAT. To be completed in Two Parts, forming the continuation of the "Juvenile Library."

III.

THE CHILDREN OF THE NEW FOREST. By Captain MARRYAT. Complete in Two Volumes, price 10s, bound in cloth, with 12 Illustrations.

IV.

THE KNIFE AND FORK for Enlightened Epicures for 1849. Laid by the Alderman, under the scientific superintendence of a COOK. With choice hints by BARON MAUVAIS-TONGUE. Price 5s 6d. [illegible] (On the 30th.)

H. HURST, 27, King William-street, Charing cross.

COUNTY'S POEMS.—Just published,

CORINDALE; a Poem in Six Cantos, and other Poems. By WILLIAM COUNTY. Price 2s. post 8vo, cloth lettered.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and Co.

MUSICAL EDUCATION.—Messrs. KEITH, PROWSE, and Co., Cheapside, have just published a LIST of popular PIANOFORTE [illegible] music, which is their greatest progress, that they at once win the love and the attention of the student, and all who are engaged in the [illegible] of the science and accomplishment may reach their end [illegible]

CLARE'S PSALMODY, for Voice and Piano, or Organ, complete in Two, or Parts, 3s. each, or in four vols., 10s 6d. each.—"We delivered Part I into the hands of a lady friend a week ago, and she has retained it with a scrutinising mind, avowing that it is the most delightful collection of music."

There are 42 pieces in Part I, arranged in [illegible] vogue at our churches with Hydrick Ware.

NEW VOCAL DUETS of great merit and beauty.—Stephen Glover's "What are the wild waves saying?" founded on "Dombey and Son."—"Tell me where do fairies live?" words by Mrs. Bedingfield. Bodwell's "Basket Maker," "Let us take the Town," and "Come, come to the willow dell."—NOW ready, Balfe's "Bohon Rayre."

HAMILTON'S MODERN INSTRUCTIONS for the PIANOFORTE, fingered by CZERNY. Price 4s.

The various and most [illegible] a knowledge of pianoforte playing by studying Hamilton's book. The instructions [illegible] the most comprehensive [illegible] a person conversing with [illegible] more than by the essays that book-makers who attempt work of this kind generally give. In all [illegible] and twenty [illegible] 44 exercises, and 23 chants, fitted to the practice of a learner. The price is astonishingly low."—The Morning Herald Warder.

AMATEURS, TEACHERS of MUSIC, and MERCHANTS should hasten and procure a Catalogue of Messrs. ROBERT COCKS and CO.'s New Popular and Classical MUSIC. Vocal and Instrumental. To be had gratis and postage free. It has been observed that their Stock of varied Publications, printed from 200,000 plates is the most complete and valuable Collection such as no other house in the world can boast of.

Shortly will be Published, COCKS' MUSICAL ALMANACK for 1849 containing all the needful information to be found in every Almanack, also the days of birth and death, and the remarkable events appertaining to all distinguished Musicians and Vocalists of every age and nation. One fine volume, price 1s.—To be had of Messrs ROBERT COCKS and Co., New Burlington-street, London; Messrs. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and Co.; and all Music and Booksellers.

NEW CHRISTMAS BOOK BY MR. CHARLES DICKENS.

On Tuesday, the 19th inst., will be published, price Five shillings, elegantly bound in cloth, with Illustrations by Clarkson Stanfield, R.A., Frank Stone, John Leech, and John Tenniel,

THE HAUNTED MAN and the GHOST'S BARGAIN: a Fancy for Christmas Time.

By CHARLES DICKENS.

London: BRADBURY and EVANS, 11, Bouverie-street

PUNCH'S POCKET-BOOK for 1849, with a Coloured Plate, and numerous Engravings on Wood. Bound in cloth, price 5s.

"This pocket (formerly Regnier) and its Illustrations are worth the price of the book, and all the articles are the gain of the purchaser."—Athenæum. PUNCH OFFICE, 85, Fleet-street; and all books, [illegible]

CHRISTMAS CAROLS, by ALFRED CROWQUILL. TWO CHRISTMAS CAROLS written and beautifully illustrated by ALFRED CROWQUILL. Price [illegible] Bound street, opposite the Carendon Hotel.

MR AINSWORTH'S NEW ROMANCE

On Wednesday, the 20th, in 3 vols., post 8vo,

THE LANCASHIRE WITCHES.

By W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, Esq.

HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

NEW POLKA.—THE FESTIVAL POLKA, by STEPHEN GLOVER. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 1, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 2, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 3, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 4, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 5, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 6, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 7, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 8, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 9, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 10, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 11, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 12, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 13, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 14, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 15, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 16, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 17, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 18, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 19, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 20, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 21, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 22, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 23, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 24, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 25, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 26, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 27, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 28, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 29, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 30, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 31, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 32, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 33, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 34, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 35, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 36, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 37, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 38, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 39, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 40, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 41, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 42, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 43, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 44, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 45, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 46, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 47, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 48, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 49, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 50, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 51, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 52, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 53, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 54, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 55, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 56, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 57, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 58, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 59, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 60, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 61, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 62, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 63, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 64, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 65, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 66, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 67, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 68, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 69, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 70, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 71, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 72, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 73, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 74, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 75, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 76, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 77, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 78, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 79, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 80, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 81, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 82, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 83, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 84, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 85, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 86, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 87, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 88, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 89, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 90, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 91, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 92, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 93, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 94, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 95, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 96, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 97, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 98, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 99, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 100, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 101, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 102, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 103, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 104, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 105, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 106, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 107, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 108, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 109, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 110, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 111, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 112, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 113, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 114, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 115, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 116, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 117, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 118, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 119, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 120, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 121, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 122, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 123, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 124, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 125, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 126, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 127, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 128, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 129, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 130, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 131, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 132, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 133, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 134, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 135, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 136, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 137, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 138, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 139, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 140, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 141, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 142, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 143, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 144, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 145, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 146, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 147, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 148, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 149, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 150, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 151, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 152, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 153, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 154, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 155, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 156, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 157, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 158, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 159, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 160, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 161, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 162, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 163, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 164, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 165, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 166, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 167, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 168, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 169, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 170, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 171, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 172, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 173, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 174, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 175, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 176, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 177, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 178, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 179, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 180, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 181, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 182, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 183, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 184, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 185, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 186, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 187, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 188, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 189, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 190, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 191, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 192, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 193, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 194, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 195, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 196, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 197, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 198, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 199, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 200, Dombey and Son.

THE LANCASHIRE WITCHES.

By W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, Esq.

HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street

NEW POLKA.—THE FESTIVAL POLKA, by STEPHEN GLOVER. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 1, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 2, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 3, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 4, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 5, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 6, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 7, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 8, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 9, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 10, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 11, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 12, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 13, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 14, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 15, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 16, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 17, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 18, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 19, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 20, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 21, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 22, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 23, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 24, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 25, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 26, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 27, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 28, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 29, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 30, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 31, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 32, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 33, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 34, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 35, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 36, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 37, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 38, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 39, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 40, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 41, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 42, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 43, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 44, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 45, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 46, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 47, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 48, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 49, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 50, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 51, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 52, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 53, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 54, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 55, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 56, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 57, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 58, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 59, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 60, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 61, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 62, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 63, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 64, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 65, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 66, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 67, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 68, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 69, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 70, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 71, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 72, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 73, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 74, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 75, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 76, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 77, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 78, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 79, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 80, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 81, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 82, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 83, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 84, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 85, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 86, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 87, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 88, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 89, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 90, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 91, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 92, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 93, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 94, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 95, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 96, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 97, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 98, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 99, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 100, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 101, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 102, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 103, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 104, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 105, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 106, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 107, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 108, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 109, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 110, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 111, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 112, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 113, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 114, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 115, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 116, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 117, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 118, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 119, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 120, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 121, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 122, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 123, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 124, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 125, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 126, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 127, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 128, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 129, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 130, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 131, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 132, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 133, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 134, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 135, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 136, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 137, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 138, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 139, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 140, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 141, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 142, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 143, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 144, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 145, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 146, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 147, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 148, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 149, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 150, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 151, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 152, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 153, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 154, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 155, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 156, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 157, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 158, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 159, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 160, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 161, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 162, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 163, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 164, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 165, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 166, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 167, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 168, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 169, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 170, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 171, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 172, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 173, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 174, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 175, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 176, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 177, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 178, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 179, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 180, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 181, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 182, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 183, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 184, Dombey and Son. The Festival Polka, by Stephen Glover, No. 185, Dombey and Son

YORKSHIRE WEST RIDING ELECTION.—THE NOMINATION AT WAKEFIELD.—(SEE PAGE 382.)

THE PRESIDENT OF LIBERIA.

On Sunday last, the President of Liberia, Mr. J. Roberts, embarked at Plymouth, on board her Majesty's ship Amazon, commanded by Captain Trowbridge. The accompanying Sketch, by N. M. Condy, represents the Amazon saluting his Excellency with 17 guns. The Admiral, Sir W. H. Gage, kindly sent his yacht, with the President and Suite. Her Majesty's ships Daphne and Rosamond got under weigh at the same time, and are portrayed by the Artist in his Picture. The arrival of His Excellency in Liberia is anxiously looked forward to, as it is expected he will be able to do more for the suppression of slavery than the largest squadron we could keep up on the coast. In addition to his numerous acquirements, Mr. Roberts is a skilful surgeon, and an excellent lawyer, two useful accomplishments in his position. The tract of land over which he governs extends over a surface of 700 miles. He has established in the colony a college, several schools and hospitals, and, in fact, is gradually civilising Western Africa. We are glad to record his acknowledgment by the British Government, and much benefit may be anticipated as the result of his mission to this country.

It may be interesting to add that the colony of Liberia lies midway between Sierra Leone and Cape Palmas, and was established by the American Colonization Society in 1820, by an immigration of free or liberated people of colour from the United States. The organisation of the Republic as an independent state, took place in July last year when Mr. Roberts, who had formerly acted as governor under the Colonization Society, was elected President. Speaking of Liberia and its dependencies, Commodore Perry, of the United States navy, says, in a report to the American Government, dated in 1841, "Governor Roberts, Colonel Russworm, of Cape Palmas, are intelligent and estimable men, executing their responsible functions with wisdom and dignity; and we have in the example of these two gentlemen irrefragable proof of the capability of coloured people to govern themselves." While with regard to the advantages of the colony he adds, "So far as the influence of the colonists has extended, it has been exercised to suppress the slave trade. Their endeavours have been eminently successful; and it is by planting these settlements (whether American or European) along the whole extent of coast from Cape Verd to Benguela, that the exportation of slaves will be most effectually prevented."

THE EMBARKATION OF THE PRESIDENT OF LIBERIA, FROM PLYMOUTH.—DRAWN BY N. M. CONDY.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, December 16, 1848.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 349.—Vol. XIII.] SATURDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1848. [Number and Supplement 1s.

FRENCH NAPOLEONISM.

The invasion of Boulogne by Prince Louis Napoleon in a Gravesend steamer, and the invasion of Strasburg at the head of a score of men by the same hero, have ceased to be subjects of ridicule. They are no longer to be considered as the freaks of hair-brained folly, but as the great deeds of a man who was wiser than his time. Success in a newer attempt has rubbed the spots from their memory. If at one time they appeared ridiculous in the estimation of Englishmen, and of all who were not French, it was our ignorance of the feelings and aspirations of Frenchmen that caused us to consider them so. Louis Napoleon Bonaparte, the first President of the French Republic, knew Frenchmen better. His doings at Strasburg and Boulogne had no other faults than untimeliness: they were conceived in the right spirit, but they were premature. They were planned upon a proper estimate of the wants and wishes of the French people. In fact, though looked upon as failures at the time, they were not failures. They were the progressive and necessary steps towards an inevitable consummation. The mere attempt made apparent the mightiness of the claim. The result, which excited the laughter of Englishmen, Germans, Italians, Spaniards, Americans,—of all the world, in fact,—excited the sympathy of the French. That master hand knew what it was about. It knew that France was an instrument upon which it could play. All the stops upon the pipe were familiar to its fingers. Opportunity alone was wanting to produce a fitting melody. The stray notes, hurriedly blown, seemed discordant merely because they were interrupted; but there was harmony between the pipe and the fingers. They were formed for each other; and, in due time, Horatio was destined to play upon Hamlet's recorder, and discourse upon it the eloquent music of success and power.

We can form no other opinion, when we reflect upon the remarkable majority by which Louis Napoleon Bonaparte has been voted into the Presidency of the French Republic. Five-sixths of the adult male population of France have recorded their votes in his favour. The other sixth were not unanimous in favour of his competitor. On the one hand, was a Bonaparte—strong in his name, but in nothing else—without talents or eloquence that the world had ever had any opportunity of witnessing—without the recommendation of any service ever rendered to the country—without even the prestige of character to support him. On the other side, was a man whose high position had been acquired by his personal merit—a man who had saved the nation from anarchy—a man who, but a few short months before, had been greeted with the acclamations of every individual in France who had a decent coat upon his back—a man who not only aspired to power, but possessed it—a man who, in a time of unparalleled difficulty, had acted with unparalleled honesty of purpose, simplicity, and success—a man of sincere convictions, high integrity, great talent, and proved services. France was appealed to, to decide between them. The world looked on with breathless interest. The eventful day arrived—the votes were summed up: the name Bonaparte acquired upwards of five million votes; the man Cavaignac little more than one million. Such was the result, and it will be long before Europe recovers from her surprise at the announcement. But surprised or not, it is highly important that England should understand what are the ideas which France attaches to this remarkable and powerful name. "Napoleonism" is the "ism" that triumphs over Republicanism, Communism, and every other form of political faith. We know perfectly well the ideas which are attached to it out of France. The great Napoleon was the parricide of the freedom from which he sprang. Under the iron heel of his grinding despotism he crushed the intellect of France. He allowed of no thought hostile to his own. The Empire produced no writer except Madame de Staël; and Napoleon feared, hated, and persecuted her for daring to think. The whole machinery of the State was inimical to every manifestation of opinion that was not in accordance with the stiff insatiable despotism of the proudest, most selfish, most unfeeling, most irresponsible autocrat that ever breathed. Napoleon, in the bitter days of his exile, confessed that he had outraged the nations. But he outraged France also. To use the words of Auguste Barbier, the only French poet who has been superior to the hero-worship of his countrymen, the "great Napoleon" was > ——un voleur de couronne,

> Un usurpateur effronté,
> Qui serra sans pitié sous les coussins du trône
> La gorge de la liberté.

And not only did he strangle liberty; he decimated and redecimated the people, to provide human aliment for the greedy stomach of his ambition. Beyond the boundaries of France he was the scourge of humanity; a crowned and sceptered pestilence, permitted by Providence to lay waste for a season the fairest realms of Europe. Is it the melancholy termination of his career that has blinded the French to his faults and crimes? Have they so much pity for the sorrows of the man, that they forgive the atrocities of the Emperor? and, in elevating to the highest dignity which is at present in their gift the inheritor of his name and the representative of his family, do they expect the new Napoleon to rival or to imitate the old? Perhaps they are of opinion that the splendour of the first Napoleon's achievements was well and cheaply bought at the price of domestic tyranny and the conscription. Perhaps they would not object to suffer both again, if the same result could be obtained. It is possible that they think military glory the highest earthly good; the conquest of Europe, the mission of the French; and throat-cutting the proper business of civilised men. But, if they think none of these things, it is desirable to know what sentiment lies at the bottom of their homage to the name of Napoleon—a sentiment which is so strong as to consider that name, without proved talent or capability, superior to proved talent and capability with any other name, and to elevate it to dignity by a burst of acclamation sufficient to turn the brain of a wiser personage than Napoleon's nephew can be considered, and to excuse any stretch of ambition of which he may hereafter be guilty. It may be, that, having made amends to the memory of Napoleon for the darkness of the misery in which he died on the rock of St. Helena, by electing a chief of his blood to the supreme authority over them, they may think they have done enough. It is just possible that in rendering the homage, they may have taken the talents and the virtues for granted; and that they may expect to find a statesman, and not a battle-monger, in their future ruler. In the one case we can see no hope for France, and no prospect for the new Napoleon, but a misery and failure greater than those experienced by the pre-owner of the name. In the other case, we can see hopes both for France and her President—a chance of repose and progress for the one, and of fair renown for the other. We must wait, however, for that our fears greatly preponderate over our hopes. It seems to us that the French prize of liberty, but that they do not understand it. They talk of being in the van of European civilisation when their proper place is in the rear. Modern Europe is industrious, and not warlike. But France, we suspect, is filled with the relics of military glory. Frenchmen generally do not exclaim with the poet from whom we have already quoted, "how much blood and outrage, how many tears has this hard and rude soldier Napoleon cost us—all for the sake of a few sprigs of worthless laurel!" On the contrary, they seem to value the sprigs of laurel as the choicest of earthly blessings, and to think them cheap at all the misery, past, present, and future, at which they may be purchased. Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity are mighty words. The whole conduct of the French proves that, although they preached, they did not understand them. The French, in fact, are not ripe for freedom, if their conduct since February 24th is to prove their ripeness. They are intolerant of each other. They are for settling all disputes by physical violence. They are for coercing every man whom they cannot convince. Their whole thought is of the strong hand. Their education is tyrannical; and even while they talk lustily of freedom, equality, and brotherhood, they admire and invite tyranny. They revolted in the name of liberty, and abused as soon as they acquired it. They abolished hereditary monarchy, only to do homage to hereditary despotism at the first convenient opportunity. They stirred the nations by great words, and began to prove to those same nations, immediately afterwards, that the words were words alone—breath of the lips, not feelings of the heart, nor convictions of the judgment. They raised hopes one day by their precepts, and destroyed them on the next by their example. We may be in error in making this estimate of the French character, but the events of every day only tend to strengthen it. We shall be glad to be convinced that we have done them injustice.

LOUIS NAPOLEON BONAPARTE, PRESIDENT OF THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.

In the observations we have made, we throw no imputations upon the character of the new President. As we said last week, he may turn out to be wiser and better than the people that elected him. He may be thoroughly honest. He may be in all respects what the true friends of France and humanity would desire to find him. Still we must confess that our fears for France are great. Louis Napoleon, if inclined to do so, will find it no easy matter to resist their military acclamations. If he do not resist it, he will lead France and himself into regard, for Europe is in no mood to suffer a repetition of the past. If he do resist it, a superhuman task will lie before him—a task of statesmanship in which all friends of constitutional liberty will pray for his success; but a task in which an intellect of the highest grade might fail, if it had such a people as the French to deal with. We do not disparage Louis Napoleon when we say that, as yet, the world knows nothing of his capabilities for the good-generalship of the one course, or the wise statesmanship of the other. His proclamation, as President of the Republic, has taken place somewhat more suddenly than was expected. In consequence, it would appear, of information received by the Government of General Cavaignac, that demonstrations calculated to provoke insurrection were meditated, both by the Socialist and the Ultra-Napoleonists who dream of the restoration of the Empire, measures were secretly taken to proclaim the new President with all previous notice to the public. At the sitting of the Assembly on Wednesday, General Cavaignac announced that the Ministers had placed their resignations in his hands; and he also laid down the powers with which the Assembly had entrusted him, with the expression of his cordial gratitude for the confidence which had been reposed in him, and the support which had been afforded him. The new President then made a short and effective speech; and crossing over to General Cavaignac, shook him warmly by the hand, amid the loud applause of the Chamber and the spectators. Salvoes of artillery in the Place de la Concorde then announced to the astonished citizens the commencement of the new Administration and the ceremony concluded. Paris remained perfectly tranquil.

LOUIS NAPOLEON, PRESIDENT OF THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.

To the surprise, perhaps, of his warmest admirers and adherents, Prince Louis Napoleon has been elected President of the new Republic of France. A Bonaparte on a throne, in title, at least, is at the head of that important kingdom, and has arrived at that high position under a form of succession as the most [illegible] Louis Napoleon Bonaparte, as he is now [illegible] Napoleon. He was born at Paris on the 20th of April, [illegible] Hortense. With the single exception of [illegible] reading King of Rome, he was the [illegible] family who was [illegible] to. And for those two sons did the streets of Paris resound to the roar of cannon in honour of their birth. The ceremony of [illegible] with unusual splendour, and he can count for his sponsors the emperor and empress of France. This event, however, did not [illegible] the year 1810. The names then given to him were Charles Louis Napoleon. On the death of his father in 1846, the Prince adopted the signature Napoleon Louis Bonaparte. This was done in compliance with the wish of Napoleon, who constantly exhibited the hope of a continuance of his dynasty, and relatively committed to the head of his family should always bear the name of Napoleon. It will be necessary for our readers to bear in remembrance, that they may not be led into error from the difference of name in the following brief sketch of the career of Prince Louis. The Prince, with his father and mother, who had assumed the title of Duke and Duchess of Saint Leu, retired to Bavaria. Here, however, they were not permitted to remain, and after a brief sojourn in Switzerland, which political motives compelled them to leave, the family finally settled at Rome. M. Bonaparte, who was the father of the Prince, and no doubt that the principal work of his sons was directed to [illegible] which he resolved during his education, and to which he has always adhered. In 1831 he and his brother joined the [illegible] in which the latter lost his life. [illegible] mother, visited Paris incognito, and the Prince made a personal [illegible] to Louis Philippe for permission to serve in the French army, asking [illegible] that he would [illegible] have the name of Bonaparte. This was connected with his soldiery, and the request of the Prince [illegible] pure. [illegible] a short time in England, and in [illegible] at Arenenberg, in Switzerland. [illegible] he became [illegible] pressed, by [illegible] persons, and necessary, which he used to promote [illegible] of the poor, that the Canton of Thurgau conferred on him the [illegible] zenship. In the meantime, the [illegible] military pursuits, became a most different sort [illegible] by of Louis Bonaparte. The enthusiasm of studies was the public [illegible] a work upon Artillery, which was highly esteemed, and the Government of [illegible] appointed him a captain in that department of the service. The year [illegible] of Donna Maria, in present pages of Portugal, a widow, by the [illegible] of her first husband, the Duke of Leuchtenberg. To the surprise of many, rumour, in no very measured terms, spoke of Prince Louis as a fitting person for her second husband. To such a length had the report of this kind prevailed, that the Prince thought it necessary publicly to disavow the honour conferred upon him. The reason assigned by the Prince for declining the alliance, if ever it should be offered to him, was his regard for France, which would ever prevent him from accepting any station incompatible with his being a subject of that country. [illegible] unsuccessful [illegible] at Strasburg took place; the Prince was [illegible] at Strasburg took place; the Prince was [illegible] at Strasburg took place; the Prince was

According to the firman granted by the Sultan to Mehemet Ali in June, 1841, the hereditary possession of Egypt was granted to him within its ancient boundaries, also the Government of the provinces of Nubia, Darfour, Sennaar, and Cordofan, but these latter without the hereditary possession. It now remains to be seen whether the Sultan will appoint another Pasha, independent of the Pasha of Egypt, to govern those provinces.

INDIA

Advices dated respectively Calcutta the 6th, Madras 8th, and B[illegible] 16th ult.—have been received this week, in addition to those of the 9th ult. The intelligence from the Punjaub is not of any particular importance, the principal movements of the troops to form the army of operations in the quarter. Moolraj was in a fort with a considerable force of disposable men and supplies, than he had been for some time past; and Chuttur Singh had not effected a junction with either of his sons, although the troops of Sirdar Chuttur were probably not far apart between the Ravee and Chenab, and might co-operate. Patar, the other son of Chuttur, was said to be at Jalapore, on the Thelum, with 1500 men. Lord Gough had determined not to undertake any minor operations, or make any movement previous to the arrival of the [illegible] was known, rather to permit immunity to the rebels, until the plans of G[illegible] could be carried out, and a considerable force take the field. His Lordship [illegible] to be displeased with General Whish for not having attacked Shere Singh, when he broke ground from Mooltan. His Excellency had appointed a brevet commission for General [illegible], commanding the field force in Scinde, and in consequence of which that officer would supersede General Whish when the Bombay force crossed the frontier. There seemed every probability that the army of operations would suffer great inconvenience in the [illegible] arrangement during the coming campaign, or settlement of the [illegible] arrangements for carriage, also, were said to be on a bad scale, defective and even the Commander-in-Chief was delayed for some days for want of tent-pitchers.

The pontoon across the Ravee, although within sight of Lahore, had been attacked and fired on several occasions by detached parties of the Sikhs. Since then it had been strongly occupied, so as to leave no ground of alarm respecting this entre-port to the field of operations. General Cureton had since crossed some eight miles in advance of the right bank of the Ravee, with a strong brigade of cavalry and artillery, consisting of her Majesty's 3d Dragoons, the 9th and 8th Light Cavalry, two troops of European Horse Artillery, and one battery of native artillery, the 2d European and other property. [illegible] 10th Native Infantry, and a regiment of Irregular Cavalry—so that this brigade may be regarded as the advanced line of our army.

Two forts of considerable strength—viz. Dullah, Duraree and Rungel Nungel, had been razed by our troops. At Mooltan, which is no longer the centre of insurrection, the recent division of the enemy's forces had been dictated at least as much by the scarcity and distress of each other, natural in the Sikh camp, as by any policy of separate and wide-spread attack. Chuttur and the Dewan are now said to be bidding against each other for the levy of insurgents, and the Dewan has had the worst of the speculation. It is surely by the desertion of troops from Mooltan that Chuttur Singh has increased his forces. The Dewan however, at present, showed a front bolder than ever. The few stores that have reached General Whish's camp had been in great danger from his cannonade. Guns were continually hovering on the flanks of our position, ready for any species of annoyance. The Dewan, too, had lately been successful in the manufacture of rockets, at least as regards their number and range, although the explosion could not be rightly timed, so as to alight in the camp. He also opened masked and sunk batteries to play upon the camp, and on several instances had nearly accomplished his design. General Whish, however, and his gallant assistants, Edwardes and Cortlandt, made the game a losing one for the Dewan. His cannonades, and the fire of shrapnel and congreves, especially from Edwardes and Cortlandt's camp, were frequently kept on the enemy's position for many hours, and excepting the rockets, which were not much better than the Dewan's, our projectiles had mostly told with good effect. Edwardes was likely to be detached from the force before Mooltan to his old position of command in Bannoo.

Maharajah Gholab Singh had marched a body of his troops against Chuttur Singh.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

CAMBRIDGE, Dec. 16

PRIZE SUBJECTS.—Prince Albert, Chancellor of the University, being pleased to give annually a gold medal, for the encouragement of English poetry to each resident undergraduate as shall compose the best ode or the best poem in heroic verse; the Vice-Chancellor has the day given notice that the subject for the present year is "Titus at Jerusalem." The exercises are to be sent in to the Vice-Chancellor on or before March 31, 1849, and are not to exceed 200 lines in length. The subject for the Marquis Camden's gold medal, for Latin hexameter verse, for the present year is

Caput in
Sedition. scrutiis stulta, nequitiæ vulgus

The representatives in Parliament for this University being pleased to give annually four prizes, of 15 guineas each, for the encouragement of Latin prose compositions, the subjects for the present year are announced to be: For the Bachelors:—"Becomes an Newtonus in philosophii falcatus elaborarerit, scriptus eorum inter se collatis, quemadmodum ipse." For the Undergraduates:—"Uter sint parentes, cari liberi, propinqui, familiares; sed omnibus omnium carissima complexa est." IV. Sir William's Browne's three gold medals: subjects for the present year are For the Greek ode, "Cassandra." Greek Iambic ode, "Manorum in Hispania imperium;" for the Greek epigram, "Ἐν τῷ τάφῳ δὲ τὸ νίκησε ἔγραψε;" for the Latin epigram, "Sus Minervam." The Person prize is the interest of £400 stock, to be annually employed in the purchase of one or more Greek books, to be given each year to the undergraduate who shall make the best translation of a proposed passage in Shakspeare, Ben Jonson, Massinger, or Beaumont and Fletcher, into Greek verse. The subject for the present year is Shakspeare's Tempest, scene 1 i. Mor. "Where-fore rejoice" * * (to the words) * * most exalted esteem of all."—N.B. All the above exercises are to be sent in to the Vice-Chancellor privately. Each is to have some motto prefixed, and to be accompanied by a paper sealed up, with the same motto on the outside, which paper is to enclose another, folded up, having the candidate's name and college written on it. All papers containing the names of those candidates who may not succeed will be destroyed unopened. Any candidate is at liberty to send in his exercise printed or lithographed. No prize will be given to any candidate who has not at the time of sending in the exercises resided one term at the least.

THE Society for Promoting the Enlargement, Building, and Repairing of churches held, on Monday last, their second meeting for the present season. The Right Hon. Sir Robert Harry Inglis, Bart., M.P. for the University of Oxford, in the Chair. Among the new churches which were consecrated by the Bishop of Winchester, assisted by the Rev. Thomas Dudley Fosbroke, M.A., Rector of Walton-upon-Trent, and Rural Dean, and other clergy, on Wednesday, the 6th inst., was that of Holy Trinity, Burton-upon-Trent, Staffordshire. The church is built of stone, in the Early English style, and will accommodate 1000 persons, of whom 600 will have free sittings. The cost of the building, which is from the designs of Mr. Scott, of London, architect, has been £5000, of which £1000 was given by the Marquis of Anglesea, £1000 by the Commissioners for Building New Churches, £500 by the Incorporated Society for Promoting the Enlargement, Building, and Repairing of Churches, £500 by the Lord Bishop of Lichfield, £500 by the Rev. Thomas Dudley Fosbroke, and £1500 by the inhabitants of Burton. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Vicar of Burton, and the stipend will be £150 per annum. The new church of St. Mary, Bredon, Worcestershire, was consecrated by the Bishop of Worcester on Thursday, the 7th inst. The church is built of stone, in the Early English style, and will accommodate 400 persons, of whom 200 will have free sittings. The cost of the building, which is from the designs of Mr. Scott, of London, architect, has been £1200, of which £500 was given by the Incorporated Society for Promoting the Enlargement, Building, and Repairing of Churches, £200 by the Lord Bishop of Worcester, £100 by the Rev. Thomas Dudley Fosbroke, and £400 by the inhabitants of Bredon. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Vicar of Bredon, and the stipend will be £80 per annum. The new church of St. Mary, Bredon, Worcestershire, was consecrated by the Bishop of Worcester on Thursday, the 7th inst. The church is built of stone, in the Early English style, and will accommodate 400 persons, of whom 200 will have free sittings. The cost of the building, which is from the designs of Mr. Scott, of London, architect, has been £1200, of which £500 was given by the Incorporated Society for Promoting the Enlargement, Building, and Repairing of Churches, £200 by the Lord Bishop of Worcester, £100 by the Rev. Thomas Dudley Fosbroke, and £400 by the inhabitants of Bredon. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Vicar of Bredon, and the stipend will be £80 per annum.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE

ROYAL MILITARY ACADEMY, WOOLWICH.—The examination of the gentlemen cadets forming the practical or senior class, and studying at the Royal Arsenal, took place in the hall of that academy on Tuesday last, Major General Sir Frederick Pollock, Bart., R.A., Lieutenant-Governor of the Institution, officiated as Governor of the Board of Examiners. The gentlemen cadets passed a very creditable examination, and twenty passed for commissions. The regulation award, for general good conduct and proficiency in studies, was awarded to Mr. W. Crossman; and various other prizes of books, mathematical instruments, &c., were also allotted to other students. It is supposed that the whole of the gentlemen cadets who passed on this occasion will be gazetted to the corps of Royal Artillery, and none to the Engineers, as there are no less than 90 vacancies for Second Lieutenants, and three for First Lieutenants, in that corps.

DEPARTURE OF THE SQUADRON OF EXERCISE.—The squadron commanded by Sir C. Napier, and consisting of the following vessels, St. Vincent (flag), Prince Regent, Powerful, Orestes, Stromboli, Reynard, Plumper, and Reflection, weighed from Spithead on Sunday morning last, at Portsmouth, and sailed at nine o'clock. The anchor on Sunday morning last, at Portsmouth, and sailed at nine o'clock. The St. Vincent took the lead, and by eleven o'clock the squadron was outside the Nab light-vessel, and making an apparently straight course down the Channel. The wind at anged about noon, almost direct into port, and it was expected the squadron would make a run for it if it seemed likely to continue; this change kept the squadron in view of Portsmouth until nearly sunset, when the wind again returned to the S.E., which enabled the fleet to stretch away down Channel favourably. It is said there will be no more ships commissioned this year; but at the commencement of the next, the Conqueror, of 101 guns, sailing steam-frigate, will be commissioned by Captain Fitzroy, and the Centaur, steam-frigate, by Captain Buckle, both at Portsmouth. At the present moment, the Superb, 80-gun ship, at Portsmouth, is the only ship fitting out, or any of the home ports.

PEMBROKE DOCKYARD.—The Board of Ordnance have decided upon the erection of two martello towers, for the better defence of this important naval station. This has been undertaken at the instance of the Committee on Fortifications, and Mr. Rigby, the contractor, has commenced his preparations for the construction of these defences. These towers, it should be explained, are circular buildings, consisting of two stories, the upper one, which is shell proof, being appropriated for the reception of the troops, and the lower one for the stores. A parapet protects the men while working the guns, which are placed on traversing carriages, so as to command all the approaches. Pressing orders have been received at this yard respecting the discontinuance of all work hitherto allowed to the military officers. This has been done on the recommendation of the Finance Committee. None whatever is to be supplied for fortifications, and for any furniture or fixtures that may be required in the officers' dwellings, a percentage must be paid to Government.—It is believed that some of the buildings hitherto occupied for the packet service at Hobb's Point will, for the future, be appropriated to the use of the Coast Guard; and that the present victualling station at Pembroke will then be removed to Angle.

The Speaker of the House of Commons has notified that, at the end of 14 days from Tuesday last, he will issue out his warrant to the Clerk of the Crown, to make out a writ for the electing of a member for the borough of Truro, in the room of Edmund Turner, Esq., deceased.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

THE AURORA OF NOV. 17, 1848, IN PORTUGAL.

(From a Correspondent.)

ON the evening of Friday, Nov. 17, 1848, a most splendid Aurora was visible here (Oporto), and caused a good deal of consternation among the inhabitants, who looked on it as a precursor of the cholera. The phenomenon commenced soon after sunset and reached its maximum of brilliancy about 8 P.M., at which time the whole of the northern half of the firmament up to the zenith was one mass of rose-coloured light, with columns of bright flame which constantly shifted their position. From 11 to time the splendour of the Aurora gradually decreased, until, at 11 P.M., only a faint blush lingered along the northern horizon. It is worthy of not[illegible]

[illegible]ndles, used in some level[illegible]r cases in the [illegible]d to be greatly dreaded. The day had been very warm and the wind [illegible]. I am not aware that the

[illegible] the Aurora also presented a most splendid appearance, and the papers state that the common people there called it "The triumphant advent the same evening, at Huelvas, a serious accident occurred. In one of the [illegible]ses there, the [illegible]patcher, by a singular coincidence, had been impressing on [illegible]ers at the time of the [illegible]d, when, by the [illegible]ame up the Calle de la Plata, when "the Lord rained fire from heaven upon them." As the conversation of these [illegible] was fluently carried on—struck with the unusual (as it [illegible]d to them) brilliancy, appeared [illegible] the Aurora presented—rushed back into the [illegible], shrieking "The end of the world!—the end of the world! God is raining fire upon us!" The scene of confusion which followed was [illegible], and many persons threw down and trampled upon by the terrified crowd, who pressed towards the altar as the only place of

Oporto, Dec. [illegible]

COMMERCIAL NEWS.

STORM AND LOSS OF LIFE

A storm on Friday week [illegible] much damage in many parts of Scotland. At Glasgow, it blew a gale which continued for several hours in a little increased degree, overturning [illegible] the 21 European and other property. [illegible] pot wall of the bridge which crosses the Glasgow Harbour and General Terminus Railway, on the Paisley road, near the city, was blown over the road, by which two men were killed on the spot, and another so severely injured that died shortly afterwards. The wall itself was only some three or four feet [illegible] on it was blown a fresh from places to screen the persons from passing along the bridge, to prevent their shying. This presented a resistance to the wind, which blew down the railway line, and caused the whole to tumble with a crash. The fall[illegible] of chimney-tops, &c. from the roofs, inflicted several wounds on several passengers along the streets. A great many of the street lamps were broken by the wind and the falling fragments coming upon them; and the aspect was at one time very gloomy indeed. The loss of timber, however, at present, showed a front bolder than ever. The few stores that have reached General Whish's camp had been in great danger from his cannonade. Guns were continually hovering on the flanks of our position, ready for any species of annoyance. The Dewan, too, had lately been successful in the manufacture of rockets, at least as regards their number and range, although the explosion could not be rightly timed, so as to alight in the camp. He also opened masked and sunk batteries to play upon the camp, and on several instances had nearly accomplished his design. General Whish, however, and his gallant assistants, Edwardes and Cortlandt, made the game a losing one for the Dewan. His cannonades, and the fire of shrapnel and congreves, especially from Edwardes and Cortlandt's camp, were frequently kept on the enemy's position for many hours, and excepting the rockets, which were not much better than the Dewan's, our projectiles had mostly told with good effect. Edwardes was likely to be detached from the force before Mooltan to his old position of command in Bannoo.

Maharajah Gholab Singh had marched a body of his troops against Chuttur Singh.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

CAMBRIDGE, Dec. 16

PRIZE SUBJECTS.—Prince Albert, Chancellor of the University, being pleased to give annually a gold medal, for the encouragement of English poetry to each resident undergraduate as shall compose the best ode or the best poem in heroic verse; the Vice-Chancellor has the day given notice that the subject for the present year is "Titus at Jerusalem." The exercises are to be sent in to the Vice-Chancellor on or before March 31, 1849, and are not to exceed 200 lines in length. The subject for the Marquis Camden's gold medal, for Latin hexameter verse, for the present year is

Caput in
Sedition. scrutiis stulta, nequitiæ vulgus

The representatives in Parliament for this University being pleased to give annually four prizes, of 15 guineas each, for the encouragement of Latin prose compositions, the subjects for the present year are announced to be: For the Bachelors:—"Becomes an Newtonus in philosophii falcatus elaborarerit, scriptus eorum inter se collatis, quemadmodum ipse." For the Undergraduates:—"Uter sint parentes, cari liberi, propinqui, familiares; sed omnibus omnium carissima complexa est." IV. Sir William's Browne's three gold medals: subjects for the present year are For the Greek ode, "Cassandra." Greek Iambic ode, "Manorum in Hispania imperium;" for the Greek epigram, "Ἐν τῷ τάφῳ δὲ τὸ νίκησε ἔγραψε;" for the Latin epigram, "Sus Minervam." The Person prize is the interest of £400 stock, to be annually employed in the purchase of one or more Greek books, to be given each year to the undergraduate who shall make the best translation of a proposed passage in Shakspeare, Ben Jonson, Massinger, or Beaumont and Fletcher, into Greek verse. The subject for the present year is Shakspeare's Tempest, scene 1 i. Mor. "Wherefore rejoice" * * (to the words) * * most exalted esteem of all."—N.B. All the above exercises are to be sent in to the Vice-Chancellor privately. Each is to have some motto prefixed, and to be accompanied by a paper sealed up, with the same motto on the outside, which paper is to enclose another, folded up, having the candidate's name and college written on it. All papers containing the names of those candidates who may not succeed will be destroyed unopened. Any candidate is at liberty to send in his exercise printed or lithographed. No prize will be given to any candidate who has not at the time of sending in the exercises resided one term at the least.

THE Society for Promoting the Enlargement, Building, and Repairing of churches held, on Monday last, their second meeting for the present season. The Right Hon. Sir Robert Harry Inglis, Bart., M.P. for the University of Oxford, in the Chair. Among the new churches which were consecrated by the Bishop of Winchester, assisted by the Rev. Thomas Dudley Fosbroke, M.A., Rector of Walton-upon-Trent, and Rural Dean, and other clergy, on Wednesday, the 6th inst., was that of Holy Trinity, Burton-upon-Trent, Staffordshire. The church is built of stone, in the Early English style, and will accommodate 1000 persons, of whom 600 will have free sittings. The cost of the building, which is from the designs of Mr. Scott, of London, architect, has been £5000, of which £1000 was given by the Marquis of Anglesea, £1000 by the Commissioners for Building New Churches, £500 by the Incorporated Society for Promoting the Enlargement, Building, and Repairing of Churches, £500 by the Lord Bishop of Lichfield, £500 by the Rev. Thomas Dudley Fosbroke, and £1500 by the inhabitants of Burton. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Vicar of Burton, and the stipend will be £150 per annum. The new church of St. Mary, Bredon, Worcestershire, was consecrated by the Bishop of Worcester on Thursday, the 7th inst. The church is built of stone, in the Early English style, and will accommodate 400 persons, of whom 200 will have free sittings. The cost of the building, which is from the designs of Mr. Scott, of London, architect, has been £1200, of which £500 was given by the Incorporated Society for Promoting the Enlargement, Building, and Repairing of Churches, £200 by the Lord Bishop of Worcester, £100 by the Rev. Thomas Dudley Fosbroke, and £400 by the inhabitants of Bredon. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Vicar of Bredon, and the stipend will be £80 per annum. The new church of St. Mary, Bredon, Worcestershire, was consecrated by the Bishop of Worcester on Thursday, the 7th inst. The church is built of stone, in the Early English style, and will accommodate 400 persons, of whom 200 will have free sittings. The cost of the building, which is from the designs of Mr. Scott, of London, architect, has been £1200, of which £500 was given by the Incorporated Society for Promoting the Enlargement, Building, and Repairing of Churches, £200 by the Lord Bishop of Worcester, £100 by the Rev. Thomas Dudley Fosbroke, and £400 by the inhabitants of Bredon. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Vicar of Bredon, and the stipend will be £80 per annum.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE

ROYAL MILITARY ACADEMY, WOOLWICH.—The examination of the gentlemen cadets forming the practical or senior class, and studying at the Royal Arsenal, took place in the hall of that academy on Tuesday last, Major General Sir Frederick Pollock, Bart., R.A., Lieutenant-Governor of the Institution, officiated as Governor of the Board of Examiners. The gentlemen cadets passed a very creditable examination, and twenty passed for commissions. The regulation award, for general good conduct and proficiency in studies, was awarded to Mr. W. Crossman; and various other prizes of books, mathematical instruments, &c., were also allotted to other students. It is supposed that the whole of the gentlemen cadets who passed on this occasion will be gazetted to the corps of Royal Artillery, and none to the Engineers, as there are no less than 90 vacancies for Second Lieutenants, and three for First Lieutenants, in that corps.

DEPARTURE OF THE SQUADRON OF EXERCISE.—The squadron commanded by Sir C. Napier, and consisting of the following vessels, St. Vincent (flag), Prince Regent, Powerful, Orestes, Stromboli, Reynard, Plumper, and Reflection, weighed from Spithead on Sunday morning last, at Portsmouth, and sailed at nine o'clock. The anchor on Sunday morning last, at Portsmouth, and sailed at nine o'clock. The St. Vincent took the lead, and by eleven o'clock the squadron was outside the Nab light-vessel, and making an apparently straight course down the Channel. The wind changed about noon, almost direct into port, and it was expected the squadron would make a run for it if it seemed likely to continue; this change kept the squadron in view of Portsmouth until nearly sunset, when the wind again returned to the S.E., which enabled the fleet to stretch away down Channel favourably. It is said there will be no more ships commissioned this year; but at the commencement of the next, the Conqueror, of 101 guns, sailing steam-frigate, will be commissioned by Captain Fitzroy, and the Centaur, steam-frigate, by Captain Buckle, both at Portsmouth. At the present moment, the Superb, 80-gun ship, at Portsmouth, is the only ship fitting out, or any of the home ports.

PEMBROKE DOCKYARD.—The Board of Ordnance have decided upon the erection of two martello towers, for the better defence of this important naval station. This has been undertaken at the instance of the Committee on Fortifications, and Mr. Rigby, the contractor, has commenced his preparations for the construction of these defences. These towers, it should be explained, are circular buildings, consisting of two stories, the upper one, which is shell proof, being appropriated for the reception of the troops, and the lower one for the stores. A parapet protects the men while working the guns, which are placed on traversing carriages, so as to command all the approaches. Pressing orders have been received at this yard respecting the discontinuance of all work hitherto allowed to the military officers. This has been done on the recommendation of the Finance Committee. None whatever is to be supplied for fortifications, and for any furniture or fixtures that may be required in the officers' dwellings, a percentage must be paid to Government.—It is believed that some of the buildings hitherto occupied for the packet service at Hobb's Point will, for the future, be appropriated to the use of the Coast Guard; and that the present victualling station at Pembroke will then be removed to Angle.

The Speaker of the House of Commons has notified that, at the end of 14 days from Tuesday last, he will issue out his warrant to the Clerk of the Crown, to make out a writ for the electing of a member for the borough of Truro, in the room of Edmund Turner, Esq., deceased.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The Magistrates of Norwich have finally committed James Blomfield Rush for trial at the next assizes on the charge of murdering Mr. Isaac Jermy and Mr Jermy Jermy. On Tuesday the Norwich Jury, at the sixth adjournment, returned a verdict of "Wilful Murder" against Rush, who thus stands committed on both the indictments and the Coroner's warrants.

On Monday last the official declaration of the poll at the West Riding (Yorkshire) election was made in Wakefield, when the result announced by the Under-Sheriff was—For Edmund Denison, Esq., 11,743; Sir Culling Eardley Eardley, Bart., 11,795: majority for Mr. Denison, 2046. He therefore declared Mr. Denison duly elected a knight of the shire for the West Riding of the county of York.

At the Richmond Police-office, on Saturday, Samuel Healey, the driver of the Hyde express train, was charged with the manslaughter of Richard [illegible], who died on the 17th of November last, by being the cause of a collision. The prisoner, who was severely injured by the collision, and not able to appear, was examined at his residence, Wadkins, the fireman, was committed for trial.

On Sunday morning, a sermon, on behalf of King's College Hospital, was preached at the church of St. Mary-le-Strand, by the Rev. Thomas Jackson, M.A. In the course of a very energetic appeal, the reverend gentleman warmly eulogised the claims of the charity, which, "during the past few months, had distributed its benefits to more than 17,000 individuals suffering under the various diseases and casualties of humanity," and at the conclusion of a sermon, which was a liberal collection was made.

On the Chester and Holyhead the directors have issued orders that the packets at all the stations shall be regulated by the chronometer at Holyhead town, which is 16min. and 20 sec. after Greenwich time. This cannot fail to prove of great inconvenience to travellers.

The next mail for India and Marseilles will be closed at the General Post-office, St. Martin's-le-Grand, on this evening (the 23rd instant). This alteration has become necessary in consequence of the 24th (the usual day for the despatch of this mail) falling on Sunday, and the day following being Christmas Day.

Mr. Smith, of Deanston, it is understood, is to be appointed one of the superintendent inspectors under the General Board of Health. It is expected that from his knowledge of practical engineering, his services will be specially applied to those cases where the appropriation of the refuse of towns to agricultural production, and the prevention of the pollution of natural streams are the more prominent measures required.

Thursday (last week) was observed as a day of fasting and humiliation throughout Scotland, on account of the prevalence of the cholera. And places of worship were all open, and the services were well attended.

The gamekeeper of G. Salvin, Esq., of Croxdale Park, Durham, has been committed for killing a poacher.

The Queen's Bounty was distributed on Monday according to ancient custom at the Royal Almonry Office in Middle Scotland-yard, Whitehall. Twenty-four persons (the majority being widows of good character and well recommended), resident in the metropolis, were the recipients. Each individual received [illegible].

The directors of the principal railways have perfected arrangements, by which the public will be able to avail themselves of the double tickets during the entire Christmas holidays. The issue on the 23rd or intervening days will be made available up to the 26th, and on the 30th up to the 2nd of January inclusive. The Christmas Day time-tables on most lines are the same as Sundays.

Four sergeants of the 31st Regiment have been drowned by the overturning of a boat at Athlone.

The American packet ship New World having, within the last few days, arrived at Liverpool, the Humane Society of that town at once notified to Captain Angel their desire to present him with their gold medal, and others of his crew with suitable rewards, in acknowledgment of their services on the occasion of the burning of the Ocean Monarch. Captain Angel, however, declined, on conscientious principles, to accept the honorary distinction intended him. He took only some life-day, and wished no more for it.

The High Sheriff of the Queen's County, who had a writ to execute for £85,000 against the property of the Duke of Buckingham, in that county, has made a return of £4, the property having been previously conveyed away to trustees.

It is expected that Abbas Pasha, aware of the inefficiency in the seven cotton manufactories now at work in Egypt, and the great expendture they are run with but little profit, will sell them all, which will be a very judicious step by all who understand the prosperity of Egypt.

Vassal has closed his campaign of the borough of Leominster, and issued another address to the electors, in which he says:—"Some weeks will probably elapse before a new writ can issue, and the election can take place. For the present, therefore, I take my leave of you, with the earnest hope that those friends who have done so actively exerted themselves in my favour will continue their exertions until I can again visit you, and will thus confirm the sanguine expectations of ultimate success which you have entitled me to form."

The arrivals of oranges are large, and prices in large quantities, and are a welcome addition to the supplies of various kinds of fruits for the approaching festive season of the year.

The public are cautioned against the renewed attempts at imposition by the notorious Joseph Ady. Alderman Woolmer, of Exeter, has recently received one of his epistles, referring to his having obtained £5,000 for Sir Herbert J. Fust, and offering, for a remittance of £1, to interfere in a similar case, "only to a more extensive amount."

We see, by the South Australian Register of July 19, that the Sibella, Captain Oldman, which left Plymouth on the 6th of April, with emigrants, anchored early in the port of Adelaide on the preceding Saturday morning, having made the passage in 101 days.

While an old gentleman named Nottage was at chapel on Sunday morning last, at Saltren Walden, some thieves entered his house and stole £170. On returning with their booty, they had the profaneness to write in chalk on the door—"Watch wenile you pray."

Alderman Hoops, the late Lord Mayor of London, has received a gifting testimonial from the French National Guards, who a short time back experienced his hospitality at the Mansion House. On Monday last, Mr. Veale, of Richmond, waited upon the Alderman with a splendid copy of Mr. Hector Horeau's "Panorama d'Egypte et de Nubie," with proof impressions of the plates, as a gift from the author, one of the Garde National de Paris, and one of those who had experienced so much kindness and attention at his hands.

The refuse of the streets of Paris now sells for 500,000f., when sold by auction in the mass, and for 3,000,000f. when, after having been in the receptacles until fit for manure, it is sold by the cubic foot. In 1823 the streets of Paris were let for 72,000f. per annum, in 1841 the value was 160,000f.; and since 1843 the price has risen to 6 or 700,000 francs: from this must be deducted the expense of cleaning the streets.

All the packets between Dublin and New York, to be called the Shamrock Line, will henceforward sail regularly.

Mr. Baines, Q.C., it is understood, will succeed the late Charles Buller as head of the Duchy Law Board.

Her Majesty in Council has been pleased to appoint the Rev. W. Kennedy, M.A. the Rev. H. L. Jones, M.A.; and T. W. Marshall, Esq., to be trustees of her Majesty's museum of Ireland.

The Emperor of Russia has lately presented to Sir W. Snow Harris, F.R.S., a magnificent ring, richly set in diamonds, and further embellished with the imperial cypher, as a mark of his Majesty's high sense of the value of Sir W. Snow Harris's scientific labours.

No less than 400 married couples have been separated quant aux biens, by the Royal Court of Jersey, during the last ten years.

A gentleman of Bristol, named Bright, is reported to bring from Caen [illegible] of freight free, for the restoration of St. Mary's, Redcliffe, in commemoration of the transfer of the Bristol Docks to the Corporation, and the consequent [illegible] of the dock dues.

It is reported that one of the first acts of the new President of the French Republic will be to create General Cavaignac a Marshal of France.

Forty-five out of 60 stock-brokers voted for Prince Louis Napoleon, and

A number of workmen are at present engaged in laying down, in the Royal Institution of the Town-hall, Liverpool, a beautiful mosaic of encaustic tiles, manufactured at Messrs. Minton's, Stoke-upon-Trent. The pavement, which is of very elaborate design, forms an arms in the centre, and a variety of rich patterns flanking up the entire [illegible].

Accounts from Upper Egypt and Cairo state that an extensive mine of coal coal has been positively found in the vicinity of the town of Esneh, on the Nile.

The opening of the railway from Lincoln to Hull took place on Monday last. It forms a part of the York, Newcastle, and Berwick railway system, and affords a direct route from Hull to Lincoln, and, by means of the Nottingham and Lincoln line, to Derby, Leicester, Birmingham, and the Midland district of England.

The Congress or Conferences to be held at Brussels on the affairs of Italy will not take place immediately, as has been stated, having been postponed at the request of the President of the French Republic. Conferences will be attended by the representatives of England, France, and Austria, the two former as mediating powers, and on the Italian side by the representatives of Naples, the Holy See, Sardinia, and Tuscany. The dukedom of Parma will be represented by the Austrian plenipotentiary. As yet only France, Sardinia, and Lombardy have taken their departure.

Hudson is about to take in hand the entire completion of the docks of Hull, which will give to the York, Newcastle, and Berwick a perfect water

[illegible] last that Abbas Pasha, the new ruler of Egypt, paid on his arrival at Cairo was to [illegible] grandfather, Mehemet Ali, who was in much ill-health, [illegible] treaty with the disposition of Ibrahim Pasha, who from the time that the old man fell into his present [illegible] has never what near man

GAETA, THE PRESENT ABODE OF THE POPE.

THE POPE AT GAETA.

The flight of the Pope to Gaëta, a town and seaport, containing 10,000 inhabitants, in the Neapolitan territory, has already been detailed in our Journal of the 9th inst. We are now enabled, by an obliging Correspondent, to present our readers with a view of the town and harbour, sketched from the ruins of Cicero's Villa, at Mola.

A letter in the Times of Wednesday gives some interesting particulars of the Pope's sojourn at Gaëta, where his Holiness remains for the present, as the foreign diplomatists insist on his not leaving the immediate frontier, and as hopes are still entertained by France and Spain that he will select one of the steamers as a refuge. Meanwhile, the King of Naples is not idle on his part, and his Majesty and the Royal Family pass the greater part of their time at Gaëta, not only out of respect for their illustrious guest, but, it is presumed, for the purpose of watching the manœuvres of the allies. The Correspondent adds:

"The anxiety to obtain the Pope is not confined to the King of Naples and the representatives of France and Spain; and I see that the Provisional Government of Rome are anxiously desiring his return. A deputation came to the frontier on Saturday to implore his Holiness to restore his person to the care of his beloved subjects; but the Pope refused to receive them, and the gentlemen were not allowed to cross the line. I am told the Minister of France complained that the deputation was so unceremoniously treated: but the officer in charge showed him an order written by Cardinal Antonelli, Chamberlain to the Pope, in which it was expressly and formally stated that he was determined not to communicate, directly or indirectly, with an usurping Government. It is said at Rome, and may be said at Paris, that the Pope, in consequence of the deputation being sent back, is under durance by the King of Naples, but the order was written by the proper officer, and the foreign Ministers at Gaëta are the best witnesses of his perfect freedom. I have seen letters of yesterday from Rome, which state that this determination had created a great sensation among the friends of the Provisional Government. The diplomatic circle at Gaëta is strengthened by the arrival of M. de Boutenieff and M. de [illegible] the known Russian Minister, the other the Sardinian Envoy, and by the Prussian chargé, the Baron Kanitz, and the Belgian, M. de Ravenstein. No less than 29 cardinals have also arrived, and the Pope has been enabled to hold a consistory. From every quarter the nobility, the gentry, and the people are flocking to receive the Papal benediction, and nearly the whole time of his Holiness is devoted to receiving the anxious crowds that implore his aid. What [illegible] effect of his voluntary exile be, on Italy in particular, and on the Roman Catholic world in general? The consideration of these important points cannot be long deferred, but I find that to-day the general feeling is, that his Holiness will be recalled to Rome by a demonstration of the people being made in his favour, and that the armed intervention of no Italian or foreign power will be involved.

CELEBRATION OF CHRISTMAS AT ROME.

One of the most imposing ceremonies of the commemoration of this holy season takes place on Christmas Eve, at Rome, when (hitherto) the Pope has proceeded from his Palace of the Quirinal, in grand procession, to St. Peter's, in the form and [illegible] shown in the Illustration (sketched from the celebration of last year) The great variety of costumes and uniforms; the halberdiers, cross, and crozier-bearers; the Pope borne on high, wearing his triple crown; the priests of every rank and order; the blazing of torches, and the rising of clouds of incense all combine to form a most picturesque scene, as the procession advances into the noble architectural Church of St. Peter.

The service performed in the choir is chiefly musical, and its solemnity is much heightened by the hour. Then follows the procession of the Cradle, consisting of the whole body of the clergy present, who proceed to a sort of cell, where the Cradle lies enshrined in a blaze of tapers, and guarded by groups of devotees. Thence it is borne with solemn chants to the Chapel of Santa Croce; a musical mass follows; lastly, the Cradle is deposited upon the altar; and the spectators retire, usually just as the dome of St. Peter's catches the first light of the morning; and the cupolas and spires which crown the Seven Hills rise on the eye above the dim mists of night, in which the city and its ruins are still involved.

MASS AT ROME ON CHRISTMAS EVE.

MATCH COURSING, NO. I.

COURSING.

Philosophy!
With thee say that Life is short—
That Wisdom [illegible] sport,
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor and Manager, Mr W BATTY. The most astounding Novelties for the Christmas Holidays in the Metropolis.—A Surprising Spectacle—Brilliant Scenes of the Arena.—The Arabs in the Wilderness—Performances ... Arabian Horses ... Mr Batty ... Mr Batty ... Mr Batty

POSTCRIPT.

LYNN ELECTION

(BY ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH.)

LYNN, Friday Evening.

The Hon. G. H Stanley was this day duly elected a member for Lynn.

The hon. gentleman was opposed by a Chartist named Dixon, but at the last moment the latter declined going to the poll, although the Mayor announced the show of hands to be in his favour.

Mr Stanley was not present; he is now travelling in America.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE

The new President of the Republic has announced to the National Assembly the constitution of his Cabinet, which is the same in every respect as that already published, with the exception that M. Bixio, instead of M. Bineau, is the Minister of Agriculture. Marshal Bugeaud has received the Grand Cordon of the Legion of Honour.

The Army of the Alps; and General Changarnier is appointed with the title of Commander-in-Chief of the National Guards of the Seine, to the command of the first military division, including the command of the Republican Guards, the Guards of the Assembly, and the troops of the line in and around Paris. His head quarters are at the Tuileries.

The Prince of Montfort (Jerome Bonaparte) has been appointed Governor of the Invalides. Jerome Bonaparte was at the Palais d'Elysee Bourbon on Wednesday evening, to receive the ex-President on his return from the National Assembly. On entering they cordially embraced. The Prince de Montfort looked greatly moved, and shed tears. It was on the same spot he had parted with the Emperor Napoleon for the last time, when he quitted Paris, after the battle of Waterloo.

On the same evening, the President gave his first dinner at the Palais d'Elysée Bourbon. It was attended by his Ministers, the immediate members of his family, and a few private friends.

PRUSSIA.—Advices from Berlin of the 16th inst. state the Government had resolved on prosecuting for high treason those Deputies who voted for the resolution refusing the payment of taxes, which was passed on the 15th of November. The order to the provincial authorities to forward the necessary evidence has been given.

ITALIAN STATES.

ROME. Later accounts than those already published state that there is no truth in the report that the Pope has been set aside. The Provisional Government established at Rome is appointed to act specifically "during the absence of the Pope from Rome."

WEST INDIES.

By the Great Western steam-packet, which arrived at Southampton yesterday (Friday) morning, we learn that at Barbadoes the yellow fever had broken out among the troops. About one-third of the artillery, and a large proportion of the 66th regiment, had taken ill.

At Demerara the crops were flourishing, the weather favourable, and very little sickness prevalent.

At Jamaica there was a good deal of sickness amongst the troops, and many deaths had occurred.

At Santa Lucia, also, sickness prevailed. Mrs. Darling, the wife of the Governor, was one of the victims.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

On Sunday morning the Queen and Prince Albert, attended by Viscountess Canning, the Lady Caroline Cocks, Viscount Eglinstone, Major-General Wemyss, and Colonel Bouverie, attended divine service at Whippingham Church. The service was performed by the Rev. T. Protheroe.

On Monday evening, Admiral Prescott, the Rev. T. Protheroe, and Col. Phipps had the honour of joining the Royal dinner party.

The members of the Royal Family take their usual early open-air exercise every morning.

RETURN OF THE COURT TO WINDSOR. On Thursday, the Court returned to Windsor from Osborne. The Queen and Prince Albert, accompanied by the Royal children, arrived at the Castle at twenty minutes before two in the afternoon, in a carriage and four, from the Slough station of the Great Western Railway.

HER MAJESTY'S PRIVATE THEATRE. The stage of the Queen's private theatre, which has been during the last six weeks erecting in the painting-room of Her Majesty's Theatre in the Haymarket, has received its finishing-stroke, and has now been taken to pieces, carefully packed in the vans, and removed to Windsor Castle. The stage carpenters and machinists of the Italian Opera-House have been sent to the Royal residence, and have fitted up the stage in the apartment set apart for the dramatic performances to take place in. The stage is a splendid piece of workmanship, and is built entirely of timber. The timbers are so formed that they are bead together by mortice joints—not so much as a single nail being required to fasten any part, either to the floorings or walls of the Castle. The scenes, which consist of chamber, wood, village, and sea views, have been painted also at Her Majesty's Theatre, and are beautiful productions, in strict keeping with the plays they are to represent, and have been executed by Mr. Thomas Grieve. They are so formed, that, instead of separating in the centre, like the flats of a regular theatre, they are formed a kind of cylinder or barrel, turned by means of patent windlasses fixed in the flies. There are three openings on the P.S., and a similar number on the O.P. of the stage, sufficiently capacious to admit of the corps dramatique entering and retiring with ease without coming in contact with the wings. The curtain is made of rich silk velvet, and is hung up in a similar manner as the scenery, and is held straight by a heavy batten at the bottom. The stage, as it stood in Her Majesty's Theatre, was twenty-four feet wide by thirty-four feet deep. The foot-lights are formed by a row of splendid oil lamps, so shaded as to throw the light upon the smallest object at the back of the stage. The wings and flies are also lighted with oil lamps. The building of the stage has been intrusted to Mr. D. Sloman, the machinist of Her Majesty's Theatre.

PRINCE ALBERT AND THE PRINCE DE NEMOURS.—On Friday evening se'en o'clock, the Queen's Fairy yacht steamer came up Southampton Water and entered the docks without any flag or sign that any person of distinction was on board. On entering the dock, she was unable to get alongside the dock wall, and consequently came close to the Peninsular Company's steamer Sultan. Dr Clutterbuck, the surgeon of the Sultan, happened to be on board, and he was surprised to find Prince Albert and the Duke and Duchess de Nemours suddenly step from the Fairy to the Sultan, and ask permission to land from the latter. The surgeon immediately assisted the Duke and Duchess de Nemours in landing on the dock quay. Prince Albert took leave of the illustrious individuals, and returned on board the Fairy. The affair was so private that even the Southampton journalists failed to notice it on Saturday.

PRINCE ALBERT AND THE WORKING MEN'S PRIZE ESSAYS.—In answer to a memorial forwarded through Lord Ashley to his Royal Highness Prince Albert, requesting him to preside at the meeting for the announcement of the adjudicators and the distribution of prizes, offered to working men, for essays written by them on the temporal advantages of the Sabbath to the labouring classes, of which there were 1045 competitors, the following answer has been received through Lord Ashley by the adjudicators:—His Royal Highness Prince Albert has desired me to express his regret that he is unable to comply with the request of the memorialists, and take the chair at the distribution of the prize essays on the Sabbath. His Royal Highness, however, feels a very deep sympathy with the striking and meritorious efforts of the working classes, and he commends his letter by saying "I think that now that more prizes are being collected for the hitherto unsuccessful candidates, I can best contribute towards the object by giving ten of the additional five pound prizes, and asking you to be kind enough to present them to the successful authors in my name. The Pearl of Days has interested and pleased both the Queen and myself extremely."

(Signed) ASHLEY

MEETING OF PARLIAMENT.—At the Queen's Privy Council held at Osborne, on Saturday last, Parliament was ordered to be further prorogued from Tuesday the 5th inst., until Thursday the 1st of February next; and a proclamation directing that Parliament shall on the said 1st of February be held, and sit for the despatch of business, has been published.

ON Monday the Royal alms were distributed by command of her Majesty by the Rev. Mr Goodenough, the sub-almoner, at the Almonry-office, Monastic Scotland-yard, to poor aged men and women, who received the Royal Christmas bounty of 5s each. The office opened at 6 o'clock P.M., and continued open till 9 o'clock, between 500 and 600 receiving the bounty, all being above 60, a great many 90, and three upwards of a century old. The payments of the Royal gift were resumed on the following day.

THE POSTAL CONVENTION WITH AMERICA.—The new postal convention between England and the United States was signed at the Foreign-office by Lord Palmerston and Mr. Bancroft, the American Minister, on Friday se'nnight, and was sent off to America by the mail the same evening for the ratification of the President and Senate of the United States. As this is final form is not at all doubtful, all the details having been settled essentially by the authorities on both sides of the Atlantic, we have much pleasure in stating that arrangements have been mutually agreed upon to bring the provisions of the treaty into immediate operation. The immediate effect of this treaty will be to reduce the postage rate from or to any part of Great Britain to or from any port of the United States of America to its foreign correspondent, instead of 2s., to which charge every letter was at least subject by the late practice.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE AT PRESTON.—Two destructive fires took place at Preston this week. The first occurred on Monday evening at a boiler and engine manufactory, involving the loss of between £4000 and £5000. The second took place on Wednesday morning, about three o'clock, in the flax spinning-mill of Messrs. Hinksman, Barnes, and Co. known by the name of Ribble Bank Mill, Bow-lane, at the west end of the town. The fire was first discovered in a boiler-house at the east end of the building; but with a rapidity almost incredible the flames spread to the other parts of the structure, of considerable extent, and six stories high. Notwithstanding the most energetic measures were taken to suppress the flames, all efforts, so far as the mill was concerned, to save property were fruitless. However, the adjoining buildings were saved. About five o'clock half the mill fell in with a tremendous crash. The property was insured in four offices, the Sun, Phœnix, Royal Exchange, and Guardian, to the amount of something like £15,000; but it is said that £20,000 will not replace the machinery destroyed, to say nothing of the building. Between 400 and 500 hands must, for a time, be thrown out of employment by this catastrophe.

THE THEATRES.

Those important secrets for the play-going world—the names and natures of the entertainments at the different houses for Christmas, have at length been put forth. They are as follows:—

THE HAYMARKET produces a new burlesque, by the Messrs Brough, founded on the charming story of "Camara zaman and Badoura," in the "Arabian Nights Entertainments." Mr. and Mrs. Keeley, Mr. J. Bland, Miss P. Horton, and Miss Bury-olds, will sustain the principal characters; and if it is half as good as "The Enchanted Isle," it will be attractive and successful.

At the LYCEUM Mr. Planché goes back to his chronicles of fairy history for the subject of his new burlesque—"The King of the Peacocks." The cast comprises all the principal members of the establishment, with the exception of Mr. Charles Mathews, which we regret, looking back to his agreeable Lindabella. The name promises scope for beautiful costumes, and some of Mr. Beverley's exquisite scenery.

The PRINCESS' has a pantomime, called "Bluff King Hal, or Harlequin and the Gurmed Arfine." Part of the Masquerade has a pantomime also, by Mr. Webb, the clever stage-manager, founded on the old melodrama of "Out-o'Clock, or the Knight and the Wood Demon." Mr. Jefferds is the Clown.

ST. ANDREW'S WELLS has for its subject "Harlequin and the World Turned Upside Down, or Number Nip and the Enchanted Fountain." The pantomime at this house has always been so full of clever hits and allusions, that we have no doubt its character will be sustained.

At the SURREY great things are promised. First of all, the house has been magnificently re-decorated; next, an entirely new company has been engaged for the performance of superior melodrama; and, lastly, a splendid pantomime, called "Harlequin Lord Lovell, or Lady Nancy Bell and the Fairies of the Silver Oak," is promised for its patrons. Our old favourite Tom Matthews is to be the Clown.

THE STRAND Theatre has been taken by the Wizard of the North for his performances. For those who have not seen his great master, Mr. Robert-Houdin, his exhibition is worthy of a visit.

DRURY-LANE.

On Monday evening, Mr. Jullien's grand Bal Masqué took place, and was, beyond all comparison, the most splendid affair of the kind ever witnessed in London: indeed we question if any of the best Carnival balls at the Opera in Paris ever excelled it. Those who remember the scenes of low riot (and worse) which, a few years back, characterised the Opera-house masquerades, even down to a comparatively recent period, will be able to appreciate the gradual improvement which has taken place in this style of amusement, under Mr. Jullien's direction; and more especially since dancing has become such a general recreation in England. On Monday the audience portion of the theatre was crowded with most respectable persons; the proscenium boxes were occupied by the officers of the Guards and their friends; all the private boxes had been engaged by members of the most fashionable London circles; and in the galleries nothing could be seen but tiers of heads rising one above the other, until the last row touched the ceiling. The orchestra was, as usual, at the extreme back of the stage; and the vast salle was lighted in the most beautiful manner we ever witnessed, under the able superintendence of Mr. Frederick Gye. The wreaths of flowers from the chandeliers were pendent in festoons by brilliant butterflies, which appeared to be actually floating in the air; and over the proscenium was an enormous plate of what appeared to be spangled glass, if we may term it so, twenty or thirty feet long, on which was the inscription "Vive la danse!" in small jets of gas. This was certainly a most exquisite piece of illumination. The usual lights of the Concerts appeared to be tripled, and altogether the coup d'œil was one of singular brilliancy.

At half-past twelve the area of the hall was crowded almost to inconvenience. Of the dancers, a large proportion were in fancy costume, and some of these were exceedingly tasteful, speaking well for Mr. Nathan's wardrobes, from which a large quantity had been chosen. Many of the dresses were really very good indeed. Our old friend the General of the Republic was there in full force, blanching his good tempered sallies at the occupants of the boxes. There were some capital Indians and Chinese in authentic costumes; sewers, "Presidents," and other Negotiateurs; a swarm of brilliant cabaretiers, postilions, and variations of either costume; with more Louis Quatorze, Louis Quinze, Seconds Empire, Caesar de Bazans, and all or matter of course fancy dresses, than we conceived could be in London. A matter worthy of remark is, that everybody not in costume was in recognised evening dress: a great step in advance of the tribe of dotted gents who once thronged the promenade. In a word, all the arrangements were perfect; and the peal of applause that rewarded Koenig's cornet solo in the Polka or Polka proved the company were far from being inattentive to the music. The dancing was kept up with unabated spirit and good-humour until late in the morning, in the order of polkas, waltzes, and quadrilles, broken only by "the monster galopade" just before supper; and we are certain that the beauty and propriety of the scene generally will long be remembered by those who witnessed it.

ADELPHI.

Long before this sheet comes into the hands of our readers, thousands of them will, without doubt, have read Mr. Dickens's new Christmas story of "The Haunted Man; or, the Ghost's Bargain." It will not be, therefore, necessary to describe the story in announcing its re-production in a dramatic form at the Adelphi Theatre on Wednesday evening, only one day after the publication of the book, the usual arrangements having been entered into between author and manager for the representation of the early proofs a month ago.

Possibly no piece was ever placed upon the stage with greater care at the Adelphi: certainly none has been better acted at that theatre. The scenes and situations of the book have been represented with singular and painstaking fidelity; and the characters were personated in a manner that does the greatest credit to all the ladies and gentlemen engaged in their representation. The natural, unaffected pathos of Miss Woolgar in Milly, and the homely telling point of Mrs. Frank Matthews as Mrs. Tetterby, were really refreshing on the score of their truthfulness; whilst Miss Ellen Chaplin's Peg was an admirable piece of forcible—almost painful—acting; and yet possibly these clever actresses never excited, on the whole, less sympathy. Nor did the gentlemen accomplish more. No two better representatives of Redlaw or the Ghost could be sent on our boards than Mr. H. Hughes and Mr. O. Smith; and we shall very much know intimidate Mr. Wright is. A special paragraph should be given to Mr. Munyard, who played Watkins Tottle and Mr. Swidger. This gentleman's power and effective, is destined to become a very popular actor at no distant period. But still, with all the talent, the piece staggered fearfully, from the utterly undramatic nature of the story. We did not mean to say that all could have been done for it that could be, by the dramatist, but the audience appeared to take very little interest in the fortunes of the personages. Some portions of it were absolutely dangerous; we may mention the scene in which a sudden change takes place in Old Swidger's (Mr. Lambert) character, owing to the influence of the spell. There was also more tendency to moralising than appeared agreeable to a mixed audience.

At the end of the curtain the applause was very loud, but there was also some unmistakable hissing, which led to a contest between the two parties, in which, eventually, the "ayes" were victorious. The piece will, from the very finished manner in which it has been put upon the stage, have a good run through the holidays. We advise every one going to see it, however, to read the book first; without having done so, much of it will be incomprehensible.

HAYMARKET.

"YOUR LIFE'S IN DANGER!" is the name of an exceedingly good farce, by Mr. Madison Morton, produced with great success at this house on Wednesday evening. The plot of the pieces are by no means of a novel character, but they are so well worked up, and Mr Keeley, as an English footman (John Strong) in a German family, is so irresistibly comical, that the audience are kept in a roar from beginning to end. He is mistaken for a prescribed baron whom the authorities have offered a reward for, believing him guilty of disaffection to the Government, and those who can imagine what Mr. Keeley would look like, and how he would act under such dangerous circumstances, may readily understand the fun he makes out of his dilemma. He is well supported by Mrs. W. Clifford, Miss Reynolds, Mr. Rogers, and Mr. Bishop; and we prognosticate a long and successful run for the farce. The only information required is the title will probably refer to the split sides of the audience, who shout with merriment. Indeed, without wishing him ill, we would sooner see Mr. Keeley in apparently incalculable difficulties and great distress, than any one else we know.

On Tuesday night, the performances at this Theatre were in aid of the funds of the National Philanthropic Association for the Employment of the Poor as "Street Orderlies." In discussing the merits of the new farce and the piece, the "Orderlies" appeared upon the stage, and an incidental procession in their costume took place. The scene was a very novel one, and excited considerable applause; and we hope it may prove the effect of drawing the attention of the benevolent to the encouragement of this very useful plan of employment.

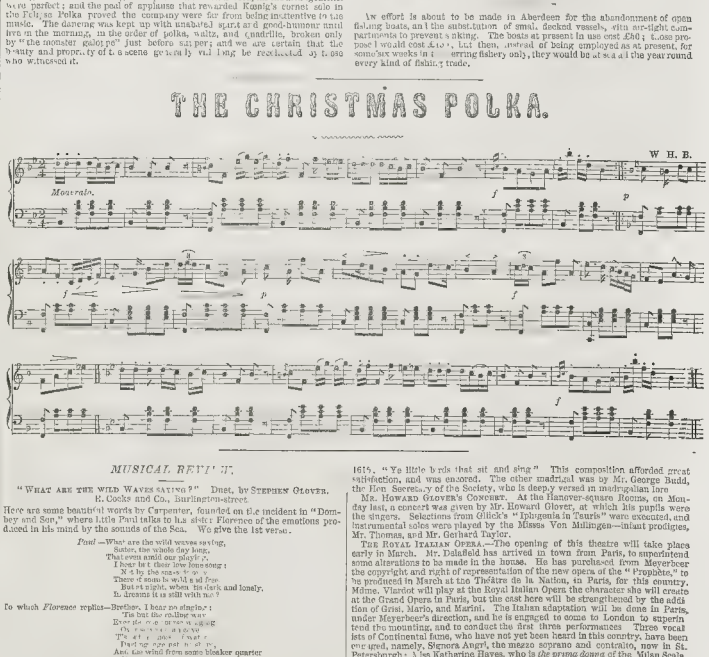
PRINCESS'.

A farce produced at this theatre, under the name of "Curlers for Two," appears to be an adaptation of the same French piece from which the above is taken. The principal character is a cook, sustained with the usual drollery by M. Ikbery.

THE COLOSSEUM.—A new and beautiful exhibition, entitled "The Cycloramas," will next week be added to the attractions of this popular resort. We shall, next week, engrave two views of this striking novelty.

AN effort is about to be made in Aberdeen for the abandonment of open fishing boats, and the substitution of small decked vessels, with air-tight compartments to prevent sinking. The boats at present in use cost £30; those proposed would cost £60; but then, instead of being employed as at present, for somewhat weeks in the herring fishery only, they would be at sea all the year round every kind of fishing trade.

THE CHRISTMAS POLKA.



MUSICAL REVIEW.

"WHAT ARE THE WILD WAVES SAYING?" Duet, by STEPHEN GLOVER. E. Cocks and Co., Burlington-street.

Here are some beautiful words by Carpenter, founded on the incident in "Dombey and Son," where little Paul talks to his sister Florence of the emotions produced in his mind by the sounds of the Sea. We give the 1st verse.

Paul—What are the wild waves saying,
Sister, the whole day long,
That evermore I hear
I hear it in my bosom,
It sighs the same with me?
There it sounds with a will and power
But it might, when its dark and lonely,
Be dreams it is still with me?

To which Florence replies—Brother, I hear no singing:
'Tis but the rolling wave
Ever the same in saying
Ever and ever.
Paul is now and Paul—No, it says
Florence, Florence,
And, as wind from some bleaker quarter
Blows more fierce,
Repeats it, thunderingly.

Mr. Glover has happily succeeded in producing a duet, which is of a high order, without being difficult, and which will be a favourite. Its devotional character will introduce it, in many instances, where music of a lighter character is excluded.

"A VOICE FROM THE WAVES," an answer to the foregoing duet We have just glanced over the music, by the same composer, forming an admirable companion to "What are the Wild Waves saying."

MUSIC.

JULLIEN'S CONCERTS.—On Saturday night these popular entertainments terminated. The season has been unusually successful, and Mr. Frederick Gye and M. Jullien, who are the speculators, will share very large profits. M. Jullien will now commence his provincial concerts.

WESTERN MADRIGAL SOCIETY. At the meeting on Saturday last, J. Evans, Esq., President, in the chair, and Mr. Turle acting as Conductor, two new compositions were sung, in addition to the usual selections from the old madrigalian writers. The first was by Mr. Brinley Richards, being an adaptation of the first verse of Heywood's song in "Fair Maid of the Exchange," 1615, "Ye little birds that sit and sing." This composition afforded great satisfaction, and was encored. The other madrigal was by Mr. George Budd, the Hon. Secretary of the Society, who is deeply versed in madrigalian lore

Mr. HOWARD GLOVER'S CONCERT. At the Hanover-square Rooms, on Monday last, a concert was given by Mr. Howard Glover, at which his pupils were the singers. Selections from Gluck's "Iphigenia in Tauris" were executed, and instrumental solos were played by the Misses Von Mülingen—infant prodigies, Mr. Thomas, and Mr. Gerhard Taylor.

THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.—The opening of this theatre will take place early in March. Mr. Delafield has arrived in town from Paris, to superintend some alterations to be made in the house. He has purchased from Meyerbeer the copyright and right of representation of the new opera of the "Prophète," to be produced in March at the Théâtre de la Nation, in Paris, for this country. Mdme. Viardot will play at the Royal Italian Opera the character she will create at the Grand Opera in Paris, but the cast here will be strengthened by the addition of Grisi, Mario, and Marini. The Italian adaptation will be done in Paris, under Meyerbeer's direction, and he is engaged to come to London to superintend the mounting, and to conduct the first three performances. Three vocal sets of Conterno's duets, who have not yet been heard in this country, have been engaged, namely, Signora Angri, the mezzo soprano and contralto, now in St. Petersburgh; Miss Katherine Hayes, who is la prima donna of the Milan Scala, and Pyneafi at Florence, a native of Ireland, and a pupil of Mazzuli Garcia; and Mdlle. Meric, a contralto, who lately made her début in Paris.

HER MAJESTY'S CONCERTS OF ANCIENT MUSIC.—These concerts, established in 1776, will not be commenced this year until after Easter; and the number will, therefore, be reduced to six instead of eight. The dates are fixed for May days, April 23rd, May 7th and 21st, June 4th, and July 2nd, only one concert for each Wednesday in the month, and the last concert on the day of the Waterloo Banquet taking place on the 18th. The public rehearsals will be on the preceding Saturdays. The Royal and noble directors are the King of Hanover, Duke of Cambridge, Duke of Devonshire, Earls of Westmoreland, Rowe, and Cawdor, and the Bishop of Bath and Wells. Reserved seats for the entire season, as at the Philharmonic Society, will be allotted. The band and chorus, and engagement of leading singers, will be on the same scale as heretofore.

MUSICAL EVENTS. On Tuesday, Miss Julia Bleadon, a pupil of Mr. Howard Glover, gave a concert at the London Tavern. At it Mr. Sheasby et cort, played the solo instrumentals with Mr. Nicholson, Mr. Lazarus, Mr. Hay, and Mr. Vivier; and the vocalists Miss Dolby, the Misses Marian and Mr. What ley, Messrs Wentworth, T. Williams, Looney, and Sims Reeves. Mr Willey was conductor and leader of the band.—Weekly music was illustrated on Wednesday night at the London Mechanics' Institution, by lecture, song, and harp; by Colnaghi, Miss Ellen Lyon, and Mr. Ellis Roberts. Two performances of Handel's "Messiah" are given this week at Exeter Hall, one by the London Sacred Harmonic Society, conducted by Surman, on Friday night, and the other by the Sacred Harmonic Society, conducted by Costa this evening (Saturday).—Mr Allcroft's twelfth annual concert took place on Friday at the Princess' theatre.

The two concerts in Manchester in aid of the funds of the Royal Infirmary took place on Tuesday and Thursday. All the tickets had been sold some days previously, Mdlle. Lind singing on both evenings. She will shortly sing at Norwich and at Worcester, in aid of the funds for the two Festivals, having been prevented by other arrangements from singing when the meetings took place in those towns. During her stay in Norwich Mdlle. Lind will be on a visit to the daughter of the Bishop of Norwich.

THE MENDELSSOHN SCHOLARSHIPS.—MDLLE. JENNY LIND.

The assemblage of vocal and instrumental talent at the performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," at Exeter Hall, briefly referred to in our last week's publication, was greater than at any previous interpretation of that sublime oratorio. The hall was brilliantly and fashionably attended; including the presence of the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, Princess Mary of Cambridge, the Prince and Princess of Hohenlohe, the Hanoverian and Prussian Ministers, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishops of London and Norwich, &c.

The band comprised upwards of one hundred first-rate players, with Sainton and Tolbecque as principal violins. The chorus consisted of two hundred members of the Sacred Harmonic Society, two hundred professional choristers, including the boys from the Chapel Royal, St. Paul's, &c., one hundred and fifty from Hullah's Singing Classes, and thirty pupils from the Royal Academy of Music. In the aggregate, there were not far short of seven hundred executants; Benedict, as the intimate friend of Mendelssohn, being the Conductor.

At the head of the leading vocalists was Mdlle. Lind, who, with that alacrity she always displays to aid in a benevolent purpose, had offered her gratuitous services. Miss A. Williams, Miss M. Williams, Mrs Noble (late Miss Duval), Mr. Lockey, Mr. J. A. Novello, Mr. Benson, and Mr Machin were the other principal singers.

The absorbing attraction was Mdlle. Jenny Lind's first appearance to sing in a sacred work, and in the English language. Her accent is excellent, and nothing could be more distinct than her enunciation. She sang nine times, beginning, in the first part, with the double quartet "For he shall give his angels;" exin in the recitative and duet "Give me thy son;" and thirdly in the quartet "Cast thy burden." In the second part, she opened with the air in B minor "Hear ye, Israel;" then in the trio "Lift thine eyes;" next in the recitative "Night falleth;" again in the quartet "Holy, holy;" and, finally, in the recitative "Behold! God hath sent," and in the quartet "Oh! come every one."

It reflects the greatest credit on the musical judgment and taste of Mdlle. Lind that she in no one instance departed from the text of the composer; as Mendelssohn has noted down his inspirations, so did Mdlle. Lind conscientiously and zealously interpret them, without the slightest introduction of a cadenza or grace to secure any artificial effect. Her meritorious reading of the soprano part entitled her to the warmest acknowledgments of the musician and amateur, but there were delicious gems in the vocalisation, particularly in the concerted pieces. In the quartet "Holy, holy," she led off on the high notes with astonishing steadiness, and held on them throughout with a sustaining power that quite electrified the audience, and secured for the piece an unanimous encore, which was also bestowed on the trio, "Lift thine eyes."

MDLLE JENNY LIND, AT EXETER HALL.

MUSIC HOLDER.

Next to Mdlle. Lind, the singing of Miss Martha Williams was the point of interest. The lovely contralto voice of this songstress was never more finely developed, and she was called upon to repeat the air "Oh! rest in the Lord," with acclamations. Miss A. Williams sang her share of the music most creditably. Mr. Lockey's singing of the tenor part is now thoroughly well known and appreciated. Mr. Machin gave the difficult music of "Elijah" artistically, but it is not altogether in his register. The overture, accompaniments, and choruses were executed with remarkable fire and delicacy; and the organ part was played with discretion by Mr. Henry Smart. Altogether it was a very fine performance.

The result will be a considerable sum, which will be vested in the Leipsic Musical Conservatory for English scholarships of the Mendelssohn foundation, which Germany is now forming as a memento of the most remarkable genius of his age.

The Music-Holder of which we annex a representation, is the registered invention of Mr. Henry Moise, and is manufactured by W. H. Tyler, 1, Great Turnstile. The inventor has just presented to Mdlle. Lind this very elegant specimen. The two shafts are of silver, and the springs or clasps, are gilt. To hold the music it is merely requisite to introduce the sheet between the shafts and clasps. The handle is of onyx, with gold mounting, chased; and the surmounting lyre is enriched with gold, and set with a pearl between two rubies.

The Music-Holder is also made in less costly style; and Mr. Moise has, for general sale, a size of Holder adapted for The Illustrated London News.

"HOME FOR THE HOLIDAYS."

Who does not recollect the joyousness of a Breaking-up—the uproarious mirth of Going Home—and the affectionate Welcome on reaching there? There is nothing in after-life to efface the recollection of these happy hours!

The writing of the holiday letter first sets the young spirits dancing; the calendar is watched, and each day anxiously struck out almost ere it expires, thus lessening the interval of schooldom and holiday. At length the Breaking-up day arrives. It is commemorated in various modes. The "Dulce Domum" is sung on the evening preceding the Whitsun Holidays. Westminster has its plays; and at some modern Collegiate Schools there are also dramatic performances. In smaller establishments the festival consists of cake and wine and singing; and every where there is some indication of festivity. In that kitchen-drawer of a book, "Brand's Popular Antiquities," we find a ballad describing a Breaking-up custom at a school at Bridgewater, in which the boys were wont

> At breaking-up for Christmas' loved recess,
> To meet the master, on that happy morn,
> At early hour

Then followed the blowing of a horn to rouse the schoolmates, &c.,

At last, "Going Home Day" arrives. The night has been one of restless anticipation. The boys, who have a long journey, in all probability, rise before daylight. The breakfast is soon despatched. The well-appointed coach reaches the door, and is soon freighted with its joyous load. And then commences the fun of the road, with pea-shooters and volleys of peas fired at wonder-struck gazers; the horn twanging through the silent village; and a host of little practical jokes, such as boys alone can play

In the Illustration, the coach, with its four steaming horses, has arrived at the four steaming horses, has arrived at the four steaming horses, has arrived at the

LA VIERGE A LA VIGNE.

PAINTED BY PAUL DELAROCHE

LA VIERGE A LA VIGNE" is the distinctive title of the Picture by Delaroche engraved upon the preceding page, from a beautiful print in the fine manner by Samuel Jean Pillement. Goupil, Vibert, and Co., Paris; and Gambart, Junin, and Co., London.

Delaroche's picture is the property of Mr. Thomas Baring, and will be remembered in the Exhibition of our Academy two seasons since. It is entitled "A la Vigne," or "with the Vine," the principal accessory of the painting being used to distinguish it from other pictures of the Virgin—just as we have the Cannaletto portrait of the Virgin. We have, however, chosen the more popular and descriptive title of "A Holy Family," as more clearly conveying the impressionables of the picture

THE WEATHER.

The weather this week has been more silky different from that of the preceding week: the temperature of the air has exceeded its average values by small quantities only, on Wednesday being below the average. The direction of the wind has varied from the S. to the N., but at most times it has been compounded with the E. The sky has been mostly overcast. The following are some particulars of each day:—Tuesday the sky was mostly free from clouds before, and it was overcast after, noon; rain was falling occasionally between 4h. P.M. and midnight; the direction of the wind was S.S.E., and the average temperature of the day was 45°. Saturday the sky was overcast, and rain was falling frequently; the direction of the wind was chiefly N., and the average temperature of the air was 41°. Sunday the sky was, for the most part, cloudless; the direction of the wind was S.W., and the average temperature of the air was 40°. Monday the sky was mostly overcast before noon, and partially clear after noon, and it was so again at night; the direction of the wind was S.S.E., and the average temperature of the air was 43°. Tuesday the sky was overcast all day; the direction of the wind was N.E., and the average temperature of the air was 34°. Wednesday the sky was overcast during the day and cloudless at night; the direction of the wind was E., and the average temperature of the air was 34°5; and that for the week ending this day was 42°.

The extreme thermometrical readings for each day were:

Thursday,	Dec. 14,	the highest during the day was 52 deg., and the lowest was 41		deg.
Friday,	Dec. 15,	"	50	" "
Saturday,	Dec. 16,	"	45	" "
Sunday,	Dec. 17,	"	44	" "
Monday,	Dec. 18,	"	51	" "
Tuesday,	Dec. 19,	"	49	" "
Wednesday,	Dec. 20,	"	42	" "

THE TETTERBY FAMILY. A small man sat in a small parlour, pantomimed off from a small shop by a passage, passed in and out of it with a small basket or newspapers in company with the small man was almost any amount of small children you may please to name—at least it seemed so; they made, in that very minute, sparse of action, such an imposing effect, in point of number. Of those small fry, two slid, by some strong machinery, bean pot into bed in a corner, where might have reposed snugly enough in the sleep of innocence, but for a constitutional propensity to keep awake, and also to scuffle in and out of bed. The immediate occasion of these predatory dashes at the waking world was the construction of an oyster-shed was in a corner, by two other youths of tender age, on which fortifications they had been busily labouring diamonds (like those accursed Picts and Scots who beleaguer the early historical studies of most young Britons), and then withdrew to their own territory. In addition to the six bodies on the premises, and the exercise of the faculties, the unwashed body, and made inroads at the bed clothes under which the marauders took refuge, another little boy, in another little bed, constituted his mite of contribution to the family stock, by darting his head upon the wearers of the same, as a projectile or bed, and several small objects, inoffensive in themselves, though of a hard substance considered as missiles, at the disturbers of his repose—who were not slow to return these compliments. Besides which, nine other children, not at present there, but at little—was tottering to and fro, bent on one side, and considerably affected in his knees by the weight of a large baby, which he was supposed, by a fiction peculiar to nurses, to be dandling. Besides which, he had no one to sleep. But oh! the unanimistic regions of contemplation and watchfulness into which the baby's eyes were then only beginning to compass themselves to stare over its unconscious shoulder! It was a very Moloch of a baby, with an insatiate altar the whole existence of this particular young brother was offered up a daily sacrifice. Its personality may be said to have consisted in its never being out, in any one place, for five consecutive minutes, and in its constant objection when required. "Tetterby's baby" was as well known in the neighbourhood as the pastman or the pot-boy. It roved from door-step to door-step, in the arms of little Johnny Tetterby, and lagged heavily at the skirts of other juveniles who followed the tumblers or the monkey, and came up, all on one side, a little too late for every thing that was attractive, from Monday morning until Saturday night. Wherever this dejected creature was seen, it was the Moloch or the insatiate altar the whole existence of this particular young brother was offered up a daily sacrifice. Its personality may be said to have consisted in its never being out, in any one place, for five consecutive minutes, and in its constant objection when required. "Tetterby's baby" was as well known in the neighbourhood as the pastman or the pot-boy. It roved from door-step to door-step, in the arms of little Johnny Tetterby, and lagged heavily at the skirts of other juveni have pleaded guilty, so that he should not have been obliged to open a case of the serious character of the one under consideration, for he had to disclose a conspiracy, the organization of which was so formidable that those who were the objects of it (had they been aware of it) would have been struck with terror and alarm. One of the main objects of the conspiracy was to hire a number of vacant cellars in different parts of the town of Manchester, which were to be filled with gunpowder and other explosive materials; these were to be fired by desperate men, and their force was to be used against all who opposed them. The learned gentlemen then read the speeches made by the defendants at different meetings, and called several policemen as witnesses in support of the indictment. The Court rose at 6 o'clock. On Tuesday, the principal evidence was adduced, being that of James A. Ball, an informer. He had been brought from jail, being under committal on a charge of conspiracy. He said he was a printwoller at Manchester. Had been four times in goal for neglecting his family and advocating the People's Charter. On the evening of the 1st of April, a committee meeting was held at his father's house, to raise money for spreading for the People's Charter. On the following day another meeting was held. Witness spoke, taking for his subject a text from the New Testament:—"Let him that hath no sword sell his garment and buy one." Witness then enumerated several other meetings which he and the prisoners had attended, at which the formation of clubs, the cri-fleur, drilling, and arming of National Guards, to co-operate with the London Chartists, were determined upon, and the destruction of property, to create terror and confusion, planned. A shop was taken in Tib-street which had been used for packing calcium, and Chadwick proposed it should be fired. A man named Cairns suggested that a bottle of naphtha should be thrown in amongst the calcium, and then some one should set fire to it. Chadwick thought that, before they did so, they should turn off the water from the water-works and the canal, and persons were appointed to ascertain how that could be best effected. On the 11th of April another meeting was held, at which Rankin took the chair. Dr. M'Dowall, West, White, Grocott, and, in fact, all the defendants were present, with many others. They had ascertained the failure in London, and said it was foolish in them to attempt opposition to the authorities by destroying property. Rankin said they were not strong enough unless they did so. M'Donough proposed that there should be empty cellars taken in the neighbourhood of High-street—two at the corner of Turner-street, and one under Mr. Stephenson's shoe-shop, in Market-street. Leader was appointed for the purpose of carrying out these objects. These were M'Donough, Donovan, Leech, Cropper, Chadwick, Schofield, Nixon, and others. The leaders were to place in each of the cellars one parcel of gunpowder, containing one cwt., one cask of naphtha, containing thirty-two gallons, and one cask of turpentine. Shavings, mixed with straw, were to be placed next the casks, and those were to be set adjoining the door, well steeped in naphtha, for the purpose of being instantly ignited, and the place fired. It was also agreed that an empty shop, formerly occupied by Dr. Bailey, phrenologist, should be taken adjoining the gas-works in Lower King-street. It was to be taken under the pretence of carrying on the provision trade. After getting possession of the shop they were to bore under the ground so as to get to the gas-works yards, to place five cwt. of gunpowder under the boring, blow up the gas-works, and put the town in complete darkness. Several persons were then appointed to superintend this, and M'Donough was to act as their leader. A resolution was agreed to, on the motion of Cropper, seconded by Downey, that persons should be appointed to secrete themselves in the churches, and to be provided with implements to break open the doors. Other persons were then to be admitted, provided with naphtha, to fire the churches. Leaders were appointed for particular churches, as follows: St. George's Church, Schofield; St. Paul's, Chadwick; St. Ann's, Donovan; St. Mary's, Leech; St. John's, Cropper. Persons were also directed to let off the reservoir at Beswick, and also the canal. Lecturers were appointed to go through the country to make the plans known. Archdeacon and Rankin went to Oldham; Cropper to Bradford; Chadwick himself, and Leech, to Ireland; and Donovan to Birmingham. Witness went to several places in England and then to Ireland. He had seen M'Donough twice since, and there were drilling places appointed. The drilling generally took place at midnight. He had also seen Cropper and Rankin engaged in drilling.

The witness was then called upon to identify particularly the defendants, whom he had spoken to as being present at the meeting. He mistook some, others he did not know, and named some by the wrong names. At this there was a hissing from the audience, which his Lordship indignantly rebuked.

This closed the case for the prosecution.

The Attorney-General stated he did not intend to rest the case for the prosecution on the evidence of the last witness.

The Jury was then addressed for the defence by counsel, and by some of the prisoners themselves, M'Donough and Chadwick withdrawing their pleas and pleading guilty, and the Court rose.

On Wednesday, at the sitting of the Court, some witnesses were called on behalf of one or two of the prisoners, with a view of showing that the conduct of the meetings at which they were present was peaceable, and that in some instances those who deposed to the share taken by them were mistaken as to their identity.

The Attorney-General replied, submitting to the jury that, even laying the testimony of Ball, the approver, aside, the case was complete against the defendants, and he proceeded to review the evidence as it bore on each.

His Lordship summed up with great care and minuteness, distinguishing the case of each defendant.

The jury, after a short deliberation in their own room, returned into court with a verdict of "Guilty" against all the defendants; finding West and White, however, guilty of attending an unlawful assembly only, and not guilty of conspiracy.

His Lordship passed the following sentences:—Grocott, Cropper, Rankin, West, White, and Donovan, to be imprisoned one year, and to enter into recognizances at the expiration of that time, themselves in £100, and two sureties of £25 each, to keep the peace. Leach to be imprisoned nine months, and enter into similar recognizances. Nixon, who has been in custody four months, to be imprisoned four months more, and to enter into his own recognizances in £50; and M'Donough and Chadwick to be imprisoned six months, and to enter into recognizances in £50, with two sureties in £10, to keep the peace

West replied for permission to be imprisoned in Lancaster Castle. His Lordship said that, under the present arrangements of that gaol, he could not make that order

White said, when he was formerly tried at Warwick, his Lordship permitted him to be placed in the first class of misdemeanors. He requested that the same might be done on this occasion. His Lordship assented to this.

The Attorney-General said that as to the other persons named in the indictment, he would not call on them to plead—they entering into their own recognizances to come up and plead, if called on, and to keep the peace for one year. They were accordingly called on to enter into such recognizances, which was done.

One of the defendants, Mr. Barker, however, refused to accede. He said he had been at great expense in preparing for his defence, had nearly fifty witnesses in attendance, and insisted on being tried. The Attorney-General applied for a postponement of the trial till the next assizes.

His Lordship acted on that ground.—The Attorney-General said he had no other ground than that he should be obliged to go again over the whole of the evidence already given.

His Lordship said that was not sufficient

The Attorney-General then entered a nolle prosequi as to Barker, intimating that other proceedings would be taken, in the shape of a criminal information.

Mr. Justice Erle, who sat in the second court at Liverpool, on Wednesday, sentenced Charles Chubb, convicted on Monday of making a false entry in a registry of births, to six months' imprisonment; and Joseph Boocker, convicted on Tuesday of uttering seditious and blasphemous speeches, to two years' imprisonment; and after the expiration of his sentence, to find two sureties of £25 each, and to enter into his own recognizance in £100, to keep the peace for two years more

NORTHERN CIRCUIT.

MILITARY DRILLING.—On Tuesday, at York, several prisoners were tried before Mr. Justice Talfourd, and found guilty of unlawfully training and drilling to the practice of military exercise, on Sunday morning, the 26th of May last, on a moor about five miles from Bradford. About fifty of them were assembled in military array, and stood two deep. Several were dressed in soldiers' coats, trousers, and belts. Those in command called out to the men "To the right," "To the left," "March," "Stop lads," and so on. They were sentenced to various terms of imprisonment, varying from three to ten months.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

MANSLAUGHTER. On Wednesday, J. Pullen, a widow, aged 41, was found guilty of the manslaughter of her daughter Anne. The circumstances were extraordinary. The prisoner occupied the second floor of a house in Seven Dials-street, Fitzroy-square, with the deceased, a girl 14 years of age. On the morning of the 24th November, the prisoner had gone out to work at six o'clock, and had directed her daughter to do some portion of needle-work; and when she returned home, at 11 o'clock, she found the work was not done, and the deceased accounted for it by saying that she had fallen asleep. Upon this the prisoner tied a rope round her neck, and attached it to the top of the bedstead, tying the end in such a position that the deceased could not reach it, and she left her in that state until nearly 11 o'clock at night, when, upon her entering the room, she found the child quite dead, evidently from strangulation. The prisoner immediately gave an alarm, and evinced the utmost regret for what had happened: and when the landlord went into the room she at once admitted it was by her act that her daughter's death had been occasioned, and gave an explanation of the reasons which had induced her to punish her in such a manner, stating that she had gone to sleep instead of doing her work, and she had to go to the hospital to prevent her from going to sleep again, and placed her work in a chair by her. It appeared that the prisoner's general conduct towards the deceased was characterized by kindness, and that in acting as she did she was not actuated by any criminal intention. The jury recommended her to mercy, and she was sentenced to one year's imprisonment and hard labour.

EDINBURGH AND NORTHERN RAILWAY STATION. A wooden terrace from the platform in front of the booking offices at this station to the top of the tunnel, between Prince's-street and Scotland-street, has just been completed, with commodious staircases diverging on either side, and leading up to Prince's-street, by which a much more convenient access to the station is opened up than that gained hitherto by Waverley-bridge.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS

"Romeo."—Pray look again. You are decidedly wrong on both particulars.

"Punch."—You cannot take a piece in the act of Castling.

"Gil Jos."—Quite incomprehensible. The moves on Chess are made alternately, as we thought everybody knew.

"M. E. R."—Communications should be sent as early in the week as possible.

"W. G."—They shall not be forgotten.

"T. W."—The check you mention does not prevent the mate.

"G. A. H."—It will be so printed.

"W. B."—Look again. How could Black play K to R 3d, when the K would thus be placed in check?

"Henrique."—We cannot see how the mate can be prolonged beyond the stipulated number of moves.

"A. L." Feltham. Many thanks. They shall be duly acknowledged.

"W. M'G." "J. W. D."—You can have two Queens on the board at the same time.

"W. L. T."—Thanks. It shall have due attention

"Rook."—The 5th volume of the Chess-Players' Chronicle contains the whole of the celebrated games in the match between Messrs. Staunton and St. Amant. Apply to Bastange, Caree-street

"S. U."—Examine the position and solution once more.

"E. P."—It shall be examined

"J. R. E."—It shall have an early place

"C. M.," Temple.—Your Problem is suitable in four moves.

"Iago." "Ferdinand." Thanks, but the Enigmas are too simple.

"H. G.," "Pencell," "Tweedside." "C. P."—Examine the Problem No. 254, and our solution, and you will soon discover that, however Black may carry his play, the mate is unavoidable in four moves

"Aleph."—Have the goodness to write out the position, and, if we have not already given the solution, it shall be published next week

"G. M."—You are quite at liberty to indulge and express your own opinion upon the merits of a Problem, and it is hardly reasonable to object to our exercising the same privilege.

"I. S. W."—1. Your criticism on the Problem referred to is unquestionably just. 2. We have not space to give so many solutions this week, but they shall not be forgotten.

"Novice"—Try the little Dream, called the Philidorian, New-street, Covent-Garden, where we are told there are two or three excellent German players.

"L. S."—In Enigma No. 389 try the effect of White—1. Q to Q 8th (ch). Black 1. P to Q B 4th (but) 2. Q to her 8th, &c. The other position shall be looked to.

"S. A."—Very deficient in construction still.

"M. U." You must have omitted to enclose the diagram mentioned. or it has slipped from your letter.

"R. N." The most elementary book on the game is Kenny's little "Stalking Manual" Get that, and learn the rules, &c., before you attempt to play again.

"C. P. C."—Enigma No 383 is solved thus—1 Q takes P (ch). 2. Q to K R 4th (ch). 3. K to B 3d. 4. B checks. 5. B mates. Enigma No. 385, thus: 1. K to B 8sq. 2. B to K R 4th. 3. K to B 2d. 4. K to B sq. 5. B mates. For No 389, see notice to "L. S."

"A. L."—Enigma No 386 is right and acknowledged by letter

"E. B. R." Southsea Pier. 1. Q to her 7th. 2. Q to K 8th (ch)—mate.

"B." A very fine player, belonging to the St. George's Chess-club

"W."—Wickham.—Your diagram appears to be defective, since the Black King, at his first move, may go to K's 6th, and thus escape. Is it not so?

"A. P." is thanked; but the little matters he mentions rests entirely with the printer.

"E. J. L." It shall appear shortly.

"J. H. N." and "P. N." Much too apparent.

"Bath Duo." They would be somewhat amused to witness a little leisure is afforded us; at present we have many more communications of a similar kind than we know what to do with.

"I. S. W." What presents Black giving mate at the second move, instead of quietly permitting himself to be mated on the third?

"W. H. M.," Yeovil.—It shall have attention.

"Rhondda."—The move of the contest between Captain Kennedy and Mr. Lowe now stands thus—K., to; L., 4. Drawn 1

Solutions by "Otho," "Woodcockensis," "W. B.," the "Automaton," "F. C." "G M.," "P. P. R." "Ferdinand and Iago." "Legal Deary." "C. P." "S. U." "S. B.," "Egomoto," "A School boy," "A. Z. M.," Bath Duo," "W. L." "Dereom," are correct. Those by "M. C. F." "Tyro," "F. J." Edinburgh, "Dit. Ed." "W. J.," "Henrique," "H. L. B.," "Ardea," "Romeo," are wrong.

 We have not space this week for answers to one-half the Chess communications.

PAUL PRY is peeping about for a competitor in a game by correspondence. Address "P. P.," Post-office, Ryde, Isle of Wight.

CHESS MATCH BY CORRESPONDENCE

BETWEEN THE LONDON AND AMSTERDAM CHESS CLUBS.

WHITE (AMSTERDAM).	BLACK (London).
22 Q Kt to Kt 2d

London to play

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 255.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE	BLACK.
1 P to Q 8th	K takes K B P	3. Kt to K B 8th	K takes Kt
2. Kt to Q 4th (ch)	K to his 5th	4. K B to Q B 2d, Mate

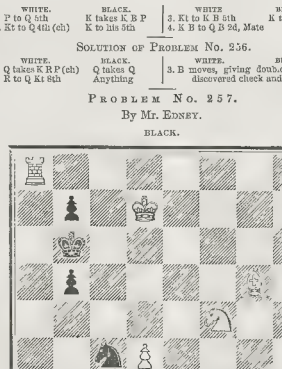
SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 256.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK
1. Q takes R P (ch)	Q takes Q	3. B moves, giving double check, or
2 R to Q Kt 8th	Anything	discovered check and mate

PROBLEM No. 257.

By Mr. EDNEY.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White to play, and mate in four moves.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 388.—By Mr. C. E RANKIN.

White: K at K Kt 3d, R at K R 2d, B at K B 7th, Kt at Q Kt 3d.
Black: K at his 6th, P s at K Kt 5th and K 3d

White to play, and mate in four moves.

No. 389.—By Mr. LAMBERT.

White: K at his Kt 2d, R at K B 2d, B at Q Kt 7th, Kts at K Kt 3d and Q R 5th, P at Q R 2d

Black: K at his 4th, P at K 4th and Q 3d

White to play, and mate in five moves.

No. 390. By an Amateur of America

White: K at his B sq, Q at K B 3d, R at K Kt 8th, B at R 2d, B at K B 8th; P s at K 5th, Q B 6th, Q R 3d, and Q R 6th.
Black: K at Q Kt 5th, R at Q 5th, R at K R 2d, B at K R 6th, Kt at Q R 7th, P s at Q R 2d and Q R 4th

White to play, and mate in five moves.

THE ST. GEORGE'S CHESS CLUB. A meeting of Chess Amateurs is appointed to be held at this institution on Friday next, the 29th of December, at four P.M., to consider the propriety of giving increased facilities for the admission of new members, and adding in other respects to the eligibility of the club. As the main object of this meeting, (apart from the immediate concerns of the club) is to uphold and promote the interests of Chess, it will be an open one; that is to say, any amateur of respectability, on sending in his card, will have admission.

IRELAND.

MR. DUFFY'S TRIAL

On Friday (yesterday) this case commenced, before Baron Richards and Mr. Justice Perrin, and the two first days were consumed in arguments for and against the quashing of a former indictment found in the county of Dublin against the prisoner

On Monday the Court decided the point. The motion of the prisoner's counsel was, that Mr Duffy be not called upon to plead to the indictment found against him by the Grand Jury of the county of the city of Dublin, because another and a similar indictment was put in against him in the county of Dublin, and as it would be an injustice to him to be called upon to plead to one indictment during the subsistence of another in which the crime laid was the same.

The judgment of the Court was, that the whole of the cases previous to the passing of the Act 6 Geo. IV. cap. 51, were against the case made on behalf of Mr. Duffy, and that there was nothing in the act to take it out of the operation of those decisions. The act did not directly apply to the present case at all, and the Court could not imply anything to disqualify the Crown from taking whatever course it should think fit to take in furtherance of the administration of justice.

The counsel for the prisoner, however, had not stated all their objections; and on Mr. Duffy being called on to plead to the indictment, a new issue handed in on his behalf, a plea of abatement, on the ground of the disqualification (by reason of non residence or not being householders) of two of the Grand Jury who found the bill.

The counsel for the Crown retired, and ultimately the further consideration of the plea was postponed to the next day

The Court intimated that a like question they had come to on the motion before them in the morning, they by no means desired or intended to leave Mr. Duffy open to the indictment found in the county along with that found in the city Before he pleaded to the latter the Crown should have their course would be adopted—whether a nolle prosequi should not be entered on the other.

Application had been made to rescind the order of the Court made on Saturday, prohibiting the proceedings at the trial to be published in the newspapers until the trial had been concluded, the Court refused to accede to the request.

On Tuesday, the arguments on the plea handed in on the previous day engaged the Court the whole day.

Their Lordships took time to consult the various authorities cited, before giving judgment.

Before rising, the Court refused to hear Mr. Duffy, who applied to have the order against the publication of the proceedings at the trial in the newspapers rescinded, and directed the application to be made by counsel; stating at the same time that the order must remain in force, unless it could be shown that the Crown would sustain damage from the non-publication.

On Thursday morning, Mr. Holmes inquired at what time their Lordships would deliver judgment as to the validity of the plea in abatement? Mr. Justice Perrin replied that they could be ready to give judgment to-morrow (Friday). It was clear that, no matter what that decision might be, the trial could not be commenced until after Christmas

ROTATORY PARLIAMENTS.—The society for effecting periodical sessions of Parliament in Dublin held a meeting on Monday afternoon in the Northumberland-buildings Hotel. Lord William Fitzgerald presided. The meeting was but thinly attended, probably on account of the extreme wet which prevailed all day. Mr. Sharman Crawford proposed the first resolution: "That the present mode of legislation for Ireland is at the root of all the difficulties under which this country labours." Mr. S. Crawford referred all the evils under which Ireland labored to English misrule and Irish landlords. Dr. Carmichael moved the next resolution. That meetings on many striking instances of the neglect which Irish affairs, even of vital importance, usually meet with in the Imperial Parliament, may be stated the failure of all attempts by the Irish members to narrow the laws relating to medical charities." The next resolution was as follows:—"That the present mode of legislation for Ireland tends to alienate the affections of her people, to prevent their industry and self-reliance, and would be ruinous even in a recently conquered country." The fourth resolution stated "That the waste lands of Ireland offer a vast field of remunerative employment for her unemployed population, while the many abortive attempts which have been made to legislate on them in the Imperial Parliament sitting at Westminster, furnishes another argument for a meeting of the Imperial Parliament in Dublin" All the resolutions were passed unanimously. Lord Mayo-rson was then called to the chair; and a vote of thanks having been passed to Lord W. Fitzgerald, the meeting separated.

THE LANDLEA.—There were five cases of cholera in the North-house at Belfast during Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, all fatal.

EJECTMENTS OF THE PEASANTRY.—The evictions in house-levelling do not seem to be in activity At Ardnacrusha, a little hamlet about two miles from Limerick, twenty houses were levelled on Monday. Thousands of the fertile acres of Tipperary are waste, and these are increased each day by further evictions This case is the same in Limerick and in Clare. We find daily announcements of large farmers running away, and evading a levy with them. They grow alarmed lest their turn may soon come, and they evade the fate of others by leaving the land naked on the landlords' hands. A few days since, in a district of Clare, while the farmers were at market with their produce, the landlord's agents descended on the farmers, with a large body of armed followers, and without legal process or authority of any kind, it is said, swept away all the stock on the land to satisfy the landlord's claims. On the other side of the picture we find that a tenant, holding 97 acres of land, had sold off everything, and, with the whole of the produce in his pocket, had reached Limerick, to emigrate, when he was arrested at the suit of his landlord and other creditors.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

LORD DUNSANY.

EDWARD WADDING PLUNKETT, fourteenth Baron Dunsany, died at Clevedon, county Somerset, 11th instant, in his 76th year. His Lordship was an Irish Representative Peer, and Lord-Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum of the county of Meath He succeeded to the family honours at the decease of his father in 1821, that nobleman having claimed, in 1791, and been allowed his hereditary title, which had been forfeited just a century before by the adherence of Randal, eleventh Lord Dunsany, to the falling fortunes of King James II. The Peer whose death we record married, first, 30th June, 1805, Charlotte Louisa, youngest daughter of Nevinson, first Lord Clermont, and, secondly, 23d March, 1822 Eliza, daughter of George, seventh Lord Annaly; but has left issue only by his former, viz.—Randall Edward, present Lord Dunsany; the Hon. Captain Edward Plunkett, R.N.; and Emily Valentina, wife of George Price, Esq., son of the late Sir Rose Price, Bart.

ROBERT SUTTON, ESQ., OF ROSSWAY, HERTS.

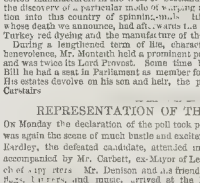
MR. SUTTON, of Rossway, whose death has cast a gloom over the locality which he resided, was a magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant for the counties of Herts and Bucks, and served as High Sheriff of the former shire in 1833-4. At the period of his decease, he had entered on his 78th year. By Katherine, his first wife, dau. of John Hodges, Esq, he has left a large family; but by his second wife, Charlotte, daughter of Capt. James Bullock, R.N., he had no issue. He was only son and heir of the late James Sutton, Esq., by Eliza his wife, daughter of the Rev John Sheppard, and represented the only existing branch of the Sutton family, which settled for many years in Wiltshire, and derived from the Suttons of Lexington.

HENRY MONTEITH, ESQ., OF CARSTAIRS.

The decease of this venerable and much respected gentleman occurred on the 14th inst. He was born at Anderston in 1764, and had, consequently, completed his 84th year. His father, the late Mr. James Monteith, was one of the earliest cotton manufacturers in the West of Scotland, and he name is identified with the discovery of a particular mode of printing muslin before the introduction into this country of spinning-mules. His son, the lamented gentleman whose death we announce, had all his days had no home. He was only son and heir of the late James Sutton, Esq., by Eliza his wife, daughter of the Rev John Sheppard, and represented the only existing branch of the Sutton family, which was settled for many years in Wiltshire, and derived from the Suttons of Lexington.

HENRY MONTEITH, ESQ., OF CARSTAIRS.

The decease of this venerable and much respected gentleman occurred on the 14th inst. He was born at Anderston in 1764, and had, consequently, completed his 84th year. His father, the late Mr. James Monteith, was one of the earliest cotton manufacturers in the West of Scotland, and his name is identified with the discovery of a particular mode of printing muslin before the introduction into this country of spinning-mules. His son, the lamented gentleman whose death we announce, had all his days had no home. He was only son and heir of the late James Sutton, Esq., by Eliza his wife, daughter of the Rev John Sheppard, and represented the only existing branch of the Sutton family, which was settled for many years in Wiltshire, and derived from the Suttons of Lexington.



During a lengthened term of life, characterised by energy, enterprise, and benevolence, Mr. Monteith held a prominent position in the town of Glasgow, and was twice its Lord Provost. Some time before the passing of the Reform Bill he had a seat in Parliament as member for the Lanark district of burghs. His estates devolve on his son and heir, the present Robert Monteith, Esq., of Carstairs

REPRESENTATION OF THE WEST RIDING.

On Monday the declaration of the poll took place at Wakefield, when the town was again the scene of much bustle and excitement. The friends of Sir Culling Eardley, the defeated candidate, attended in great numbers Sir Culling was accompanied by Mr. Corbett, ex-Mayor of Leeds, Mr Banks, and others of his colleagues there. Mr. Denison and his friends formed a long procession, with flags, bands, and music, arrived at the hustings first. The existing up of the poll was occupied from an early hour in the morning until after twelve o'clock, when Mr Gee announced that there had been polled Mr. Denison, 14,742 votes; Sir Culling Eardley, 11,736: Majority for Mr. Denison, 2948 votes. He, therefore, declared Mr. Denison duly elected a Knight of the Shire for the county of York, and then read the indenture of the return. Mr. Denison then came forward, amidst loud cheers, and addressed the electors, thank ng them for returning him a second time, and concluded amidst great applause.

Sir Culling Eardley, who still suffered from illness, next addressed the a semblage, and said that the 12,000 who voted for him did so because of his views of the separation of Church and State; adding, "this showed that while religious prejudices had been appealed to on the one hand, the battle on the other had been fought on the broad principles of civil and religious liberty."

EDMUND BECKETT DENISON, ESQ., M.P. FOR THE WEST RIDING OF YORKSHIRE.

The Hon. J. Wortley then replied to some observations made by Sir Culling Eardley on his principles; and Sir Culling Eardley next explained

Mr. Denison proposed a vote of thanks to the Sheriff, which was seconded by Sir C. Eardley, and the proceedings terminated at two o'clock.

MR. EDMUND BECKETT DENISON, M.P.

Mr. Denison, who has just been returned a second time for the West Riding, it will be recollected, unseated Lord Morpeth for that division of the county at the general election of 1841. At the general election in 1847 he was again proposed to the electors on the day of nomination; but, on obtaining only one-fifth of the show of hands, Mr. Lascelles, on behalf of Mr. Denison, declined to go to the poll; and Lord Morpeth and Mr. Cobden, the other candidates, were accordingly returned: this being a signal triumph of Free-Trade over Protectionist principles; although Mr. Denison's defeat of Lord Morpeth in 1841 was regarded as a severe blow to the party of the latter, and their policy of removing restrictions.

At the opening of the Session of Parliament, in 1846, Mr. Denison seconded the Address, in reply to her Majesty's Speech. In his last speech at Wakefield on Monday, he declared himself a friend to the continued and increased selection of persons for the highest offices of the State from the lower classes, and favourable to the reduction of public expenditure.

Mr. Beckett Denison is the fifth son of the late Sir John Beckett, of Leeds, Bart., and assumed the additional surname and arms of Denison by Royal licence, Sept. 8, 1816. He was born in 1787; and married, in 1814, Maria, daughter of William Beverley, Esq., and great niece of the wife of Sir Thomas Denison, Knt., Judge of the Common Pleas: and by her he has a numerous family. Mr. Denison is a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant of the East and West Ridings of Yorkshire; his family seat is at Grimthorpe, near Pocklington, in the East Riding.

Mr. Denison is the present Chairman of the Great Northern Railway Company, and in that capacity has evinced great intelligence and activity in furtherance of the Company's interests.

The accompanying Portrait is copied, by permission, from a fine print just published, * from a picture by Pickersgill, engraved by Reynolds.

* Published by Colnaghi and Co., Pall-mall East.

THE CATAMARAN.

On Monday, Mr. Alfred Hely, the patentee of this invention, exhibited its capabilities at Portsmouth, before his Royal Highness Prince Albert.

The Catamaran consists of cylinders or bags, of a flexible waterproof material, filled with any article or substance of a less specific gravity than water, as hammocks, clothes, provisions, valuables, stores, and such like, which, being lashed to spars, capstan-bars, &c., are or can be speedily combined into a raft or float, drawing only a few inches water when launched, not liable, in consequence of its flexible nature and open structure, to be swamped, capsized, or stove in; and capable of carrying one man with 30 days' provisions per cylinder, or, in round numbers, 250lb. dead weight at the rate of 64lb. per cubic foot of water displaced. This Catamaran, which may be constructed in ten minutes by 30 hands taught the mode of putting it together, was about 30 feet long by 8 feet wide; she carried a large lug-sail, and was steered by an oar over the stern; independently of which she carried two ice-boards, about 6 feet long by 3 feet wide, thrust down between the cylinders, one forward and the other aft, which answered the purpose of a sliding keel, and kept her to windward.

The Catamaran was launched on Monday morning at Gosport, at 8 o'clock A.M., and was mounted by the inventor and patentee, a coxswain, and four men, and worked out to Spithead, where she was anchored at 10 o'clock, the wind southerly, and awaited the approach of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, who had previously appointed that hour and place to inspect the invention.

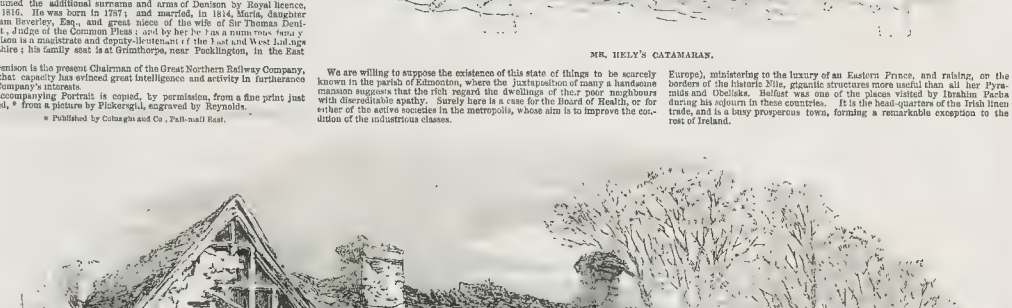
At 11 o'clock his Royal Highness arrived in the Fairy, and the Catamaran was pulled alongside, when the Prince inspected the vessel. His Royal Highness then went on board the Excellent gunnery ship, where he remained two hours, witnessing a fine series of exercises.

On arriving at Osborne, the Prince again re-appeared in the Fairy, and landed on the pier under Osborne; the Catamaran tacked, and in order to save the tide, as the wind still continued foul, was towed to the mouth of Portsmouth Harbour by her tender, after which she proceeded to Gosport-beach, and was taken to pieces, having been afloat about nine hours. She behaved at sea remarkably well during her passage out and home, and in every way sustained the character of seaworthiness and efficiency which she exhibited on her voyage from Dover to Boulogne and back in June last.

ABODES OF THE LABOURING CLASSES.

The present festive season is by no means an ill-timed opportunity for introducing to our readers a specimen of the lodgment of the Labouring Classes, and that within a very short distance of our luxurious metropolis.

The Engraving represents one of two groups of houses at Bows Farm, Edmonton, both of which are inhabited (some of the houses by two families) by agricultural labourers, who pay from 2s. to 2s. 6d. per week; which rent is looked after pretty sharply by the owner, who lives in the neighbourhood. These dwellings are remarkable for their utter wretchedness and neglect. There is scarcely a whole pane of glass in the nine cottages, and neither doors, windows, nor roofs, afford protection from the weather. The place appears to have been originally a farm-house, named "Bows," at present it is little better than a heap of ruins.



TENEMENTS AT EDMONTON.

We are willing to suppose the existence of this state of things to be scarcely known in the parish of Edmonton, where the juxtaposition of many a handsome mansion suggests that the rich regard the dwellings of their poor neighbours with discreditable apathy. Surely here is a case for the Board of Health, or for either of the active societies in the metropolis, whose aim is to improve the condition of the industrious classes.

ORNAMENTAL CAST-IRON WINDOW.

The annexed is a drawing of one of a number of Ornamental Windows, made at Belfast (Ireland), during the last few months, for the new Palace of the Pacha of Egypt. They are of cast iron, and of very large dimensions, being 20 feet high and 8 feet wide; and each window weighs 5 tons. They are to be bronzed and gilt after being erected. The same firm who have supplied these (Messrs. MacAdam, of the Soho Foundry, Belfast) have recently erected on the banks of the Nile, for the Egyptian Government, a number of very large Steam Pumping-Engines, to raise the water of the river for the purpose of irrigation. We consider these facts extremely interesting. It is not a little remarkable to find a manufacturer in the extreme North of Ireland (the poorest country in Europe), ministering to the luxury of an Eastern Prince, and raising, on the borders of the historic Nile, gigantic structures more useful than all her Pyramids and Obelisks. Belfast was one of the places visited by Ibrahim Pacha during his sojourn in these countries. It is the head-quarters of the Irish linen trade, and is a busy prosperous town, forming a remarkable exception to the rest of Ireland.

CAST-IRON WINDOW-FRAME FOR THE PALACE OF THE PACHA OF EGYPT.

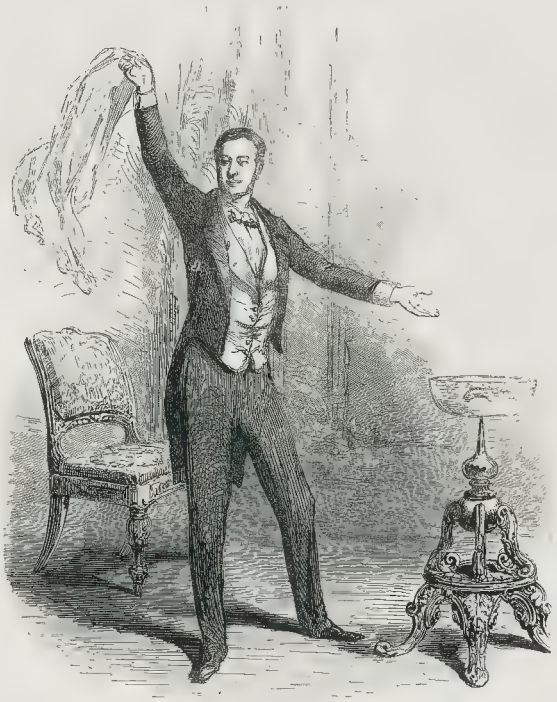
MR. HELY'S CATAMARAN.

ROBERT-HOUDIN AT THE ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

It is fortunate for the agricultural interests, and especially so for Monsieur Houdin, that the days of burning in Smithfield have passed away; elsewise some fine morning he would have found himself compelled to put all his necromantic lore to the proof, in some attempt to escape from the tumbril, on which he was being dragged to the pile as a wizard and a sorcerer. Habituated to the tricks of conjurors from childhood—knowing most of the popular deceptions in which rabbits, guinea-pigs, pigeons, and other unfortunate animals and birds, transmigrate into split-peas, pocket-handkerchiefs, bunches of keys, rings, and half-crowns—we confess that many of M. Houdin's tricks are above our comprehension altogether. We are never surprised at deceptions with cards. If a conjuror was to change an entire pack, held in our hands, into knaves of clubs; or make all the aces go into different waistcoat pockets of the company; or, finally, order the entire suits to march, one after the other, round the stage, like "Jack going for mustard"—(although we never could understand why such an elaborate cortège was necessary to procure so simple a condiment)—it would not cause the least astonishment. But in some of M. Houdin's great effects, we feel our breath taken away: bringing every possible application of mechanical ingenuity and scientific influence to our assistance—he entirely beats us. He is the sole monarch of the world of wonders; all other conjurors and wizards, from whatever point of the compass they arrive, sink into insignificant imitators before him.

In London, most of his clever deceptions are well known; but in the country they may yet be matters of mere, and almost incredible, report. We have represented him in one of his most startling delusions—that of the production of the gold fish. Where they can possibly come from, swimming so entirely at their ease in their crystal bowl, when M. Houdin has been before us all the while, in the centre of the stage, removed from any trap, table, or communication of any kind, is most marvellous. Truth to tell, we have a slight suspicion of our own; but where the pleasure in being deceived is so great—and it really is—we would not deprive our readers of a treat, by betraying a glimpse of the proceeding. And so we recommend them to go to Mr. Mitchell's pleasant theatre; and if they are half as much entertained as we have been there, they will come away our debtors for the hint.



ROBERT-HOUDIN'S SOIREES FANTASTIQUES.

CHRISTMAS WITH THE YULE LOG.

BY ALFRED CROWQUILL.

What, Father Christmas! here again?
With Yule Log on your back,
And mighty store of racy things
Well stuffed within your pack.
Hail, cheerer! blessed be your face,
Great King of Frost and Cold!
For, notwithstanding all your beard,
You're only twelve months old.

We know you ape the Christmas past,
And totter in your gait;
But that bright sparkle in your eye
Belies your old bald pate.
You take us in, you sly old rogue!
You always like your joke;
You know you've got the mistletoe
In your capacious poke.

What have you got within that bowl,
Of odour sweet and rare?
Is it a potion like the last,
To wash away dull care?
To turn the heart from feud and gall,
And drown the last year's strife—
And shattered circles join again,
That should endure for life?

Then light the log of cheering blaze,
We're waiting to a man
To sing the songs we've sung before,
And pass the flowing can.
See, how the smile and friendly grasp
Are ready at your call,
And lips are waiting to be pressed—
One heart shall be for all!

We know that you are not so old;
You're full of youth and mirth.
Where is the robe of white, with which
You mean to wed the earth?
We'll at your wedding dance i'faith—
All friends so good and true—
And welcome in the young New Year,
So quickly born of you.

JEROME PATUROT
IN SEARCH OF THE BEST REPUBLIC.

ILLUSTRATED BY GAVARNI.

(Continued from page 382.)

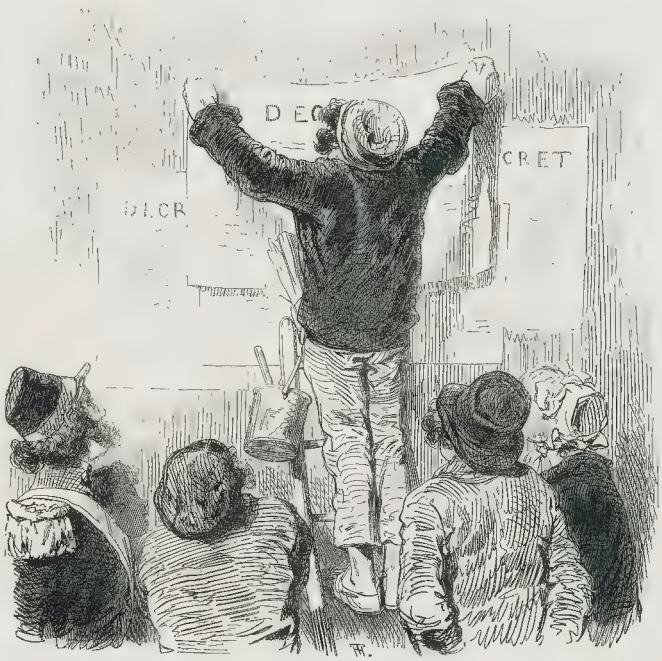
CHAPTER VII.

THE PATIENT AND THE DOCTORS.

I had only been a few days in Paris, but I could already well conceive the sufferings it endured. Its essential life, the source of its pride and of its wealth, was suppressed. Luxury had abdicated, and with it the trades it supports. A swarm of rich men and idlers fled to seek elsewhere a less threatening sky and smoother pavements. The great city lost its good customers, while the number of bad ones increased. What was lost in wealth was made up in turbulence, and this law of equilibrium did not tend to restore labour and credit. And the ruin was not a fiction; it attacked every one. From the millionaire to the simple labourer, there was not a man in France who had not to suffer some loss or bear some burden. It was a terrible balance-sheet, at which the most steadfast soul was alarmed. A long peace, the prosperity of the middle classes, the extension of credit, had overwhelmed the country with a mass of conventional securities which could not be liquidated without loss, except in a time of universal calmness of mind and perpetual peace. This liquidation had now to be proceeded with in the midst of a storm, and the result may be imagined. The rentes, the railway shares, bons du trésor, coupons of the savings-banks, all the issues of public or private enterprise, the banks, canals, trading companies, the bonds of companies and towns all were struck by the same blow, all were in-



POSTING THE DECREES.

THE KOH-I-NOOR. This famous diamond (the largest and most precious in the world), forfeited by the treachery of the Sovereign of Lahore, and now under the security of British bayonets at the fortress of Govindghur, it is hoped, will, ere long—as one of the splendid trophies of our military valour—be brought to England, in attestation of the glory of our arms in India. The mischievous superstition attaching to the possession of this unique and invaluable diamond might be utterly crushed by this retributive consignment; and our august Queen, herself the brightest example of female sovereignty in the annals of England, would be appropriately adorned with a jewel of analogous value to that of the loyal estimation so universally assigned to her in the hearts of her subjects.—Delhi Gazette.

GUNS FOR DOVER CASTLE.—The officer commanding the Royal Artillery at Dover has received directions from the Honourable Board of Ordnance to have four guns, recently sent from Woolwich, of an improved construction and superior range to any others in Dover, mounted on the east and north sides of the Norman Keep in the Castle. The calibre of these guns is eight inches in diameter, and they will propel a shot, 68lbs., the extraordinary distance of more than three miles.

AN INDIAN PRINCESS ABOUT TO VISIT QUEEN VICTORIA.—There are in New York two interesting young Indian girls, one of the Mohigan tribe, about twelve years of age, and the other a beautiful maiden of seventeen, a Princess of the Chippewa tribe, with jet black hair three feet long, who has arrived here with a view of visiting England to pay her respects to Queen Victoria, whom she appears fully resolved to see before she returns to her native place.—New York paper.

fered, many nearly destroyed. To know the entire sum, would need very minute calculations; but, by valuing it six or seven millards, we should keep within the bounds of a moderate valuation. In one month seven millards de- millards less in the circul ion! Seven millards withdrawn the fortune of France!

Just Heaven! what a void! And what a deep and firm faith in the new institutions was necessary to look upon this. I did not lay the entire r of this financial downfall upon the events which have overwhelmed Paris; and the greatest part, to events, to the state of the public mind, to t in the street, even to some recent decrees of doubtful fitness. But when I had lone this act of justice, I went higher, and looked upon matters as a thinker I saw a lesson in this catastrophe. Europe had carried credit business too far it was to expand this wrong. Credit, when based on advantageous works or on real value, may with impunity extend to an unlimited decree. But, when upon uncertain value or imaginary undertakings, credit changes bot its character and its effects. In the mo form. It is little more than a weapon in the hands of swindlers. On a less equivocal scale, it engend temporary confidence which no one thanks to verify. One accepts with one hand what will be almost immediately returned by the other. This play is prolonged without much danger until the time when the world is shaken by the hand of God. Then fictitious securities disappear, as a reason vanishes in the morning. One hat to hold a reality, and it only shadow.

must pardon me this digression into a field which does not belong me; but the minute to the failings of the tim the age and circumstances impel us, so that every one is now, to some extent, a financier. Who does not save the treasure in his leisure hours, and carry a score of plans for the use of invaded Governments in his pockets?

But if the evil was great, there was certainly no dearth of doctors. The guardians of the public affairs themselves uttered cries of alarm. They did not quit their patient's pillow, and in all tones and manners implored the assistance of the patricians. What great means and what heroic medicaments! Nothing was forgotten, neither mean nor sublime, nor any of the known practices. The moment was no better for them. The pulse fell, the extremities grew cold; the death struggle was imminent

"What if I were to administer a decree ," thought the doctor more particularly responsible for the issue.

And immediately an electuary was devised in council which should recal the treasury from the gates of death. Nothing could be better framed; all the elements were specific, and of infallible efficacy. One point only was difficult, namely, that the public had to furnish them. A national loan was to be subscribed at par. The cure was found to be as dear as the price; and, for want of funds, the electuary neveradvanced beyond the condition of a project. As may be imagined, the patient was no better for it: and the crisis became more serious

"I shall not cure him without a second decree," again said the responsible doctor to himself; "I must administer one boldly and without hesitation."

Again the council met, and this time it composed a formula of elements it had at hand, and of which the efficacy was notorious. The patient would be strengthened by renewed vigour; the only fear was that he would suffer from too great a surfeit. How should he not have visibly increased? A portion of the Crown forests, of the millards of ash and birch trees, of the secular elms and the habitual linden trees—all the vegetable riches of the country were to be supplied to the deceased organs. What treasury would not have been saved at such a price? The responsible doctor did not doubt it, and congratulated himself for having thought of such a measure. But, alas! the jealous gods betrayed his combination. Fate would not permit the forests to be efficaciously employed in their natural state for the relief of the patient. The ash trees, the birch, and the linden trees refused to enter the state coffers as essence. They must be converted into metal; and there was the difficulty. In time the transmutation might, perhaps, have been possible; but of what avail is a far-off relief to a dying s sterer? sary to set at once, for serious accidents would probably occur in as a total prostration of strength and continual syncope

"Certainly," thought the responsible doctor, "I am too sparing in decrees. It is the only means of stopping the evil: I must administer another. Something gentle, but decisive."

For the third time the council assembled, and issued an ordinance Nothing complicated or heroical—a very simple, very innocent measure. The produce of the expense of the capitalists and the contributors. The latter was the first to draw its precarious resources, while the fortune of the country was lost. Money seemed to fly from the decrees destined to seize it, and the time came when it seized only the memory of the people as the specimen of a lost race. It was concealed and buried: if the panic continued some weeks longer, we should return to the frail plank of assignats. My friend, the Baron, expected it, and had taken precautions on his own account. He was ingenious; the day after the fall he left the head of a week's victuals, and kept three sacks of potatoes concealed in her attic.

The crisis was at its height. Banking-houses fell with portfolios full of securities; whole streets closed their warehouses and cash boxes; traders declined to fulfil their engagements by wholesale; who others expired by retail all unable to realize their resources. of every description was amassed in so short a time; and, if the spirit of evil had presided in person he could not have levelled fortunes so quickly and enormously. It was a second downfall—a fearful reality, far more terrible than the previous one, and which started the financial world in the midst of the abyss of credit and the fever of enterprise.

How could the scourge be averted? What dyke could be raised to stem the growing devastation? The discovery of the next moment was the mobilization of its resources, its interests present and to come. To preserve all th was a duty, a stringent and imperious one; but how? by what means? to which side turn? Not that there was any dearth of answers: they multiplied excessively; the walls of the town were covered with marvellous plans. Every day hundreds of individuals felt themselves called to work for the public benefit, and offered to take the happiness of society on commission in their pen ings were only the result of a misunderstanding, and to cure them they had an infallible balm and some magic words. It was a new profession which had created itself—that of saviour of the country with or without patents: the government, revolution accomplished all its phases. The street riots rose to the brain; we lived in the age of quacks

"WITHOUT GOVERNMENT GUARANTEE."

(To be continued.)

NATIONAL SPORTS.

I care exactly enough their rule of right,
Which hath a hand leaning to a sceptre;
* * * * *
by dint of slattery. BYRON

The strictures upon the system of turf gambling which, from time to time, during the last twelve months, have been dealt with in these articles, have changed their venue. They now form a regular portion of those comments on the criminal statistics of the metropolis, which, upon the recurrence of the Old Bailey Sessions, it is Judge's in the habit of delivering, and of which the dock so emphatically points the moral. But, while relieved of that duty, there is still a service which the public is entitled to at the hands of the journalist that we have no disposition to leave in arrear. It has been observed of John Bull, that he is like his own sea-coal fires—it takes a good deal of poking to get him into a blaze, but, when once fairly warmed, he don't go out in a hurry. The match has been put to the combustibles, but we will stand by to stir the coals so long as it may be necessary to throw any light on the s

During the last week or two allusion has been made to the "suppression of the Derby Sweeps" by those who had been their most zealous advocates—as if the fact was an established truism—a proposition past all peradventure. Now, by way of note to this assumption, it is to be observed that in the city of Westminster, to say nothing of the town in the country, you shall not discover without more pains than you may like to devote to search, a public-house within a stone's throw of which the police is entitled to sit the Lords of the journalist that we have no disposition to leave in arrear. It has been observed of John Bull, that he is like his own sea-coal fires—it takes a good deal of poking to get him into a blaze, but, when once fairly warmed, he don't go out in a hurry. The match has been put to the combustibles, but we will stand by to stir the coals so long as it may be necessary to throw any light on the s

During the last week or two allusion has been made to the "suppression of the Derby Sweeps" by those who had been their most zealous advocates—as if the fact was an established truism—a proposition past all peradventure. Now, by way of note to this assumption, it is to be observed that in the city of Westminster, to say nothing of the town in the country, you shall not discover without more pains than you may like to devote to search, a public-house within a stone's throw of which the police is entitled to sit at the Lords of the journalist that we have no disposition to leave in arrear. It has been observed of John Bull, that he is like his own sea-coal fires—it takes a good deal of poking to get him into a blaze, but, when once fairly warmed, he don't go out in a hurry. The match has been put to the combustibles, but we will stand by to stir the coals so long as it may be necessary to throw any light on the s

Mutata nomine, the game goes on the same as ever, while in the ominous business is looking up prodigiously, in consequence of the diligence of the gents of the London hells, who drive a large percentage in the shares disposed of. The mountain birth at Gullidhall brings forth a cock and a bull, or a magpie and stump; the Attorney-General is tete-a-tete with the Heroes and Vagabonds Act and the Sweeps continue to go about, albeit Lefroy-wigs "can't exactly see their rule of right."

The little that was doing in the present week was accomplished at Newport Pagnell, where there had a steeple-chase of the modern school, all hand-cap, though it cannot be added, "and no mistake." The meeting was by no means a very crack affair, but it passed muster, faut de mieux. The course was sufficiently near to the town, and the "field" was made up of horses—were tolerably good. Of the sixteen acceptances for the principal race a baker's dozen went, and the match was run, so that the sport was not to be grumbled at. The day proved with the Arcadian Steeplechase, six runners. They took 5 to 2 each about Faith and Belshazzar, but Mr. Bevil e won on Lincoln (late Sashing Razor)—not named in the betting. The Free Handicap steeplechase brought out the "bocks" pretty freely, a good many of the horses being backed. The favourite was Pullaway, Tom Oliver's crack, the winner was Vengeance, the father of the handicap, and the worst fancied of the lot. It was won by a couple of lengths, easily the best 13st 13lbs—but six pounds more than a three-year-old carries for the Derby! According to the returns, Carlos carried 11st. 13lb. which was a mistake, his weight being but 13st 7lbs. The contest was, therefore, a tame one, and was knocked down at the hammer for £86—exhibiting a steeple-chase winner at a museum, considering the prices they sometimes fetch. The match between Marcador, Oliver and Charity, four, 2.b., four miles, 6 st each in the former, came off, according to the demonstration of the odds. It was for 200 sovs: and Chandler won with ease. The quotations of the Spring events at Tattersall's will show that it all the wrong way. The betters round. It is difficult to see the hope of a change until, after a couple of the vernal meetings at Newmarket, if indeed then, seeing that the Dustman has no engagement before Epsom. Till February the profession will have a time of "most welcome ease."

TATTERSALL'S.

THURSDAY. The business this afternoon was confined to the following bets:—

CHANDLER (1)

1000 to 15 agst Geraldine (t)	2000 to 30 agst Parchman (t)	1000 to 15 agst Sylvan (t)
1000 to 15 —— Melody (t)	1000 to 15 —— Tea Kettle	1000 to 15 —— Agrot (t)
1000 to 15 —— Legar (t)	(t)	1000 to 15 —— Blakeley (t)
2000 to 30 —— Chanticleer (t)	1000 to 15 —— Birdsale (t)	[1000 to 15 —— Mrs Toft

Lot.

3500 to 70 agst Old Dan Tucker (t) | 2000 to 45 agst Magician (t)
1000 to 15 agst Rouse (t)

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

Consols have fluctuated nearly one and a half per cent. since the closing quotation of Saturday's market. On Monday, upon the arrival of intelligence that an absolute majority in Louis Napoleon was secure, Consols immediately advanced to 88¾ on the day for the opening, afterwards improving to 88⅞, and closing at 88⅞. The news of the following day confirming, or rather showing a continued increasing majority, with a rise of three per cent in the French funds, affording firmness to the market on Tuesday, until just previously to the close of business, when some realising depressed prices to 87⅞ to 88 for the opening. As might be anticipated after such a rapid advance, resulting on the part of speculators gratifyingly reduced quotations on Wednesday Consols to 87⅜, but afterwards improved to 87⅝, which was the closing quotation, opening on Thursday at 87⅝ to ⅞, and closing at 87⅝ to ¾. Bank Stock, the quiet market, Bank stock has receded from its highest quotation, and is flat at 190. The following list of bank prices will show the state of the market at the close of last week. Reduced 3 per cent Annuities, 87⅝ to ⅞. Ditto, Jan. 1860, Long Annuities, to expire January, 1859, 8⅝. Ditto, October 10, 1859, 8 7 16; India Bonds, £1000, 37 per Cent. Ditto, under £1000, 3 per Cent Consols for Account, 88⅛; Exchequer Bills, £1000, 1s. discount; and £500 and under, 1s. discount. March, 44 pm; £500, June, 42 pm, Small, March, 44 pm; Small, June, 42 pm.

Although there has been more activity in the Foreign Market during the past week than for some time previously, yet prices, with the exception of Peruvian, have fluctuated to little In the latter stock there has been considerable speculation, upon the strength of an Envoy having arrived, with some proposals for compromise. He has, however, been here for a week without any practical being given to the subject of his errand. This, added to the sudden advance of nine per cent. in the price of the stock, looks very much like a "rig," in which if the public venture, it will be sure to pay. At the close of the week the market general was firm, at the following rates:—Danish Bonds, 1820, 3 bonds, 74; Grenada Bonds, 1 per Cent, 12; Mexican, 5 Peruvian Bonds, 6 per Cents, 85, ex. Ditto, Account, 19, 13; Ditto, 3 per Cent., 26⅞; Ditto, Account, per Cent, 19; Ditto Deferred, 5¼; Dutch Two- 4 Guilds, 49 has been buoyant or the contrary, according to the fluctuations which have prevailed. For some months, although Canada Bonds continued the prominent feature of the market in this ; balance of the reviving confidence that has been now some weeks increasing. The change of affairs in France has caused a considerable rise in the French lines, as will be seen by reference to the annexed list:— Banking——, hire, 3 sis; Caledonian, 20¾; Ditto, New £10 Pref., 7¾; Chester and Holyhead, 20¼; Ditto, Preference, 15¾; East Anglian, 2¾ L. and 1 L. and D. P., 1; Ditto, 6 3 L.; Eastern Counties, 1½; Ditto, New, Guaranteed 6 per Cent., 11¾; East Lancashire, 5 per Cent Preference, Quarters, 6¾; East Lincolnshire, 3½; Exeter, Teovil, and Launceston, 1¾; Great Northern, 8¾; Ditto, A A, Deferred, 4½; Ditto, B, 6 per Cent Guaranteed, 4; Great Western, 19; Ditto, Half Shares, 9¾; Hull and Selby, Half Shares, 49; Ditto, Guaranteed Bristol and Birmingham, 8¼; Ditto, Extra Shares, 1¼; Ditto, Three Quarter Shares, 4⅝; Ditto, Quarter Shares, 1⅝; Ditto, Eighth Shares, 1; Ditto, New, Guaranteed 5 per Cent., 9¾; Ditto (West Riding Union), 1¾; London and Blackwall, Extension, 5; London and North-Western, 98⅛; London and North-Western, 1 ¼; Ditto, Extension, 5; London and South-Western, 40¾; Ditto, New, 4 5-8, 2¾; Ditto, Shares, 1; Scottish Central and Lanarkshire, 44; Midland, 8¾; Ditto, 250 Shares, Scottish Central Bristol and Birmingham, 8¼; Ditto, New Quarter Shares, 1; Ditto, Halves, 6¾; Ditto, Three Quarters, 4¾; North Staffordshire, 5¼; Ditto, Preference, and Wolverhampton, 24¾; Reading, Guilford, and Reigate, 19; Ditto, Shares, 8; South-Eastern, 7¾; Ditto, Scrip, per Cent, 1¾; Ditto, Preference, 1¾; Shropshire Union, 1¾; South-Eastern, 1¾; Ditto, No 4, 11-16ths, 7¾; York, Newcastle, and Berwick, 27; Ditto, Original New and Berwick, 25½; Ditto, Extension, No 1, 12¾; Ditto ditto, No 2, 13¾; Ditto, of N.B., Preference, 7¾; York and North Midland, Preference, 19; Boulogne and Amiens 8; Namur and Liege Northern of France, 7¾; Paris and Orleans, 24¼; Paris and Rouen, 18; Sambre and Meuse, 4¾; Tours and Nantes, 1¾.

SATURDAY MORNING Consols remained nearly stationary yesterday at having been quoted at 88⅜. There was but little doing in all the markets, and the variations were proportionately unimportant.

THE MARKETS

CORN EXCHANGE.—We have again to report the arrival of a moderate [illegible] last week, and the demand for all kinds of grain and malting was to a very limited extent. In fact the trade may be said to be entirely at a standstill, prices [illegible] and other articles of English and foreign growth remain without alteration. The arrivals of both qualities of [illegible] Millers were not in the least want for all the kinds of [illegible] and foreign barley, the week. The article was, therefore, on the decline [illegible] of the maltsters being disposed to wait the further arrival of Lent supplies. No improvement [illegible] of Beans was called in question. Oats were held [illegible] rather lower terms.

MARK LANE, Monday. Wheat 2200 barley, 7000 oats, 4800 Irish oats, 4000 foreign [illegible] Wheat fresh and hard, red, 42s to 49s ditto, white, 46s to 57s. Norfolk [illegible] ditto, white, 47s to 52s. Rye, 30s to 32s. Barley, fine malting, 30s to 32s ditto, old, 28s to 30s. Malt, fine, 60s to 62s; ditto, old, 56s to 58s. Peas, hog, 30s to 32s; maple, 30s to 32s; white, 30s to 32s. Beans, ticks, 30s to 32s; harrow, 30s to 32s; pigeon, 30s to 32s; winchester, 30s to 32s. Oats, fine, 20s to 22s; ditto, old, 22s to 24s; Scotch, 20s to 22s; Irish, 18s to 20s. Flour, town made, 40s to 42s; Suffolk, 36s to 38s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 36s to 38s per 280 lbs. Foreign, barley, wheat, to ; barley, to ; beans, to ; peas, to ; oats, to ; flour, to .

Hay and Straw.—We have not the smallest alteration to notice in the value of seeds. Grass is in a standing, the demand is in a very depressed state. Cakes are held at full prices.

Linseed, Sowing, 56s to 60s; Baltic crushing, 42s to 44s; Mediterranean, 42s to 44s; Odessa, 42s to 44s; hempseed, 40s to 42s per quarter. Rapeseed, 42s to 44s per cwt.; brown mustard seed, 6s to 7s; white do., 8s to 10s per bushel. Tares, English, 40s to 42s per quarter. Foreign, 38s to 40s per last. Coriander seed, 12s to 14s per cwt. Canaryseed, £17 10s to £18 per last. Cloverseed, English, £31 10s to £34 10s; ditto, foreign, £8 10s to £10 10s per cwt. Rapeseed cakes, £4 5s to £5 per ton; canary, 80s to 85s per quarter. English clover-seed, red, 12s to 16s; white, to ; extra, to ; coarse, to ; trefoil, to ; extra, to ; white, to ; extra, to ; coarse, to ; new, to .

Tea.—The market is dull at the following quotations:—Congou, common, 9½d to 10½d per lb; fine, 11d to 12½d; Pekoe, 12½d to 13½d; Souchong, 10½d to 11½d; fine, 12½d to 13½d; Twankay, 10½d to 11½d; fine, 12½d to 13½d; Hyson, 12½d to 13½d; fine, 14½d to 15½d; Gunpowder, 12½d to 13½d; fine, 14½d to 15½d.

Coffee.—Plantation Ceylon, 56s to 60s; Java, 56s to 60s; Mocha, 70s to 80s; Jamaica, 42s to 46s; Costa Rica, 42s to 46s; Cuba, 42s to 46s; Bourbon, 42s to 46s; Brazil, 42s to 46s; fine ordinary, 38s to 40s per cwt. Duty, 4s per lb.

Sugar.—The demand for raws has been rather more extended this week, at some advance, a slight decrease in the stock remains. Refined goods have been in full demand, at extreme rates.

Spices.—The demand for pimento has been more limited this week, at some decline. Jamaica, 3½d to 3¾d; Cayenne, 1s 2d to 1s 3d per lb. Nutmegs, 3s 6d to 4s per lb. Cassia lignea, 30s to 32s per cwt. Ginger, 30s to 40s per cwt. Pepper, 5½d to 6d per lb.

Rice.—The demand has been rather more extended this week, at some advance. Carolina, 18s to 20s per cwt. Bengal, 8s to 9s per cwt.

Saltpetre.—The demand for refined has been rather more extended this week, at some advance. Refined grains have been in full demand, at extreme rates.

Provisions.—The demand for Irish butter is now upwards of 60,000 casks. This has [illegible] Foreign has been [illegible] Carlow, 76s; Cork, 74s; Limerick, 74s; Waterford, 74s; Belfast, 74s; Sligo, 74s; Clonmel, 74s; Kilkenny, 74s; Tipperary, 74s; Monaghan, 74s; Fermanagh, 74s; Roscommon, 74s; Mayo, 74s; Longford, 74s; Dublin, 74s; Meath, 74s; Kildare, 74s; Wexford, 74s; Wicklow, 74s; Queen's County, 74s; Tipperary, 74s; Limerick, 74s; Clare, 74s; Kerry, 74s; Cork

ADVERTISEMENTS.

ROYAL MUSICAL REPOSITORY.—

CALDWELL'S SHIRTS, DRAWERS AND SANITAS

DANCING TAUGHT in the first Fashion

A LADY from PARIS, long

HOME-LODGE ESTABLISHMENT,

HYDROPATHIC ESTABLISHMENT,

COMMISSION AGENCY.—The ADVER-

CRESTS, COATS of ARMS, CYPHERS,

AIR-GUNS and AIR-CANES for shooting

DOUBLE RIFLES, by Case, 20 guineas.

PIANO. A

PIANOFORTES. The

PIANOFORTES

FULL MEASURE and FIRST-RATE

QUEEN'S BISCUITS.

COUNTY FIRE OFFICE,

LONDON and WESTMINSTER BANK.

DISSOLVING VIEWS.

ELEGANT CHRISTMAS

UNDER ROYAL PATRONAGE.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.

PARIAN BROOCHES.—These elegant

GENEVA

IMPROVED SPECTACLES,

GENOA MEDAL WATCHES,

JONES,

THE NEW FISH CARVING KNIVES and

ELECTRO SILVER PLATED SPOONS

MUSICAL BOXES,

THE BEST ENGLISH WATCHES

THE NEW GOLD WAISTBACKLE

SARLE'S ARGENTINE SILVER PLATE

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.

SEND EIGHT POSTAGE STAMPS,

THE SAFETY CHAIN

S. B. SONS and GOLD WATCHES

SCOTCH PLAIDS.

SCOTCH PLAIDS, BOOKS, CON-

PURCHASE a Pair of PLANTAGENET

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.

SIX SUPERIOR SHIRTS FOR 20s.

LATEST NOVELTIES

LADIES' SILK SPANISH BOOTS

LADIES' BLACK and WHITE SATIN

THE ROYAL ORGANS, LONDON

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS forwarded

WEDDING BODICES & INDIA OUTFITS

CHILDREN'S FROCKS, PELISSES, BABY

THE LUXURY OF GIVING.

ADVANTAGEOUS to LADIES requiring

GREAT BARGAINS in WOOLLEN

SHAWLS AND VELVET MANTLES.

LYONS SILK VELVETS for LADIES'

MOURNING AND HALF MOURNING

ROYAL PATENT COLLINS

VALENTINE'S and ARMY and NAVY

LUNCHEON at DINNER, at 3, P. Hall,

BRANDY, SON, Leicester COGNAC

SPARKLING CHAMPAGNE, 12s per Dozen;

BLANCHARD'S PHOTOGRAPHIC PORTRAITS

MUSCATEL RAISINS, New and Finest

CHILDREN'S CARRIAGES of superior

"AS YOU LIKE IT."—Each PACKET

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS in PAPIER

BONNETS.—PARISIAN MILLINERY.—

DAVIES'S CANDLES,

TO the PUBLIC LAVERS RUSSIA

PATENT SUSPENSION STOVES.—As a

SUPERIOR WINTER OVER-COATS,

MORGIANA NOTICE. Particular attention

CHILDREN'S FROCKS, COATS, and

INFANTS' CLOAKS, HOODS, HATS AND BONNETS, LONG

HAIR DYE.—A boy will forward to any

HAIR.—IF YOUR HAIR FALL OFF OR GET

INVALUABLE DISCOVERY.—

PURE CHEMICAL AGUE-CURE.

PUBLICATIONS, &c.

MR. DICKENS'S NEW CHRISTMAS BOOK.
This day is published, price Five Shillings, elegantly bound in cloth, with Illustrations by Clarkson Stanfield, R.A., Frank Stone, John Leech, and John Tenniel,

THE HAUNTED MAN and the GHOST'S BARGAIN. A Fancy for Christmas Time.
By CHARLES DICKENS
London: BRADBURY and EVANS, 11, Bouverie-street.

This day is published, handsomely bound in cloth, price 2s 6d.,
with an Illustration,

CHRISTMAS EVE; or, the Story of Little Anne. A Present for Children
By JOSEPH CUNDALL, 19, Old Bond-street

Just published, price 1s. 6d., with five Engravings,

THE OLD YEAR and the NEW YEAR. A Christmas Allegory, being the Dying Advice of Master Old Year to his beloved Son Master New Year. Forming either a suitable Christmas present or an appropriate New Year's Gift.
London: WHITTAKER and Co., and Sold by all Booksellers.

CHRISTMAS CAROLS, BY ALFRED CROWQUILL.—Now ready,
TWO CHRISTMAS CAROLS (with Music by "Thomas Baker), entitled "The Little Log," and "Christmas," written and beautifully illustrated by ALFRED CROWQUILL. Price 1s Sixpence each.—HAMMOND, Musicseller and Publisher, 9, New Bond-street, opposite the Clarendon Hotel.

NEW POLKA.—THE FESTIVAL POLKA, composed by T. BROWNE. Price 2s. (sent postage free).—Mr Browne, the composer of the Agnes Polka, has just produced his new Polka for the ensuing season, under the above title. It is a most spirited and fascinating production; and will greatly extend the popularity of the author.—London: DUFF and HODGSON, 65, Oxford-street.

NEW SONG—"DEAREST, THEN ILL LOVE YOU MORE." Price 2s (sent postage free).—This is an answer to "Will you love me then as now," sung with exquisite taste by Miss Birch, and one of the most successful Songs of the season. The melody of the present ballad is of a character to be long remembered and beautiful as the former, and will no doubt obtain a similar share of popularity.—London: DUFF and HODGSON, 65, Oxford-street.

DEAREST MAE, as sung at the St. James's Theatre every night, is just published, price 2s.; "Sleep that knows not breaking," Serenade, in their popular Edinburgh Entertainment will be ready shortly, and may be had at MITCHELL'S Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street, and of all Music sellers in town and country.

NEW ELEGANT CHRISTMAS PRESENTS. MORE BOY'S CAMEO MUSIC, price [illegible] "Hearts and Homes," [illegible] various Waltzes by [illegible] Also [illegible] Waltzes, [illegible] Boy's Cameo Music, [illegible] duction of the age."—Court Journal [illegible] and Co., Regent-street; Duff and Co., Oxford street.

"I love thee, I love thee, 'tis all that I can say.
It is my vision in the night, my dreaming in the day."
THE PLANISTA for January, No. 100 (now ready), contains this exquisite Duet for Two Voices; the Poetry by Gustavus Franca. Also, the two new Polkas by Strauss, entitled The Racine Polka. Also, the new Elite Waltzes, by Gungl and Franca. The whole for 2s; post free, 30 stamps.  Third Edition of Les Huguenots, London, and 20 other operas, 2s each, now ready. Catalogues gratis.—Planista Office, 67, Paternoster-row

THE DRUM-POLKA.—Just published, THE DRUM POLKA, illustrated in colours by BRANDARD, price 3s; may be free; performed every evening at the Surrey Gardens with the greatest applause. "This is the most successful polka that Mr. Jullien has composed."—Morning Post. JULLIEN and Co., Musical Presentation Library, 214, Regent-street

JULLIEN'S CADEAU for 1849, price 5s., containing the most favourite Quadrille, Waltz, and Polka performed at M. Jullien's Concerts during the present season, the above MUSICAL PRESENT, beautifully printed on embossed paper, with wreath borders, and enclosed in an elaborately finished presentation Envelope, illustrated in gold and colours. Price 5s. postage free.
JULLIEN and Co. s Presentation Library, 214, Regent-street.

JULLIEN'S ALBUM for 1849.—Just published, a Second Edition of this very favourite Annual, beautifully illustrated by BRANDARD, and containing the whole of the Quadrilles at M. Jullien's Concert, with numerous illustrations in colours, comprising scenes from "Les Huguenots," and from "Lucrezia Borgia," and portraits of Madame Grisi, Mdlle. Alboni, Madame Viardot Garcia, and Signor Mario. The musical contents comprise all the most popular dance music of the season, by Jullien, Kenzig, &c.; together with 20 new songs by Balfe, Glover, Alaiby, Loder, Aubert, &c. Price, in splendidly illuminated covers, 18s.; or in elegantly embossed French covers, 21s. JULLIEN and Co.'s Musical Presentation Library, 214, Regent-street.

JULLIEN'S ETRENNES.—CHRISTMAS PRESENTS and NEW YEAR'S GIFTS.—JULLIEN and Co. have completed their collection of Albums Bijoux, and a New Series of Musical Publications suitable for Presents, the whole of which are arranged for inspection in a manner similar to the exposition "at our door" at Paris. The great advantage of this exposition is that purchasers can see in the most comfortable manner, the different articles, observe their peculiar merits and attractions, free competition exists between the various works, and selection of each such treasure is made by the purchaser himself than by any other means. Descriptive Catalogues sent free
JULLIEN and Co.'s Musical Presentation Library, 214, Regent-street

NEW COMIC SONGS and DUETS for the Season. "The Musical Mermaid," supposed to be Jenny Lind, with an immense Supper Party, the whole of the Songs, Duets, &c., Invented, written, composed, and dedicated to his dear friend and honorable patron, by Captain CUTTLE, of the Gipsy Fortune-Teller, Poet, by that [illegible] Price 2s 6d [illegible] Regent-street. The Gipsy Fortune-Teller, Price 2s. The Dream of my Fatherland, Price 2s. The Musical Student, price 2s. The Bird on the Wing, Price 2s. The Musical Student, price 2s. How dear the Friend of many years, price 2s. "Edwin Flood's last composition, author of the Panmelodicon, Rotunda, now complete in one volume, price 18s.; where may be had, beautifully illustrated by Brandard, the Olympic Polka, price 3s 6d.
LEE and COXHEAD, 48, Albemarle-street

NEW POLKAS for the SEASON.—The Curwen Polka, price 2s 6d.; Le Comte de Rosen, 6th set of Les Enfans de Bruxelles, Quadrilles, price 2s 6d.; La Petit Bal Masque, price 2s 6d.; Le Grand Bal [illegible] and 2nd, price 2s 6d.; Les Fleurs [illegible] price 2s 6d.; Les Fleurs [illegible] of the Ball Room, County Pictures, 1 to 24, price 2s 6d each. "Goliath," a humourous, tragical, musical, comical, farcical Christmas offering for the pianoforte, by Charles Glover, author of "Cinderella," 4s; "Blue Beard," 4s; "Venice," 4s; "Sleeping Beauty, 4s—most gorgeously illustrated in gold, chromo, and emblazonry. Novello's
LEONI LEE and COXHEAD, 48, Albemarle-street

CLASSICAL MUSIC for PRESENTS, printed only by ROBERT COCKS and Co. Albrechtsberger's Complete Theoretical Works, in 3 vols., 8vo, 36s. Beethoven's Grand Mass in C, 10s. Hamilton, 2 vols., 31s 6d; Clementi's Collection of Gems, &c., 2 vols., each 10s 6d; Beethoven's Master Pieces for the Pianoforte, 6s of his Sonatas, edited by his pupil, Charles Czerny, in 5 vols., each 10s, his Nine Grand Symphonies for the Pianoforte, by Pauer, Lachner, in 1 vol. 42s 6d. Czerny's Royal Pianoforte School, 6d. extra to the Queen, 1 vol., each 10s. J. S. Bach's 48 Preludes and Fugues, Superbly Engraved by Czerny, 31s 6d.; his Art of Fugue, 21s.; and Five other Volumes of his Works, Superbly Engraved by Czerny, each 10s. Czerny's School of Practical Playing, 21s.; Czerny's School of Embellishment, 21s., Czerny's School of Public Performance, Czerny's School of Extempore Playing, 21s. Black's Organ School, 2 vols., 21s. Spohr's Violin School, by John Blagrove, 30s; Spohr's Violin School, by John Blagrove, 30s; Spohr's Violin School, by John Hinton, 30s; Campenella's Violin School, by John Blagrove, 30s; Handel's Messiah, by John Bishop, 10s; the Four Coronation Anthems by ditto, 12s., the Dettingen, by ditto, 12s.; Haydn's Creation, by ditto, 12s.; Tallis's Orders of the Daily Service, 2s. Hayden's Symphonies, Clementi, 21s.; Rossini's Stabat Mater, by Warren, [illegible] Mount of Olives, 12s; Farmer's Ten Violin Quartets, 42s.; ditto, Six Violin Quintets, 42s; Beethoven's Seventeen Quartets, an elegant and complete edition, edited by M. Hauptmann, price £6 6s.; Haydn's Eighty-three Quartets for Two Violins, Alto and Bass, price £6 6s (the only perfect edition); Beethoven's Septuor and Trios, edited by M. Hauptmann, 25s 6d.; the Vocal Harmony, in six vols., 18s each; [illegible] Anthems, two vols., each 21s.—London: J. ALFRED NOVELLO, Music Publishers to her Majesty. N.B. COCK'S MUSICAL ALMANACK for 1849, price 1s.

THE VIOLIN TAUGHT FOR 1s. 6d.!!!
Just published, price 1s. 6d.,
ALEXANDER'S SELF-INSTRUCTING PRECEPTOR for the VIOLIN, by which any one, without the least previous knowledge of music, may attain the art of playing this [illegible] and subjects of any other air. To which is added, a [illegible]

Just published, price 6d., No. 27 of ALEXANDER'S ORIGINAL SCRAP-BOOK for the Violin, &c.; containing the celebrated air, "A lowly youth," the Leonine Polka, and the gems of the new operas of Lodoiska, Attila, Adelia, and Haydée; together with several other of the most popular airs. This Number sent post free for 6d. by the Publisher, J. ALEXANDER, 14, George's-place, Holloway; sold likewise by STRANGE, Paternoster-row, and all other book and musicsellers

NOTICE.
MR. LODGE'S PEERAGE and BARONETAGE for 1849,
Corrected throughout, from the Personal Communications of the Nobility, under the especial Patronage of her Majesty and Prince Albert,
IS NOW PUBLISHED.
SAUNDERS and OTLEY, Publishers, Conduit-street.

Now ready, in 1 serial 4to.,
A SERIES OF DRAWINGS IN STONE, BEAUTIFULLY COLOURED!!!
THE RISING GENERATION.
By JOHN LEECH Forming a handsome and interesting Christmas Volume for Children, or Table. In an Illustrated Cover, containing the Twelve Prints, price 10s 6d, or in each separately.
PUNCH OFFICE, 85, Fleet-street

GUIDE TO ENGLISH ETIQUETTE. Price 2s.
GUIDE TO THE BALL-ROOM. Price 1s.
These two most necessary works for all entering life, are sent free per post to any address by the publisher on receipt of the published price, or postage stamps of equal value
Published by C. MITCHELL, Red Lion-court, Fleet-street, London

Just published—Elegant for Presents—Two Two Shillings,
DOMESTIC COMFORT, SUITABLE FOR PRESENTS
By the late GEORGE WATKINS, M.A., Rector of St. Swithin's, London Stone.
HATCHARD, 187, Piccadilly; SEELEY, 54, Fleet-street; HOULSTON, Paternoster-row, and all booksellers

SPLENDID INDUCEMENT TO THE "PILGRIM'S PROGRESS," SUITABLE FOR PRESENTS
BUNYAN'S PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, in imperial 4to, large type, with Portraits and several Wood-Engravings. 2s 6d., in cloth
PARTRIDGE and OAKEY, Paternoster-row, London.

Illustrated with numerous Engravings, and 370 Receipts, oblong 8vo, bound in crimson cloth, price 7s. 6d.; sent free for 8s.
THE COMPLETE KNITTING-BOOK. By ESTHER COPLEY, Author of "Cottage Comforts," "Early Friendships," &c. &c.  All the instructions contained in this volume are written from actual working, and the Receipts, Patterns, and yet more of the articles described, are entirely original; forming one of the most complete books of this kind yet published.
London. WILLIAM TEGG and Co., Cheapside; to be had of all booksellers and Berlin-wool warehouses

Just published, price 1s. in neat wrapper, 1s. 6d. bound,
THE FAMILY ECONOMIST; containing Original Articles by the best Writers, on Domestic Economy, Education, Sanitary Reform, Cottage Gardening and Farming, also, Social Sketches, Moral Tales, Family Secrets, and valuable Household Recipes. Volume First—1848.—London: SOULSBRIDGE and SONS, Paternoster-row; and sold by all booksellers

WELCOME the FAMILY FRIEND.
[illegible] Original Articles [illegible] Education, Sanitary Reform, Cottage Gardening and Farming, also, Social Sketches, Moral Tales, Family Secrets, and valuable Household Recipes. Volume First—1848.—London: SOULSBRIDGE and SONS, Paternoster-row; and sold by all booksellers

Just published, price 7s. 6d.,
FRANCIS'S DICTIONARY of PRACTICAL RECEIPTS, presenting a standard and authentic Work of Reference, of Universal Information, useful to the Tradesman and the Artist, in explaining them of the operations and processes of others, to the Chemist and Druggist, as a vade mecum of all his professional formulæ; to the Amateur as a recent guide in the various open air sciences; and to the Manager of a Family, as a faithful synopsis of numerous Receipts, and register of authentic results, available by him in lucrative expense and procuring and using, for some important purpose, a multitude of ingredients which most frequently cannot be purchased without much trouble and expense
W. FRANCIS, Fairprofessor-row; and all Booksellers.

WORKS RECENTLY PUBLISHED by JOHN HENRY PARKER, Oxford and London, SUITABLE FOR PRESENTS
THE CHRISTIAN YEAR. Thirty-third Edition. 18mo, cloth, 3s 6d
18mo, cloth, 4s.; morocco, 5s 6d.
Fcap 8vo, cloth, 5s.; morocco, 10s 6d.
The above may also be had in a variety of elegant bindings
LYRA INNOCENTIUM. Fourth Edition. Fcap 8vo, cloth, 5s.; morocco, 10s 6d.
THE CATHEDRAL. Fifth Edition. Fcap 8vo, cloth, 7s 6d.; morocco, 10s 6d.
THE BAPTISTERY.—Fourth Edition. 18mo, cloth, 3s 6d.
8vo, cloth, 12s.; morocco, 21s.
RICKMAN'S GOTHIC ARCHITECTURE. Fifth Edition. Profusely Illustrated with Woodcuts and Steel Plates. 8vo, 21s
MANUAL of ENGLISH MEDIÆVAL EMBROIDERY. Now ready, with numerous Illustrations, 5s
TRACTS for the CHRISTIAN SEASONS.
Part I Advent. Price 6d
Part II Christmas. 1s.
Part III Epiphany. Price 1s on the 1st of January
Part IV Lent, will be published in February 1.
Oxford, and 377, Strand, London

NEW WORKS OF INTEREST,
PUBLISHED BY SMITH, ELDER, AND CO.
Now Ready, in One Volume, post 8vo, with a Portrait of the Emperor,
AUSTRIA. By EDWARD P. THOMPSON, Esq., Author of "Life in Russia."
CONTENTS: The Austrian Empire: State Policy—Statesmen—Education—Religion and Religious Orders—Army—Finances—Nobility—Middle Classes—Orders and Decorations—Rights of Sovereign and People of Government—Feudal Obligations—Revenue and Statistics—Social System—Police and Prisons—Vienna and the Viennese—Present Position and Prospects of the Empire.

THE TOWN: Its Memorable Characters and Events (from St. Paul's to St. James's). By LEIGH HUNT.
2 vols. post 8vo, with 48 Illustrations, price 24s. cloth
"Almost the pleasantest of Leigh Hunt's pleasant books: it so encobates the chronicle that it is difficult to lay it aside."—Dublin University Magazine
"A History book, a pocket companion, a work to devour, an admirable and seasonable present."—New Monthly Magazine
"The book is overflowing with [illegible] of the last two centuries, and contains a world of amusing matter."—Atlas.
"Two volumes full of delightful gossip."—Britannia
"A book for all places and all persons."—Spectator.

LIFE IN RUSSIA; or, The Discipline of Despotism. By EDWARD P. THOMPSON, Esq. Author of "Notes of a Campaign."
In One Volume, post 8vo, with Plates and Cuts, 12s. cloth.
"One of the most amusing and useful books that have been published on Russia."—Spectator.

BOOK OF ENGLISH EPITHETS, Literal and Figurative, With Elementary Remarks and Minute Reference to standard Authorities. By LAMBE FISHER.
One Volume, imperial 8vo, price 9s. cloth (Now ready.)

TREVETHLAN.—A Cornish Story. By WILLIAM DAVY WATSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law
2 vols. post 8vo, with a Frontispiece. Three Volumes, post 8vo
"In this story the romance and the reality of life are judiciously blended together. The characters are well drawn and preserved throughout; and the interest never drops. It evinces original talent and much skill in construction, and is a novel of high promise."—Britannia
"A good story, cleverly managed, and told in a manly tone. The characters are drawn with great truthfulness, and the natural course of action, very nicely and steadily sustained."—Examiner.

MODERN PAINTERS.—By a GRADUATE of OXFORD. Volume the First, 4th edition, imperial octavo, price 15s. cloth; Volume the second, 2nd edition, imperial octavo, price 15s. 6d. cloth
"One of the most remarkable works on Art which has appeared in our time."—Edinburgh Review
Orlando [illegible] London: JOHN W. PARKER, East, and Co., 65, Cornhill.

Now ready, delivered gratis,
BULL'S LIBRARY CIRCULAR for DECEMBER; containing the New and Popular Works, with full particulars of Bull's New Library System, which is offering such universal satisfaction in every part of the kingdom. Books furnished for perusal without the delay and inconvenience of a previous correspondence.—Bull's Library Circular sent gratis and post free to orders enclosing two stamps; to be addressed to Mr. BULL, Library, 19, Holles-street, Cavendish-square, London.

READING AND BOOK SOCIETIES
Now ready, in small octavo,
HINTS for the FORMATION of READING and BOOK SOCIETIES in every part of the Kingdom, on a New and Improved Plan. This Plan, embracing the facilities afforded by the reformed postage, railroads, and steam-vessels, will extend the accommodations of one of the largest Libraries or the Metropolis [illegible] Country and post free.
[illegible] LIBRARY, 81 and 82, Regent-street, London.

MR. COLBURN'S NEW PUBLICATIONS NOW READY.
I.
LUCILLE BELMONT. A Novel. 3 vols.
II.
SAM SLICK'S NEW WORK, THE OLD JUDGE; or, LIFE IN A COLONY. By the Author of "Sam Slick, the Clockmaker." 2 vols. 21s. bound
III.
ANECDOTES OF THE ARISTOCRACY. By J. BERNARD BURKE, Esq., Author of "The Landed Gentry," "The Peerage," &c. 2 vols. post 8vo.
IV.
THE MIDNIGHT SUN. A New Christmas Book. By FREDERIKA BREMER. Translated from the Unpublished Swedish Original. By MARY HOWITT. 1 vol., 10s 6d bound
V.
MRS. GORE'S NEW NOVEL, "THE DIAMOND AND THE PEARL."
"In this work Mrs. Gore may be fairly said to have excelled herself. The characters of the two heroines, the Diamond and Pearl of the story, are admirably portrayed."—John Bull.
VI.
ADVENTURES IN BORNEO. Dedicated to his Excellency Sir JAMES BROOKE, K.C.B., Governor of Labuan, and Rajah of Sarawak. 1 vol. 8vo, 14s bound
HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street

Just published, price 1s.,
Bound in a beautiful cover, post 4to, price 2s., gilt edges; or 5s. 6d.,
THE LADY'S ALBUM of FANCY WORK, consisting of Novel, Elegant, and Useful Designs in Knitting, Netting, Crochet, and Embroidery, printed in Colours.
"The Beautiful specimens of Fancy Work in the present Album are a sufficient guarantee that the publication will be worthy of the patronage it solicits. The Albums is useful in the same proportion as it is tasteful, artistic, and elegant."—Illustrated London News.
GRANT and GRIFFITH, Corner of St. Paul's Churchyard.

NEW BOOK FOR JUVENILE PARTIES.
HOME AMUSEMENTS: a concise collection of RIDDLES, CONUNDRUMS, Parlour Games, Forfeits, &c. By PETER PUZZLEWELL, Esq.; price 2s 6d. cloth, 3s postage free.

NURSERY DITTIES from the LIPS of Mrs. LULLABY. Illustrated by LEECH, price 1s.
A NEW EDITION OF MOTHER'S PRIMER, with 300 Cuts, and Illustrated Cover; price 1s.
PICTORIAL FRENCH GRAMMAR.—By M. DE LA VOYE. 80 Cuts; royal 18mo, 8s. cloth
GRANT and GRIFFITH, Corner of St. Paul's Churchyard.

BOOKS FOR THE HOLIDAYS.
* * Any Work sent by post for Sixpence extra.
KIT CARLTON: A Tale of the Sea. Or, The Yarns of an Old Mariner. By MARY COWDEN CLARKE, Author of the "Concordance to Shakspeare." With Illustrations by George Cruikshank. Fcap 8vo, 6s. cloth
"A charming collection of marvellous and beautiful fictions, calculated to delight the fancy and improve the heart of every boy and girl who reads it."—Jerrold
"All readers, possessed of good feelings in them, and lessons of fortitude forbearance, and good temper in them, will find in Cruikshank's illustrations are worthy of his genius."—Examiner
FACTS from the WORLD of NATURE; Addressed to Mrs. LOUDON. Numerous Engravings and Map. Fcap 8vo, 6s. cloth
"Mrs. Loudon has done wisely in not attempting to rival Miss Edgeworth and Mrs. Marcet in their own peculiar walks of literature."—Athenæum
THE MODERN BRITISH PLUTARCH; Or, Lives of Distinguished Characters. Fcap 8vo, 6s. cloth
THE DREAM of LITTLE TUK, and other Tales. By HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSEN. Fcap 8vo, 6s. cloth
"Little Tuk will be a favourite with the Christmas guests to put Andersen out of court as prime favourite with old and young."—Athenæum
LONDON PRIZES and PRIZE-HOLDERS.
INSECT CHANGES. With richly Illuminated Plates. Fcap 8vo, 6s. cloth
THE CELESTIAL EMPIRE; or, Points and Pictures of China. Fcap 8vo, 6s. cloth
SOLDIERS and SAILORS. By an OLD OFFICER. Fcap 8vo, 6s. cloth
THE WONDER SEEKER; or, the History of [illegible] Fcap 8vo, 6s. cloth

PRESENTS for YOUNG and OLD in great variety, consisting of the New Books of the Season, Illustrated Works, Gilt Books, Juvenile Books, Bibles, Prayer-books, and an extensive assortment of Juvenile Publications
GRANT and GRIFFITH, successors to J. Harris, corner of St. Paul's Churchyard.

Price 2s. 6d. plain, 4s. coloured,
A SCHOOL ATLAS. By JAMES CORNWELL, Ph. D. Consisting of 30 beautifully executed small Maps on steel, and a list of several hundred places, with their latitude and longitude. Also, forming the second series of the Improved Classic Maps on Steel. 3s. 6d.
A SCHOOL GEOGRAPHY.—"Dr. Cornwell is already favourably known as the author of several useful and successful books for the young, but we shall be greatly mistaken if he do not improve the present assortment in which he has yet produced. Metropolitan Magazine
London: SIMPKIN and Co.; HAMILTON and Co

THE SCHOOL BOYS' FAVORITE.—Price 4s. 6d.,
THE HISTORY OF A SHIP, FROM HER CRADLE TO HER GRAVE. Every boy should read this book, and learn economy and general management
Here those and other interesting particulars are amply explained by GRANDIN, who illustrates by drawings and diagrams all he teaches. The book contains nearly One Hundred Engravings on Wood.—London: DARTON and Co.; SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and Co., and all Booksellers.

Just published, price, in a Wrapper, 1s.; on Tinted Paper, 2s. 6d.,
THE GIFT; a Treatise on the Fading Influence on Man.
Illustrated by Six Large Highly-finished Wood-Engravings, arranged and engraved by George Measom, from Original Designs by [illegible] Esq. Author of "The Wrecked Home, 2. Road into Ruin, 3. The Wreck of Gold. 4. The Child Repentance. 5. Old Happy Days. 6. Home." London: DARTON and Co., 58, Holborn Hill, and 30 Paternoster Row, and all Booksellers.

MESSRS. DEAN and SON invite the attention of those engaged in trades in the Sewing Reviews, selected from a large assortment, recommendatory of MISS CORNER'S Illustrated School-Books. Also of MISS CORNER'S Illustrated Primer for the School-room." Spectator.—"Miss Corner is accomplished, in addition to her literary acquirements, in the art of design. Corner is singular and fascinating [illegible] Miss Corner regulated a deserved celebrity for the study [illegible] the manner which is really history. Corner's Accurate Histories, commencing at the earliest periods, and continued to the present time, are interspersed with faithful descriptions of the manners, the domestic habits, and condition of the people in different epochs of their history, and constitute

Just published, price, in a Wrapper, 1s.; on Tinted Paper, 2s. 6d.,
THE GIFT; a Treatise on the Fading Influence on Man.
Illustrated by Six Large Highly-finished Wood-Engravings, arranged and engraved by George Measom, from Original Designs by [illegible] Esq. Author of "The Wrecked Home, 2. Road into Ruin, 3. The Wreck of Gold. 4. The Child Repentance. 5. Old Happy Days. 6. Home." London: DARTON and Co., 58, Holborn Hill, and 30 Paternoster Row, and all Booksellers.

MESSRS. DEAN and SON invite the attention of those engaged in trades in the Sewing Reviews, selected from a large assortment, recommendatory of MISS CORNER'S Illustrated School-Books. Also of MISS CORNER'S Illustrated Primer for the School-room." Spectator.—"Miss Corner is accomplished, in addition to her literary acquirements, in the art of design. Corner is singular and fascinating [illegible] Miss Corner regulated a deserved celebrity for the study [illegible] the manner which is really history. Corner's Accurate Histories, commencing at the earliest periods, and continued to the present time, are interspersed with faithful descriptions of the manners, the domestic habits, and condition of the people in different epochs of their history, and constitute

The Histories of	bound with the Bible	Without
ENGLAND and WALES; five fine plates and map		2s 6d
IRELAND; three fine plates and map		2s 6d
SCOTLAND; three fine plates and map		2s 6d
GREECE; five fine plates and map		3s 6d	3s 6d
ROME; five fine plates and map		3s 6d	3s 6d
a full Chronological Table		2s 6d

A distinct Prospectus of the above Histories, by Miss CORNER, may be had for distribution, free, on application
Just published, with Illustrations, price 1s. 6d. sewed, or 2s. 6d. bound
The Pictorial Primer, or EASY GRAMMAR, by Miss CORNER Also, by the same Author, and at same price, 21 EASY LESSONS IN HISTORY OF ENGLAND, for Children
CHARLES BUTLER'S GUIDE TO GREEK KNOWLEDGE; or, Catechism of the most Useful Information, in 6d., bound in cloth
CHARL'S BUTLER'S EASY GUIDE TO GEOGRAPHY, and Key to it, 1s. 6d.—Seven Maps, 1s. 6d.—Twenty-four Maps, and Globes, 1s. 6d.—bound
DEAN and SON, [illegible] Threadneedle-street; and by order of all Booksellers

NO MORE MEDICINE for Indigestion, Nervousness, Low Spirits, Biliousness, Torpidity of the Liver, Flatulency, Palpitation of the Heart, and Irregularity of the Intestines, &c., Published by Dr. [illegible] Price 6d., or 8d. (in stamps) free per post, the fifth edition of DU BARRY on INDIGESTION: A Popular Treatise, with numerous cases practically illustrating the Restoration of Health to the most feeble, delicate, or shattered constitutions without Medicine, or artificial means of any kind, by a simple and infallible means.—Du Barry and Co., 77a, New Bond-street, London.

MR. AINSWORTH'S NEW ROMANCE.
Now ready, at all the Libraries, in 3 vols.,
THE LANCASHIRE WITCHES.
By W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, Esq.
HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street

LE JOURNAL POUR RIRE, published every Saturday, price 5d.—Caricatures and other humorous Sketches, drawn by the best French Caricaturists. Sold by all Booksellers and Newsmen in London, Office de Publicité, 1 A, North Wellington-street, Strand." The trade supplied

TO THE READING PUBLIC.—The commencement of a New Volume of THE BUILDER with the New Year offers a good opportunity to those who may desire to subscribe to it. THE BUILDER will be found to contain matter interesting to all Owners of Property, Architects, Engineers, Builders, Artists, Antiquaries, and to the general student. It is constantly quoted by the periodical press throughout the country, and may be found on the table of the most illustrious guestships of the kingdom in the library of the clergyman, the architect, the artist, and the work-room of the operative. The Illustrations, which are in the first style of art, include all important new buildings. The price is 6d., or stamped, 7d. Office, 2, York-street, Covent-garden.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING,
THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON ALMANACK for 1849.
Being the Fifth Annual Issue of this most beautifully-embellished and Useful Almanack.
Illustrated by RICHARD DOYLE, B. FOSTER, &c.; and finely Engraved by BALDRY, WHITELEY, &c.
Country Scenes, by THOMAS MILLER; besides a variety of Useful Tables never to be found in Almanacks
The Astronomical Department, by JAMES GLAISHER, Esq., F.R.A.S., and of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich
Published by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, London.
Sold by all Booksellers, Price One Shilling, or free by post for 1s. 6d.
 The ILLUSTRATED LONDON ALMANACK is forwarded to Post-paid on receipt of an additional Sixpence.

Just published, price 1s., in neat wrapper, 1s. 6d. bound,
THE FAMILY ECONOMIST: containing Original Articles by the best writers, on Domestic Economy, Education, Sanitary Reform, Cottage Gardening and Farming, also, Social Sketches, Moral Tales, Family Secrets, and valuable Household Recipes. Volume First—1848.—London: SOULSBRIDGE and SONS, Paternoster-row, and sold by all Booksellers.

SUPERIOR SCHOOL BOOKS
BUTTER'S ETYMOLOGICAL SPELLING-BOOK and EXPOSITOR; an introduction to the Spelling, Pronunciation, and Derivation of the English Language. 114th edition, revised and greatly Improved, price 1s. 6d. bound
BUTTER'S GRADATIONS in READING and SPELLING, upon an entirely new and original plan. 24th edition, price 1s. 6d. bound.
BUTTER'S GRADUAL PRIMER. 24th edition, price 6d.
Sold by Simpkin and Co., Whittaker and Co., Longman and Co., Hamilton, and Co., Darton and Co., Aylott and Jones, Relfe and Fletcher, Orr and Co., London; J. and C. Manley, Derby; Oliver and Boyd, Edinburgh, J. M'Glashan, Dublin.

NEWSPAPERS.—The Times, Herald, Post, and Chronicle, forwarded on the day of publication at 2d each per quarter, and on the day after at 1d. 6d. per quarter. The above is the lowest price at which newspapers and periodicals can be ensured. A New List of all the London Newspapers and Magazines, with Prices Publishers, &c., may be had Gratis of J. NASH and Co., General Newspaper Agents, 3, Saville-place, Regent-street; and 4, Bowling-green-court, Portland Place, Established 1830

AN ELEGANT CHRISTMAS PRESENT for 1s. RIMMEL'S PERFUMED MINIATURE ALMANACK is a very pretty novelty for keeping a most delightful and lasting perfume in pocket-handkerchiefs, card-cases, desks, work-boxes, &c. Price 1s., or sent by post on receipt of 13 stamps. To be had of all perfumers, chemists, and stationers. Manufactured by the inventor, E. RIMMEL, Perfumer, Sole Proprietor of the Ladies' Own Soap, Bouquet de Jenny and Parfum Du Roi, &c., 39, Gerrard-street, Soho, London.

ANCIENT COINS and MEDALS.—PETER WHELAN, Dealer in Ancient Coins, Medals, &c., 36, opposite Bridge-street, Blackfriars, has a choice lot of Ancient Coins, on sale at low prices, adapted for Christmas Presents. Pamphlets of William Conqueror, 2s. each; Alexander the Great, 4s. 6d.; Roman Denarii, 2s. each; Roman Brass, 6d. and 1s.; all with good Portraits; Antiquaries of the French Revolution of 1793, in book, 2s. 6d. Informs Gentlemen and Collectors generally, that he has made a reduction of 15 per cent. off his Catalogue, which is now 3s.—The Catalogue sent on receipt of two stamps.

EAU DE COLOGNE MADE at HOME.—The secret of making this admired perfume will be imparted for any one desirous to forestall consumption. From the receipt offered, it can be prepared without the least trouble, at the cost of a few pence per bottle, and is guaranteed to equal any ever imported from the manufactory of Jean Marie Farina, of the Jülich's Place Eau de Cologne. All communications must express the intention of [illegible] Chertsey, Surry

IMPORTANT to INVALIDS.—FINLEY'S Genuine TRANSPARENT ARABIAN CEMENT.—Patronised by the Nobility. As an invaluable Cement for repairing China, Glass, Crystals, Stone, Marble, and every description of Ornamental Fancy Articles, which in most Features is invisible.—May be had at HANNAY and DISTRICTEER'S, 63, Oxford-street; and at 3, Gloucester-terrace, Kensington, Fancy Repositories, &c., in town and country. Manufactured solely by T. FINLEY, No. 38, John-street, Blackfriars.—In Boxes, at 1s each, with

GIBBINS'S CREAM of ROSES and ROSEMARY. This esteemed article is offered to the Public by GIBBINS, Court Perfumer to her Majesty, 7, Great King-street, St. James's-square, as the most delicate and effectual preservative of the Hair. Its application promotes the growth and luxuriance of the [illegible] or ill uses, the astringent properties prevent it falling off. Sold by GIBBINS, 7, Great King-street, St. James's-square

BINYON'S Elastic CHEST EXPANDER. Stooping of the Shoulders and Contraction of the Chest are easily prevented, and gently and effectually removed, in Youth, and Health and Symmetry promoted at any age, by the use of this improved Elastic Chest Expander, which is light, simple, easily applied either above or beneath the dress, and very efficient in any uncomfortable constriction or impediment to exercise.—Sent per post, by Mr. E. BINYON, sole manufacturer and patentee, No. 65, Tavistock-street, Covent-Garden, London; or full particulars, with prices and mode of measurement on receipt of a postage stamp.

CHRISTMAS and NEW YEAR'S PRESENTS.—RICHARD MOSELY and Co. feel highly gratified at the very great patronage bestowed on their new Invention, GOLD PENS, and have recommend them as the most useful and elegant presents. Likewise their GOLD and SILVER CASES, with Ever-pointed Pencil and Pen, of extreme delicacy, and of the best quality only.—Observe the name on every genuine article.—Sold by all stationers, jewellers, &c.—Manufactory, 5, Hen's-garden, London.

PATENT GALVANIC PENS.—RICHARD MOSLEY and Co. with pleasure and confidence announce another triumph in the PATENT GALVANIC STEEL PEN. Perhaps there never was a contrivance based on natural laws so simple, so means are so admirably adapted to the end as in this beautiful article. Mosley and Co. have the honour to announce for general purposes at first extremely soft, but it is subject to corrosion and rust, which eats away the fibre of the nib, and destroys it. Now this is an error prevented by a small bar of rose placed parallel with the slit, which, on the application of the ink, produces a galvanic action that altogether prevents a oxidation of the steel, and at the same time serves as a reservoir, sufficient to last for hours the usual quantity of ink, so allowing it to flow freely as required. The scientific world will at once comprehend the value of which they are; and Richard Mosley and Co. have no doubt from their cheapness and utility, that they will in time supersede all other pens.—Sold by all bookseller, stationers, throughout the kingdom; and the Patentees, 5, Hatton Garden.

MAPS (CHRISTMAS and NEW YEAR'S PRESENTS.) 4, Leadenhall-street, is one of the season approaching when love and friendship give their tangible testimonials. Mudie's Select Library begs to provide an abundance of objects of tasteful selection. None need deny themselves the luxury of giving, for he must have the most costly articles are to be found at his Repository of Utilities and Elegancies. England has always been prominent for her Christmas liberality, while "I love my Dad" of our lively neighbours, the French, is equally concentrated to the gifts of affection. Mudie invites a visit from the naturalist, geologist, his sanctum, where they may be sure of putting their kind intentions into an acceptable shape. Among the most splendid work of Paper Mache Manufacture, London at the most moderate prices is anything for the Toilet and Work Table, Dressing-cases, Blotting-books, &c.—Mudie's Select Library, 4, Leadenhall-street

NO. 8, KING WILLIAM-STREET, CITY, PRESENT PRICES OF TEA FOR CASH ON DELIVERY

BLACK TEA.	Per lb	GREEN TEA.	Per lb
Good Strong Congou	2 8	Good Gunpowder	3
Very fine Congou	3 0	Very fine Ditto	3 4
Strong Congou, Souchong	3s 2d to 3 5	Young Hyson	3s 2d to 3 5
Fine Souchong	3 8	Fine Imperial	3 8
Finest Congou imported	4 0	Imperial Gunpowder	3s 8d to 4
Pekoe	4 0	Superfine Imperial	4 0
Fine Pekoe	4 4	Gunpowder, strong	3s 4d to 4
The best Souchong	4 8	Fine to finest Gunpowder	3s 8d to 5

LOPPER.

There is no doubt many consumers of Coffee have tried the various [illegible] to which this berry has been lately subjected. We know [illegible] to be a source of disappointment, not only with regard to any

SUPPLEMENT TO THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 350.—Vol. XIII.] CHRISTMAS, 1848. [Number and Supplement, 1s.

CHRISTMAS MORALITIES.

The moralities of Christmas! And what are they? Are not moralities always moralities? And is there any season in which it is more proper than in others to exhibit and to practise them? Certainly not. Christmas moralities and virtues are those of the whole year; but at Christmas time the heart, for once, is more our teacher than the world. We are more willing than usual to listen to the promptings of the inner voice, and to encourage kindly sentiments towards each other. We do not speak of Christmas Day merely. That is a day sacred to all hearts, and every pulpit in the land has a privileged expositor of its sanctity. We speak of Christmas time—the period intervening between Christmas Eve and Twelfth Night—the close of the Old Year and the beginning of the New; and we seek to discover the social idea that both embellishes and consecrates it.

To many Christmas is a time of sorrow. The man hard buffeted by the world, who has struggled during a whole year to make both ends meet, and to retain his social position, dreads the examination of his affairs, which he too surely knows will prove that all his efforts have been in vain. To him Christmas is but the remembrancer of distress, and the shadow of approaching calamity.

> Stern Ruin's ploughshare drives elate
> Full on his bloom,
> And crushed beneath the furrow's weight
> Shall be his doom.

Yet even such a man may, if he pleases, find consolation at Christmas, not only by forgetting the perplexities of his position for the one day, in which men resolve to throw off care, but by learning to look the worst steadily in the face, and so gather strength to rise above it. But it is only to the struggling—and they are, unfortunately, a large class in this world of keen competition—that Christmas comes robed in terrors. To the rich man, who is master of his own wealth, and to that happy character, the rich poor man, whose wants are measured by his means, Christmas times are ever genial. The social sentiment which fills the minds of all who reflect, or of multitudes who do not reflect, is that of a rubbing off of scores with all men, moral as well as pecuniary; of a beginning again with new hopes, and of a celebration of the compact with ourselves and the world—by hospitality, good fellowship, and good wishes. The main idea is derived from the religious character of the festival: it is that of forgiveness. Of all the social virtues forgiveness is, perhaps, the most prolific. Like all unselfish feelings it is a blessing to self. We forgive for the delight of forgiving; and we increase thereby our own chance of forgiveness. It is not in the bargain, but it is paid to us. We did not sow the one seed in anticipation of such a harvest; but we gain an abundant crop, all the more precious because utterly unexpected. To banish animosity from our breast is to get rid of a disagreeable and troublesome visitor; to expel hate is to free ourselves from a corroding disease. But it is far better even than that; for we not only expel that which is unpleasant and hurtful, but in the place of it we receive, and make one with our own being—spirit of our spirit—that which is pleasant and beneficial. Go out, Hatred—come in, Love! Get thee gone, Rancour: and welcome, most welcome, thou sweet-visaged and full-souled Charity! The heart being once opened to forgive, cannot be shut again immediately. A whole train of generous feelings, that only want encouragement and an open door, rush in and take possession, and cannot be extruded again in one day, although we should try ever so much. Forgiveness may not, like Mercy, be twice blessed. It may not bless the man who is forgiven. It may be scorned and contemned; but what of that? The more it is scorned, the greater is its brilliancy; the greater the contempt or ingratitude with which it is received, the greater its own merit. Besides, the man forgiven may not know that he is forgiven. There is no ostentation in the matter. There may be Mercy without Forgiveness; but wherever Forgiveness is, Mercy cannot be absent. Mercy, too, may be proud and haughty, and even revengeful; but Forgiveness is always humble. A savage may be merciful; but it takes a Christian to forgive.

CAROL SINGING IN THE CO[illegible]. DRAWN BY DODGSON—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

The minor virtues of Christmas time are all contagious. When all the world forms good wishes for a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year, who is the churl that would refuse to respond to them or share them? If it be true that "one fool makes many," it is still more true that good wishes beget good deeds. Kindly feelings are as epidemic as foolish ones; perhaps more so. In ordinary seasons the distance between the tongue and the heart may be somewhat long and devious; but the good wishes that are upon the tongues of all men must perforce take up their habitation in the hearts of some of them.

The hospitalities of an English Christmas are proverbial all over the world. From the Monarch in the halls of Windsor down to the humblest peasant or mechanic in his cottage or lodging some hospitality is exercised at Christmas. Every family, according to its means, makes merry for this day. And while there is feasting among the rich the poor are not neglected. The good old English gentleman of the ballad is a type of all English at the period of Christmas—

> For while he feasted all the rich
> He ne'er forgot the poor.

The palace and the hall rejoice, and the workhouse shares the universal feasting of the occasion. Paupers for once, at least, in the melancholy round of the year are made partakers, not of the good feelings, which, we trust, they always share, but of the good cheer that is in fashion for one day in the three hundred and sixty-five. So strong is the sentiment of the day that even grim justice has been known to relax, and permit the cell of the prisoner to be irradiated by such hospitable sympathy, as roast beef and plumb pudding can afford to their recipients. There are thousands upon thousands of magnificent spectacles that no eye ever sees in the aggregate of their magnificence, but which the active brain can nevertheless imagine. What a spectacle, for instance, England would afford on this, or any other 25th day of December, to an eye so far raised up above our atmosphere, and so penetrating, as to be able to look into its myriad habitations—palaces, castles, towers, halls, villas, cottages, and hovels; whether in hamlet, village, town, or metropolis, all at the same time! What an irradiation of smiling faces would look up into the cold wintry air! What genial gathering together of families and friends would dot the large and living map with multitudinous spots of light; small as the glow-worm's lamp in some places, but still clear and visible: and in others, large and varied as a city illumination! But though we cannot see these things, we know that such things are. We know that parents and children, friends and lovers, are associated for the purposes of intercommunion and hospitality; and that love, under some one or other of its various manifestations of parents for children, children for parents, the young for each other, and of neighbour for neighbour—is the presiding spirit of these homely and homeful festivals.

> With joy unfeigned brothers and sisters meet,
> The social hours, swift-winged, unnoticed fleet.
> The parents, partial, eye their hopeful years.

We know that under thousands and tens of thousands of mistletoe-boughs kind words are said, and sweet vows registered often without the aid of words at all, though certainly not without the aid of lips, and eyes, and pressure of the palms. We know, too, that acquaintanceship becomes warmer, friendship more cemented, and love more loving, under the influence of this day! and we forgive Christmas its bills (which would have to be paid some time or other), for the sake of the charity and goodwill which it fosters through all ranks of society. Therefore we say, Blessings upon Christmas, and to each and all of our readers may it prove a Merry one!

ON CHRISTMAS CAROLS.

BY R. H. HORNE.

WITH AN ILLUSTRATION BY DODGSON.

In preparing to take a seasonable, and therefore a genial survey of the half festive half religious songs, entitled Christmas Carols, we are stopped at the outset by two considerations, each claiming precedence. Since it is quite clear they cannot both stand first, we must attend to them separately. The two considerations to which we refer are these: the claims of the ancient Carols, such as were sung in the days of the Anglo-Saxon Kings after their conversion to Christianity, and in the festivities of the same season among the Danish and Anglo-Norman Kings, all of whom "wore their crowns in public" on the occasion, which, with other less remote dates, take precedence in respect of time; and the claims of the modern Carols, dating from Herrick, or rather from Milton's Hymn to the Nativity, which must certainly take precedence of all others for its poetic grandeur, and, we may add, its divine fervour. Settled, however, this point must be before we can proceed; and it may be as well, therefore, to commence at once with our friends in the olden time.

As early as the first and second centuries, we find that the Birth of Christ was celebrated. In the third century, this "holy night" was kept with so many festivities, that Gregory Nazianzen, who died A.D. 389, and other Christian teachers of the time, considered it necessary to caution the people against making the liberties resemble a heathen rite, by forgetting the heavenly objects in an excess of feasting, singing, and dancing. It would also appear that these exhortations to sobriety were partly intended as a wise caution and salutary warning; for, in the same age, there is the record of a horrible atrocity, in the shape of a wholesale massacre, committed when an indulgence in these festivities had thrown the people off their guard. A multitude of Christians—men, women, and children, of all ages—had assembled in the temple, at Nicomedia, in Bithynia, to commemorate the Nativity in the height of their happiness, when all the wickedness and cruelties of the world were forgotten, Diocletian the Tyrant surrounded the temple with his soldiers, who set it on fire, and nearly twenty thousand people were burned alive, or otherwise destroyed on the occasion.

The Anglo-Saxon Kings, having been converted, held the festival of the Nativity with great solemnity and splendour, and displayed the greatest hospitality to all strangers of rank. A similar course was adopted by the Danish and Anglo-Norman Kings. Nor were these ceremonies by any means confined to solemn observances; on the contrary, the descendants of those who, in Pagan times, had been used to quaff great bowls of wine in honour of Thor and Odin, now drank them to commemorate the Apostles, the Virgin and other sacred names. A curious Anglo-Norman Carol, of the date of the thirteenth century, is given by Mr. Brand, in his "Popular Antiquities" (vol. i, p. 371), which is, to all intents and purposes, a jolly bacchanalian song, for a bass voice. The greatest rejoicing and merriment prevailed, particularly as displayed in dancing, and singing Carols; and, to such an excess had this been carried, that a preposterous legend has grown out of it, carefully handed down by William of Malmesbury, who gravely relates how that fifteen young women and eighteen young men were dancing, and singing Carols (A.D. 1012) in the church-yard of a church dedicated to St. Magnus, on the day before Christmas, whereby they greatly disturbed one Robert, a priest, who was performing mass in the church; how that the said Robert sent to tell them to desist, but they would not listen; how this Robert offered up prayers for a suitable punishment; and how that the whole party were miraculously compelled to continue singing and dancing for a whole year, night and day, without ceasing—feeling neither heat nor cold, hunger nor thirst, weariness nor want of sleep; and, though their clothes did not wear out with all this inordinate exercise, yet the earth beneath them did; so that, when they left off, the earth had worn away all round them to the depth of several feet, while they danced in the hollow.

The earliest Carol is, of course, the Nativity Carol mentioned in Luke (c. ii. v. 14), which was sung by the angels. In the twelfth book of "Paradise Lost" this hymn is thus mentioned:—

> His place of birth a solemn angel tells
> To simple shepherds, keeping watch by night:
> They gladly thither haste, and by a quire
> Of squadron'd angels hear his Carol sung.

Other hymns were gradually composed on this subject; and it is stated by Mr. Brand, in his "Popular Antiquities," on the authority of an ancient Ritualist, that "in the earlier ages of the Church, the bishops were accustomed, on Christmas Day, to sing Carols among the clergy." So say Durand and others.

But it is time to give the reader a few specimens of the "Christmas Carols" of our forefathers.

Amidst a great mass of very questionable stuff, not to call it rubbish, some of our earliest Carols possess a peculiar beauty—a sort of devout innocence and happy faith, very refreshing in themselves, and more especially when compared with the modern, as well as the elder rubbish to which we have alluded. The first we shall select is from the Harleian MSS. (No. 5396—time of Henry VI.); printed, also, in Ritson's "Ancient Songs." Bishop Taylor considers it identical with the earliest one, which the Angels sung to the Shepherds:—

CHRYSTO PAREMUS CANTICAM EXCELSIS GLORIA.

> When Chryst was born of Mary, free,
> In Bethlehem, that fayre citee,
> Angels sang with mirth and glee
> In excelsis gloria!
>
> Herdsmen behold these angels bright,
> To them appearing with great light,
> And sayd God's Son is born this night,
> In excelsis gloria!
>
> This King is coming to save mankind,
> Declared in Scripture as we fynde,
> Therefore this song have we in mind,
> In excelsis gloria!

Two words, illegible in the MS., we have been obliged to supply, and to modernize several Anglo-Saxon characters and abbreviations. All the rest is verbatim.

In one of the Coventry pageants, in the early part of the 15th century, several songs are introduced, rude in structure, but, as Sandys thinks, fairly entitled to be regarded as Carols. The one we are about to quote is unquestionably a Carol:—

SONG BY THE SHEPHERDS.

> As I rode out last night, last night,
> Of three joyous shepherds I saw a sight,
> And all about their fold a star shone bright—
> So merrily the shepherds their pipes can blow.

SONG BY THE WOMEN.

> Lul-lee, lul-lay, thou little tiny child—
> Bye-bye, lul-lee, lul-lay!
>
> O sisters too, how may we do
> For to preserve this day,
> This poor youngling, for whom we do sing
> Bye-bye, lul-lee, lul-lay.
> Herod the King, in his raging,
> Charged he hath this day
> His men of might, in his own sight,
> All young children to slay.
>
> Then woe is me, poor child, for thee,
> And ever we mourn and say,
> For this journey wild, thou little tiny child,
> Bye-bye, lul-lee, lul-lay.

Carols were much in request during the whole of this century, as we learn from the above and other authorities. Tusser mentions one to "be sung to the tune of 'King Solomon;'" and in the time of Shakspeare Carols were continually sung about the streets at Christmas.

A Latin poem by Naogeorgus, a Bavarian, written in the sixteenth century, and made English, after a fashion, by Barnaby Goodge, alludes to the Carol singing of the time, with its various customs, which were evidently far more jocund than reverential.

> Three weekes before the day whereon was born the Lord of Grace,
> And on the Thursdays, boys and girls do runne in every place,
> And bounces and beats at every doore, with blows and lustie snaps,
> And cris the Advent of the Lord, not born as yet, perhaps,
> And wishing to the neighbours all, that in the houses dwell,
> A happy yeare, and everything to spring and prosper well.

We must conclude, with one or two more specimens, our account of the ancient Carols, together with the merry songs of the season; and we cannot refrain making our selection once again of a song on the head of the forest-lord of yore. It is ushered in, as usual, with trumpets and minstrelsy:—

CAROL

On bringing Boare's Head, used before Christmas Prince, at St. John Baptist's College, Oxford, Christmas, 1607.

> The boare is dead,
> See, here is his head;
> What man could have done more
> Than his head off to strike,
> Maleager like,
> And bringe it as I doe, before?
>
> He, living, spoyled
> Where good men toyled,
> Which made kind Ceres sorrye;
> But now dead and drawne,
> Is very good for brawne,
> And we have brought it for ye.
>
> Then set downe the swineyard,
> The foe to the vineyard,
> Let Bacchus crowne his fall;
> Let this boare's head and mustard
> Stand for pig, goose, and custard,
> And so you are welcome all!

The other Carols with which we intended to terminate our account of these songs of the olden time, we find, on further consideration, to be too long for extract. As, however, they are of the legendary character, we must content ourselves with telling the story of one of the best.

The first is called "The Carnal and the Crane." The Star in the East was so bright that it shone into King Herod's Chamber and alarmed him. He questioned the Wise Men about it, who told him that a babe was born this night who should have power which no King could destroy. Herod pointed to a roasted cock which was on a dish before him, and said, "That bird shall as soon be able to crow three times as this thing be true which ye tell." Whereupon feathers instantly grew over the roasted cock, and he rose high on his legs and crowed three times standing up in the dish!

We pass on to the popular broad-sheet Carols, of a rather more modern date. Though the majority be very wretched stuff, there will sometimes be found verses that appeal directly to the feelings by their homely strength, and coming from the heart of the writers.

> Oh, pray teach your children, man,
> The while that you are here;
> It will be better for your souls
> When your corpse lies on its bier.
>
> To-day you may be alive, dear man,
> Worth many a thousand pound;
> To-morrow may be dead, dear man,
> And your body laid under ground:
>
> With one turf at your head, O man,
> And another at your feet,
> Thy good deeds and thy bad, O man,
> Will all together meet.

In the century preceding the present, the wassail bowl was commonly carried, on Christmas eve, to the houses of the nobles and gentry, with songs, in return for which a small present was expected. As midnight approached, the carol-singers and bell-ringers prepared to usher in the morning of the Nativity with the usual rejoicings, so that all at once bells rang in the middle of the night, singing was heard, and bands of music went playing through the towns and villages and outskirts, and round about to all the principal houses of the county families. In the West of England the Carol-singers often used to repair to the church porch, or to the porch of some ancient house, to sing in Christmas morning; and it is a rural scene of this kind which the Artist has pourtrayed in the illustration that accompanies the present account.

A similar scene is described by the author of the "Sketch-Book," on his visit to Yorkshire at this time of the year. He awoke in the night with the sound of music beneath his window, which then floated off to a distance. Then there was singing, which sounded in the porch. "In the morning," he says, "as I lay musing on my pillow, I heard the sound of little feet pattering outside of the door, and a whispering consultation. Presently, a choir of small voices chanted forth an old Christmas Carol, the burden of which was—

> Rejoice! our Saviour, he was born
> On Christmas-day in the morning

It is extraordinary, considering the beauty and grandeur of the subject—comprising, as it does, in its essence, the whole history of humanity, its errors, its sufferings, its hopes, and final victory—how very few poets have written Carols. We only know of one great poet who has done so—need we say that this one was Milton? (Goethe and Coleridge have each written a Carol, but of no very remarkable kind.) It must not, however, be forgotten, that Herrick has written several very beautiful Carols, not displaying any strength of vision or divine ardour, but characterised by a sweet poetical playfulness. Here is a verse from his

ODE ON THE BIRTH OF OUR SAVIOUR.

> Instead of neat enclosures
> Of interwoven osiers;
> Instead of fragrant posies
> Of daffodils and roses,
> Thy cradle, king'd stranger,
> As Gospell tells,
> Was nothing else
> But here a homely manger.

Another, by Herrick, is entitled

THE STAR-SONG.

The flourish of music; then followed the song.

> 1st Voice. Tell us, thou clearer and heavenly tongue,
> Where is the babe but lately sprung?
> Lies he the lillie-banks among?
>
> 2nd Voice. Or say, if this new birth of ours
> Sleeps, laid within some neat of flowers,
> Spangled with deaw-light, that can't clear
> All doubts, and manifest the where?
>
> 3rd Voice. Declare to us, bright Star, if we shall seek
> Him in the morning's blushing cheek;
> Or search the beds of spices through,
> To find Him out?
>
> Star. No, this ye need not do;
> But only come and see Him rest
> A princely babe, in's mother's breast.
>
> Chorus. He's seen! he's seen! why then around
> Let's kisse the sweet and holy ground!

To Milton's "Hymn on the Nativity" we need only allude once more, as the highest composition that has yet appeared on this subject, beyond all compare. We shall not make any extract from it, as it is within everybody's reach, which the specimens we have quoted from other sources are not.

Those who would seek further information on this subject, and read more of these songs of the olden time, will find abundance (in addition to those authors we have already quoted) in the Sloane, Harleian, and other MSS. in the British Museum; Ritson's "Ancient Songs," &c. A small, but very choice, collection has recently been brought out by Cundall—bound, of course, according to the most perfect models of the ancient art, with carved boards, embossed covers, and illuminated pages. Those who are desirous of obtaining modern Carols, carefully written to scriptural texts, and adapted to the ancient tunes (the music of which is given), may be amply supplied from a little work published by J. W. Parker, entitled "Christmas Carols, with Appropriate Music," and adorned with a frontispiece, engraved from some picture by one of the old masters; of the beauty of which it is not too much to say, that it is worthy of the subject.

FRIENDS TOGETHER.

A CHRISTMAS CHANT AND CHORUS.

BY LEIGH HUNT.

Friends, together met this day,
In the good old Christmas way,
With its merry pastimes rare,
And its jolly unwholesome fare,
And its fire too good to bear,
And the old amazing noise
Of its young and its old boys,
And the mistletoe, which Molly
Hopes will make 'em still more jolly,
And the berries on its holly,
Like delighted Melancholy,
And a world of wise old folly;
Say, oh say! and let the sound
Run this happy circle round,
What's the height, the topmost blessing,
Of the bliss we're thus possessing?
What the crown of Christmas weather?
Friends together.

CHORUS.

Friends together;
Friends, well met and long together,
That's the crown of Christmas weather.

Friends together! words divine;
Sweetest test of Auld Lang Syne;
First, two small friends, full of glee,
Brotherly and sisterly,
Link'd in those fast-holding bands—
One another's little hands.
Schoolmates then, who, as they pace,
Arms o'er shoulders interlace.
Lovers next, ah! friends indeed,
If their loves clear youth exceed
(I have heard that some, for life,
Have been husband call'd, and wife).
Friends like us, then, met in mirth
In a corner of old earth,
And, in spite of earthly heaven,
Hoping we may meet in Heaven;
Hoping there for tearless weather,
Friends together.

CHORUS.

Friends together;
Knowing not a care together,
Such as spots e'en Christmas weather.

Care be welcome, if it be
Comfort's friend, not enemy;
Manhood's nerve, affection's test,
And the work secure of rest;
And to that good end withal,
And the weal of great and small,
Let us rise, sirs, one and all;
Not against one right possessor,
Not against the Queen, God bless her!
Not against the very assessor,
If he spare the poor man's dresser;
But with glasses, full and high,
Like the prospect in our eye,
And this wish to drink it by—
May the whole earth, like this table,
Making Christmas faith no fable,
Stand, ere long, in boodless weather,
Friends together.

CHORUS.

Friends together;
Rain or shine, not caring whether,
Bright in soul, and friends together.

PLUM-PUDDING.—A CHRISTMAS RHAPSODY.

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS BY KENNY MEADOWS.

WHO, that has lived to years of discretion, or floundered into an age of indiscretion, can say that maturity has ever afforded him such an object of intense gratification and love, as boyhood afforded him in a pudding? Not an ordinary pudding, of apple, cherry, damson, batter, or other every day material—but PLUM-PUDDING!—the pudding, in fact, before the patrician spirit of which all other puddings are vulgar, and to no one more than Reader, lay your hand upon your heart, and confess. Have you ever loved anything, in your later years, with the deep devotion you felt for Plum-Pudding when you were but ten or eleven years old? You may have loved some dear Mary, or Ellen, or Louisa, when you were nineteen or twenty; but was the love so all-pervading, so deeply passionate, so utterly engrossing, so insatiable, so long dwelt upon, as your love for pudding? Again I must answer that it was not, and could not have been. You may have loved Mary, or Ellen, or Louisa, very devotedly, and may even have deluded yourself with the romantic idea that you know what true love is; but if you never loved Plum-Pudding, before you reached your teens, with an unspeakable intensity of delight and fervour; and if you did not long for Christmas with a yearning affection, in order to behold, possess, and enjoy the idol of your stomach (and the stomach, if not the seat of the mind, is very often its master), you have missed an experience of life. You have not loved thoroughly. You are but half a man in the riches of your memory; and no future time can give you such a joy as you have lost. No! there is nothing in after life that yields such unalloyed delight as pudding yields to the boy. Is the man's money worth the boy's pudding? No! The money may be dearly prized, gloated over, and hardly won; but it never did and never can afford the deep satisfaction of pudding. The PLUM acquired by Smith or Jenkins, and upon which he retires into the country, at the age of sixty or thereabouts, to attend to his rheumatism and cultivate his cabbage-garden does not give him the same fierce joy to think of, and rapturous delight to hold, as the PLUM-PUDDING of that same Smith or Jenkins gave him when he wore a pinafore. The heart is seared and dry as a leaf before the "Plum" is gained. Experience has proved all things to be "vanity and vexation of spirit;" even gold itself; but the heart is fresh and new, and full of all sweet imaginings when Plum-Pudding is the prize.

If money be not comparable to pudding, neither are the other prizes for which men struggle. Fame? Pooh! What is fame in comparison with pudding? Rank? It is preposterous to imagine, if we weigh the delights of the one against the delights of the other, that rank would not kick the beam, and thus show, in the most convincing of modes, the superior weight and solidity of the boy's gratification.

Deep love, as we all know, is allied to sorrow. "The course of true love never did run smooth;" and what sorrow in love is there in that story of the boy, who, upon one delicious Christmas Day, having eaten his fill of pudding, was observed to burst into an uncontrollable passion of tears. "What are you crying for, Johnny?" said his father's guest, unaware of Johnny's weakness, or rather of the strength of his affection for pudding; "Because," said Johnny, sobbing vehemently, "I can't eat any more pudding!" "Fill your pockets, my little man!" said his father's guest, with consolatory sympathy and sage advice. "Oh!" replied Johnny, as distinctly as the paroxysm of his mighty tribulation would permit him, "I have! I have!"

Oh happy love, where love like this is found!
Oh heartfelt rapture!—bliss beyond compare!
I've paced much this weary mortal round,
And sage experience bids me this declare:
If heaven one taste of heavenly pleasure spare,
One cordial in this melancholy vale,
'Tis—

'Tis in delicious boyhood, on Christmas Day, when the pudding is served, and a large slice, smoking hot, is put into our plate by our fond mother. To talk of love under a hawthorn tree, in comparison with such delight as that, shows little knowledge of the real sources of enjoyment.

This quotation from Burns reminds me of the loss that literature has sustained in the ignorance of that poet of the merits of Plum-Pudding. He tasted a Scotch pudding—an unsightly, if not unseemly things, called a "Haggis," and he became inspired. What would his inspiration have been had he known what an English pudding was? Would he then have exclaimed, as he has done, that Haggis was

The great chieftain of the pudding race?

I should think not. Scotchman as he was, he would have degraded Haggis to its proper place, and thought it treason against the majesty of the real monarch of puddings, to have exalted into his high place so miserable and so plebeian a pretender. "They never saw dainties that think haggis a feast," says a proverb of his country, and like most proverbs it says truly. But

The sturdy Saxon, pudding-fed,
The trembling earth resounds his tread,
Clap in his strong right fist the blade,
He'll make it whistle;
And cut off leg, or arm, or head,
Like top of thistle!

I have often wondered who invented Plum-Pudding. The name of that benefactor of our species is lost in the night of ages. We may, however, speculate on this subject. It is, doubtless, to a woman that the world is indebted for this glorious discovery. Could she re visit this earth that she once adorned with her presence, and enlightened with her genius, and see how many homes she makes happy in this Christmas of 1848, and what thousands of dear little boys and girls do honour to her invention, what a felicity she would enjoy. I see her in my mind's eye at this moment, "fat, fair, and forty." She must have been moderately stout, for good-tempered people generally grow to a comfortable rotundity; and good-tempered she most assuredly was, or she could never have compounded so kindly and so genial a mixture as Plum-Pudding. Fair, I am positive she was. In her youth she must have been surpassingly so, and her mind, upon her face, spoke gentle peace, soft contentment, and purest serenity. She had, moreover, a large family of children whom she dearly loved, and who dearly loved her, for her own sake, as well as for the puddings. Then she must have been about forty (rather under, perhaps) when she applied the powers of her mind to the great work which was her appointed mission on earth. Such a work could not have been accomplished without much experience, and deep thought; unless we are to believe (and I would not lightly reject even that theory) that she was inspired for pudding as Shakspeare was for poetry. I feel, and know—though I cannot prove—that she was the model of a good mother, and a happy wife, and the adorner of her kind. I am certain that she was the benefactress of her country. It is a pity that we do not know her name, or any particulars of her history. We cannot even discover as much about her as of Shakspeare's father. The great fact about him is, that he could write his name. Whether she could do so it is impossible to say. Yet literary antiquarians, investigate this matter. What a prize her autograph would fetch! The City of London, that bought Shakspeare's autograph at a large price—not without sore grumbling, however, at the extravagance (lost money for City feasts)—would have given a double or a treble price for hers, or pudding is not pudding, and aldermen are not aldermen. Thus, the age in which she lived has not yet been ascertained—so little does the world know of its truest and best friends. It seems to me, that the lady must have been a Saxon, a contemporary, probably, of King Alfred. There were no Frenchmen those days, for Alfred himself cooked, or miscooked them in the shepherd's hut; and if peradventure, why not Plum-Pudding? There is a solidity in the fatty Saxon in the whole compound—strong and sweet substantiality, and fatty—generous and sufficing, but in no degree stupefying—that Plum-Pudding must be pronounced, on internal evidence, to be an invention of the Saxon mind. The tone of Alfred gave us trial by jury—an institution only second to the effects of Plum-pudding on the English character; and it is very likely that the same age produced them. Trial by Jury, Plum-Pudding, and Shakspeare! these are the triumphs of the Saxon! Do homage to the genius of the inventor of Plum-Pudding! Celebrate her merits, all ye mothers of the land! Love her, all ye little boys and girls! Bow down to her, Miss Acton! Mrs. Rundell! and Mistress Meg Dods, of the Cleikum Inn, St. Ronan's! And M. Soyer, of the Reform Club, confess, with humility, that, did she appear on earth again, you would kneel before her, and ask permission, like a gallant Frenchman, to kiss the ground upon which she trod.

Another theory might be started as to the invention of Plum-Pudding. As it is alleged that Homer did not compose the "Iliad;" that the poem is a kind of pudding of which the materials were furnished by many hands—the plums by one, the spices by another; so it is possible that no one person invented Plum-Pudding. There is a tendency to rob the authors of immortal works of the glory of their handiwork, or brainwork, and to deny even their existence. Many have denied that Homer lived at all; and, in our day, Shakspeare has been treated as a "Myth." Now, if these great names have suffered, I do not see why the inventor of Plum-Pudding should escape unscathed. Happily, however, for her memory, she has no name, or most assuredly it would not have been left unassailed. Obscurity is almost unassailable; nothingness is entirely so.

But we have pondered too long upon the past. Let us fix our thoughts upon the present. In a household where there are two or six children, the eldest not above ten or eleven, the making of the pudding is indeed an event. It is thought of days, if not weeks, before. To be allowed to share in the noble work, is a prize for young ambition. The chief reward for youthful merit in the early days of December, is to be allowed, on the 24th, to assist in picking the plums for that occasion. Little miss, with pride in her heart, and satisfaction in her eyes, sits that day at the table, and says in her soul, "I helped to make it." Even very father of such children, if he deserve pudding himself, shares their pleasure. If he be at all imaginative, all the faculties of the mind may be made available for the love of pudding. He has glorious visions of the very name. Raisins! They recal Turkey, and its men with long gowns, black beards, crooked scimitars, dark sparkling eyes, to say nothing of Circuits, Zuleikas, Bulbuls, and gardens of roses. Currants! They suggest Greece, and the Levant, and the old Greek city, which gave their name to these berries. Spice! That is still better; the word conjures up all Arabia, all Asia, Sinbad the Sailor, and the old Haroun-al-Raschid. Sugar! The word is suggestive of Jamaica, both sides Jim Crow, and Old Dan Tucker. Milk, Eggs, Fresh butter! These remind him of the country, and of rambles in the fields for buttercups and daisies, when he was a boy, and of many other things which he would not, perhaps, like to unfold in all their completeness to his wife. But tempus en passant. Flour! That suggests the sturdy miller, and the mill-stream, and the miller's daughter:—

On the banks of Allan water,
When the sweet spring-time did fall,
Was the miller's lovely daughter,
Fairest of them all.

Lemon-peel! That recals groves of citrons and oranges. Suet! That is the most disagreeable reminiscence; but even that, with a little effort, may be turned to pleasurable account; and the live oxen climbing the sunward hills may do duty for the butcher's shop. But I am wandering from the boys and girls: the pudding is theirs, not their father's. He is to dispense, and pay for it; but cannot expect to enjoy it as they do. He has gone through that phase of existence. He has had his delight, and can only renew it by looking kindly upon theirs. Banished from the kitchen upon all other occasions, the boys and girls are permitted to enter into its precincts on that grand day when the pudding is to be compounded. They are allowed a sight of those inexpressible mysteries. If it be cook that makes the pudding, great is cook, and much to be respected: if it be mother, greater than usual is mother, and dearer to the imaginations of those busy, excited, anxious, and most desireful little ones. But the taking up of the pudding is an event even more important. Lo! the lid is raised, curiosity stands on tip-toe, eyes sparkle with anticipation, little hands are clapped in extacy, almost too great to find expression in words. "The hour arrives—the moment wished and feared;"—wished, oh! how intensely; feared, not in the event, but lest envious fate should not allow it to be an event, and mar the glorious concoction in its very birth. And then when it is dished, when all fragrance of this kind are over, when the roast beef has been removed, when the pudding, in all the glory of its own splendour, shines upon the table, how eager is the anticipation of the near delight! How beautifully it steams! How delicious it smells! How round it is! A sky is round, the horizon is round, the earth is round, the moon is round, the sun and stars, and all the host of heaven are round. So is Plum-Pudding. Sharon Turner, in his "History of the World," affirmed the earth itself to be but a Plum-Pudding of a larger growth. It is cast in the type of Eternity. "The eye," says Mr. R. W. Emerson, "is the first circle; the horizon which it forms is the second; and throughout nature this primary figure is repeated without end." The philosopher did not give us pudding as an illustration of his thought; but he might have done so. It is almost a pity that such lovely roundness should be invaded by the ruthless knife; but it must be done. The "expectations things" sit and watch. Their eyes glisten; their mouths water. The pudding is divided, and eaten. Let us draw a veil over its ineffable delights. They are to be felt—not written about; and never until the same festival returns, in a twelvemonth, shall anything eatable inspire the same emotion in these youthful hearts.

Let no young reader be tempted by these praises to love pudding "unwisely and too well." Plum-Pudding, like all good things, is to be used and not abused:—

Little fools will eat too much,
But great ones not at all.

And too much pudding on the 25th of December renders necessary two rhubarb and magnesia, or the salts and senna of the 26th. "Punishment," says our philosopher of "Circles" in a wise and beautiful essay upon Compensation, "is a fruit that, unsuspected, ripens within the flower of the pleasure which concealed it. Cause and effect, means and ends, seed and fruit, cannot be severed; for it is effect already bloom in the cause." As with all other things, so with that crown of things—a Plum-Pudding. Love it wisely, and it shall love you. Love it unwisely, and you shall pay the penalty.

GRANDPAPA'S PRESENT.

WITH AN ILLUSTRATION BY DUNCAN

CHRISTMAS benevolence is of a household quality. Moreover, it decreases in proportion to the juniors, and is strong in proportion to the sensibility. Children expect from their parents all manner of gifts at Christmas time. "Christmas Presents" is a stereotype advertisement in mail-rail—an attractive tit for the Lord Mayor which have his hand all the year, but, thus baptized and denominated, gain a power which makes them universally attractive to the purchaser. But there is one parent, in particular, to whom children look up with a peculiar sort of expectation, and from whom to receive a gift is, as it were, to receive a blessing. We allude to the Grandfather. The relation is a sort of patriarchal one, and the accompanying sentiment is devout even to solemnity.

MAKING THE CHRISTMAS PUDDING.—DRAWN BY KENNY MEADOWS.—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

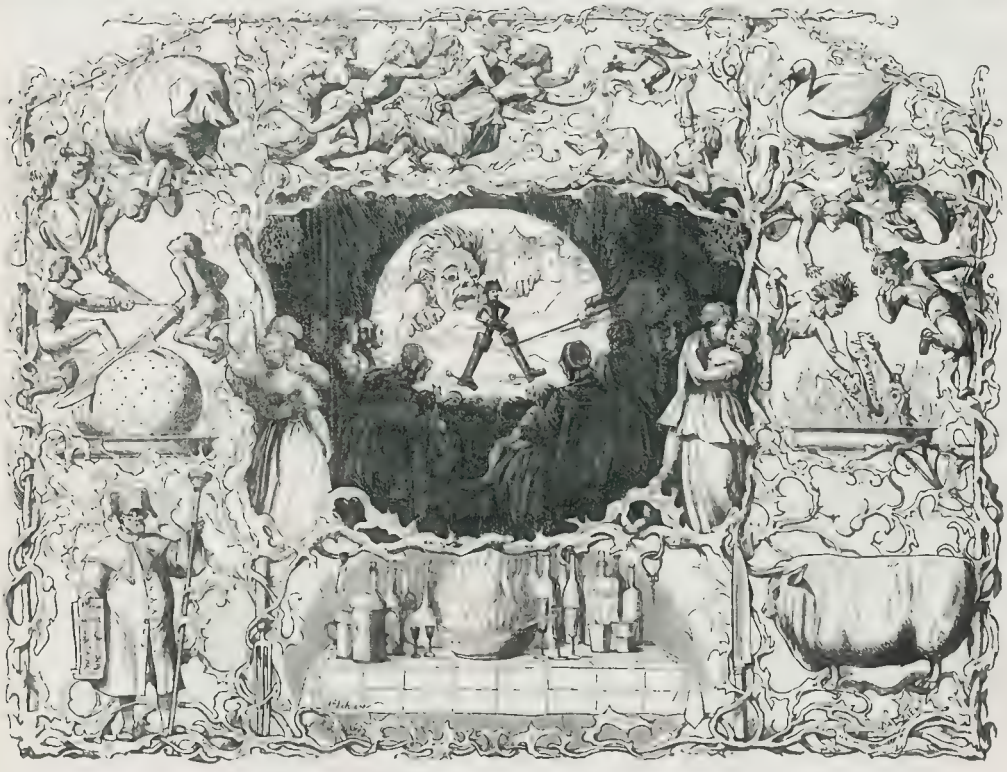
Grandpapa's Present at Christmas, as illustrated by the Artist, is a Hamper, well stuffed with most miscellaneous contents—such a Hamper as might well be called a Hanaper, and esteemed to hold a Royal Exchequer, so rich it seems in all that is good, so boundless in the amount of its wealth. And when it arrives, a Comptroller of the Hanaper would seem to be no inexpedient officer, so riotous is the onset made on the precious casket, and the jewels it enshrines, by the various claimants on its treasury.

GRANDPAPA'S CHRISTMAS HAMPER.—DRAWN BY DUNCAN.—(SEE PAGE 403.)



CHRISTMAS SPORTS.—DRAWN BY WEHNERT.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

The long-expected evening has at length come, when, as usual, the mysterious pannier is brought into the hall of the happy mansion—your's or mine, dear reader?—that is, every man's who is rejoicing in the Wife of his Youth and the Children of his Love. The Parcels' Delivery waggon stops at the door. How well are the sounds of its coming and its stopping known and distinguished! It has not passed by—the knock is heard—it is not designed for a neighbour. It belongs to this house. It is Grandpapa's Hamper!

The mother has said it, and said it with that joy which only mothers know. The father's countenance is also suffused with a smile. At length, the huge burthen is fairly deposited in the passage—with much difficulty is conveyed into the parlour, and found, of course, to be "carriage-paid."

And now comes the sense of mystery—the force of curiosity. What does it contain? That is the question lithographed on the anxious countenance of every child—boy and girl. What eager impatience! what vehement desire! what transport of expectation! When will it be opened? Why should there be a moment's delay? "O, do let us see what there is in it!"

It is opened! Why, it is a basket of baskets! Out with one, out with the other, out with all. Why, here is a basket of game! splendid addition to our Christmas dinner! and here a basket of fruit for the dessert afterwards. The game may be reserved—held sacred until served up by the cook, in due order, in season and place. But the fruit is irresistibly attractive. One boy plunges in his hand, and brings out a bunch of grapes in joy and triumph equal to a conqueror's! And there is a drum of figs! And there are apples, oranges—a countless store of all the season's fruit! Well, right well has grandpapa provided for his grandchildren. And, were he present, how would he delight in the joy which he has thus produced. The laughter of the ocean-waves, still dimpling in the sunlight, is comparable only to the ecstacy with which this magnificent gift has illuminated every countenance. On all faces there is the same expression of joy. Father, mother, sister, brother—all harmonise in the same feeling. And he, the author of this rapture, though afar from the spot, we may be certain, at least sympathises with the feeling. With a prophetic sentiment, he forefelt the happiness he designed to create; and now, by a mysterious law of communion, it is our belief that he partakes it in this moment of its realisation. At such an hour, said he, the Hamper will reach them! And now that it has done so, the old patriarch notes the time; and, seated in his easy chair, concentrates every thought and feeling on the imagination of a scene, distant, indeed, in space, but never absent from his mind.

"Where the treasure is, there will the heart be also."

CHRISTMAS SPORTS.

BY UNCLE TOM.

WITH AN ILLUSTRATION BY WEHNERT.

Let me suppose that the Christmas Dinner has been served and eaten—and that the reader has heard so much about Christmas cheer and old English fare as to render unnecessary any further expatiation upon their grandeur or their excellence—that the pudding, prime favourite and fiery symbol, as far as eating is concerned, of the great English festival of the year, has been displayed, steaming and delicious, and has been pronounced by all tasters, whether young or old, to have been super-excellent—that the dessert has been placed upon the table—and that all has been enjoyed that weak human nature can enjoy in the way of edibles and potables: what is next to be done at any comfortable circle, to which the reader is supposed to be invited? The thought arises in all minds—especially in the young ones—that something more should be done in celebration of the day. Eating and drinking are but vulgar modes of enjoyment (and it is astonishing how many people are to come to this conclusion after they have feasted sufficiently)—and something else is therefore to be thought of to keep up the genial hilarity of Christmas Night. What shall it be? I suppose a family circle, the members of which, both young and old, are aware of the claims of the poor and unhappy. They have distributed their bounty, according to their means, among all the needy within reach of it; they have not forgotten the servants that are warm in the kitchen, nor the beggar that is cold at the gate; and they have clear consciences, and nothing to trouble them, either done or undone, for the remainder of the day. The question is mooted at such a board as this; and a little musical voice of a boy of eight or nine, or of a girl of six or seven years of age, pronounces in favour of "Snap-Dragon." A voice more musical still, from blushing seventeen, of the softer sex, pronounces for a dance, possibly with some lurking visions of the Mistletoe-Bough; while a rough voice from the less interesting sex hints that "Hunt-the-Slipper" is a most delightful sport, the sly speaker having probably a sweetheart in the room, the "seventeen" aforesaid; and being anxious to come into such close proximity with her as "Hunt-the-Slipper" not only allows, but imperatively commands. Another voice, that of a boy from school, entering upon twelve or thirteen, hints that the exhibition of the Magic Lantern would be the best thing to begin with; and it is decided, after some dubiety all round, that the Magic Lantern shall, first of all, display its wonders to the impatient juveniles; that, if they behave themselves, "Snap Dragon" shall come next; that "Hunt-the-Slipper" will be a pleasant variety after "Snap Dragon;" that after "Snap-Dragon" "Forfeits" may be tried; and that the whole festivity may wind up with music and the dance, and kisses under the Mistletoe-Bough, to those who are fond of kisses.

This being agreed to, the next thing is to Put out the light, and then— the magic lantern shall display its marvels and its mysteries. The lights are extinguished accordingly; the magic apparatus is mounted and turned to the darkened wall, and little inquisitive boys and girls look on with almost breathless interest, and in pleased yet fearful anticipation of the revelations which are to be made. Behold! a mighty crocodile floats unwieldily over the bright space upon the wall. He is not quite so large as the Sea-Serpent of Captain M'Quhae, whose existence has been as logically disproved by Professor Owen, as Napoleon Bonaparte's was by the Archbishop of Dublin; but, nevertheless, he is a very large and voracious, and opens his leathern jaws to swallow a remarkable nigger in front of him. The nigger, nothing nothing of the presence of mind of Mr. Waterton, to jump upon its back and ride it. He runs away; the crocodile pursues; but, at the very moment when he is about to be swallowed up, both pursuer and pursued disappear into nothingness. The figure of a clown, merry as Grimaldi, comes next in rotation. He gambols upon the walls, pursued by a personage no less tremendous than grim Death himself. The King of Terrors brandishes his fatal dart, and grins horribly, in all the majesty of bone, jaw, skull, and teeth, with which the popular imagination has invested him. He, too, disappears; but his place is not left vacant. A figure somewhat more graceful and agreeable succeeds. It is Columbine—fresh, agile, and beautiful. At her feet, soliciting her smile, kneels our old friend Bottom, the weaver, his ass's head firmly fixed upon his shoulders. He has followed her from Titania's bower, to sue for the love that has long been promised to that identical Harlequin who comes next, kneeling at the feet of Queen Victoria. Titania follows, and dances a jig with Richard III., while Paganini, fiddling with might and main, ushers in Lady Macbeth and the King of the Cannibal Islands. And, last of all, comes a more coherent story, the whole adventures of Jack the Giant-Killer; that hero dear to all boys who have a particle of generosity and imagination in their souls. Does there exist a man who never envied Jack his seven-league boots and his invisible coat, and who never laughed at that inimitable trick by which he made the gluttonous, false-hearted Welsh giant commit suicide? If there do exist such a man, he is like the man who hath no music in his soul, and is most assuredly

Fit for treason, stratagems, and spoils.

Let no such man be trusted. He may possibly make his way in the world—he may pay his bills when they become due—he may be an alderman or a sheriff; he may die and leave money to endow an hospital; he may do all the fine things that wealthy men can do, but he will not be a kindly man; he will not lead a forlorn hope, or put himself out of his way to do or striking and paramount service to anybody—he will not set the Thames on fire, put his name to a bill to serve his friend, or do anything very chivalrous, romantic, foolish, or generous. No. The man who did not, when a boy, admire Jack the Giant-Killer, and sympathise, at the same time, with the woes, and rejoice in the good fortune of Jack who climbed the bean-stalk is a hard, dry man, with no poetry in his composition; and does not deserve to see Jack reproduced even in a magic lantern.

But this digression over, turn we to the giant of our lantern, and behold him struggling in the pit which Jack has dug for him, and which, as we all know, the cunning hero has covered over with furze, rushes, straw, and loose earth—a flimsy covering, upon which the unsuspecting monster has no sooner set his foot than down he goes—deep—deep—deeper—irretrievably deep—to be decapitated at the leisure of his daring conqueror. Behold how his jaws open, capacious enough to swallow Jack, boots and all! How his hair bristles on his head—each individual hair standing upright, not like the quills on the porcupine, but tall as a pine-tree of the forest. See how his eyes glare portentously large, like the broad disc of the orb of day shining, of a bright copper colour through the dense spoon-meat of a metropolitan fog in the month of November! For the benefit of this particular exhibition of his prowess, Jack has doffed his invisible coat, that he may be seen of all the world; and has donned his seven-league boots, that he may scamper faster than the wind; over hill, over dale, over bog, over brake, over river and lake, and pass over a whole city at one bound! O boots of delightful memory! How often, in the days are the beard grows, and ere the young heart learns to think that it belongs to a man, does Fancy, believing in your existence, long to get possession of you. Would we not astonish the good people of the nineteenth century, with our boots and our spurs! Would we, also, not kill giants and rescue distressed damsels! I should think we would—or we should not have the stuff in us, which enters largely into the formation of the true gentleman.

Jack's adventures, it may not be known to all readers, are founded upon the old Norse mythology; Jack himself being a personage no less mighty and remarkable than Thor, the godfather of our English Thursday. "Thor, the thunder God," says Mr. Carlile, "has been changed into Jack the Giant-Killer of our nurseries, with his miraculous shoes of swift ness, coat of darkness, and sword of sharpness." Mr. Carlile says truly. "They are one and the same, with this difference in their adventures, that Thor, god as he was, did not always succeed in his undertakings, or in his warfare against the giants; while Jack, the friend of our boyhood, is invariably successful. And, on closing the magic lantern for the night, having seen the last of Jack and the giants, it may be an agreeable variety in the amusements to hear another story of Jack's, or Thor's failures, recorded from the Norse Mythology, in the quaint language of our good friend, Mr. Carlile, who, among the other heroes deified in his book on "Hero-worship," speaks with much unction of Jack, under his more grandiloquent name of Thor.

"After various adventures," says he, "Thor, accompanied by Thialfi and Loke, his servants, entered upon Giantland, and wandered over plains, wild uncultivated places, among stones and trees. At nightfall they noticed a house; and, as the door, which indeed formed one whole side of the house, was open, they entered. It was a simple habitation—one large hall, altogether empty. They stayed there. Suddenly, in the dead of the night, loud voices alarmed them. Thor grasped his hammer, and stood in the doorway, prepared for fight. His companions within ran hither and thither in their terror, seeking some outlet in that rude hall: they found a little closet at last, and took refuge there. Neither had Thor any battle; for, lo! in the morning it turned out that the noise had been only the snoring of a certain enormous, but peaceable, giant—the giant Skrymir, who lay peaceably sleeping near by; and this that they took for a house was merely his glove thrown aside there: the door was the glove-wrist; the little close they had fled into was the thumb! Such a glove! I remark, too, that it had not fingers, as ours have; but only a thumb, and the rest undivided—a most ancient, rustic glove!

"Skrymir now carried their portmanteau all day; Thor, however, had his suspicions, did not like the ways of Skrymir, and determined at night to put an end to him as he slept. Raising his hammer, he struck down into the giant's face a right thunderbolt blow, of force to rend rocks. The giant merely awoke, rubbed his cheek, and said, 'Did a leaf fall?' Again Thor struck, as soon as Skrymir again slept, a better blow than before; but the giant only murmured, 'Was that a grain of sand!' Thor's third stroke was with both his hands (the 'knuckles white,' I suppose), and seemed to cut deep into Skrymir's visage; but he merely checked his snore, and remarked, 'There must be sparrows roosting in this tree, I think; what is that they have dropped?' At the gate of Utgard—a place so high, that you had to strain your neck bending back to see the top of it—Skrymir went his way. Thor and his companions were admitted; invited to take share in the games going on. To Thor, for his part, they handed a drinking-horn; it was a common feat, they told him, to drink this dry at one draught. Long and fiercely, three times over, Thor drank, but made hardly any impression. He was a weak child, they told him; could he lift that cat he saw there? Small as the feat seemed, Thor, with his whole godlike strength, could not: he bent up the creature's back, could not raise its feet off the ground, could at the utmost raise one foot. 'Why, you are no man,' said the Utgard people; 'there is an old woman that will wrestle you.' Thor, heartily ashamed, seized this haggard old woman, but could not throw her. And now, on their quitting Utgard—the chief Jotun, escorting them politely a little way, said to Thor—'You are beaten, then; yet, be not so much ashamed: there was deception of appearance in it. That horn you tried to drink was the sea; you did make it ebb: but who could drink that, the bottomless? The cat you would have lifted—why, that is the Midgard Snake, the Great World Serpent—which, tail in mouth, girds and keeps up the whole created world. Had you torn that up, the world must have rushed to ruin. As for the old woman, she was Time, Old Age, Duration: with her, what can wrestle? No man, nor no god, with her. Gods or men, she prevails over all! And then, those three strokes you struck—look at these valleys—your three strokes made these.' Thor looked at his attendant Jotun—it was Skrymir. It was, say old critics, the old chaotic rocky earth in person, and that glove house was some earth cavern! But Skrymir had vanished. Utgard, with its sky-high gates, when Thor raised his hammer to smite them, had gone to air, only the giant's voice was heard mocking: 'Better come no more to Jotunheim!'"

And, with this fine legend, I leave Jack to the better acquaintance of all who desire to know his true history, the more especially as time fails us in consequence of the preparations having commenced for Snap-Dragon. The large pewter dish, filled with spirit, is placed upon the floor, and attracts the attention of all the party. The light is applied—the flame burns beautifully azure, tipped with amber and scarlet, and whisks and frisks in a manner delightful to the joyous eyes of infancy and childhood to contemplate. All children have a hankering after fire. Its beauty charms and fascinates their sight, but rarely are they allowed to look save at a respectful distance, and never except at Christmas are they permitted to toy with flames. But the dangerous and too-beautiful sport is legalized for this one night, and for this only; and the pleasure, great in proportion to its rarity, causes their eyes to glow with a brilliancy almost equal to that of flame itself. Throw in the plums. The spirit burns, the dish is a lake of fire; and he who can gather the prize from the jaws of peril, is welcome to it. "Fortune favours the bold." "Faint heart never won a plum." These are the maxims upon which those must act who expect to win the honours or the rewards of Snap-Dragon, and of human life also. The prizes however, are but small in Snap-Dragon—the glory and the excitement are in the circumstances under which they are sought—like fox hunting, in which there is next to nothing to be gained by the paltry animal pursued; but much to be gained in the lusty jollity and pleasurable exercise of the pursuit itself. But while the youngest members of a Christmas party are at first more enamoured of Snap-Dragon than of any of the other sports of the night, they weary of it after awhile; and on small solicitation consent to join in the somewhat less boisterous, but equally exhilarating game, of Hunt the-Slipper, and share the delight of those who are a few years their seniors. The frolic is of a different kind; and morose and unsocial must those be that never enjoyed it. It is not a little amusing to note the struggle with pride that sometimes assumes a place upon the countenances of middle-aged and old people when they are pressed into the service of Hunt-the-Slipper, and how at last the solemn man of business, and the staid matron, yield to the solicitations and to the example of the lighter-hearted folk around them, and, with comic gravity, sit down on the floor and play their part in the game. A grave sergeant-at law, or the elderly author of an incomparable and incomprehensible treatise upon metaphysics, or a spectacled physician of sixty sitting upon his hams on a carpet, and passing the slipper under them with all the dexterity, if not with all the glee, of a school-boy, is a sight to be enjoyed. Christmas alone affords it; and Christmas is none the worse the day after, in the estimation of these sober and sensible people for having taken them off their stilts, and given them a new and pleasant lesson in the humanities.

Kissing Under the Mistletoe-Bough is a sport of a tenderer kind. It is to be delicately done, or to be left undone; and requires a discretion which almost lifts it out of the rank of sports. Nevertheless, it is excellent sport when the right lips meet; and such as grave Christmas its paramount interest above all popular festivals whatsoever.

But who talks of sport when the Punch is made? It casts its pleasant fragrance upon the air; and rum, brandy, schiedam, whiskey, and wine, woo in their various ways the taste of those who love to celebrate Christmas after the old fashion! And hark! the sound of music: the dance begins; and Polka—the universal Polka—summons all hands and feet to another celebration; and to a sport in comparison to which all others are of small account. Reader, let us go; Uncle Tom has said his say. He cannot resist the Polka!

THE OLD YEAR'S REMONSTRANCE.

BY CHARLES MACKAY.

The Old Year lay on his death-bed lone,
And are he died he spoke to me,
Low and solemn in under tone,
Mournfully, reproachfully.
The fading eyes in his snow-white head
Shone bright the while their lids beneath;
These were the words the Old Year said—
I shall never forget them while I breathe:—

"Did you not promise, when I was born"—
Sadly he spoke, and not in ire—
"To treat me kindly—not to scorn—
And to pay the debt you owed my sire?
Did you not vow, with an earnest heart,
Your unconsidered hours to hive?
And to throw no day in waste away,
Of my three hundred sixty-five?

"Did you not swear to your secret self,
Before my beard was a second old,
That whatever you'd done to my fathers gone,
You'd prize my minutes more than gold?
Did you not own, with a keen regret,
That the past was a time of waste and sin?
But that with me, untainted yet,
Wisdom and duty should begin?

"Did you not oft the vow renew
That never with me should folly dwell?
That, however Fate might deal with you,
You'd prize me much, and use me well?
That never a deed of scorn or wrath,
Or thought unjust of your fellow men,
Should, while I lived, obsure your path,
Or enter in your heart again?

"Did you not fail?"—but my tongue is weak
Your sad shortcomings to recal:
And the old year sobbed—he could not speak—
He turn'd his thin face to the wall.
"Old Year! Old Year! I have done you wrong—
Hear my repentance ere you die!

Linger awhile!" Ding-dong—ding-dong—
The joy-bells drowned his parting sigh.

"Old Year! Old Year!" he could not hear,
He yielded placidly his breath.
I loved him little while he was here,
I prized him dearly after death.
New Year! now smiling at my side:
Most bitterly the past I rue.
I've learned a lesson since he died,
I'll lead a better life with you.

THE STREETS AT CHRISTMAS TIME.

BY THE OLDEST INHABITANT.

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS BY HARVEY AND FOSTER

OLD FATHER CHRISTMAS is a great receiver of goods. Our Artist has depicted him on his throne, receiving the offerings of his subjects Droves of oxen, of sheep, and of pigs; flocks of geese and turkeys; men and carts laden with all descriptions of game in season; carts of fish; baskets of fruits and vegetables; barrels of ale and wine—all are proceeding to the feet of the King of Good Cheer. Boys and girls are rushing pell mell from school, delighted at the prospect of catching a glimpse of his jolly and kindly face.

For a few weeks before Christmas the streets of London begin to assume a new aspect. It is not in Regent-street, or Oxford-street, or the fashionable streets where linendrapers, jewellers, and other traders who administer to fashion and to all the wants and adornments of the outward man or woman reside, that the change is perceptible. Such streets are uniformly cheerful. Such shops are always luxuriant, and always display to the greatest possible advantage the commodities upon which their owners thrive. To them all seasons are alike. Christmas and Midsummer, Spring or Autumn, sees them equally attractive. The jeweller's shop is splendid of necessity; the mercer but changes from muslins and cottons to silks and satins, and from these to woollen textures and furs, according to the season; but it is in the minor streets, inhabited by dealers in estables of all kinds that the approach of Christmas is manifested by outward and visible signs, about which there can be no mistake. Regent-street is too proud to show any symptoms of rejoicing at Christmas; but more homely Tottenham-court-road puts on a new face for the occasion, and decks herself out with attractions never thought of at any other time. Oxford-street would scorn to be too Christmas-like; but her tributary streets on either side, except these sombre and highly-respectable streets in which there are no shops, look upon Christmas as an era, and rejoice accordingly.

The immense increase of population in London has not only led to the multiplication of these signs of Christmas, but to a greater competition among shop-keepers to attract notice. London is not merely a city. It may be called a nation. Any one who would wish to examine the manners and customs of its people could have no better opportunity for the purpose than Christmas. It is to be questioned whether he could have any so good. Formerly—say thirty or forty years ago—ingenuity was not much taxed to tempt the purchasers of good things. People knew it was Christmas without being told so by advertisements, and knew where to go for the commodities they required to celebrate the festival, without any announcement by placard or handbill; but year after year, up to the present period, the rivalry of business consequent upon the immense number of streets opened up in all quarters, and the establishment of thousands of new shops in almost every parish, the old shop-keepers have been gradually compelled to resort to something like publicity to preserve their custom.

Among shops, those of the butchers stand pre-eminent, and give us prospects not alone of the good feeding for which December is famous, but of the good lighting that we may expect in January and February. On Father Christmas has a capacious stomach; and the maw of London—not easily filled at any time—becomes all but insatiable towards the close of the year. The droves of oxen in the streets—a nuisance which has antiquity in its favour, but nothing else—increase in numbers—and in the bulk of the animals that form them. The future dinners, as well as the future candles of the million, wend their way to Smithfield, in all but countless multitudes. The butchers shops soon give evidence of the new demand that is certain to spring up. Beef rises twenty per cent. in value, and mutton at a somewhat smaller ratio, as soon as the carcases of prize animals are displayed in the great thoroughfares of the people. Prince Albert's oxen, and the Earl of Leicester's sheep, or other animals bred by celebrated agriculturists, are exhibited—the oxen in portions, and the sheep whole, with labels upon them, pointing out to the admiring crowds that gather around the shops, the place where, and the owner by whom they were fed, as well as the amount of prize they obtained. In many instances the carcases are adorned with ribbons, or wreaths, and in almost all cases with sprigs of holly. It is a glorious time for the butchers of London. There is a vastly increased supply, and there is a vastly increased demand; and these tradesmen contrive, upon what principle is "a mystery of London" never thoroughly explained, to make an extra profit of both circumstances. Suet which, in those quiet and ordinary times when suet is neither abundant nor scarce, fetches 8d. a pound rises to a shilling, when all the world is bent upon making plum-pudding. Happy, sometimes, is the housewife that can obtain it even at that price. But it is not only in meat—there is, in fact, a general rise in the price of all agricultural produce at this time. Butter, for which it cannot be supposed there is any extra demand, or any diminished supply at Christmas, is an instance of it. The price is increased by twopence or threepence a pound, as every housekeeper knows—although she may not be able to account for it on any known principles either of political or domestic economy. The reason may be that the butterman, having to pay an extra sum to the butcher, takes it out of the pockets of the public. The butcher, too, may plead that he has to pay extra to the agriculturist for the flesh that Londoners will consume: so that the farmer and grazier, after all, may be the grant recipients of the profits or the plunder of Christmas. Beef eating London must submit, even although it grumble. The infliction, it is to be feared, is wholly irremediable.

Next to the butchers' shops, the porkmen's, the poulterer's, and the dealers in game are the most crowded with the future good cheer of the London nation. If the streets of the metropolis give unpleasant evidence of the living beef and mutton that are to be offered up at the shrine of old Father Christmas, they give evidence equally strong, and a vast deal more pleasant, of the old gentleman's capabilities in the way of game and poultry. The porkmen may be passed over; they share the good fortune of Christmas like their neighbours. But the dealers in domestic poultry, and in game of all descriptions, reap a more abundant harvest; and offer more tempting inducements for the expenditure of the million. The family that never taste game or poultry at any other period of the year indulge themselves in it at Christmas, and chickens, geese, and turkeys, dead and alive, are despatched to the metropolis to help in the honours of Christmas, in numbers commensurate with the magnitude of the city and the joviality of the occasion. While poultry, which is bought, has its thousands and tens of thousands of purchasers—game, which is given away, has also it thousands and tens of thousands of grateful recipients. Blessed is the London family that has friends in the country. Blessed at Christmas time is he who has a relative or friend who loves sport, and who, knowing how to enjoy his sport, knows quite as well how to cultivate friendship, and render relationship agreeable. To him comes the welcome present from the fields, the moors, or the mountains; and for him the railways bear the welcome gifts from all quarters of the land. This large portion of the Christmas consumption of the metropolis does not grace the shops. It is only to be seen in its transit from the railway station to the houses of the grateful recipients; but a portion equally large finds its way to the dealers. In the days of stage and mail-coaches, it was a pleasant sight to see how picturesquely they were loaded; but the railway which does more business, does it without a tithe of the display. All game is not given away; would it were; but a goodly share of it becomes merchandize, and is set forth with tempting beauty in the shops. The butchers' shops may be disgusting, and the are so to all who think upon the subject (which, however, the majority of man and womankind do not); but the shop of the dealer in game cannot be considered repulsive. The victims of our appetite which he supplies are not always stripped of their beautiful plumage, and the pheasant dead is only less lovely than the pheasant alive. Even poor puss, the hare, with her warm jacket on, suggests no ideas akin to those which are felt on the contemplation of the joints that hang from the rafters of the butcher's shop. Mais, ne revenons pas à nos moutons!

But far more attractive than those of the game-dealers are the shops of the grocers. The grocers look upon Christmas as their peculiar time, and they take all due pains to set themselves forth in their fairest trim. Neither do they take such advantage of the day as the dealers in home agricultural produce. The grocers provide large and abundant stores of raisins, currants, spices, and preserved fruits, and put no additional price upon them. On the contrary, they often ask less for their wares than at other seasons—a piece of good generalship on their parts, which our friends the flesh-dealers might imitate with advantage to themselves as well as to the public. The grocers are not greedy. They encourage the manufacture of pudding. Their pleasant and wholesome shops, which meet the eye in all our great thoroughfares, are shrines to which the devotees of Christmas pay a willing visit. Many are their devices to attract notice. Sometimes a flag is displayed from the first-floor windows, or the whole front of the house is beplastered with placards, announcing the arrival of millions of pounds of currants and raisins, all for the use of the pudding-loving people, and to be obtained within at prices defying competition. One placard, exhibited this year by a grocer, is in the form of a play-bill, announcing the production of a new pantomime, to be called "Harlequin Feel; or, the Magic Pudding." This is not intended as a political sneer at a great statesman, though at first glance it would seem suggestive of such an idea. It is simply a social and domestic affair to attract customers. Sometimes the grocer gives his customers the additional attractions of a pictorial pudding in his window, with the figure of a sturdy John Bull, surrounded by his family, cutting into the dainty. His face is redolent of good humour, and a scroll issuing from his mouth informs all men (sometimes in a couplet of choice doggerel) that the plums and spices of which that pudding was compounded were bought at Mr. Snooks's or Mr. Jones's, or whatever the name may be of the enterprising trader. Very often, a long string of rhymes, almost as good as those remarkable lyrics with which Mr. Moses and his poets amuse the public, is printed in large type, and affixed to the grocer's door-post, that all who run may read. Indeed, of late years, the majority of grocers in crowded streets think it necessary to become poetical. "There's a good time coming, boys," says one effusion of the kind which has this year made its appearance. "There's a good time coming—Raisins will be cheap at Robinson's!" while a rival grocer, on the other side of the way, has put up a placard with the more delightful announcement, "The good time has come, boys—Raisins are cheap at Smith's!"

The grocers, and the keepers of those compound establishments—half grocers and half Italian warehouses—have of late years very much increased their trade by large importations of preserved fruits. The English, as a people, do not excel in this manufacture; but the French and Italians, who have long been famous for it, improve in it every year. The English demand that has arisen, and which this Christmas seems to be greater than ever it was, will doubtless give a further impetus to their ingenuity. It is worth while to spend a few hours in the shop of a large importer of these elegant articles—not merely for the sake of the fruits themselves, crystallised and uncrystallised, but for a sight of the boxes in which they are packed. The French prints used for the purpose have long been celebrated for their beauty and fancy; and the boxes in which plums, and those delicious little oranges known as "Chinois" are packed, are worth preserving for their own sakes, after the fruit has been consumed. Some of the larger receptacles are fit to convert into work-boxes, after they have served their original intention; and many are prepared with a view to such a purpose. In these times it might be worth the while of capitalists to devote their attention to the home manufacture of these articles, and also to the preservation of fruits. Sugar is as cheap in England as in France, and there is no reason why jams and marmalade, good as they are, should be the sole products of English industry as regards the preservation of fruit.

The most pleasing, as well as the most common, symptom of Christmas in the streets, is the holly displayed in shops of every kind wherever eatables or drinkables are sold, and which is almost invariably to be seen at kitchen windows for a week or two before and after Christmas-day. Love in the kitchen could not prosper without the holly; and the policeman, in search of affection, or of cold mutton, would think the kitchen of his "fair friend" unseasonable in its appearance if the sprigs of dark green, intermingled with the bright red berries, were absent from the window. The holly-cart, of which a most admirable representation is given in our engraving, is also a pleasant sight in the streets—either of the outskirts of the metropolis, as represented by the artist—or of the dense heart of the old city. Holly is a great article of commerce at Christmas time, and yields a good profit both to those who cultivate it and those who vend it in the streets. Never was it more in request than it is now; never may it be less sought after, as the verdant symbol of the loving-kindness of the season!

There is one other aspect of the streets of London at Christmas, which requires notice, the more especially as this year it is painfully prominent. The public heart being open at Christmas, beggars usually venture out, with more certain hope of our charity than at other times. Nor is their hope disappointed. To say nothing of the carol singers—who seem to look upon themselves as privileged for the sake of the old feminine chant which they musically or unmusically pour into our ears, and who, of all ages and of both sexes, swarm in every street, in numbers of which an accurate estimate would convey a somewhat alarming idea of the poverty of London—troops of unmusical beggars have made their appearance in the streets this year, in numbers surpassing all precedent of experience. Ireland has evidently contributed a large portion to this multitude of misery; and the mind is driven to reflect, amid the gaiety and joviality of the time, not only upon the pauperism of that unhappy land, but of the pauperism of this, which is made more wretched by the influx of these interlopers. The pauperism of England amounts to one million four hundred thousand people. The Irish vagrants that come over to take their chance amongst us cannot amount to many less than three hundred thousand—and, possibly, they amount to many more—forming an aggregate of one million and three quarters. When we fancy that this is almost equal to the whole population of London, Westminster, Lambeth, Southwark, Finsbury, Marylebone, the Tower Hamlets, Kensington, Hammersmith, Greenwich, and Woolwich—and when we attempt to realise to our mind how vast a multitude this is, and how fearful it would be if it were all congregated together in one place, we are compelled to ask if there be not something radically wrong in our civilisation, which not only permits the growth of such a sore in the body poetic, but which actually favours its growth. Let the minds of our great thinkers be directed to it. The chief difficulty of a time not far distant, will be the existence and maintainance of this immense standing army of poverty. If there ever be a time when it is the duty of individuals to attempt to relieve it, that time is Christmas. At a period of feasts, when the paupers in the Union Workhouses are embraced in the large circle of our sympathies, and cared for a little more liberally than usual, let us draw a circle around the circle, and include within it the beggars in the streets. It may be wrong, as a rule, to encourage street beggars by donations of any kind; but Christmas is an exceptional period; and though, possibly, in being charitable to all, we may be charitable to many worthless persons, the good Will and the good Day Will consecrate the deed. At least, although political theorists may dissent—and although the man who paid a very heavy poor's-rate yesterday may see reason to be unconvinced, such is the opinion until Christmas has passed—of

THE OLDEST INHABITANT.

FETCHING HOME THE CHRISTMAS DINNERS.

BY COUSIN CHARLES.

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS BY LEECH.

"SOMETHING poetical is required about this Engraving—representing Londoners fetching home their Christmas Dinner." Such was the request made to us. Poetical? thought we. It is all very well to ask for poetry—but where is it to come from?—how is it to be extracted from such a subject as that? Look at that comfortable young man for instance, with the self-satisfied expression upon his vulgar countenance—he in the very middle—and declare, oh! ye powers that preside at the birth of all things beautiful, what can be said of such a snob? Yet, why not? Have not good, ay, and poetical, articles been written about sticks and broomsticks? Are there not sermons in stones? Have they not been written and preached? Did not Béranger, the illustrious songster of the French, write beautifully about a little cat that was overset at table? and did not Burns write as beautifully about a mouse? and also about a smaller creature, with a name only suffering from a mouse's by a single letter? Have there not been poems about grass, and floating straws? Is not a grain of sand prolific of ideas to the man who has ideas in his head? And cannot a man with a full mind write well about anything? Not that we pretend to have a full mind, though we do flatter ourselves that it is not altogether empty. However that may be—and it is a delicate and difficult question, which we do not intend to go into—is the subject of the Christmas Dinners of the People so very bad, after all? Is it not, on the contrary, a very good subject? On looking at the Engraving again, behold the poesy stares us in the face. If we seek it, we find it. If we are determined to be pleased, how easily we can become so. It is not every day in the week, or year that the poor can dine; and however vulgar may be the snob that arrays himself in his best on Christmas Day and brings home his dinner steaming hot from the convenient shop of Rusk, the baker, it would be both churlish and snobbish in us, or any one else, to look with unsympathetic eyes, or turn up our noses contemptuously upon the harmless and well-won enjoyment that is expressed upon his countenance. Has he not earned his dinner like a man? Has he not a right to the enjoyment of it? Is Christmas not a day of good things for him as well as for his superior fellow-mortal who has a score of servants to wait on him? And why should we call him a snob? A man with such a smile on his face must have paid for his dinner—must have earned it by his honest industry—must be in the proper mood of mind and frame of body to relish it, and derive advantage from it—must be at peace with himself and with all mankind—must have allowed the odours of Christmas to pervade his whole being, and lift him from one short day into a more refined appreciation of his life and duties than is customary with him. We retract, therefore, the word snob. There is nothing in the dinner, in the mode of fetching it, in the place in which it was cooked, or in the man himself, that will justify us in affixing the epithet to so honest a fellow. Doubtless, he has a wife at home in their one little room on the two-pair front—a wife who has no kitchen, and who is obliged to make use of that good Mr. Rusk's upon all such great occasions as Sundays and Christmasses; but who, being without a kitchen, and without worldly wealth, is not necessarily without a heart. A good appetite to them both, and many happy returns of the jovial season. No poetry in such a subject? Look at that venerable old lady—the occupant, doubtless, of an attic, or two-pair back, in some squalid street hard by. Does she not seem impressed with the happiness of the day? Is she not one of those who, for once in the year, are permitted to throw off care, and drink a little deeper than hard fate will usually allow at the fountain of enjoyment? Doubtless, in her humble household, one awaits her coming, with whom her merriest toast is to be shared. It is clear that she has guests this day. She does not dine alone at Christmas. That joint, small as it is, has been prepared for more than one—perhaps for a son, or grandson, or an old husband, feebler and more aged than herself, but not so feeble or so aged as to have lost all interest in a day so dear to all Londoners, if not to all Englishmen. Upon them, too, may Christmas look generally: and may they never, as long as they live, lack their Christmas dinner, or appetites to enjoy it. And that decent old gentleman, too (who puts us in mind of our old friend and acquaintance, Trotty Veck) with what satisfaction he seems to reflect that Christmas has not come round without putting the means in his pocket to be jolly as well as his neighbours! As for the little boy with the Glengarry bonnet and the short trousers—proof alike of his poverty and of his growth—the mode in which he carries the pie, and the look of intense hunger as well as of deep admiration which he bestows upon it, is proof positive of a foregone concussion in his mind that he will do more delightful duty to the pie than that of carrying it in his hands. We fear, however, from the shortness of his trousers, which is symptomatic of a household not so overburdened with means as it is with children, that he will not be allowed carte blanche at the dainty. Nevertheless, what he receives he will, most assuredly, enjoy—and we trust he may. But, amid our good wishes, let us not forget to bestow some of them on that tidy and buxom daughter of the people, who trips along with the family dinner with all the elasticity of youth and good spirits. She has, doubtless, helped her mother to prepare the dinner. She is initiated already in the mysteries of cooking and of housekeeping. For her the day will assuredly be one of enjoyment. She is at the period of life when leisure is sweet. And after dinner this day there will be leisure for her for a walk with some one nameless—a walk to Highgate or Hampstead, perhaps; or through the Squares, or down Regent-street, or into St. James's Park, or to the Serpentine; anywhere for the sake of the walk, and the society of him who is to share with her both her Christmas walk and that longer walk of life of which marriage is the starting-point, and the tomb the termination. May the road between the two be long and sweet! and may they come to the inevitable terminus prepared with good consciences! And oh! thou sweet little girl at the potato-can—forgive us that we have omitted to take notice of thee sooner. We saw thee and thy kind action from the very first, and loved the subject for thy sake. Were there no other poetry in it than thy gentle and pitying face there would be quite enough to hallow it in our estimation. The near companionship of misery has made thee compassionate. Sorrow and want have been close enough to thee to make thee familiar with their harsh features, and to fill thee with a sympathy which none can feel so deeply as those who have themselves suffered. We mean no disparagement to the lords of the creation; but we do say, that if a boy and not a girl had presided over that potato-can, the ragged and starving little urchin who has received the humble but welcome donation of a potato from the hands of that sweet girl, would have received neither pity nor relief. The girl's heart is ever precocious. The boy is usually a selfish animal; but the girl (blessings on all girls, big or little!) has sympathies alive and vigorous at a range when the boy has none. That charming . . . has no Christmas Dinner herself; for her, no steaming pot; for her, no pudding; she is out in the streets gaining a few pence by the sale of her humble merchandise, and will make her dinner in the streets off some of the potatoes which she is endeavouring to sell; but she sees some before her more wretched than herself, and, her heart being open as day to melting charity, she furtively bestows her scanty alms upon a need that is much greater than her own. Yes, we saw her from the first. We have been thinking of her ever since we began writing; and we have reserved her and her good deed for the climax of our article. If there be no poetry in her pale and interesting face, and in the heavenly charity of which she has been the instrument, there is no poetry in truth, and no truth in poetry. May she be saved from all the perils of mighty London! May that kind heart be her blessing, and not her bane; and may the poor who are kind to the poor find times grow better every succeeding Christmas!

THE CHRISTMAS HOLLY CART.—DRAWN BY FOSTER.—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

FETCHING HOME THE CHRISTMAS DINNER.—DRAWN BY LEECH.—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

NEWSPAPER

CHRISTMAS TREE AT WINDSOR CASTLE.—DRAWN BY J. L. WILLIAMS.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

THE CHRISTMAS TREE AT WINDSOR CASTLE.

THE Christmas Tree represented in the above Engraving is that which is annually prepared by her Majesty's command for the Royal children. Similar trees are arranged in other apartments of the Castle for her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, and the Royal household. The tree employed for this festive purpose is a young fir about eight feet high, and has six tiers of branches. On each tier, or branch, are arranged a dozen wax tapers. Pendent from the branches are elegant trans. baskets, bonbonnières, and other receptacles for sweetmeats, of the most varied and expensive kind; and of all forms, colours, and degrees of beauty. Fancy cakes, gilt gingerbread, and eggs filled with sweetmeats, are also suspended by variously-coloured ribbons from the branches. The tree, which stands upon a table covered with white damask, is supported at the root by piles of sweets of a larger kind, and by toys and dolls of all descriptions, suited to the youthful fancy, reflecting the several ages of the interesting scions of Royalty for whose gratification they are displayed. The name of each recipient is affixed to the doll, bonbon, or other present intended for it, so that no difference of opinion in the choice of dainties may arise to disturb the equanimity of the illustrious juveniles. On the summit of the tree stands the small figure of an angel, with outstretched wings, holding in each hand a wreath. Those trees are objects of much interest to all visitors at the Castle, from Christmas Eve, when they are first set up, until Twelfth Night, when they are finally removed. During this period two trees of similar magnitude and general design stand on the sideboard of the Royal Dining-room, and present a brilliant appearance when all the tapers are lighted up, among the branches. These trees are not accessible to the curiosity of the public; but her Majesty's visitors accompany the Queen from room to room to inspect them when they are illuminated. Her Majesty's tree is furnished by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, whilst that of the Prince is furnished according to the taste of her Majesty. The other trees are jointly provided by her Majesty and the Prince, who plan and arrange the gifts on the table. The trees are constructed and arranged by Mr. Mawditt, the Queen's confectioner.

As the exhibition of the Christmas Tree is somewhat more of a German than an English custom, we present our readers with the following sketch by the author of "Orion," which will throw some light upon the festive purposes for which they are employed in Germany:—

A GERMAN CHRISTMAS TREE.

BY R. H. HORNE.

THE bright-eyed holiday children's "Christmas Tree" possesses everywhere the same general characteristics of fabulous splendour; but, as all these Trees are the product of imagination, their varieties are infinite, and in accordance with the individual mind of the "growers," and also with the length of their pockets. We will describe the last of these delightfully impossible specimens of the horticultural science, at the ceremony of whose verdant illumination we happened to be present. It was at the country-house of Dr. Claudius Shillingkite, of Cologne.

All the sons, daughters, nephews, and nieces of Dr. Claudius Shillingkite, together with many juvenile friends, down to little boys and girls of four and five years old, were assembled in the court-yard of the Doctor's house on Christmas-eve, which was white all over with snow. In the centre stood a gigantic Man of Snow, which the elder boys had been engaged, during the last three days, in making and setting up in an attitude, intended to be of great dignity. His dark and expressive eyes were formed of two large coals; a small bush covered with icicles made his beard. In his breast was a huge bouquet of mistletoe and red holly-berries. Hand-in-hand the children all danced about him in a circle, raced round and round him in a joyous whirl, and then leaped up and down, and shouted and sang. Every year they were indulged with a Weihnachts-feier (Christmas festival) of the most enchanting kind.

It was now evening; and as the shades of the sky grew more dusky, the elder boys and two of the elder girls gradually slipped away from the merry throng, one by one, mysteriously, and with signs to each other, and little pluckings of frocks and touchings of elbows. Something was to be done in the house which was to overcome all the rest of the children with wonder and ecstatic delight.

Now, we have forgotten to mention, and we hasten to repair the omission, that among this merry group of the juvenile members of the Shillingkite families and their small friends of various sizes, there were also several little rustics, children of peasants who lived on the outskirts of Cologne. These peasants were the tenantry of the Doctor, and sent him large quantities of grapes every year from their vineyards to make his physic with. Every year their children were invited in this way to join the party on Christmas Eve, and a most wonderful pleasure and honour it was felt to be. Among these latter on the present occasion we must mention two in especial—Zachary and Jane, the boy being nearly eight years old, and the girl just seven. The little rustics were brother and sister, both dressed alike in new Prussian peasant blouses of light blue, except that Zachary wore a very small leather cap with a peak, and Jane had the attempt of a hair-plait behind, not unlike the curl of a little pig's tail, and wore a pretty wreath of small ivy-leaves besides.

And Zachary and Jane were now about to behold a CHRISTMAS TREE for the first time in their lives! We shall, therefore, describe everything from this moment, not exactly as it was, but as it appeared to their all-wondering and enraptured eyes.

Little faces from the sides of the closed window-curtains of the large room in the house! All the children ceased to laugh and chatter, and cried, "Look!" They quite forgot the Man of Snow; but he, also, showed signs of excitement, for a smile of light gleamed across his pale countenance. The children clustered together in a group, looking at the lights that glanced from behind the curtains of three large windows on the ground-floor, and then suddenly, by some secret, yet unanimous impulse, they all began to leap up and down, as though this would enable them to see what was behind the mysterious curtains.

A bell now rang loudly in the house. Away flew all the children, pell-mell; and Zachary and Jane, being the smallest of these who made this delighted rush to the door, were both overturned, and rolled in the snow. Several young Shillingkites, however, instantly turned back, and helping them up, hurried them along, and into the passage after the rest.

"We are not hurt, and we don't mind," cried Zachary.

"And I don't care for a mouthful of snow; do I, Zachary?" said little Jane.

The passage which they entered, and where all were now huddling and laughing, and groping about, was quite dark.

"Where are we?—which is the way?—where are we going?" cried many voices at the same time.

Again the bell rang in the house, while a voice cried "Auf's schnellste!" (quick! quick!) from a room not far distant, to judge by the sound. Meanwhile the throng continued to press onward somehow or other, led by several children of the family, who of course knew the way very well, but pretended to be in as much doubt and confusion as the rest. Suddenly a side door opened, and displayed another dusky passage with a green star at the further end. Thitherward moved all the little feet in a tramping crowd, though getting slower and slower as they approached the green star, which turned out, on a closer inspection by two of the oldest and most courageous of the children, to be a hole in a dark curtain, with a beautiful piece of coloured glass fastened over it. The curtain was now drawn aside by an invisible hand, and a great light burst through, as the children found themselves urged onward by a strong pressure from the crowd behind into the very room where a blaze of illumination told them that the Christmas Tree was placed. Dr. Shillingkite himself, attired in a long white robe bordered with ivy-leaves, a black cord round his waist, a bear-skin cap on his head, and wearing a huge pair of spectacles with red glasses, received them at the entrance, waving one hand in a most polite yet important manner.

Dazzled and intoxicated with the light and splendour around them, the children all remained in one close group, little Zachary and Jane being placed in front, and standing hand-in-hand, gazing with bright round eyes at the astonishing Christmas spectacle that rose up before them at the opposite end of the room.

In a vase of enormous size, which seemed to be made all of ivory, with bands of gold (though, in truth, it was an old wine barrel covered with glazed paper and gold leaf), stood the stem of a dark fir-tree which rose up into a succession of expansive branches, putting out their arms in varied lengths, so as to form the outline of a fine pyramid. But the outline was scarcely visible, owing to the glancing rays of light that shot from every part. On every branch stood up a number of bright flames, sometimes like the flame of a candle, sometimes like the sparkling of steel or glass, sometimes like lamps of scarlet and violet and of green light, sometimes like little brilliant peeping stars. The number of the lights was only equalled by the number of minute fairies dressed in white, who floated about in the air all round the Tree, so as almost to touch it, and of little elves dressed in short jackets, made of the peel of russet apples, who popped in and out of the openings between the boughs, in all directions.

The children had remained motionless and breathless for some time; and then they all said "Oh!"—and began very slowly to approach a few steps nearer towards the wonderful Tree.

But the fairy-land inhabitants of the boughs and around them were only a part of their many charms and treasures. As to fruit of an edible kind, the abundance and the variety were alike unspeakable. Grapes, both white and red, hung in large bunches beside clusters of dried raisins; and now and then a wind seemed to shake the boughs, and down fell a shower of nuts and sugar-plums of all sizes, shapes, and colours, and rattled about over the floor, till Zachary and Jane, unable to contain themselves any longer, clapped their hands and laughed aloud, in which the whole company immediately joined.

But again the little rustics grew silent, and continued to gaze with rapture and a degree of awe at the beautiful Christmas Tree. New enchantments and fresh objects of curiosity were discovered every moment; so that they grew giddy with the vision of golden oranges and silver apples, rings and bracelets of all sorts of jewelled fashions, and sugar-work in all sorts of colours and devices, dangling by invisible threads from the same bough; while on the next bough, above, grew small picture-books and toys; and on the next bough, below, sat a row of canary-birds and bullfinches, who sang and piped every now and then, and danced up and down on their twigs.

"Suppose," said Dr. Shillingkite, "we should venture to advance close to the Christmas Tree! Now the youngest go foremost. Who are the youngest? Several of these have hidden themselves. It must be Zachary and Jane, I think. Yes, my small friends, it is your privilege to advance before all the rest."

Zachary felt little Jane's hand tremble in his; indeed, it was evident that they both trembled.

"Don't be frightened, dear Jane," said Zachary, in a whisper. "The good Tree will not set us on fire."

"It is a great light to go near," answered Jane, drawing back; "I feel it."

"But if it does burn us," said Zachary, "it would be with beautiful fire, like the dear God's heaven, and not hurt, you know, Jane."

"No," said Jane, trembling, "not to hurt us."

"Now," exclaimed Dr. Shillingkite, "approach! Enjoy, Baron Zachary, and you, Princess Jane Rosenkohl, enjoy to the utmost the Weihnachts-spiele (Yule games). Why do you stand still, Baron Zachary? Do you not know that this beautiful Tree, covered all over with brightness, and happiness, and the gifts of all the riches of the four quarters of the earth—a Tree whereon no living thing makes war upon another, and where fairies, and elves, and canary-birds, and bull-finches sing together in harmony—a Tree where Turks of baked dough and currants, and Jews who rejoice in preserved citron faces, and are dressed in light yellow robes of fresh lemon-peel, sit under the same tent with Christians, as you see there to the left, where they all sit round an egg, painted like the terrestrial globe—do you not know that the nearer you approach to the light and the warmth of this Tree, the more safe you are from all the scorchings of life which may happen in the house, and all the cold storms which may blow when you are unsheltered in the fields; therefore, approach, Zachary and Jane, and fear not."

"And so we will," said the little fellow. "Come, dear Jane."

The two little rustics now advanced hand in hand. On coming closer to the Tree they descried between the lower and broader boughs small stages made of straw. On one of these was represented a field in harvest time, with all the peasants at work with their horses and carts, piling up and carrying away the corn. On another stage they saw four lions and four lambs in a green meadow, dancing a quadrille; their music being the singing of guldfinches and nightingales who were perched on the backs of slumbering hawks and purring cats. A wonderful manufactory, full of machines and wheels all at work, filled a third and very large space. On another stage they saw a fine soldier in his helmet, but with a muzzle and chain, who was dancing round with a pole in his hands, while a handsome brown bear sat near him, holding the end of the chain with one hand and a Christmas pie in the other. On another stage they saw the waves of the sea, all moving and glittering; and presently a ship came bowing and swaying, and gliding on its way till it gracefully passed out among the dark green boughs, and a soft music was heard for a moment in the distance, as it disappeared.

"Oh, take me with you!" cried little Jane, enraptured at the fair vision of the ship, not knowing what she said, and holding very fast by Zachary's hand.

On another stage was represented a large infirmary or hospital; and an old green dragon, dressed in a nurse's gown and cap, was very busy in attending upon the sick; while a remarkably fine figure of St. George was seen in the dispensary, stirring up some medicine. Ingredients in a mortar—his breast-plate and helmet being full of cordials, and his shield covered with pill-boxes.

The youngest but one of Dr. Shillingkite's daughters called particular attention to this. "It is our dear father's favourite one," said she. "He furnished us with the figures himself, all made of corks cut of his drawers, and the cordials and pill-boxes are all his own."

"Ha! ha! ha!" laughed all the children in a loud chorus.

"Do I stand here for this?" ejaculated the Doctor, in a great fluster of offended dignity. "Bring Lieschen before me, that I may give her something to do her good."

But Lieschen had vanished in the throng, and was nowhere to be found.

Again attention was called to the stages, and a new one, which had hitherto been unobserved, was discovered. It was a scene in a forest, where, at a rustic table in front of a pretty wooden hut, sat a Bengal tiger, playing chess with a young gentleman, a student of natural history.

There is yet another stage. It is the highest of all, and not very distinctly seen; but there it is to a certainty. Upon it there rise the walls of a Temple which is being built. Artists and workmen are all labouring away, and there is a great crowd, also very busy, and doing its usual part of looking on, and doubting if the thing in hand can ever be accomplished.

One more stage—the last—has hitherto been quite overlooked. It is the lowest of all on the Tree, and lies in a direct line beneath the stage with the Temple. This stage, just discovered by the children, is a very dark one, nearly hidden by the fir-boughs. Two hostile armies are arrayed in the background, with needle spears and rout-cake shields, and cannons formed of broken sticks of peppermint painted black, while two Kings, all made of rich sugar-work, and with bright sceptres in their hands, are standing in front, ready to order the armies to fight for a particular sugar-plum.

This was in direct opposition to all the Doctor had said of the universal peace and harmony and love of which the Tree was the illustrious emblem. Several of the children remarked this to each other; but their attention was again called to the military stage, where a tiny trumpeter was almost blowing his eyes out in sounding a charge. The two Kings advanced towards each other, and raised their dainty sceptres to fight. The deadly swords and spears of the armies were advanced—the cannons pointed—when, at this moment, a large corner-stone fell from the hands of the workmen above, who were building the Temple, and down it went between the two warlike sugar-work Kings, knocking them both into red and grey powder.

A shout, partly of alarm and partly of merriment, burst from the children; but this was changed into a more real alarm, with no fun at all, when they saw that some of the burning stars of the Tree, and lights, and coloured lamps, had set fire to a part of the boughs below. The two hostile armies were burnt up to nothing in no time; and even the records of the particular sugar-plum for which they were about to fight were lost to the page of history in the general conflagration.

Noble music now sounded from behind the Tree. Dr. Shillingkite and his two eldest sons, with Lieschen and another little girl, exerted themselves successfully in extinguishing the fire, so that it extended no farther among the boughs, with all the precious fruits and fancies. Again, the grand music sounded; and as it proceeded with its harmonies, the walls of the Temple were seen to rise in the light, higher and higher, till crowned with cupolas and screen-work, with statuary and spires.

"Want to go there?" ejaculated little Jane, with devout eyes.

"There won't be any more fire to climb up, to hurt the Temple, will there?" asked Zachary, in a most anxious tone.

"No," said the Doctor. "The fire of that TREE burns nothing that is good, or burns it only for its good; so that dust and ashes alone are destroyed, while the good life of things remains. As for all these wonders of the Tree—its toys, and elves, and ornaments, and fairies—these are the Gifts of Christmas Eve—the happy memorials of peace, abundance, and universal love. Share them among you, my children; and in the mode of sharing, remember that ye 'love one another.'"

THE NEW YEAR'S PROMISES.

BY CHARLES MACKAY.

THE New Year came with a bounding step,
Jovial, lusty, full of glee;
While the brazen rhymes of the church-bell chimes,
Like an eager crowd exultingly,
Hurried along on the crisp cold air,
To herald his birth to thee and me.

He stood beside us fair and young,
He laid his warm hand upon mine;
Our hearth glowed bright with a cheerful light,
And our eyes lit up with a keener shine,
As we raised a goblet brimming o'er,
And pledged him in the ripe red wine.

I know not if the merry guests
Heard the words that I could hear;
If on that morn when he was born
They held communion with the year;
But this I know, he spoke to me
In low sweet accents, silver clear:—

"My sire," quoth he, "is dead and gone;
He served thee ill or served thee well,
But only did as he was bid;
Thou wert the master of his spell;
He took his character from thee—
Most wailing and most tractable.

"Such is my promise, weigh its worth.
If thou'lt be sad, I'll help thee sigh;
If thou wilt play thy life away,
What friend shall aid thee more than I?

Whate'er the colour of thy mind,
I'll wear it for my livery.

"If thou'll be busy, I will toil,
And aid the work that thou hast planned;
If thou wilt quaff, or jest, or laugh,
Mine hours shall waste at thy command;
If thou'll endeavour to be wise,
I'll aid thy soul to understand.

"Do with me as thou wilt, good friend;
I'll be thy slave in time to be,
But when I pass—whate'er I was—
I am the master over thee.
My father's ghost inspires my words;
Take heed!—make friends with Memory.

"To-morrow and to-day I'm thine,
But all my yesterdays mis-spent
Shall live as foes to thy repose,
And clog thy spirit's free ascent;
Pursue thee when thou know'st it not,
And haunt thee to thy detriment."

The New Year's face was calm and sad;
His words still floated through my brain;
When the guests around with a joyous sound
Gave him a welcome once again:
"May he be better than the last!"
Was aye the burden of their strain.

And the New Year's face grew bright as ours;
Friends, kinsmen, lovers, true and tried,
We formed the prayer that Heaven might spare
Our hearts to bless him when he died;
And thus we ushered the New Year in,—
And welcomed him to our fire-side.

CHRISTMAS EVE, AND WELCOME TO OLD FRIENDS.

BY JOHN A. HERAUD.

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS BY MARSHALL.

CHRISTMAS EVE! The Eve before the great Festival of Birth. On the sandals of the Morn the motto written was "Esperance!" and the day has not yet worn out the pleasing epigraph. Few have learned, with the Hebrew preacher and our own Twickenham poet, to regard the mysterious fact of Birth with other than joyous anticipations. To almost all, the Day of Birth is the best of days. We are born—to live; and reason—to become wise. What! though Death close a certain series: Birth, in order of time, has precedence. What! though Death crown the human with immortality, he may not crown what never has been born. The stern Angel's highest honour is still to be "gently considered" as a new or second birth. By such soft epithets we would bribe the universal despot to smile upon us. But Birth is, from the first, known as a cherub visitant, and causes us at once to recognise the Divine in the human. Contemplate the new-born child!

Heaven has about us in our infancy!

Christmas Eve! Those now assembled in its celebration even await such an Advent, such "a good time coming," as the birth of a man-child—such as ensures the completest joy, the fullest gratification to the maternal longing. They await it, mystically—representing thus an imagined waiting, on such an eve, nearly two thousand years ago. They are, in fact, engaged in a kind of drama—and that drama a truly domestic one. In Italy, on the contrary, they make of such representations a public affair. They are enacted in churches, under cathedral roofs, before gorgeous altars, with set rituals, by priestly performers, accompanied by sublime harmonies, and set-off with new dresses, scenery, and decorations. And so, likewise, it was in England, in the days of "the Coventry Mysteries." But in these we are less vicariously inclined. We now take our piety home with us, and seat it by the family hearth, and expect it to become identified with the household moralities, and realised in the practical charities of daily life—not reserved as a thing exclusively for state occasions and public ceremonials—a show, and nothing but a show. These are not the days of sham, but of realities. Whatsoever is good must now be made common; must be numbered among the private amenities; found involved in the world's actual business, as its ever-guiding soul, its ever-inseparable spirit. English piety is less ostentatious, but it has more of the heart. Its influences are vital, and its fruits looked for in the personal conduct and character—not elsewhere.

The domestic drama here enacting is, in its nature, impromptu. Each individual does in it what is pleasing to him or her. Nevertheless, there is a certain tradition observed—that of Kissing under the Mistletoe, for example. Such a part, surely, might be soon learned—yet are some youths so bashful as to make it not seldom of difficult performance. But then this same delicacy of sentiment is an incident proper to the rôle; a situation is got out of it, an effect. The bashful must of course be encouraged—nay, knowing what is expected from the time, will probably himself seek to rid him of his now inconvenient reserve. "Him," we say—for it is the masculine biped that is most easily beset with this strange infirmity. But here your true lady will be adroit enough to help the gentleman out of his amiable difficulty; and, by making his part easier for the evening, may make her own the happier for life. Nor let her fear subsequent admonition—for still of every parental Brabantio, however harsh, this will be the creed—

If she confess that she was half the woo'er,
Discruction on my head if my bad blame
Light on the man.

At such a season, too, the heart may be allowed to speak—for it is at such that conventional restraints are accustomed to be thrown off. It is then that the better feelings have license of utterance. See that young man and maiden; in their sequestered nook, how, like stockdoves, they murmur their passion, by other ear than their own unheard. He is evidently putting the most important question of his life to her whom it most imports. "To be, or not to be." Look, what a happy thing is marriage, observe its blessed results; remark here a holy family—father and mother, and son and daughter. Let us, too, multiply felicity fourfold; and, mirigre the political economists, do justice to human nature. Time was, when the numbers of the people were esteemed the riches of the nation—time must be, when this truth shall again rise into the ascendant or the world dreams idly of a paradise restored.

The scene is altogether a gay, a joyous one. It is not only a festival but a festivity. Here are music, song, dance, sport, good cheer, "cakes and ale;" all things that make glad the heart of man, woman, and child. And "ginger," too, is "hot in the mouth." For there is the merry jest, the good natured gibe, the riddle, and the roundelay.

If I give thee honour due,
Mirth I admit me of thy crew

And let no cynical Malvolio censure our cheerfulness for profanity. "To the pure all things are pure;" the loudest laughter may be as sacred as the most silent of tears, let the motive to it be no less kind and generous. It comes not of scorn, contempt, or malignity; but of "full-throated" happiness—a fountain of sparkling waters gushing over or jetting upward, from mere excess of abundance. Happiness!—yet not complete; for the time's felicity is proper to expectation, not fulfilment. It is arrayed in the robes of hope, not of possession. It is Christmas Eve—not yet Christmas Day.

But now the Eve has passed, and the night has also passed; the morning has arisen, "with healing on his wings." Again, in this nineteenth century, the world's Saviour is mystically born, and his birth dramatically celebrated, both in the Baron's Hall and in the Peasant's Cottage. What yesterday was merely indicated, shall to-day be bountifully expressed. Our forefathers made of this a jovial time—worshipping Bacchus under a holier name. Sir Toby Belch and Sir Andrew Aguecheek were good fellows and honourable, in the days of Elizabeth—ay, and since. In those of Queen Anne, drunkenness was as much the vice of the well-born as of the ill-bred. Thanks to the educators of modern times, we have at length been taught the gain of temperance, if not the virtue. Having made the acquaintance of the Muses, we now emulate more refined and elegant pleasures. By cultivating our tastes, we have mended our manners. The child of the nineteenth century is born to better influences than was the heir of the seventeenth—the dull sot of modern infants, invested thus with a better fortune than welcomed the boy Shakspeare, enjoys advantages unparalleled in history. Every year, too, adds to the general experience. Not a Christmas can pass without some new Truth having been born into the world. This year, especially, has had its own truth—this year of revolutions, republicanisms, and direction which truth let us cherish, and hail with angel-hymns; for in its evolution the Destiny of Europe is included.

Let the master of the Baronial Hall welcome both the New Era and the New Truth. Neither will do him any harm—the purpose of both is simply to make him a better and an abler man. Power and wealth can no longer safely enrobe them in "the comfort of fur" of dullness. They must be bright and cheerful as a Christmas fire; their garments should be gay as the season, and their hearts and their countenances as full of benevolence and of sympathy. Knowledge must make their brows to shine with that smooth and polished surface which distinguished the forehead of Canning. Not in bulk or might of limb; not in their large possessions; but in wisdom they must look to be strong; seek their safety in their wits, not in their thews or their coins, their sinews or their acres. If they desire dominion, thus only shall they secure it; if they long for treasure, thus only shall they find it. For the study of the horse and the dog—noble animals—now let them study a nobler, Man! For the stable and the kennel, let them enter the library and the lecture-room. And when thus they have qualified themselves for the exercise of authority, then will the people's obedience be readily conceded; and when thus they shall have learned how wealth may be impartially distributed, and find their true interest in the equitable application of the science, then may they safely be entrusted with the stewardship of riches. No man will envy his neighbour the enjoyment of what he holds for the benefit of all.

Our forefathers in their rude fashion doubtless aimed at this; and the Hospitality of the Hall at this festive season is not only a romantic fiction, but an historical fact. All were welcome—all, from Christmas Eve to Twelfth Night, were welcome—to good cheer, to right good substantial carnal comforts. Heart and hand went together, and Bounty had more than a mere name to live. She had a real existence, and nature and art were made tributary to her charitable behest. Let us, however, reflect. More is required now from every man than was then expected from any. The bountiful motive is indeed the same; but the method of display is an improved one. The relations of society are changed. They are no longer of a merely material character; they now respect the mind as well as the body. Beef and beer are excellent, but education is more excellent. The soul demands instruction as her greatest good; she pants for it as the hart for the water-brooks, and will not be balked of her strong desire. Let her drink of it fully and freely, without money and without price; and, through the length and breadth of the land, let there be public channels dug for the unrestricted supply of the healing stream. A little knowledge may or may not be dangerous; but there is no peril in drinking deep of the spring.

Than our fathers there were no deeper drinkers—no deeper thinkers. But the better attribute was too exclusively confined to a class. Some of that class we would indeed welcome as Old Friends and true Aristocrats—Spenser, Sir Philip Sydney, Shakespeare, Bacon, Taylor. None better understood the significance of Friendship. That old Grecian and Roman virtue had not yet suffered the damage which, we fear, it has undergone during the subsequent commercial period. We have not lately heard of many Beaumonts and Fletchers. All the more hail we this Christmas time, since it brings back an old sentiment which cannot become obsolete without imperilling the dearest unions. Friends who see not—cannot see—one another at any other period of the year, meet uniformly at this. Regularly as Christmas comes round—true to the day—the same friends dine at the same board—the same in number, though not in age; unless, indeed, the ever-greedy Death, in certain of his sublime abstractions, may have withdrawn from the Christmas circle some whom Heaven had previously invited to its own "high banquet-table."

And what a blessing is this to the humbler classes—to the peasant and the mechanic—to those whose daily subsistence is dependant on their daily endeavour—who, according to Wordsworth, "understand the wisdom of the prayer that asks for daily bread." Necessity, that stern mother, had kept them apart so long, and would, but for this yearly custom, separate them for ever. But, now, "Welcome to Old friends!" O welcome! Thank God that again we thus meet, and can congratulate each other! Is there not happiness in the clasp of the hand—in the glance of the eye? See how parent and child—with that "pious brute," the household dog—all come forth to greet the acquaintance of "auld lang syne"—to assure them that they can never be forgot—that they never have been—that they have been eagerly expected that they are as welcome as ever!

To those capable of this sublime sentiment, what good gift need be denied? And why should not they and their betters be again friends as of yore? Let the Worker recognise the Employer as his oldest and best friend; and let the latter give him good reason to do so. Let him not deny to any class that most precious of all gifts—the gift of Education. Let it not be withheld, in whole or in part, from any. Give to all the full opportunity of complete education, and the task of government would become so easy as almost to supersede its necessity. The wheels of society would move readily, as if instinct with life. The apparatus, kept in constant repair, would answer immediately to the directing hand. Already, this is so to a considerable extent in England. Men are now more disposed to rely on moral than on physical forces; hail the demonstration of the former with peaceful rapture, and condemn the latter even though exhibited in support of a just cause. What an immeasurable benefit is here secured! a benefit calculated to make the present Christmas signally happy. Henceforth, not only the end, but the means whereby it is attainable, must be equally recognised for good. Violence must be repudiated as an unmitigable evil—

Your gentleness shall force,
More than your force move us to gentleness.

Of old this quality of gentleness was supposed to be confined to the Family of the Hall. It is so no longer. If Christmas in the Hall is now marked by more elegance and refinement than were known in any previous century; you shall find, also, that in the Cottage modern Christmas has his amenities, and that the poor man's pleasures have become both intellectual and moral. Gentleness is no longer a distinguishing quality, but accepted as a popular law. It belongs to every one; to the peasant and mechanic as well as to the peer and the squire. So much is it a mark of our recent progression, that the complaint of those who would have the world stand still now generally is, that "now-a-days every one would be a gentleman—thinks himself a gentleman—apes the manners of a gentleman." Is this such a dreadful evil, that it should excite special alarm? Or is it not alarm, but wonder that is excited? Not the evil, but novelty that is apprehended? Untried things, of course, are of uncertain operation; but, from gentle aims and accomplishments, nothing peculiarly unpleasant, one might think, need be expected. Of the opposite quality, we have had enough experience; and might consent to try this, if only for the sake of the change.

The sake of Change! Are there some who deem the motive unworthy? Let such learn that it is not necessarily so. Variableness is grateful. Nature observes it—in morning, noon, and eve—in the weeks and months and seasons of the year. Change! Why, it is the sentiment of this time—of this tide of Christmas—of this transition period between the Old and the New. These are the Last Days of the Old Year; this day week will be the First Day of the New Year. The "Merry Christmas" it is, that inaugurates the "Happy New Year." If it be true, as the Royal Sage asserted, that the Day of Death is better than the Day of Birth, be it remembered that, at this season, we have both epochs, and the good of both urged on our peculiar consideration. Now, at this moment, while we are so merry, the Old Year is dying. We are like Hercules in the house of Admetus while Alcestes was expiring. But, like him, we are not permitted to be disturbed with the knowledge of the melancholy circumstance, lest the laws of hospitality be violated. We have a right to be merry, notwithstanding. The Lord of the Year has so decreed it. Let the departed, therefore, be taken forth and buried in secret. Be assured that He looks forward to his advantage in it. To Him shall the New Year be brought as a New Bride. The veil, that so classically shadows her face, only for awhile conceals her identity from her Beloved. Withdraw that, he shall perceive that the Old and the New are one, except that (O startling paradox!) the New is a day older. In this respect only "another"—in all regards else "the same." Yes! Time is always old and always young. Though flowing from the most ancient of days, still (to borrow a figure from Charles Lamb), like the river which supplies our native Babylon with its richest boon, Time rejoices in his eternal novity.

THE WAITS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "ORION."

'Tis heavy mist—'tis golden gloom;
Strange shapes emerge in grey and white!
Am I in bed, or in my tomb?
Dreaming, or waking?—Day, or night?
There comes a stir of wings around—
A restless darkness and a sound.

I hear soft music in the air;
It breathes a sweet unearthly strain,
Floating about like angels' hair!
It ceases—pleasure melts to pain.
Yet rapture wakes and thrills afar,
And lives in silence, like a star.

How thoughts fly back to childhood's hours,
When, full of bliss, thus half-awake,
We roved enchanted halls and towers,
While fairies sang upon the lake;
Or distant angels quired a hymn,
Of Jesus born in Bethlehem.

Again the music—moving near!
Thus did it swell in my young heart,
And made each loving hope more dear—
For Beauty is of life a part;
Once seen, she never leaves your side,
Though all the world reject, deride.

Beneath my window!—'Tis the Waits!
Fine strings, and deep melodious horn.
The vocal clarionet relates
Some tale of true-love left forlorn.
And now it changes to a dance,
Merry, yet touch'd with old romance.

The darkness of our curtain'd rest
Is chased and cheer'd at Christmas time:
How cold the air beyond the nest!
The snow-flakes fall, and creep, and climb!
Icicles shine—the flagstones freeze—
I feel it; and I hear—a sneeze!

Reality! before thy face
Flies Poetry—but yet returns,
Unwilling thus to win the race,
And from thine earth-boos largely learns.
Let us look out into the night,
And see "the music" in its plight.

This "music" goes not to the wars.
Yet must with care its life defend;
Therefore it muffles head and jaws,
And often quaffs a treacherous friend.
Cold night, my lads! or, rather, morning;
Though darkness quells all signs of dawning.

Beneath the faint lamp's frosty rays
There leans a figure, hard and spare;
A gentleman of "better days,"
Who lived too fast, and wore life bare.
He dress'd well kept his horses, hounds—
A flower-pot now holds all his grounds!

THE CHRISTMAS WELCOME.—DRAWN BY MARSHALL.—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

Forth from his garret to the street
He wanders with a restless heart,

And thinks of youthful moments sweet,
While hopes, once strong, like ghosts depart.

Perhaps, remorse with sorrow tak[illegible]
Some share in thoughts that music wakes.

THE CHRISTMAS EVE.—DRAWN BY MARSHALL.—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

THE CHRISTMAS WAITS.—DRAWN BY KENNY MEADOWS.—(SEE PAGE 411.)

Yet boyhood dances in the cold,
As poets sing. I, too, would dance;

But, from my nest so long unroll'd,
I now am spoilt for that blithe prance.

Leap back! and draw the curtains round—
Dream music brings the sweetest sound!

CHRISTMAS OFFERINGS.—DRAWN BY HARVEY.—(SEE PAGE 407.)

The Comical Christmas Chronicle,

HOLIDAY HERALD, AND JOCULAR JOURNAL FOR THE NEW YEAR.

ALBERT SMITH, EDITOR.

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1848.

Advertisements.

FOR CHINA DIRECT.—The fine New Aerial Ship "THE HEAD OVER HEELS," Z. 99; R. DERICK DOO, Commander, touching at the top of Mont Blanc and the summit of the Pyramids. For flight and passage apply to the Cast'n Tavern, Air-street.

FOR ANY PART OF THE WORLD.—The En-New Balloon, "THE GULL," wi[illegible]-bottomed; CAPTAIN LARK, Commander. Carries an experienced parachute. Destination unknown, depending upon the wind; affording a fine scope for speculation. Freight according to weight.

RAPID COMMUNICATION WITH CALAIS, by the Quesh Ann's Pocket-pistol, of P[illegible]. By a slot connected with a line, in the manner of Electric Mess[illegible] passengers are [illegible] when [illegible] at the Custom-H[illegible] N[illegible] respectfully treated with.

FOR BOTANY BAY, the fine old convict ship "CRASHER," [illegible] CAPTAIN BULGE, Commander, will sail [illegible] the next positions. For passage apply to any of the justices at the Old Bailey. Work will be found [illegible] all the passengers immediately on their arrival.

RAILWAY SPECULATION.—NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.—Application will be made, early in [illegible] Session, for leave to bring in bills for the following Railways: Liverpool and New York, Folkestone and Boulogne (Sub. to [illegible]), Herne Bay and the Moon, Leicester-square and Mid[illegible]ian Bay, and the New Line from the late Quadrant to the Middle of Next Week.—BOO and CHIVVEM, Agents.

GOOD FUN FOR CHRISTMAS PARTIES.—Just imported from Fatland, per Snapdragon, a CARGO of JOKES, [illegible] new, and others quite as good. Several [illegible] to be found among the stock, which will be sold [illegible] to comic writers and burlesque authors, requiring but little alteration. Also, Potted Puns, pat[illegible] very recommended as agreeable additions to show parties. A few Squibs upon last year's topics will be sold at a merely nominal price.

SAMPLE PACKETS, for Dull Family Dinners, at this Festive Season, will be forwarded to all parts of England, post free, for Sixpence, containing:—

One joke on the viands, such as "tongue," "rum," &c.
One ditto on passing events, such as Louis Napoleon, &c.
One Conundrum, such as "When is beer not beer?"
One Smart Reply, such as "You're another."
One Comic Parody, such as "Come it genteel."

Give your orders early.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS. THE FESTIVE SEASON. Dr MORTAR begs to call particular attention to his new selection of MEDICINES for the present Season and Generalship. A BOX of CHRISTMAS PRESENTS will contain

2 Bottles Iodine Delight.
1 do Lotion for Tincture of Jalap.
1 do Best Decoction of Aloes.
1 Box Old Roman Antibilious Pills.
1 Dozen Ounces Purified Epsom Salts.

The above will be sent, on receipt of a Post-Office Order for Half-a-Guinea, to any part of the kingdom, addressed

Dr. MORTAR, Croton-crescent.

CRIME CHRISTMAS-BOX.—A large SAMPLE HAMPER of really useful PRESENTS will be sent by Mr. GOODHEART, upon receipt of an Order accompanied by a Remittance, containing—

1 Fine Turkey.
1 Pound of Best Norfolk Sausages.
1 Large Plum Pudding.
1 Home-made Quartern Loaf.

Mr GOODHEART ventures to suggest this as an improvement upon the wine and spirit presents, supposed to be all that is essential for Christmas benevolence and festivity.

THE SEA-SERPENT.—This hitherto-unsubdued-to-be-fabulous monster having been at last caught ALIVE, will be exhibited, during the Holidays, on the Eastern Counties Railway, which has been specially fitted up for that purpose. The head will be at Shoreditch; the mane, at Saffron Walden; the fore paddles, now for the first time discovered a mile and one, at Cambridge; the hinder ones, at Norwich; and its fish-tail will be expanded over the triangular land between Yarmouth and Lowestoft. Refer to Bradshaw's Map, for localities. A variety of objects [illegible] to attach, such as mermaids, sea-gulls, islands, volcanoes, whales, and lobsters, for sale

A GALLERY OF PRACTICAL SCIENCE. NEW ADDITIONS [illegible] every day. [illegible] and [illegible] will [illegible] to-morrow. [illegible] will be [illegible] such as [illegible] of Cocks are truly national, being much given to "[illegible]," and to [illegible] "wound up." Some cheap Wooden Combs show the facility [illegible] the Yankees can cut away teeth but their wisdom ones. To-[illegible] some [illegible] recommended by [illegible]

E. THE NEW MOTIVE [illegible] Patent Blowers [illegible] power works [illegible] in the steel [illegible] will impel the ship [illegible] With many other [illegible]

JOHN SMITH.—If the person of this name, who lived in London during the winter of 1846, will apply to Mr. Brown, of Liverpool, he will hear of something he don't like.

JOE.—You are implored to return to your home. You shall have a latch-key, no cold meat, smoke in your bedroom, visit the Fickles, get up when you like, keep your boots in the parlour fender, and quarrel with your uncle. Everything will be done to make you comfortable.—Upper Clapton.

MATRIMONY.—A YOUNG GENTLEMAN, aged 25, of excellent connexions, but no prospects, and first-rate family, but limited income, is desirous of forming an alliance with a Young Lady about five years his junior. It is essential that she be possessed of the usual pounds, a [illegible] musical taste. The Advertiser will enable her to [illegible] the [illegible] stage. She must [illegible] considerable [illegible] attractions, be an accomplished musician, a [illegible] and [illegible] French, German, Italian, [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

MONEY MARKET.

FRIDAY, FIVE O'CLOCK.—The funds have improved to-day. We found a shilling in the pocket of an old resuscitated waistcoat; and a man came to pay us a half-crown that we never expected. Our Stock has been transferred well. This has been effected by reversing its front, and bringing the new part—the long ends usually buttoned under our waistcoat—up to the tie. The part worn under the chin, which was somewhat ravelled, has been clipped straight with a pair of scissors. We do not anticipate an alteration for some time.

We have not invested very profitably in railways, intending to go to Slough, and finding that the Great-Western had stopped their day tickets.

Shares of all kinds have been buoyant, except ploughshares, which continue to sink when put in water.

LITERARY NOTICE.

THE NEW TENNYSON.—This is a new addition of the works of the above popular poet, in which many of his most famous pieces are adapted to the present time. We subjoin an extract:—

MARIANA AT RAMSGATE.

(AFTER SHE LEFT THE MOATED GRANGE.)

With penny chairs the level sands
Were thickly covered far and near;
And two distinct unearthly bands
Made dismal music 'neath the pier.
The people all looked slow and strange,
Mammas did wet-shod children scold;
Unflinching were the bathers bold,
Within the telescopic range.
She only said, "I'm very weary,
Day after day the same;"
She said, "This Ramsgate is so dreary,
I'm sorry that I came."

Her yawns came with the waves at even,
Her yawns came o'er the rocks were dried;
She thought 'twas ten when only seven,
With nought to do but watch the tide.
After the ceasing of the bands,
When gas-lights flickered in the wind,
She drew aside the window-blind,
And gazed athwart the Goodwin Sands.
She only said, "I'm very weary,
Day after day the same;"
She said, "This Ramsgate is so dreary,
I'm sorry that I came."

And at the library at night
A man sang songs she knew of yore,
Or played old dances, polkas blight;
And from the room the wearing bore
Of "numbers one, too, three, and five!"
Came to her of a life bereft,
Till all the visitors had left,
Once more in lodgings small to strive.
She only said, "I'm very weary,
Day after day the same;"
She said, "This Ramsgate is so dreary,
I'm sorry that I came."

And ever when the waves were low,
And the hush'd winds were sure to fail,
She saw the yawning people go
For a delusive shilling sail.
But when the waves were quite at rest,
And all the wind had passed a sell,
The shadows of the party fell
Upon the still sea's glassy breast.
She only said, "I'm very weary,
Day after day the same;"
She said, "This Ramsgate is so dreary,
I'm sorry that I came."

All day within that seaside tomb
The people yawn'd, and star'd, and sigh'd;
At morning wished that noon was come,
And wished at noon for eventide.
Old novels cheer'd them when within,
Old worn-out tunes were played without,
Old newspapers were lent about,
Old square pianos made a din.
She only said, "I'm very weary,
Day after day the same;"
She said, "This Ramsgate is so dreary,
I'm sorry that I came."

The children digging on the shore,
Slow people boring, and the sound
Which to the donkeys, tired and sore,
The drivers made, did all confound
Her sense; but most she suffered pain
When the appointed time drew near
To dress and moon about the pier,
And stare, and gape, and yawn again.
Then said she, "I am very weary
Of Sackett's, shrimps, and sand;"
She said, "I'm off—this Ramsgate dreary
I cannot longer stand."

IN DE LUNATICO INQUIRENDO.—An interesting investigation took place at the Gray's-inn Coffee-house, on Tuesday, respecting the case of Mr. Hunwell Quirk, who was said to be incapable of managing his affairs

The poor gentleman's replies were most satisfactory; but the following facts were sustained by creditable witnesses:—

He had once asked for beer at a parvenu dinner-party.

He had once followed a fire-engine to see where it was going to.

He had taken a ticket in a Derby Sweep and a Frankfort Lottery.

He had bought some wild ducks at the door.

He had been security for a friend, and had put his name to a bill.

He had taken the after-dinner assurance of a man, that he should be glad to see him whenever he called, at his word.

He had believed in a Republic.

Putting all these together, he was found mad.

COVENT-GARDEN THEATRE was built in 1667, one year after the Fire of London, by Mr. William Shakespeare, assisted by Mr. Congreve, a great rocket-maker and dramatist, from the designs of Mr. Barry, a celebrated equestrian clown, and afterwards an eminent architect. Shakspeare lodged, during the building, at Old Hummum's, as it was called, and Mr Hummum, senior, left many anecdotes of him. He was an extraordinary musician, and capital solo performer on the trombone. He produced several operas, which had great success; amongst which we may mention "Hamlet, the Moor of Athens," "Romeo and Cleopatra," "The Merry Wives of Venice," "Cymbeline," "The Two Gentlemen of Windsor," and other well-known works. Dr. Ben Johnson, who wrote the "Dictionary," was a great friend of Shakespeare's, as also was Hamlet, the great jeweller. Covent-Garden Theatre is situated at the angle formed by the union of Regent-street and Mile-End road, in the parish of St. Mary's, Islington. In the adjoining Bow-street, country gentlemen are provided with beds, at the police quarters, gratuitously, and under the superintendence of the chief magistrate. The right to occupy these cheap lodgings is held by a regular tenure—that of breaking a lamp or striking a policeman. This is a curious instance of the quaintness of some of our early institutions, and the laws which regulated them.—From the "Stranger's Guide to London;" a useful and interesting work.

ANTICIPATION OF NEXT YEAR'S EVENTS.

VER on the look out for novelty, we have been enabled, through an extended application of our celebrated telescope, by means of which we have long been enabled to see into the middle of the next week, to arrive at the following events of the ensuing year:—

JANUARY.

Wonderful event—all the theatres in London are full on the same evening, and actually cover their expenses. A star of the first magnitude. Palmyre Amato, in perihelion with the dress-circle at Drury-Lane every night. Young England opposed to education, as the end of the holidays approaches. Mr. Poppins is sure that he has paid all the bills that come in, before; unfortunately, he cannot find the receipts. Everybody determines to turn over a new leaf, and nobody carries out the determination. Revolution in Paris. France an absolute Monarchy.

FEBRUARY.

Great floods; panic; and general run upon the banks, by all the rivers; colour of all low pastures changed from green to lake. Mr. Poppins receives a bundle of valentines by every post, intimating his chance of dying a bachelor, and portraying him in exaggerated, not to say totally unlike, illustrations. Ordering the servant not to take any more in, he rejects a remittance from his friends. Revolution in Paris. The Government of France changes to a Republic.

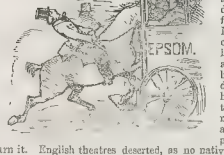
MARCH.

All the hares go mad with joy at the close of their hunting season. Tiles and chimney-pots resemble club scandals, and are blown all over town in no time. Mr. Poppins finds quarter-day come round before he expects it, and feels convinced it occurs more frequently than it ought. The first flight of singing-birds from Italy arrives; and six operas are opened for foreign performances. Revolution in Paris. The Government of France becomes a limited Monarchy.

APRIL.

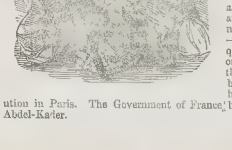
The great Sea-Serpent is seen half-way across the Atlantic, on the 1st, by no end of people; and large books are written to prove that it is something else. Mr. Poppins looks out his spring wardrobe; sends his white trowsers to be let down a little longer; and finds, with sorrow, that he must have a new pale-t, the old one being too far gone to return. Plenty of Bath buns appear, they having been told to go there because they were so cross on Good-Friday. Revolution in Paris. France an Empire, and Louis Philippe re-called to be at its head.

MAY.



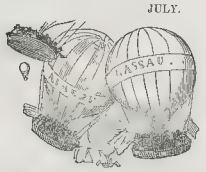
A Great Derby Sweep of everybody's cash takes place amongst those who are desirous of securing "a fortune for sixpence." Mr. Poppins ventures on a bolter, which he hires cheap, to Epsom; and bolts into an omnibus at Sutton. He also draws the winning horse in a "distribution," but don't get any money. He also sends an unlucky friend five pounds, who don't receive it. English theatres deserted, as no natives are good enough in which there is not an R. Revolution in Paris. Louis Philippe compelled to come back to us, and France becomes a Protectorate.

JUNE.



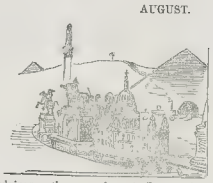
The summer sets in with its usual severity; and the new "Umbrella Polka" is played for the first time at Cremorne, with indifferent success. Mr. Poppins is astounded to find that another quarter-day is approaching; he does nothing but pay—pay—pay—until it gets quite a shame. The only wonder is where the money comes from; but it does come, somehow or another. Revolution in Paris. The Government of France becomes despotic under Abdel-Kader.

JULY.



The aëronautic mania commences, and continues throughout the month. Frightful collision of balloons over London, on a general fête day. Mr. Poppins emigrates to Gravesend to economise, which consists in his paying two steamboat fares a day, and marketing every night, because lodgings are so "slow." A lassie about a cargo of American ice, during which it all melts. France proclaims a Sultan, in whom the Monarchical power is vested.

AUGUST.



Opening of the new Cairo and Suez Railway, by which London goes out of town. Last being the only spot left tranquil for travellers. The Emperor commences shooting at the Moors, on the 12th, in Algeria. Mr Poppins has a brace of grouse sent him from Perth, which are five days coming—he can stay a week at his London lodgings—then come down to Gravesend, whilst he has gone for four days to Boulogne—and are at last brought under the notice of the Sanitary Commission: carriage, sixteen shillings. Revolution in Paris. France nothing.

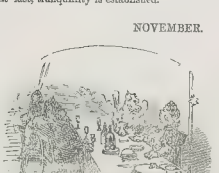
SEPTEMBER.

The st ma ce him, he to s day, as he walks up L. ham-place. Total desertion of London. Mr. Poppins indignantly disputes the fact that quarter-day has come on again—it cannot be three months since he paid his last; his landlady entertains a different opinion, on which he returns from Gravesend. Revolution in Paris. The Government of France becomes miscellaneous, under several heads.

OCTOBER.

A glorious harvest makes up for all past losses. Pennyroyal a halfpenny a dozen; and every wheat-ear as large as Indian corn. Mr. Poppins looks out his winter things, and thinks that his old palatot, revived, will do for the dark evenings. Some Irish invited to a "Fête of Fraternity" at Boulogne, get up a fight, to show their notions of union thing. Revolution in Paris. France elects a Czar, and issues posting bills to the effect that, at last, tranquillity is established.

NOVEMBER.



Grand Civic Banquet in Guildhall, attended by Gog, Magog, the Queen on Bow Church, and the Grasshopper on the Exchange, in celebration of our old first tailor's still remaining term and unchanged. Mr. Poppins, having an uncle a common-council-man, dines with the Lord Mayor, and has a headache all next day, which he says was the gas, the waiting for dinner, and the brass band in the gallery. Revolution in Paris. Barricades thrown up in ten minutes; and a Red Republic proclaimed in a quarter of an hour.

DECEMBER.

Revolt of Turkey, the Subjects being determined to have Kalafat for Christmas dole. The year ends happily for everybody; and Hope has a polka with Time, for pure joy. Mr. Poppins remembers, in the middle of the Christmas dinner, that it is quarter-day, which takes away his appetite, as he was not at all prepared for it, and therefore determines that next year he will really begin to save. Revolution in Paris. Other European powers, disgusted with the constant riots in France, settle the question by dividing that country amongst them. France extinct as a nation.

A NOVEL ENTERPRISE is about to be tried at the Strand Theatre, which, it is well known, is too small to support a company of more than one. On boxing-night the new lessee, with all the zeal of great energies, will open the gallery door at a quarter-past six, and having admitted the rush of three boys, and taken their money, will close it, and proceed to the pit. Here he will remain for five minutes, and then remove to the box pay-place. When everybody has arrived, he will go round by the stage-door; and having played a tune on the drum, in the orchestra, by way of overture, he will draw up the curtain and appear in a monopolylogue, written expressly for him by a popular author; and between the parts he will go round with cakes and ginger-beer. As soon as this is over he will run round again to the front, and having unlocked the doors, will call the carriages, and let out the audience. When all have departed, he will throw the canvass over the fronts of the boxes, collect all the play-bills left behind (to get into practice for taking up bills), go round the house with a lanthorn to see that all is safe, and finally retire home much fatigued with his exertions.—From a Correspondent.

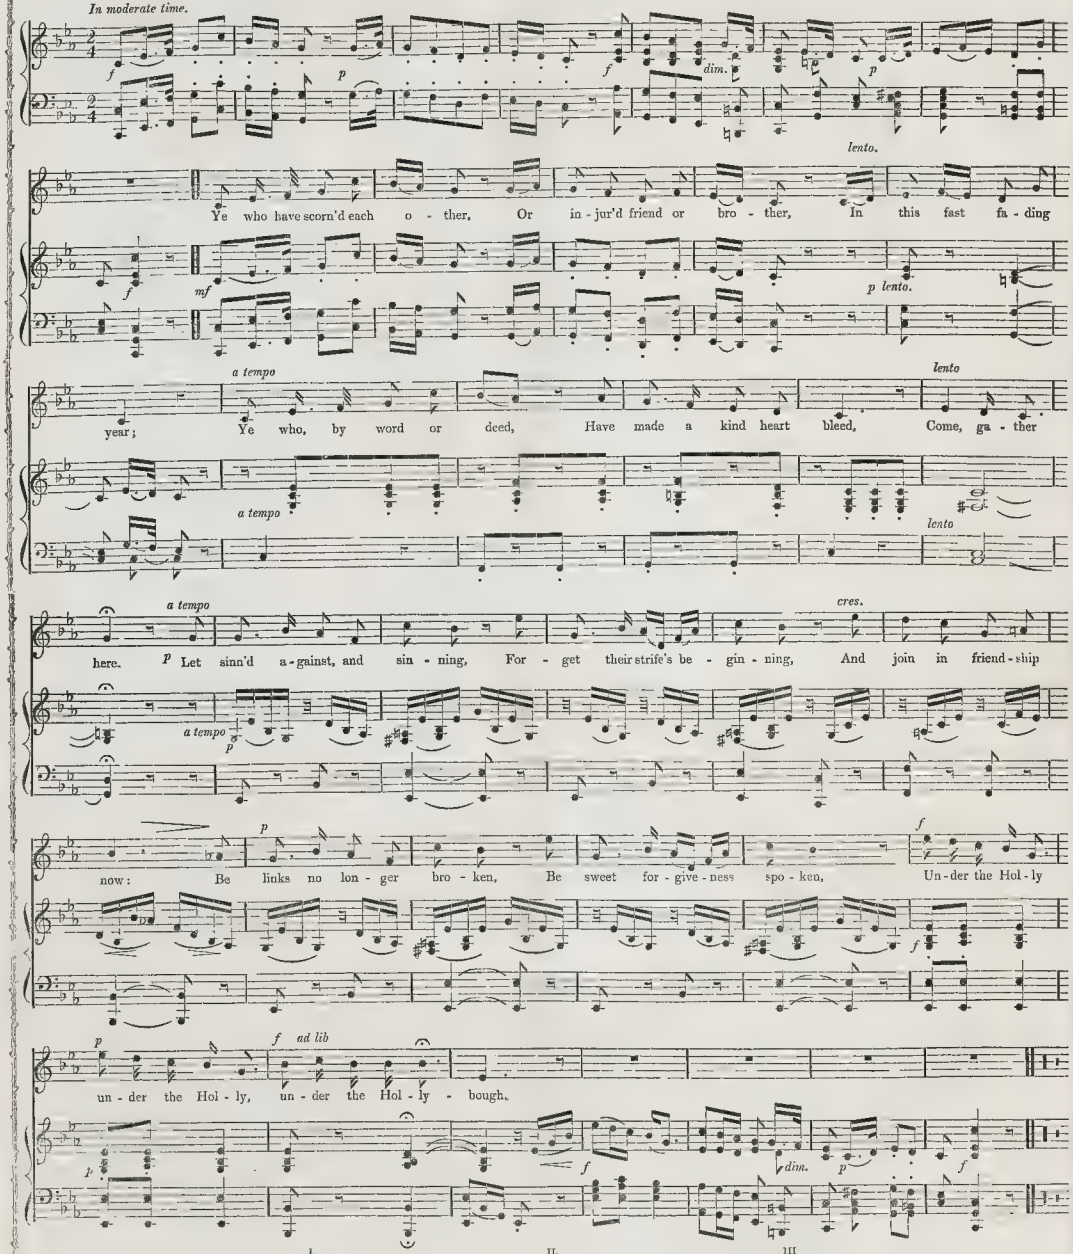
THE POETRY BY CHARLES MACKAY.

UNDER THE HOLLY BOUGH.

A CHRISTMAS LYRIC.

THE MUSIC BY C. W. GLOVER,

Author of "Jeannette and Jeannot."



In moderate time.
Ye who have scorn'd each o - ther, Or in - jur'd friend or bro - ther, In this fast fa - ding lento.
year; Ye who, by word or deed, Have made a kind heart bleed, Come, ga - ther a tempo
lento
here. Let sinn'd a-gainst, and sin - ning, For - get their strife's be - gin - ning, And join in friend - ship cres.
now: Be links no lon - ger bro - ken, Be sweet for - give - ness spo - ken, Un-der the Hol - ly ad lib
un - der the Hol - ly, un - der the Hol - ly - bough.
dim.

I.

Ye who have scorn'd each other,
Or injured friend or brother,
In this fast fading year;
Ye who, by word or deed,
Have made a kind heart bleed,
Come gather here.
Let sinn'd against, and sinning,
Forget their strife's beginning,
And join in friendship now,
Be links no longer broken,
Be sweet forgiveness spoken
Under the Holly-bough.

II.

Ye who have loved each other,
Sister and friend and brother,
In this fast fading year-
Mother and sire and child,
Young man and maiden mild,
Come gather here;
And let your hearts grow fonder,
As Memory shall ponder
Each past unbroken vow;
Old loves and younger wooing
Are sweet in the renewing
Under the Holly-bough

III

Ye who have nourish'd sadness,
Estranged from hope and gladness,
In this fast fading year;
Ye with o'erburden'd mind,
Made aliens from your kind,
Come gather here.
Let not the useless sorrow
Pursue you night and morrow;
If e'er you hoped, hope now—
Take heart, uncloud your faces,
And join in our embraces
Under the Holly-bough.

London: Printed and Published by Robert Cocks & Co., New Burlington Street, in the Parish of St Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand aforesaid.—Saturday, December 30, 1848.—Supplement

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 351.—Vol. XIII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1848. [Sixpence.

RETROSPECT OF 1848.

The year that is now closing, and that so soon will have glided from the present, and become a "portion and a parcel of the dreadful past," will stand gigantically prominent in history. No year within the memory of living men has been so remarkable for the number and the magnitude of its events, whether we consider them simply as they affect present times, or as they are likely to mould the ideas and the destinies of the future. To the vast multitude of mankind 1848 has been a year of surprises. To the few who look beneath the surface of society, who know the laws by which ideas make to themselves physical instruments out of the passions and the necessities of men, who discover hidden causes, and from a knowledge of causes can predict their inevitable results, the year has been one of wonder, but scarcely of surprise. Long ere the year began it was seen that the policy pursued by Louis Philippe and M. Guizot would produce revolution in France; that revolution in that country would give an impetus to the cause for which the Italians had both plotted secretly and agitated openly, for the last thirty years; that Germany would commence the long-meditated task of establishing free institutions; and that Europe generally would be roused into commotion, wherever there was a country that had not settled, after some fashion or other, the great question of the right of the middle classes to a share in their own Government. The death of Louis Philippe was supposed by most of those who thought deeply upon political questions, to be likely to fire the train of revolution; while some, who thought more deeply still, predicted that his continuance in life, and in the policy which had signalised the years before his fall was even more likely than his death to open the flood-gates of democracy. In October, 1847, the French had presentiments of a catastrophe. They saw even then the dark shadow of a coming revolution. Some were of opinion that whether Louis Philippe lived or died, there would be a revolution in six months; others, again, gave him a longer lease of power, and predicted that within a twelvemonth the French could scarcely fail to make another great trial for the achievement of constitutional liberty on a broader basis than was compatible with the system of M. Guizot. The calculations were but too correct. The anticipated blow was struck in France; the anticipated consequences followed throughout Europe.

But—foreseen or unforeseen, calculated or uncalculated, predicted or unpredicted—the events of 1848 are so great in themselves and so certain to be prolific of others as great, that the future historian cannot, by possibility, hesitate as to the gigantesque proportions with which it will be necessary to portray it on his page. It is destined to form an era in the history, not of Europe only, but of the world; and to be one of those grand resting or starting points from which humanity dates its progress or its retrogression. The overthrow of monarchies; the breaking up of empires; the degradation of authority; the saturnalia of mobs; the banishment of great princes; the transformation of exiles into mob-applauded potentates; the exaltation of the mean; the humiliation of the lofty; the battle of race against race, and of principle against principle—with all the melodramatic incidents of sieges, bombardments, abdications, assassinations, and the conflicts of mobs and armies in the crowded thoroughfares of great cities—are but a few of the events that in rapid succession have marked the progress of 1848. And now, at the close of this remarkable year, when a comparative calm has succeeded the hurricane, let us consider what the mighty hubbub has been about. Let us look at the mistakes that have been committed by the peoples and the rulers of the Continent: let us reflect upon the causes that have preserved our institutions intact, amid the wreck around us; that we may, from a retrospect of the past, gain new lessons for our guidance in the future.

It is obvious to all that the revolutions and commotions of 1848 are not things of to-day merely, but that they took their rise in times far remote. They are the consequences of ideas that have been working in men's minds for ages. They cannot be considered as whims and caprices, the spirts of popular effervescence, or the frantic outbreaks of an unruly rabble. We must, if we would throw prejudice apart, and look at them truly for our instruction, go deeper into their history and philosophy. These commotions date, in fact, from the invention of printing. That invention emancipated the mind of humanity. Knowledge, which before had crept like a worm among men, afterwards hovered like an angel over them. She no longer pursued her slow way in the darkness, but flashed her full effulgence in the sight of mankind, from a height previously unattainable. The printing of the Bible was the first great achievement. The Protestant Reformation was the inevitable result. Great revolutions are not accomplished in one age. We may see a portion of the process; but to see a whole revolution, we must look both behind and before. Europe has been operating a mighty revolution ever since the printing of the Bible taught men to think; and the revolution is far from completed at this hour. We, in our insular position, set the nations the example. Two centuries of the printing press were sufficient to enlighten the sturdy intellect of the English; and ere the seventeenth century had closed we had not only won our religious but our civil liberty, and settled them both on a lasting foundation. A thoughtful, an industrious, an enterprising, an orderly, and a religious people, we understood freedom in the greatest fullness of its meaning, both for the individual and for the community; and we established it upon the broad basis of toleration for each other. The nations scarcely knew what we were doing, but they became aware by degrees of the great task we had accomplished.

The liberty, civil and religious, which we acquired in the seventeenth century, was transplanted, in vigorous offshoots, across the Atlantic; and at the end of the eighteenth century, the world looked on with admiration at a new development. The United States of America established both principles; and Europe, fired by the example, attempted the task which more precocious England had accomplished for herself more than a century previously, and which she had taught her Transatlantic children to accomplish also. France was foremost in the endeavour, but having more energy than understanding—more desire for freedom than knowledge of its laws—more aptitude to break down than to build up a system—more love of violence than attachment to order, she failed in the attempt, and retarded, by her impetuosity and her excesses, her own progress and that of all the nations around her. But the struggle of France, and of all the other nations of Europe in which the printing-press is an instrument of power, has never since been discontinued. The great idea has been constantly at work. From 1789 to 1848 is but a short interval in the life of nations. Sixty years, though long to men, are but little to mankind. It took our ancestors a period considerably longer to acquire for us the blessings which we enjoy; and if sixty years have been insufficient to procure similar blessings for the French, the Germans, and the Italians, we have but to await with patience the ripening of the seed; and to reflect that no nation ever became free until it understood freedom, and that the nations of Europe are as yet but at the study of the rudiments.

FRANCIS JOSEPH, EMPEROR OF AUSTRIA.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

The year 1848 will teach them all, it is to be hoped, a useful though a hard lesson. They have one and all repeated an old error. They have loved freedom without understanding what it means. They have had a blind passion for it, not a rational love; and they have been unable to comprehend the fact which we in England understand thoughby, that true freedom voluntarily resigns a portion of her rights, that she may secure the permanent enjoyment of the remainder; and that each man's freedom to do as he pleases eventuates at all times and in all places in the most deplorable of tyrannies—in anarchy, in convulsion, and in civil warfare. They have not acquired the necessary knowledge that freedom cannot result from violence; that it is a thing of reason and conviction alone; or like the lightning's vivacity, or like unrestrained and unrestrainable ferocity of the children of Nature. These may depend upon physical strength for their support; but liberty among civilised men can only be conquered and maintained by moral means. It is a thing of the mind. The French and Italians in a high, and the Germans in a smaller degree, are as yet backward in this lesson. They will learn it, it is to be hoped, in due time, and amid the order which has been promised in the enjoyment of constitutional privileges. They seek no change. Our case is theirs. They know freedom when they have got it. They know how to bear, and to forbear. They know that order is the fountain of liberty, and that a people who are continually resorting to physical violence for the redress of wrongs, whether real or imaginary, must eventually, however they may seem to conquer, degenerate into a people, who, as they suffer, so deserve. We have no doubt, under the pressure of many real grievances. The happiness of man is not the creature of political forms—or systems of Government, however perfect. The evils existing amongst us, which sometimes draw from the ignorant an exclamation of discontent or hatred against the established order of society, are not to be remedied by political changes. Kings or presidents are equally powerless to make the people happy. Happiness is always attainable for them must spring from themselves—from their own industry, for their own intelligence—from their own religious and moral feeling.

Happiness is not to be attained by violence. It cannot be snatched. It must be deserved long, now peaceably, and wisely secured. This is the great moral that the French and their imitators have yet to learn. It is so obvious, that after the Revolution was not a month old before they began to perceive it. It is happy for us that we became aware of it at an early period of our history; and that we accomplished in the seventeenth century, the task which other nations are struggling so blindly to accomplish in the nineteenth. Whatever evils may exist among us, we have learned to amend peacefully and by the force of reason. We acted upon that principle when we had no such striking examples for our guidance. We will cling to it all the more firmly by reflecting on the events of 1848—whether they occurred amongst ourselves, or amongst the less fortunate nations of Continental Europe.

THE EMPEROR OF AUSTRIA.

On the 2nd of December an event took place which created an immense sensation throughout Europe, and the consequence of which it is impossible to calculate. On that day, Ferdinand of Austria abdicated the throne in favour of his nephew, the Archduke Francis Joseph, in the presence of Windischgrätz and Jellachich, who had been summoned to Olmütz to be witnesses of the solemn act. Many rumours are afloat relative to the sudden abdication of Ferdinand; and it is not impossible that one of the causes is the precarious state of the Emperor's health: but the greater probability is, with the view that the affairs of Hungary imperatively demanded the step. Hungary has always been the great difficulty of the Austrian Government: by the concessions of March it was placed in a false position to the rest of the Monarchy; however, honesty on the part of the Crown might, during the following three months, still have allayed the storm; but the Imperial councillors brought matters to a crisis which could only be decided by the sword. Ferdinand had, as King of Hungary, at his coronation at Presburg, sworn the ancient capitulation, and thereby virtually acknowledged the liberties of the Magyars, the integrity of the empire, and consequently the incorporation of Croatia, Dalmatia, Sclavonia, and Transylvania with Hungary, as inseparable parts of Hungary in virtue of the royal sanction. By taking the field against his subjects, by separating Sclavonia from the Hungarian Monarchy, Ferdinand would have broken his oath. His counsellors knew well he could not be induced to do this, and accordingly he abdicated.

Francis Joseph, the present Emperor of Austria, is the eldest son of the Archduke Francis Charles (who resigned in his favour), and of the Archduchess Sophia, stated to be a highly-gifted woman. Francis Joseph was born on the 18th August, 1830, and is consequently in his 19th year. The young Emperor has enjoyed a first-rate education, and is particularly distinguished for his acquirements as a linguist, speaking eleven languages to perfection. Francis Joseph has from early youth displayed a great predilection for military affairs, and has particularly been instructed in the service of a soldier in all its branches. He is of prepossessing appearance, and is said to be good-natured, but at the same time entirely under the influence of his mother, whose ambition sees in the elevation of her favourite child a vast field for the display of her political finesse

Loss of a German Emigrant Ship.—On Wednesday night week, the ship Bramone, Captain Matson, from Hamburg for New Orleans, with 115 emigrants and a general cargo, struck on and drove over the Goodwin Sand, and after coming to her anchors, cutting away her main and mizen masts, and losing a third anchor and chain, struck on the Pan Sand. A Margate lugger, the Coy Queen, being in the vicinity, observed her signal of distress, and, in consequence of the weather being at once fair and calm, readily approached her. Another large lugger, the Intrepid, of Margate, also made the ship, and the boats succeeded in saving the lives of 118 passengers, and the crew (20 in number), who were landed in Ramsgate Harbour about eleven o'clock in the afternoon, but in a very distressed condition, and several suffering severely from exposure to cold and wet. The crew of the luggers exerted themselves to the utmost to save the lives of the unfortunate Germans, without any prospect of remuneration.

COUNTRY NEWS.

Bolton Election.—Mr. Thomas Ridgway Bridson has become the Conservative candidate on reform principles. He professes strict economy in public expenditure, and pledges himself to do away with all acknowledged abuses.

The National Rate Question.—At a meeting of the Leicester National Rate Association, held last week, it was resolved that the borough members (Messrs. Ellis and Harris), with the mayor, and Messrs Whetstone, Dabbs, and W. Biles, should form a deputation to wait upon the county members upon this question. It was further resolved that the secretaries be desired to write to Nottingham, Bradford, Norwich, and other large towns, inviting their co-operation, and requesting the appointment of deputies, who should all assemble in London, to the purpose of having another interview with the Government and the Poor-Law Board.

Tenant Right.—The Peterborough Farmers' Club, at their last meeting, discussed the question, "What measures could be adopted to cheapen the cost of the production of food?" A lengthy debate ensued, in the course of which the question of tenant-right was introduced by a gentleman who had attended the meeting. The following resolution was then agreed to:—"That it is desirable for the tenantry of this country to have their capital so secured as to enable them to farm in accordance with the requirements of the age, which would cause a demand for labour, and produce an increased quantity of food at less price."

Proposed Cheese and Cattle Fairs at Crewe.—At a public meeting held recently at Crewe, in Cheshire, and attended by the principal farmers, tradesmen, and general dealers in the vicinity (Mr. J. Wilkes in the chair), the property of taking immediate measures for the establishment of cheese and cattle markets was discussed, and the question decided in the affirmative, it being the impression of the meeting that no place in the kingdom possesses greater local advantages, or offers greater means of transit. It is stated that a deputation waited upon the directors of the London and North-western Railway Company, on Tuesday, and were promised every assistance in the erection of the buildings and enclosures necessary for carrying out the project.

The Ancient at Riddermineter Grammar-School.—A special meeting of the town-council of Riddermineter has been held to receive the petition agreed to at the public meeting, complaining of the removal of the mayor from the foolscalip of the grammar-school, and begging the corporation to take such steps as to them might appear desirable to procure his admission to that body. The petition having been read, it was moved by Mr. Brinton, and seconded by Mr. Tudor—"That a memorial be drawn up by the council, and presented to the feoffees of the grammar-school, asking them to take the necessary steps to make the Mayor of Riddermineter for the time being a feoffee ex officio." To this an amendment was moved by Mr. Harvey, and seconded by Mr. Roberts—"That the council do not receive the petition at present." On the question being put in the course of the discussion that the bishop of the diocese had replied to the town's meeting petition, [illegible] ing he would as soon as possible after Christ-

Restoration of St. George's Church, Canterbury. This ancient edifice having lately been cleared out to the very walls, for the purpose of repairing its roofing, some curious relics of early times have been brought to light. One of the divisions of the old pews was found to be formed out of old oak panelling. On the upper part were carved, in a most delicate and beautiful manner, the representations of winged cherubs, and on the lower portion an elegant border of exquisitely-chiselled quatrefoils. The whole have been carefully preserved, with the intention of their being again introduced in some part of the renewed pulpit or pews. In the south wall, near the east end, were discovered traces of elaborately ornamented sedilia, or stone seats. One of the three is of rather larger dimensions and lower than the others. This has apparently been used since the Reformation, as a window, opening into the street, on which side of the wall is a square stone casement. The ancient iron hooks and the latchet hook of this window are as perfect as if they had only been placed there yesterday, so that they could not have been much used after they were fixed. Upon the east wall, and near to these seats, was found, immediately concealed beneath a coating of lime, a piscina—a hollow and perforated basin of stone, placed in a small niche formed in square stone work in the substance of the wall. The font in this church is the same, probably, as those placed in many churches in the time of Edward VI., whose initials are remaining on one of somewhat similar construction in St. Alphage Church. The vase or bason of each is sufficiently capacious for the immersion of infants, a practice which was continued in the Reformation. In the south wall, about the centre, was exposed, on taking down the panelling of the old pews, a handsome oaken chair or arch, probably of the fourteenth or fifteenth century, constructed of squ re stones in the body of the wall; and, about three feet high, was discovered a tomb, where none of but dust remains now in it. Although the tomb mentioned in the course of the foundress of the sacred edifice, but at what period placed here is unknown. A quantity of ancient small tiles have been found, and human relics, which had been for many years entombed in the earth, but of what date

POSTSCRIPT.

BURGLARY AT KENSINGTON.—On Thursday, information was received by the police of an extensive robbery, on the preceding night, of valuable jewellery ancient and foreign coins, Bank of England notes, &c., to the value of upwards of £300, from the residence of Count Carlo Pepello, 11, St. George's-terrace, Gloucester-road, Kensington. The burglars are supposed to have entered an empty house in the terrace, ascended to the top, and proceeded onwards along the roofs of the adjoining houses to No. 11, which they entered by removing a pane of glass from the attic window. The robbery was effected while the family were at dinner in the dining-room.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

UNITED STATES.

The mail steamer Britannia, which arrived in Liverpool on Thursday, has brought intelligence to the 14th instant from New York. Public interest was concentrated more in the intelligence from the gold regions of California than upon any other topic; and in reference to which the papers are almost completely filled.

The Secretary of the Treasury has made his report to Congress, which, as usual, is a very lengthy one. It possesses nothing of interest to Europeans.

Some cases of cholera had appeared at New York; and lively apprehensions had begun to be entertained of the spreading of the disease.

Mr. Macready had had a most enthusiastic reception at Baltimore, on the 12th inst.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

WINDSOR.

On Christmas-day, the Queen and Prince, and the ladies and gentlemen of the Royal household, attended divine service in the private chapel in the Castle. The Hon. and Rev. C. L. Courtenay performed the service, and administered the holy sacrament. The Royal dinner party in the evening included the Duchess of Inverness and her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, Baron Stockmar, Mr. and the Hon. Mrs. Anson, Col. and the Hon. Mrs. Phipps, the Hon. and Rev. C. L. Courtenay, Mr. Glover, and Dr. Mayer.

On Wednesday the Queen and Prince Albert took an early walk in the Home-park and Slopes. His Royal Highness Prince Albert, attended by the Marquis of Breadalbane, the Earl Grey, Viscount Canning, the Hon. Colonel Phipps, and Colonel Bouverie, went out shooting in Windsor-park. Mr. Field has had the honour of completing his sittings for a miniature of her Royal Highness the Princess Helena, by command of her Majesty. The Royal dinner party included, in addition to the Royal Household and her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, Lady Fanny Howard, Baroness de Speth, the Marquis of Breadalbane, the Earl and Countess Grey, the Earl of Liverpool, and Viscount Canning.

THE THEATRICAL PERFORMANCES AT WINDSOR CASTLE.—On Thursday evening, Shakspeare's play, "The Merchant of Venice," was performed, by command of her Majesty, in the Castle. The stage for the performance was in the Rubens Room. Her Majesty and Prince Albert, and the Duchess of Kent, and the ladies and gentlemen of the Royal suite in waiting, sat on a raised platform in the centre of the apartment. The other persons honoured by commands to the entertainment were seated on either side, on seats of crimson satin, damask, and gold. The following was the programme of the Royal entertainment, which commenced at eight o'clock:—

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

Duke of Venice	..	Mr Diddear
Antonio (the Merchant of Venice)	..	Mr Phelps
Bassanio (his Friend)	..	Mr. A. Wigan
Salanio }		Mr Horne
Salarino }	(Friends to Antonio and Bassanio)	Mr Conway
Gratiano	..	Mr Webster
Lorenzo (in love with Jessica)	.. ..	Mr Leigh Murray
Shylock (a Jew)	..	Mr Charles Kean
Tubal (a Jew, his Friend)	.. ..	Mr Howe
Launcelot Gobbo (a Clown, }	servant to Shylock	Mr Roe
Old Gobbo (Father to Launc ot)	..	Mr Addison
Leonardo (Servant to Bassanio)	.. ..	Mr Field
Balthazar }	(Servants to Portia) ..	Mr Clarke
Stephano }		Mr Coe
Portia (a rich Heiress)	.. ..	Mrs Charles Kean
Nerissa (her Waiting-maid)	.. ..	Mrs Keeley
Jessica (Daughter to Shylock)	..	Mrs Compton (late Miss Hughes)
Director	..	Mr Charles Kean
Assistant-Director	..	Mr George K ne
Prompter and Stage Manager	..	Mr Frederick Webster

The theatre was arranged and the scenery painted by Mr. Thomas Grieve. Her Majesty's private band attended in an orchestra. The Queen and Prince Consort, and Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, Lord John Russell, the Marquis of Breadalbane, the Earl and Countess Grey, the Earl of Liverpool, &c.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

ORDINATIONS.—The following Ordinations have lately taken place: On Thursday, the 21st, by the Archbishop of Canterbury, at the parish church at Croydon, six deacons and seven priests; by the Bishop of Oxford, six; and Bishop Thorpe, ten deacons and seven priests; by the Bishop of Chichester, at the Cathedral, eleven deacons and seven priests; by the Bishop of Sodor and Man, at the Cathedral, Dr. nglas, three priests. On Sunday, the 24th, by the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, at the Cathedral, fourteen deacons and eleven priests; by the Bishop of Lincoln, at the Cathedral, eight deacons and ten priests; by the Bishop of London, twelve deacons and seven priests; by the Bishop of Oxford, twenty two deacons and twenty priests; by the Bishop of St. David's, at St. David's College, Lampeter, seven deacons and eight priests.

CONSECRATIONS.—All Saints, Liverpool, by the Bishop of Chester, Dec. 22.—Brompton, near Chatham, by the Bishop of Rochester, Dec. 20. Towards the erection of the church, the Rev. Mr. Conway, curate of St. Nicholas, Rochester, contributed £4000, and his sister, Miss Conway, £2000. Mr. Conway has further endowed it with £80 per annum.—Kemptown, Brighton. The new church erected by the Marquis of Bristol is nearly ready for consecration. Arrangements to put the seats are to be free.—Leek. The new church dedicated to St. Luke, and which has just been consecrated, still requires funds to complete the tower and spire. The church is in the early English style, and will accommodate about 1000 persons.

CAMBRIDGE HULSEAN PRIZE. The Hulsean Prize has been adjudged to H. T. Wroth, M.A., St. John's College.

TRINITY COLLEGE.—At the adjudication of the prizes, on Commemoration-day, one under-graduate, Mr. Carver, obtained the following—for English and Latin declamation, Latin verse, and Reading.

THE Bishop of Ely's next Ordination will take place on Sunday, the 4th of March next. All papers to be sent to his Lordship's secretary, J. Burder, Esq., 72 Parliament-street, Westminster, on or before the 3rd of February.

PRESENTATION.—The Rev. H. J. Lockwood, late curate of Whitstead, Suffolk, has been presented with a silver salver by his late parishioners, as a testimony of their regard and esteem.

SUPPRESSED IRISH BISHOPRICS.—A petition to the Queen has been adopted and signed, with one or two exceptions, by the clergy of the diocese of Dromore, for the restoration of the suppressed bishopric.

THE Rev. G. A. F. Hurt, has been appointed chaplain in ordinary to her Majesty, in the place of the Hon. and Rev. Baptist Noel.

LORD FEILDING has addressed a letter on church matters to Mr. Rochford Clark, in which he recommends the gentleman to be more moderate in the language which he uses towards those who differ from him. His Lordship further recommends that we should amend our own faults, rather than give exaggerated statements of the failings of others.

THE HON. AND REV. BAPTIST NOEL'S EXPLANATION has just issued from the press. The following is an extract: "As in the following work I have frankly avowed the union between the Church and State, I feel constrained to bear my humble testimony to the piety and worth of many who uphold it. I have stated, without reserve, the influence of the system upon prelates; but how many instances occur in which men, raised to the most conspicuous honours, have manfully resisted their temptations! Of those prelates with whom I have the honour to stand in opposition, none I admire for their simplicity, benevolence, and liberality; and I others still more for consistency. I have warmly to say, that the present Government administered their ecclesiastical patronage. Still more anxious am I to do justice to my beloved and honoured brethren, the evangelical ministers of the Establishment. Having acted with them for many years, I can speak of their principles with confidence. Numbers of them, whose names I should rejoice to mention here with honour, are as sincere in adhering to the Establishment as I wish to be in quitting it. Of many of them, I am convinced that they surpass me in devotedness to Christ. Worthy successors of Reginald and John Venn, of Newton, Cecil, and Thomas Scott, of Robinson and Simeon, I hope that, remaining, come enthusiastic in the Establishment, they will have the respect and affection of all good men. May they enjoy, amidst the comfort and usefulness to the end of their ministry! While I condemn a State prelacy, I honour each pious prelate; while I mourn the relations of godly pastors to the State, I no less rejoice in their godliness. The reasons for separation appear to me clear; but I do not expect others to think as I do. In claiming my own liberty of judgment, I learn to respect theirs. To remain in the Establishment with my views would be criminal—with many it is a duty. If by any of my expressions I have unnecessarily wounded the feelings of my Christian brother, I ask him to forgive me. If I have uncourteously fallen into any exaggeration, I deeply deplore it. Throughout the work I have made a clear distinction between hypocritical and non-evangelical clergymen,—between those who preach the Gospel and those who do not preach it."

"I sparing liberality no fear of censure—should obliterate the distinction; t many Archbishops, who are not ranked among the Evangelical party—who do not support their institutions, and who do not usually act with them may be converted and faithful ministers of Christ. Lastly, I must express my regret that I have not done more for the welfare of a friendly, considerate, and willing church, to which I have been for twenty-two years a pastor, and with whom I hoped to have spent the remainder of my days. Sterner duties, which the study of the Word of God has forced upon my attention, have to be fulfilled. But I cannot put them without an earnest prayer that my successor may receive much grace to build them up in piety, nor without my grateful thanks for their abundant and unvarying kindness."

PRIZE ESSAY.—A prize of fifty guineas has been awarded to the Rev. Thomas Woodward, formerly scholar of Trinity College, Dublin, now curate of Feltard, diocese of Cashel, for the best essay on the following subject: "What evidence does Holy Scripture afford for the opinion that demoniacal possession ceased with the ascension of our blessed Lord; and how does our practical knowledge of human life correspond with the notices of Scripture on the point?" The judges were, Rev. Thomas Dale, Rev. W. Goode, and John Poynder, Esq.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

PUBLIC HOUSES.

THE CITY GAS BILL.—Mr. Deputy Harrison's amendment, condemnatory of cheap gas, which was carried at the previous Court of Commissioners of Sewers by a majority of one, was rescinded on Saturday by a similar majority, so evenly are parties ranged for and against supplying to Farringdon without cheap gas at a cheap rate. The bill having been thus again brought forward, its clauses were then gone through seriatim, and alterations were adopted (also by a majority of one) to the effect of limiting the power of the Commissioners to borrow to the amount of £100,000 in case of £500,600, and of preventing them from possessing the power of purchasing the gas-works and mains compulsorily of the existing companies, and of making gas themselves for the supply of the city. The bill is thereby rendered almost nugatory.

SUPPLY OF WATER TO LONDON.—The Hendon and London Water-works and Navigation, which has been for some time under consideration, has now assumed a tangible form, and a highly respectable meeting of the promoters was held on Friday, the 22d inst., at the offices of Messrs. Burchell, Kilgour, and Parsons.—Mr. M'Clean and Mr. Blackwell, the engineers of the company, explained; and Mr. Cubitt corroborated the general plan of the undertaking. They stated that it was proposed to bring into London one hundred million gallons of water daily, at such a level as would supply the greater portion of the Metropolis without the pumping, being a little above the reservoirs of the New River Company and other water-works, for whose service it could be rendered available; and that the water required for the elevated portions of the northern districts would be raised to the necessary height by power obtained by the descent of the water required for the lower districts. The quantity was stated to be so abundant that the pipes would be always full, so as to afford an instant supply in cases of fire, and also that a constant stream should pass through every dwelling, and the sewers have always flowing through them a body of water amply sufficient for their effectual cleansing; it was, in effect, bringing a great portion of the river Thames into London at a height of upwards of one hundred feet above its present level, and pouring it through the houses and sewers, instead of letting it flow through Vauxhall-bridge. Mr. Cubitt further stated that his attention had been much directed to plans for supplying the metropolis with water, but this proposition appeared to him the most complete in its general outline, and deserving confidence from its simplicity and its extreme facility. In the description of the plans it was stated by the promoters that a charge of only one-halfpenny per thousand gallons, instead of the present price of the water companies (varying from 4*d.* to 6*d.* for that quantity), would return a profit equal to 10 per cent. on the proposed outlay. In answer to objections as to the combination of navigation with the water supply, Mr. Cubitt and Mr. Rosendale exposed the fallacy of any pollution of water from the passage of a few boats. The objection would seem natural to those who had only observed stagnant canals, but would be removed by the reflection that one hundred barges a day could produce no effect upon the vast body of water in question, while the purity must be deemed absolute when compared with the water of the Thames, even at Chelsea, which had received between it and Hendon the drainage from a population exceeding seventy-five thousand persons, besides the consumption derivable from the sewerage of London, brought up by the tide, and had in general suspension by the same power, and thereby carried, it appeared that upwards of one-half of the capital had been already subscribed, and that the plans and sections had been deposited, and all the necessary notices attended to in order to go to Parliament, with the view of obtaining an act during the ensuing session; and the object of the present meeting was to bring the matter immediately before the public, for the purpose of obtaining subscribers for the remainder of the capital. A series of resolutions was then passed, expressive of the approbation of the meeting, appointing an influential provisional committee, &c., and the gentlemen present subscribed their names for shares, and pledged themselves to promote the undertaking.

MERCHANT SEAMEN'S CORPORATION.—On Tuesday a meeting of the "Corporation for the Relief of Merchant Seamen, their Widows and Children," was held at the Society's Offices, Bush-lane, E. Lindsay, M.P., in the chair. The minutes of the last court, and the cash accounts for the quarter ending Sept. 30, were read and approved, after which the meeting proceeded to consider the cases of upwards of fifty applicants. The secretary stated that during the present year there had been 1606 applicants before the committee, to nearly all of whom temporary relief or permanent pensions had been granted.

WHITEMAN TRACT SOCIETY.—On Wednesday evening the thirty-second annual meeting of the Southwark branch of this association was held in the Southwark Chapel, Long-lane, Southwark. D. W. Wire, Esq., presided. The secretary read the annual report. From this document it appeared that during the year 66,145 tracts had been distributed, of which number 4800 were sent to the Benevolent Society, 5375 given to the subscribers, 8300 sent to the Thames-bethel, 4800 to the workhouses, 250 distributed on board ships, and the remainder by the society. The association is debtor to the treasurer for the sum of £13. The report was adopted.

THE MANSION-HOUSE.—In consequence of a resolution carried in the Court of Common Council, considerable alterations are to be immediately commenced at the Mansion-house. It is well known that numerous complaints have been made of the annoyance to which merchants and others engaged in transacting important business at the Mansion-house have been constantly subjected, on account of the confined space of the justice-room. The proposition, though but committee, has recommended that a new justice-room should be built, under the direction of the City Architect. On Tuesday evening the plan recommended in the Egyptian-hall, and the corridor leading to that place of feasting.

THE CITY OF LONDON SEWERS ACT.—On Monday next the new act for the sanitary improvement of the City of London, and for the better cleansing, paving, and lighting the same, will come into operation. It contains 266 clauses, and eight schedules of forms, repealing for two years several other acts of Parliament, and carrying on the Additional Sewers Act, passed in 1834, for sanitary purposes. New regulations already framed will shortly be enforced. The sole power of cleansing, lighting, and paving the city of London is vested in the Commissioners of Sewers, and the improvements in it and proper place for which to deposit their dead before interment, and for remedy whereof it is enacted the Commissioners of Sewers may, if they shall think fit, provide a place in which the poor, under proper rules and regulations, may be permitted to deposit the bodies of their dead previous to interment, and to cause the bodies so deposited therein to be decently taken care of so long as the Commissioners shall allow the same to remain. New houses are not to be built without plans and notice of building is to be given to the Commissioners. Full powers are given to the Commissioners with respect to all sewers within the city and liberties thereof. Penalties are to be enforced against persons making improper drains, not complying with the provisions of the statute; and on non-payment of fines the offenders to be committed to Giltspur-street Prison for any period not exceeding three months, unless the penalty or forfeiture be sooner paid and satisfied. Fines are to be declared to be a public act, and to be judicially taken notice of as such: it is to be called "The City of London Sewers Act, 1848," and to remain in force for two years, from the 1st January, 1849, and thence to the end of the then next session of Parliament.

WORKING MEN'S ESSAYS ON THE SABBATH.—On Wednesday, the prizes offered to working men for essays written by them on the important subject of the Sabbath to the labouring classes, were awarded and distributed at a crowded meeting assembled in the large room at Exeter Hall. The report stated that Mr. Henderson, of Leeds, had offered three prizes of £25, £15, and £10 respectively for the three best essays written by working men on the temporal advantages of the Sabbath. The number of manuscripts sent in amounted to no less than 1045, and it was therefore impossible to award the prizes, but a number of supplementary prizes of £5 each to the writers of the best essays His Royal Highness Prince Albert announced his intention to give ten prizes of £5 each out of his private purse, and seventy-eight prizes of £1 each were at the disposal of the adjudicators. A resolution expressing the satisfaction of the meeting at the report of the adjudicators, and a second, expressing the satisfaction of the meeting at the manner in which they had stood forth as defenders of their Sabbath, having been carried, the names of the ten successful competitors for the prizes given by his Royal Highness Prince Albert were announced, and several of the unsuccessful competitors to that name, stood forward upon the platform and received the prizes from the hands of Lord Ashley, who presided on the occasion. The gentleman, in presenting the prizes, said he was instructed to express the deep satisfaction which the Prince Consort and her Majesty felt in witnessing his movement on behalf of the due observance of the Sabbath which was being promoted among the working classes (Cheers) He was also commanded by his Royal Highness to express the deep interest with which both the Queen and himself regarded the temporal and spiritual welfare of the working classes of this country (Cheers) The names of the other successful competitors for the £5 prizes having been called over, and the prizes having been presented to them by the chairman, the winners of the three premiums of £10, £15, and £25, given by Mr. Henderson, stood forward and received their prizes. A vote of thanks to Lord Ashley terminated the proceedings.

RAGGED SCHOOLS FOR DESTITUTE FOOR CHILDREN.—The benevolent and charitable will at this season of the year, find ragged schools an excellent medium to convey their bounty to the most destitute of their fellow-creatures. About 900 children attending the St. Giles Ragged School in the country quarter on George-street, St. Giles were supplied on Christmas Day with hot roast beef, potatoes, bread, and plum-pudding, at the expense of a few benevolent individuals.

STREET CLEANSING.—THE STREET ORDERLIES. The report of the committee and council of the National Philanthropic Association for the Employment of the Poor presents the following statement on the subject of street cleansing by "street orderlies:" "The 'street orderlies' (48 in number) have each allotted to them daily a space varying from two to three thousand superficial yards, from which they are ordered to remove without delay the deposits from the passing cattle. These deposits are then removed in a cart or wheelbarrow every quarter of an hour to some adjacent stable-yard, and in a few hours carted away by the market gardeners, or else to a laystall near the canal or river side. The immediate removal of these deposits preserves the streets clean, as the dirt on stone pavements chiefly arises from this source. The streets that have been cleansed by the street orderlies are the Haymarket, Coventry-street, [illegible]-street, Piccadilly, Panton-street, Jermyn street, and St. Martin's-lane, Princes-street, Rupert-street, Tichborne street, Queen-street, Argyll-street, Dean-street, Market-street, Old Compton-street, Carlisle-street, Georges-yard, Ham-yard, Lisle-street, South side of Leicester-square, Green-street, Hemming's-row, New-street, Bedfordbury, St. Martin's-place, Oxendon-street, Dukes-street, &c. This, which is termed the sanitary system of street cleansing, was commenced in Great Windmill-street on the 9th day of August last, and the men employed have been either the inmates of workhouses or labourers in parishes, &c. otherwise in such a destitute condition as would have compelled them speedily to apply for parish relief. The system adopted by the National Philanthropic Association keeps the streets clean by preventing their dirt. The street orderlies have, moreover, constantly present personal [illegible] since they have been engaged, presenting in this respect a singular contrast to the usual conduct of parish scavengers." The report concludes with an appeal to the public for further support.

GENERAL POST-OFFICE, Dec. 1848. On and after the 1st of January, 1849, the first half-ounce of postage of 6*d.* the half-ounce on letters from the United Kingdom, addressed to Mecklenburgh-Schwerin, and conveyed by the direct Hamburg packets, or by private ship, direct from London, or Hull to Hamburg, will be reduced with 6*d.*, the rate due to Mecklenburgh-Schwerin, which the rates the transit rate payable to Hamburg. This combined rate of 10*d.* for half-ounce, &c., may either be paid in advance or left unpaid, at the option of the sender; but the payment of the British rate only, according to the existing practice, will not be permitted.

GAS EXPLOSION AT KING'S COLLEGE.—An explosion of gas took place on Tuesday evening at King's College. Some fresh pipes have been laid down to convey gas to portions of the building in which it had not been hitherto employed. A workman engaged in laying down the pipes cut through one of them, not knowing that it was already in connection with the main pipe, and a quantity escaped into a large passage on the lower story, into which a person having entered with a light, an explosion immediately occurred. No other damage was done, however, than that the breaking of about 112 squares of glass. No one was injured by the accident.

NUMEROUS FIRES IN THE METROPOLIS.—Between the hours of ten A.M. on Tuesday night and the same hour on Wednesday, no fewer than ten fires occurred in the metropolis, which kept the firemen and engines during that period in continued movement. One fire took place at 3, Tennis-court, Middle-row, Holborn, between three and four A.M. It was occasioned by the carelessness of a boy, in which a quantity of shavings were deposited. Timely information having been forwarded to the fire stations, the firemen succeeded in confining the flames to the lower part of the house, which, with the exception of No. 2, Hungerford-court, Fetter-lane, by which a child nearly lost its life. It appears that a young child had been left in the bookbinders' room, when it set fire to a quantity of paper cuttings, and the flames quickly enkindled her. The engines were promptly at the spot, and thus fortunately rescued, and the fire soon extinguished. The third fire was at 26, Colville-place, Charlotte-street, Fitzroy-square, belonging to Mr. Alfred Vile, proprietor of the Rose and Crown Tavern. It was caused from some partially consumed tobacco falling in the stuffing at the end of the sixth lounge. The inmates soon got the flames out, before any material damage was done. About the same time as the above, at No. 35, Fish-street hill, belonging to Mr. Arthur Snowden, butcher. It was caused by a spark falling from a lighted candle, which set a cupboard and the furniture in the second floor in flames.—About an hour previously, at 4, Union-court, Broad-street, by the carelessness of a servant girl, took place on the premises belonging to Mr. Donald Robertson, a dairyman, No. 15, Sherrard-street, Golden-square. This was also caused by a spark from a candle, which set the bed and furniture in flames.—The seventh fire occurred at No. 1, Bow-common-lane, Bromley, in the occupation of Mr. N. Nealing, which did considerable damage.—About the same time a fire broke out in Hungerford-market, and it occurred in the first floor, and was not extinguished until the bed and furniture therein were destroyed.—The eighth fire was at 5, East-street, Finsbury, the property of Messrs. J. Roscoe and Son, oil and colourmen. The firemen, by dint of great exertion, got the flames out, but not until the shop and its contents were severely damaged.—The ninth fire was at 74, Houndsditch, belonging to Messrs. Jones and Co., leather-sellers. It was caused by a bottle, filled with whisky, bursting with the heat of the counting-house fire. The firemen soon got the flames out, but not before the stock with the basement was damaged by fire, &c. The other fire was in Argyle-street, New-road, but the damage done was not considerable.

FIRE IN SOUTHWARK.—On Monday night, about eight o'clock, a fire broke out upon the premises of Mr. Plummer, a coal dealer and timber-merchant, 106, Great Dover-road, Southwark. The premises, which were four stories high, extended backwards a considerable distance, the back portion being filled with timber and coals. A body of flame shooting through the front shutters, and commenced knocking at the door, which he did for some time without receiving an answer or seeing any of the residents. At length he was obliged to make a retreat, as the flames shot through the windows, and extended almost over the road in one body. When the engines arrived, the whole of the timber in the open yard, as well as the front premises, was enveloped in one broad sheet of flame, which was not extinguished until the whole of Mr. Plummer's extensive premises were gutted, the bare walls only remaining. [illegible] were extensively damaged by fire, and the roof fell in. The loss is very considerable.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, DECEMBER 3. The deaths in London during the week ending Saturday last numbered 1118, the average being 1194. The mortality has been still more under the average but for the continued prevalence of scarlatina, which destroyed during the seven days 110 persons, the average being only 47. The births were 1021 boys and 1000 girls. The number of deaths from this cause in the week ending September 23 and Saturday last, a period of three months, have been 1076, of which 265 occurred on the south side of the Thames. In the last five weeks, therefore, the greatest number of deaths has occurred in the eastern districts of the metropolis.

THE WEATHER.

The week ending the past week has been chiefly remarkable for the great change in the temperature. During the early part of the week the weather was fine with a dry air and a very low temperature, which was from [illegible] the average for the season; and during the latter part the air has been moist, with a high temperature, which exceeded the mean value for the season by several degrees. The following are some particulars of each day:—Monday, the sky was cloudless throughout the day; the direction of the wind was E.N.E.; the day was exceedingly cold, and, in the night, [illegible] a great deal colder than the previous weather; the average temperature of the air was 29°. Tuesday, the sky was cloudless till late in the evening; the direction of the wind was N. and the day was very cold; the average temperature was 31°. Wednesday, the sky was overcast for the most part till the evening; the direction of the wind was E., and the average temperature of the air was 32°. Thursday, the sky was partially covered during the early part of the day, and was overcast at the latter part, the direction of the wind was E., and the average temperature of the air was 34°. Friday, the sky was, for the most part, overcast, the direction of the wind was S.S.E., and the average temperature of the air was 40°. Tuesday, the sky was overcast, and an occasional thin rain was falling; the direction of the wind was S.S.E., and the average temperature of the air was 47°. Wednesday, the sky was partially covered by cloud before noon, and wholly covered after noon; rain began to fall at 9 P.M.; the average temperature of the air was 49°, and that for the week ending this day was 37½°.

The following are the exact thermometrical readings for each day:

Thursday,	Dec. 21, the highest during the day was	34	deg., and lowest was	30 deg.
Friday,	Dec. 22,	39		34
Saturday,	Dec. 23,	50		24
Sunday,	Dec. 24	44		34
Monday,	Dec. 25	45		34
Tuesday,	Dec. 26	53		34
Wednesday,	Dec. 27	53		41

Boxhearth, Thursday, Dec. 28, 1848. J. G.

THE SHRINE OF ST. EDMUND.

This unique relic, which in latter times has formed the nave of the church of Greenford, in Essex, has recently been condemned, from the serious inroads made on its otherwise sound timbers by the ravages of a species of insect well known for its rapid and destructive habits. This curious church has long been known to antiquaries, and identified as the original shrine of St. Edmund, erected by the monks A.D. 1010, the body resting in this place for nearly two hundred years. The dilapidation of long been removed from the latter town for safety, on a sudden attack made by the Danes on the coast of Suffolk. An account of its early history formed the subject of a paper by Mr. Burkitt, read at a recent meeting of the British Archæological Association, and in which records were quoted establishing its identity. Drawings and plans were exhibited, showing the form of the original shrine, which from time to time has been greatly altered to adapt it for a modern church. The examination was extremely simple, and consisted of oak trees spit in two, and fastened together with wooden pins to a plate or sill. These split trees, placed upright and fitting close formed the four walls. On the demolition of the building the worm-eaten wood was removed, but a considerable portion being found in a state of perfectly sound state has been restored. It is to be hoped that means will be taken to preserve this primitive relic of former times, which has weathered the storms of more than 800 years.

ORDNOR TERRITORY.—This Buffalo Advertiser has the following respecting territory, which a short time since excited much interest. There are few who take into consideration the extent of our territory west of the Rocky Mountains. To say nothing of the vast territories of California and New Mexico, of which Vancouver's Island, 260 miles in breadth, contains 2,000 square miles—an area larger than Massachusetts and Connecticut. Queen Charlotte's or Washington Island, 160 miles in length, and 30 in breadth, contains 4000 square miles. Of both of these immense islands, that lie between the 49th parallels of 49 and 56 degrees, the soil is said to be well adapted to agriculture. The straits and circumjacent waters abound in fish of the finest quality. Coals of good quality, and other veins of minerals, have been found.

NEW YEAR'S NIGHT IN AN IRISH CABIN.—DRAWN BY TOPHAM.

NEW YEAR'S NIGHT.

The accompanying Illustration is from the pencil of Mr. Topham, with whose charming Illustrations of Irish character our readers are already familiar. It represents the interior of a Cabin in the south of Ireland, upon New Year's Night, when, as well as on Christmas Eve, the interior is lighted up with a "real mowl" candle, and the peasantry give way with all the buoyancy of their nature to the full enjoyment of this season of hope. At the close of, perhaps, the only meal at which (except the Christmas dinner) butcher's meat makes its appearance, the floor is cleared for the dance; the table is removed to the wall, and Tim, the piper, who has been specially invited for the occasion, is mounted thereon, upon a stool, beside the candle, and then commences the famous Irish Jig.

The dance, which is generally kept up late, is sustained with unflagging vigour, in all the perplexities of "double shuffle," "heel-and-toe," &c., by a young couple from the neighbourhood; while the more aged, as well as the more youthful, form admiring groups of observers. It is upon such occasions as these that the young lover, who may have taken part in the dance, or who is yet waiting for his turn, prefers his suit with greatest effect upon the coy but willing girl of his choice. The various incidents of a festive meeting of this sort, and the several characteristics of youth and age, are cleverly depicted by the Artist. It is a truthful representation of many a scene in the south and west of Ireland at this period.

SCENE FROM "THE HAUNTED MAN," AT THE ADELPHI THEATRE.—(MR. WRIGHT AS "TETTERBY")

ADELPHI THEATRE.

No novelty was required at this theatre, on Tuesday, with the attractions of the only version of the "Haunted Man," and the last burlesque—the "Enchanted Isle." The house was as crowded as it always is; but where every night at this lucky theatre appears to be a Boxing Night, there is little to remark upon.

We have engraved the great comic scene of Tetterby (Mr. Wright), with his "almost any amount of small children you may please to name." The scene is Tetterby's sanctum room, at the back of his shop. Mr. Wright's performance is a piece of rich humour throughout, with little or no exaggeration, though the character is a tempting one. The infantine folks never fail upon the stage; and in this case, their freaks, combined with their father's drollery, form a lively relief to the piece. But the best accompaniment to this scene is the extract from Mr. Dickens's work—a truly Boxian scene, quoted in our Number of last week.

MUSIC.

CONCERTS FOR THE WEEK.

During the past week there has been an unusu number of musical entertainments.

On Saturday night, at Exeter Hall, the Sacred Harmonic Society gave a remarkably fine performance of Handel's "Messiah," conducted by Costa. This sublime oratorio has assumed a fresh form, and the combined phalanx of amateurs and professors enter into the execution with renewed vigour.

The programme of the sixth of the London Wednesday Concerts, at Exeter Hall, opened with gleanings from Auber's "Masaniello," that is to say, the late Mr. T. Cooke's adaptation of the "Muette de Portici," liberties being taken with the text, which, in these times, strangers of foreign operas would not venture upon. It is gratifying to learn that Auber's "Masaniello" will be one of the great lyric novelties at the forthcoming Royal Italian Opera season, since it abounds with such magnificent choruses; and the overture alone, with Costa's band, would be a principal object of attraction. At the last Wednesday Concert, Thalberg played for the last time, being about to commence a provincial tour, undertaken by Mr. Beale. Master Roucheray (a very clever boy), violinist, and Vivier, the king of horn-players, were the other solo instrumentalists: and there was a goodly array of vocalists, in the Misses Poole, Dolby, Ransford, Nelson, Stewart, Pyne (sisters, two); Messrs. Sims Reeves, Whitworth, T. Williams, and Ransford. The band played Lavenu's "Zanoni" overture. Mr. Stammers has been hitherto extremely fortunate in his speculations; and we hope he may be induced to select music of a higher class in future.

Mr. Henry Russell gave his entertainment on Tuesday, at the Westminster Literary Institution, and on Wednesday at the Whittington Club, in aid of the funds of the Early Closing Association, on which occasions he sang a new song, "A Voice from the Counter."

There was a Concert at the Sussex Hall, in the City, on Wednesday; the principal singers being Miss Lucombe, Miss R. Isaacs, Messrs. J. Parry, Weiss, H. Smith, Genge, and Maurice Davies.

There was, on the same evening, a Concert at the National Hall, Holborn, at which Miss Bettz and Mrs. Temple, Messrs. H. Smith, Handley, Signors Nappi and Minati, were the leading vocalists.

On Thursday evening a Concert took place at the Beaumont Institution, Mile-end, at which Misses Birch, Miran, R. Isaacs, Messrs. Harrison, Leffler, J. Parry, and the Cases were the principal artistes.

The Dumbolton Serenaders, besides their performances at the St. James's Theatre, on Wednesday and Friday evenings, had concerts at the Horns Tavern, Kennington, Thursday and Saturday.

Mr. Allcroft's Twelfth Annual Concert at the Princess' Theatre was well attended. There were upwards of fifty pieces in the programme. Mdlle. Nissen, M. Thalberg, the Dumbolton Serenaders, Messrs. Sims Reeves, Phillips, C. Braham, Allen, Harrison, Miss Lucombe, Miss Birch, Mdme. Dulcken, Master Thirlwall, and Mr. Lazarus were the leading professors.

Handel's "Judas Maccabeus."—The London Sacred Harmonic Society, under Surman, announced this oratorio for the 20th, at Exeter Hall.—The Sacred Harmonic Society, conducted by Costa, has announced the same work for Monday, Jan. 8.

M. Jullien.—The provincial tour has commenced; and on Friday, M. Jullien, with his band, was to be at Liverpool. Madame Thillon has been engaged to sing at these concerts.

A young lady, named Newcombe, a pupil of Thalberg's, will appear next season, as a pianiste.

Musical Events.—Lablache (the Titan of basses) and Madame Persiani have been engaged by Mr. Beale for tours in the provinces this winter.—Benedict's opera of the "Crusaders" has been produced with great success at Hamburg.—Nearly £3000 were realised at the two concerts for the Manchester Infirmary at which Mdlle. Lind sang gratuitously: M. Halle, the pianist; the Manchester Madrigal Society, and the German Liedertafel in that town, also gave their gratuitous services; and the prices of admission were one guinea to the Concert Hall, and 10s., 5s., and 2s. 6d., to the Free-Trade Hall.—Mdlle. Lind will sing on the 5th of January at Liverpool, in aid of one of the hospitals.

St. James's.—Auber's beautiful opera, "Le Domino Noir," and "Le Maître de Chapelle," by Paer, will be produced at the St. James's Theatre on the opening night, Monday, Jan. 15. M. Coudere will perform the character of Horace, as originally represented by him in Paris, when Auber produced that opera.

Foreign Musical News.—The decision of the new Minister of the Interior, on the subject of the grant of privilege for the Italian Opera in Paris, had not been given at our last advices; the Commission des Théâtres had several meetings, but had not accepted any of the tenders. The offer made by Bouccil stood the best chance; but there were also in the field M. de Meley (husband of Grisi), M. Mouton (for some English capitalist, said to be Mr. Lumley), the brothers Escudier, Merli, &c. Halévy's "Val d'Andorre," at the Opéra Comique, and the new musical burlesque, "Le Propriété c'est le Vol," at the Vaudeville, continued to be the great attractions in Paris. The rehearsals for Meyerbeer's "Prophète" were continued with great activity at the Théâtre de la Nation. The composer had received from the King of Prussia a medal and autograph letter, thanking him for his new composition, executed on the 25th anniversary of the King's marriage. Teresa Milanollo, sister of the late Maria, gave a concert in Paris on Tuesday last, at the Salle Herz, in aid of the funds of the Association of Artistes Musiciens.—A new opera, in two acts, by M. Ambroise Thomas, entitled "Raid," was to have been produced at the Opéra Comique in Paris on Wednesday. Carlotta Grisi is dancing at Berlin, and Fanny Elssler at St. Petersburg.—M. Flavio has been singing in Brussels in Verdi's "Jerusalem," Halévy's "Juive," Meyerbeer's "Huguenots," and "Robert le Diable," and Auber's "Massaniello," with great success.—Massol is Director of the Belgian Grand Opera; he has been singing in Verdi's "Nabucco," with Mdlle. Julien.—Advices from the Havannah state that the Italian company has met with the greatest success. The prima donna is Mdlle. Steffanoni, from the London Royal Italian Opera, and Marini and Palonini, from the same theatre, are also in the troupe, with Beneventono as tenor.

THE HOTEL DU RHIN, PLACE VENDOME, LATE THE RESIDENCE OF LOUIS NAPOLEON.

note the development of the political education of the country. The election of the 10th December had given the Government an immense power, and it relied on the patriotism to perform it of the Assembly to enable it to accomplish its duties.

M. Ledru-Rollin next rose and attacked the Ministry for violating the constitution by its first act, namely, the delegation to General Changarnier of dictatorial powers, which placed at his disposal 150,000 troops, and double that number of National Guards, leaving him twenty-four hours before he was called upon to account for his conduct to the Minister of War, whose responsibility was not consequently complete, but chimerical. The law on the National Guard he said had also been violated, for it expressly forbade the centering in one person the command of the troops and National Guards. He also condemned the appointment of Marshal Bugeaud to the command of the Army of the Alps, and the removal of the head-quarters of that army to Bourges.

M. Odillon Barrot defended the conduct of the Government. The constitutional and legal scruples of M. Ledru-Rollin were not justified. The responsibility of Ministers was complete, and the Minister of War could delegate a portion of his authority to a General the moment he recognised himself responsible for his conduct. It was a measure of foresight, commanded by the situation of the country. The appointment of General Changarnier was merely temporary and commanded by circumstances, and the moment the Government should perceive that the country had returned to its normal condition, it would revoke the extraordinary powers with which General Changarnier had been invested.

After some further discussion, in the course of which M. Léon de Malleville, Minister of the Interior, amidst the laughter and irony of the House, expressed his satisfaction at hearing examples of illegality in the mouth of a member of the Provisional Government, and complimented him on that personal progress, the Assembly passed to the order of the day, and shortly afterwards adjourned.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

The first Engraving represents M. Louis Napoleon taking the oath of fidelity to the Constitution, as detailed in our Journal of last week. The President, in the tribune, wears the Order of the Legion of Honour around his neck, and a star upon his breast: he is in the act of replying to the oath, which M. Marrast has just read. Amongst the officers around the foot of the tribune were General Changarnier and General Lebreton.

In the second Illustration, the President is shown on his way to his residence, the Palace of the Elysée National (formerly Bourbon), with the Avenue on the right, leading to the Champs Elysées. The palace is situated at the corner of the Rue du Faubourg St. Honoré: it was built in 1718, for the Count d'Evreux, and was afterwards purchased and occupied by Madame de Pompadour, mistress of Louis XV. At her death Louis XV. bought it of the Marquis de Marigny, as a residence for ambassadors extraordinary. In 1773, M. Beaujon, the famous banker, enlarged and embellished it, after whose death the Duchess of Bourbon purchased and occupied it till 1790, the period of her emigration. In 1792 it became national property, and during the Revolution was used as the Government printing-office. In 1800 it was sold, and converted into a garden for public amusements. Murat bought it in 1804, and resided there until his departure for Naples, when it again became the property of the Government, and was a favourite residence of the Emperor. In 1814 and 1815 it was inhabited by the Emperor of Russia, and by the Duke of Wellington. When Napoleon returned from Elba, he occupied it until the defeat of Waterloo terminated his short revolution of the Cent Jours. In 1816 Louis XVIII gave it to the Duke de Berri, on whose assassination it descended to the Duke de Bordeaux. The Palace is very superbly appointed, though it has, externally, a lonely and deserted appearance. It will be recollected that Ibrahim Pacha was lodged in this Palace on his visit to Louis Philippe.

The third Illustration shows the Hôtel du Rhin, the residence of M. Louis Napoleon during the recent election, and the scene of many a striking incident of electoral enthusiasm. The house is a fine mansion, being in the Place Vendôme, designed by Mansard, and completed by the financier Law.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR THE NEW YEAR.

The drawingrooms of Paris are becoming thronged. The fashionables resort to them in crowds; official receptions are in preparation, and Fashion, more brilliant than ever, has just resumed her empire.

The late weather has caused furs to be adopted to complete all toilettes. Sable is the most in fashion for morning walks. Nothing is more rich in effect, or more distingué, than a velvet or rich damask dress, trimmed with this magnificent fur. Canadian marten may take its place, but is far from producing the same effect. Ermine is worn for dinners and evening cloaks; this showy fur is not fitted for the promenade, but requires a carriage.

Cloaks and mantles (of velvet) are trimmed with fur: some attempts have been made to line them with furs; but this lining makes them so heavy, so devoid of grace, that they are only tolerated as carriage or theatre cloaks. Again, cloaks called "wrappers," lined with levantine, are generally adopted. Satin mantles fitting to the figure are long from the skirt behind, and very short and circular in front; trimmed with a broad black lace, and surmounted with quilled ribbon. The cape descends rather lower than the figure; very much cut away on the arms, and finished in front; at the waist trimmed all round with lace, surmounted with quilled ribbon; another ribbon also quilled encircles the throat, and terminates at the waist with a rosette of ribbon and long ends: the sleeves are long, half full, trimmed with lace and quilled ribbon. These mantles are generally worn by young people.

Cashmere dresses are trimmed with two rows of deep fringe, headed with gimp. Damask or moire dresses are extremely elegant, when the front is trimmed with two rows of lace, rather high, arranged in zig-zag, uniting in the middle of the skirt with a knot of ribbon without ends. The boddice, with a circular peak, is trimmed like the skirt with lace, arranged in zig-zag, commencing from the shoulder to the bottom of the boddice, and meeting in the middle with knots of ribbon. The sleeves are worn just rounded at the bottom, and open on the arm, bordered with lace. Puffed sleeves are often worn; only they should be in cambric, muslin, lace, or blonde, according to the material of the dress or the rest of the toilette.

Ball dresses are more transparent, and more fully trimmed than ever; flowers are worn on them in profusion; and embroidered nets, with gold and silver silks, are very attractive.

Tunics are spoken of: both a reminiscence of the Empire. In all cases these tunics could not be but extremely graceful and becoming. The elegant Princess Mathilde is said to set the fashion to all our elegant Parisiennes, who already flock around her. Feathers, flowers, and diamonds play the principal part in the head-dresses.

Velvet dresses are so much adopted for morning calls, that ladies of distinction wear them little for evening. Pekin satins, brocades of gold and silver, plain satins, or brocaded with brilliant colours, ornamented with laces and jewels, make splendid dresses for ladies who do not dance, and allow young persons to adorn themselves with light tissues—so fresh, so transparent, so becoming by the freshness of their age. "Napoleon" tulles are all the rage amongst our young dancers. They are the greatest and most charming novelty of the day.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR THE NEW YEAR

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS can be regularly obtained, by Packet, FREE OF POSTAGE, to the following British Colonies and Foreign Countries, viz.:—

Aden	Gibraltar	New Brunswick
Antigua	Greece	New Grenada
Bahama	Grenada	Newfound-land
Barbadoes	Halifax	Nova Scotia
Berbice	Hamburg	Quebec
Bermuda	Hayti or St. Domingo	Pern
Bremen	Heligoland	Spain
Buenos Ayres	Honduras	St. Kitts
Canada	Ionian Islands	St. Lucia
Carlscow	India and Southampton	St. Vincent's
Ceylon	Jamaica	Tobago
Demerara	Lubec	Tortola
Denmark	Malta	Trinidad
Dominica	Montserrat	Venezuela
France	Nevis

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE).

Single Paper ..	..	6d	Half-yearly ..	..	13s
Quarterly ..	..	6s 6d	Yearly ..	..	£1 6s

 Post-office orders to be made payable to WILLIAM LITTLE; and all letters and communications should be addressed to the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS Office, 198, Strand, London.

THEATRE ROYAL DRURY-LANE.—CIRQUE NATIONAL DE PARIS. EVERY EVENING. Commence at Eight o'Clock. MORNING PERFORMANCES during the Christmas Holidays, every MONDAY, WEDNESDAY, and FRIDAY. Commence at Two o Clock.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr. W. BATTY.—Enormous Success of the Holiday Novelties.—Increased Attraction.—First Appearance of Herr BENGLER the most astounding Rope-Dancer in Europe.—The entertainments rise each Quarter to Seven, to the new and ensuingly successful Spectacle of the WARS OF THE JEWS, or, The Fall of Jerusalem and the Doomed City. To be succeeded by Herr BENGLER in the TIGHT ROPE. After which, the Incomparable SCENES of the CIRCLE, supported by the First Equestrian Talent of the day. To conclude with the unprecedented, triumphant Comic Pantomime of ROBIN HOOD; or, The Forty White Bucks: and the Enchanted Princess of Sherwood Forest in which the wondrous Arabs will appear.—On Thursday next, Jan. 4, a Grand Juvenile Night.—Box Office open from Eleven till Five.—Stage Manager, Mr. W. West.

EXETER HALL.—BRAHAM, SEN., and SIMS REEVES.—In compliance with the suggestions of many of the Subscribers that the opportunity offered by the Wednesday Concerts would not be lost, of hearing, in conjunction with Mr Sims Reeves the celebrated Mr Braham, the Directors have great pleasure in announcing the completion of an engagement with that gentleman for two evenings performances, upon each of which he will sing, among other morceaux, a Duet with Mr. Sims Reeves

Mr. BRAHAM will appear for the FIRST TIME on Wednesday Evening next, January 3rd, at the SEVENTH of the LONDON WEDNESDAY CONCERTS.

VOCAL PERFORMERS Miss A Williams Mrs M Williams Mrs. Rainford, Miss Poole, Miss Nelson, Mrs Alexander Newton, Mr. Whitworth, Mr Leffler, Mr. Ransford, Mr T Williams, Mr SIMS REEVES, and Mr BRAHAM (his first appearance).

PIANISTE Miss Kate Loder and Mr W H Palmer (his first appearance here).

PIANO FORTE—Mr Wirfen (his last appearance but one)

The ORCHESTRA will be on an extensive scale, and complete in every department.

Leader and Musical Director, Mr W. Cooper.

Tickets, 1s and 2s. Reserved Seats, 4s., Stalls, 7s.; may be had of Mr Stammers, 4, Exeter Hall, and of all Music-sellers

 For Programme, see "Times" of Monday, January 1.

ROYAL COLOSSEUM.—PARIS.—In addition to the numerous attractions of this Establishment now exhibiting (Day and Evening), a new grand PANORAMA of PARIS by MOONLIGHT, as seen from a balloon suspended over the gardens of the Tuileries, comprising 46,000 square feet, produced under the direction of Mr WILLIAMS Beardsell, and painted by Mr Danson, in which all the leading features of the metropolis can be distinctly traced.—Open from half-past Ten till Five, and from Seven till half past Ten o'clock. Made from Two till Five, and during the Evening. Admission, 1s.; Children and Schools, Half-price. Caverns, 2s.

ROYAL CYCLORAMA and MUSIC HALL, Albany-street.—A new extensive building, annexed to the Colosseum, IS NOW OPEN, with a colossal Nocturne Cyclorama, representing LISBON, and DESTRUCTION of the CITY by EARTHQUAKE in 1755. Designed and produced under the direction of Mr. WILLIAMS Beardsell, assisted by Messrs. Danson and Son. The Views are viewed by appropriate Music by Mr Pitman, on the new grand Apollonicon, producing the effect of a full band.

Open daily at 11 for representation at half-past 2, second ditto at 4. Evening at 7 first representation at half-past 7, second ditto at 9. A Grand Overture will precede each representation. Admission to reserved seats, 2s. Children and Schools Half-price.

IN consequence of the great rush of Visitors to view BANVARD'S GRAND MOVING PAINTING of the MISSISSIPPI and MISSOURI RIVERS, in TWO VIEWS, EGYPTIAN HALL, Piccadilly, the Proprietor respectfully announces that it will be open as EVERY DAY during the Holidays. This immense Painting is the largest in the world, and exhibits more than 3000 miles of American Scenery. Doors open half an hour before commencing. The Day Exhibitions will commence at 11 o'clock, and the Evening at Half-past Seven o'clock. Admission to Lower Seats 2s Gallery 1s

POMPEII. PANORAMA of the RUINS of POMPEII, just formed, at the PANORAMA ROYAL, Leicester square, a VIEW of the CITY of POMPEII "the Gay of the Dead," with the recent Excavations, the uncovered Temples, Triumphal Arches, Mount Vesuvius, and all the surrounding classical and beautiful scenery. Two VIEWS of VIENNA and PARIS, showing the localities where the late political events took place, are also now open.

CHRISTMAS HOLIDAYS.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—A LECTURE by Mr. Pepper on the Popular Subject of the ELECTRIC LIGHT, by Dr. Bachhoffner, on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday Evenings. Popular Lectures on CHEMISTRY, with Brilliant Experiments, by Dr Ryan, on Monday Evening, Wednesday, and Friday. First Lecture on Monday Evening next. Dissolving Views by BERTON and SWIFT. Panoramic Illustrations. Childe's PHANTASMAGORIA with very curious New Effects. Microscopic and Diorama. MICROSCOPES at One o Clock daily. NEW CHROMATROPE. DIVER and DIVING-BELL. WORKING MODELS explained. Music directed by Mr Walter.—Admission, 1s., Schools, Half price

PUNCH'S ALMACK'S, PRINCESS'S CONCERT ROOMS, MONDAY last, and EVERY MONDAY after WEISPRETT having resigned all share and interest in WEISPRETT'S SOIREES DANSANTES in favour of the present Proprietor, his former partner, these popular REUNIONS will henceforth assume the title of PUNCH'S ALMACK'S, and continue as heretofore to be conducted to enhance, if possible, their high reputation, and render them the most brilliant assemblies in Europe. The Band will be immediately select, and conducted by PUNCH in propria personæ. The Programme of next Monday will include a New Polka, a new Quadrille, a new Valse, and a new Galop, all arranged expressly for those Balls by Punch, and performed by him himself. The names from Punch's own cellar, and Mr. Corrie will officiate as M C.—Tickets (as usual), 7s. and subscription Two Guineas each, at Mr. COBBE'S, 59, Great Marlborough-street. Commence at half-past 10, conclude at 3.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, Dec. 3. First Sunday after Christmas.
MONDAY, Jan. 1, 1849.—Circumcision.
TUESDAY, 2.—The Moon enters her first quarter at 7h. 38m. A.M.
WEDNESDAY, 3. The Sun rises at 8h. 8m., and sets at 4h. 54m.
THURSDAY, 4.—The length of the day is 9h. 13m.
FRIDAY, 5. Several stars are occulted by the Moon. (See the Illustrated London Almanack.)
SATURDAY, 6.—Epiphany. Twelfth Day.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JANUARY 6, 1849

Sunday		Monday		Tuesday		Wednesday		Thursday		Friday		Saturday
M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A
h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m
5 36	5 50	6 19	6 35	7 03	7 25	7 50	8 12	8 39	9 2	9 36	10 0	10 34	11 30	Mid

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Alpheus."—The line, "Small by degrees, and beautifully less," is from Prior's poem of "Henry and Emma"

"J. W. B." Renfrew.—See our present Number. The views of Ancient Rome, by Piranesi, are much prized. A quarto volume of views in Rome in its present state has been engraved on steel, by Cooke.

"A. B.," Berwick. The width of the Broad Railway Gauge is 7 feet; of the Narrow Gauge, 4 feet 8½ inches.

"G. A. W."—Received.

"J. N.," Grosvenor-square.—The MS did not reach us in time.

"A Dog Fancier" will, perhaps, send us his full address

"Oatley" We cannot attend to the trifling matters in question.

"W. F. MC."—It is not illegal to send postage stamps by post.

"Toby"—We have always understood the veritable Peter Parley to be a disputed matter.

"S. B."—Yours is a question of business, which it is inconvenient to answer.

"Jupus."—We will inquire anon.

"An Old Subscriber."—The price of the new "London Post-Office Directory" is 35s.; of Burke's "History of the Landed Gentry," 31s. 6d.

"Inventor" will find, in No. 1307 of the Mechanics' Magazine, a copious description of the New French (Aneroid) Barometer. At the last meeting of the British Association, Prof. Lloyd thus described the new instrument:—"A cylinder of copper, with a very thin and corrugated end, is partially exhausted and hermetically sealed; and the effect of the varying pressure of the atmosphere on its thin end is magnified by a system of levers, so as to affect the index of a dial, very little larger than a watch-dial."

"J. C.," Belfast.—The Royal Humane Society has been established 74 years for the purposes in question. The Society's office is at 3, Trafalgar-square, London.

"P. B." Ealing.

"L. S.," Dublin.—The drawing has been received, but we cannot engrave it.

"A Five Years' Subscriber" should direct the person who has mounted the great to varnish it.

"L. W." is thanked, but we have not room for the "Dream."

"A Cannot Man" is thanked.

"T. P." We will not has sight of the nefarious nuisance.

"Naval Medal" A Correspondent who inquires as to the inscription on the Naval Medal, is informed that it is to have no name whatever inscribed on the base, as the name of the engagement in which the wearer took part will be engraved upon the bars.

"The Plague of Life" is recommended to make inquiry in the neighbourhood where the lady is stated to reside; if there be "no such person," the letters will be duly sent out to the writer.

"D. G.," Stratford-on-Avon.—The question of damage we cannot precisely answer. We believe it has been decided that the public are not liable to the full extent of damage in such case.

"E. W. E.," Newton.—The New French Constitution has been published in the Times.

"Claude Emile," Middleton-upon-Tees Noad's "Lectures upon Electricity;" Brees's work on "Civil Engineering."

"P."—At Boles' Music Warehouse, Ludgate-hill; or Keith, Prowse, and Co., Cheapside.

"An Old Subscriber."—The first Duke of Rutland was named John Manners, 10th Earl of Rutland. His son, and grandson, the 2nd and 3rd Dukes, both bore the same name. The 4th Duke was Charles, and the 5th (the present), John Henry. There never was a Duke of Rutland before the above-mentioned John Manners.

"Petunia Miles."—We have already frequently given the information requested. The gap of an Ensign in the line is five shillings and threepence a day; of a Lieutenant, six shillings and sixpence; and of a Captain, eleven shillings and sevenpence. The price of an Ensign's Commission is £400; of a Lieutenant's, £800; and of a Captain's, £1800.

"Delta."—Our correspondent is clearly entitled to quarter his mother's arms, and would be allowed to assume his maternal grandfather's name.

"A Constant Subscriber."—We do not think there are any arms or crest appertaining to the name of Riches

"An Enquirer" A commission in the army is not easily obtained, without good interest at head-quarters. The other queries are answered above.

"E. E." There is no such record

"A Sister."—A divorce cannot be had, without great difficulty, and at considerable expense. The lady could not, under the circumstances, marry again without incurring the risk of a prosecution for bigamy.

"Kirkby Lonsdale."—The weather vane at Lloyd's has not been described in our Journal.

"J. M.," East Horsley.—The song by Eliza Cook, with music by Wallace, will be found in No. 193 of our Journal.

"A Constant Looker-on."—Mademoiselle Jenny Lind was born in 1820; Ibrahim Pacha in 1789.

"Astrea" may obtain tickets to view Windsor Castle of Ackermann and Co., Strand. See a paragraph in page 359 of our Number 347.

"W. K. N." The price of Taylor's work on "Singing" is 8s. 6d.

"J. M. H."—We believe the line you quote is to be found in Matthias's "Pursuits of Literature," a satirical poem.

"G. B."—We regret that we have not room for the lines.

"A. H.," Manchester We do not know the address.

"Jem"—Eaton Rix's work on "Fencing"

"Subscriptor," Cromford Any bookseller will procure the book for you.

"T. C. D.," Dublin.—Apply to Dean and Munday, Threadneedle-street, for the book on "Rabbits."

"A Purchaser"—Apply at Doctors' Commons.

"G. E. L." Under consideration

"Norman," and "Nec timere, nec timide." We cannot advise you.

"Eta," Birmingham.—Apply to Mr. Wyld, Charing-cross.

"J. W.," Devon. We cannot engrave the animals.

"Pisa," "F. L.," Exeter, "A. B." "Pecunia," and "H. G.," North Bucks, should send impressions of the coins to Mr. Webster, 17, Great Russell-street, Covent-garden.

"Hibernia."—John Abernethy's birth-place was either Abernethy, in Scotland, or Derry, in Ireland; it is much disputed which. We think the former.

"E. H." Edinburgh; "Percha."—"Prickwick" was Mr. Dickens' first work.

"A. M." Hackney.—Surveyors must be in demand in all new colonies. Advertise.

"Brighton" must owe a week's notice.

"A Constant Reader," Dublin.—The Rev. G. King's School is at Lansdowne-place, Holloway.

"Donegal" should write to the Engineer.

"Anne," Carnemoor The Shamrock has three leaves.

"Viola."—E. Anson, Esq.

"Reynald Reginier."—The height of the Venus de Medici is 4 feet 11½ inches, without the plinth.

"A. T. B." An illegitimate son cannot bear arms at all, unless he obtains a grant of such from the Earl Marshal.

"W. C. C."—No one, except a few privileged persons, is allowed to take an extract from a will at the Prerogative Office Address a letter to the chief clerk there, and you will obtain the desired information

"C. F. B."—To determine the approximate mean temperature for the day from six extreme values, it is necessary to use two self-recording thermometers—the one to register the highest, and the other the lowest temperature which have taken place since the previous examination (usually twenty-four hours). If these readings be taken at any given time in the morning, the maximum reading will be that of the preceding day, and the minimum reading will be generally that of the day

"Norman."—According to the statement submitted, Smith would be entitled to quarter, in the regular way, the arms of his mother Browne with those of his own father. Grand quarterings are only used when the wearer has two surnames.

"Q. K. Z."Rathernathe.—Officers of the army and navy take precedence according to their rank. A captain in the navy ranks with a colonel in the army.

BOOKS, &c., RECEIVED DURING THE WEEK.

Esther Copley's Knitting Book.—Christmas Eve.—Oracles from the British Poets.—Rohner on Musical Composition.—Family Pictures.—Milton's L'Allegro.—The Lancashire Witches.—Johnson's Rural Reader.—Puppet Showman's Album

Music.—O Time, thy hours of pleasure.—How painful are the pangs we feel.

SUPPLEMENT GRATIS.

ON SATURDAY NEXT, JANUARY 6, 1849, WILL BE PUBLISHED

A SUPPLEMENT

TO THE

ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS,

With the First Number for the Year, and of a New Volume a favourable opportunity for commencing Subscribers.

This Journal may be had, by order, of any News-Agent or Bookseller; and may be received direct from the Office.

NOW READY,

GEMS OF WOOD-ENGRAVING,

FROM

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS;

Containing upwards of ONE HUNDRED of the FINEST SPECIMENS of WOOD-ENGRAVING ever produced. Carefully Printed on a warm-tinted plate Paper With a Critical and Descriptive List of the Subjects; together with

A HISTORY OF THE ART OF WOOD-ENGRAVING,

ANCIENT AND MODERN. BY WILLIAM A. CHATTO.

Elegantly Bound, Price One Guinea. Forming one of the most superb Drawingroom or Gift Books of the Season.

London: W. LITTLE, 198, Strand.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1848.

THE new President of the French Republic has entered upon his functions—appointed his Ministers, disposed his Generals, named his Ambassadors, and settled most if not all of the preliminaries for a moderately liberal and firm Government. Parties in the National Assembly have begun to split into new combinations; and M. Ledru-Rollin has already assumed the leadership of a formidable Opposition.

M. Odillon Barrot has done a generous deed in consenting to be the chief of the new Ministry; he has given his talents and his high character to his country in a great emergency. M. Thiers, more wary, politic, and selfish, holds aloof. There is no popularity in store for any man—however able, eminent, and virtuous—who serves France at the present period. Her difficulties are too many and too formidable. M. Thiers knows this well. He knows also that without a portfolio he will for some time to come be more powerful than he could be in office; and that his influence as an independent member of the Legislature may be exercised without any sacrifice of popularity and character. Hence he will bide his time, and consent to serve the new President and the country without responsibility. The principal appointments which have been made up to the present time seem to be judicious. It is not to be wondered at that the name of Bonaparte—so great a recommendation to 5,000,000 of electors—should be a recommendation to the President himself. Every available member of the family has already been nominated to office. Jerome Bonaparte, the President's uncle, and ex-King of Westphalia, has been named Governor of the Invalides—a very natural and fitting appointment; and one of the President's cousins, closely allied with the party of the Mountain, has been gracefully and cleverly removed from such bad company, and appointed French Ambassador at the Court of St. James's. Marshal Bugeaud has been appointed to the command of the Army of the Alps, amid the general approbation of the country, though not without some dread at the Bourse of Paris that the state of Italy is but too probable to afford speedy occupation to the hero of a hundred razzias. General Changarnier, the military right hand of the President, takes the command of the National Guard of Paris and of the troops of the line of the first division. This appointment has been severely canvassed, and led to a sharp discussion in the Assembly on Tuesday last. M. Ledru-Rollin denounced the appointment as unconstitutional, on the ground that the office of Commander of the National Guard was expressly forbidden to be given to any officer in active service in the line.

M. Ledru-Rollin stated that the total force under General Changarnier would amount to nearly 300,000 men, and that the General was under no responsibility to the Minister of War. M. Odillon Barrot defended the appointment, the unconstitutionality of which he did not very urgently deny, supporting it mainly on the national and social necessity of providing for the peace of Paris—an object which the Government could guarantee by this arrangement, but which it could not guarantee, were less extensive powers confided to the General in the chief command of the National Guards. He alleged also that the arrangement was merely temporary, and would be set aside as soon as the public security was fully established, and society had relapsed into its normal state. The Assembly supported the new Government by a small majority, and passed to the order of the day. It is evident, however, from the whole discussion, and from the general temper of the Assembly, that the new President will not find it an easy matter to carry on the Government until that body shall have fulfilled its office and been dissolved. It is expected that this cannot take place until February, when the ordinary legislative assembly will be called together.

THE marvellous tales that have reached this country, in the American journals, relative to the quantities of gold found in the new acquisition of California, have hitherto met with but a qualified credence. The proneness to exaggeration, which seems to have become habitual with newspaper writers in the United States, is so well known in the sober "old country," that most people feel inclined to look upon these stories of boundless wealth to be had for the gathering or the digging, as travellers' tales, to be taken cum grano. The President of the United States is, however, a personage not to be accused of the failing of American journalism; and when we find that Mr. Polk, in his last voluminous message to Congress, has fully confirmed all the accounts previously received, we are bound to believe that these wonderful stories are true in the spirit, if not in all cases in the letter. In fact, there is no reason to doubt that California abounds with gold, and that it is to be, and has been, obtained with very little labour—scattered over a large plain—to be picked up in lumps on the surface—to be sifted from the river sands or the arable soil—and to be scraped out of the crevices of the rocks, with no greater expenditure of labour than a man's hands, aided by a gully knife, can bestow.

The President states in his Message that the accounts of the abundance of gold in California were of such an extraordinary character, that they would scarcely have commanded belief had they not been corroborated by the official reports of public functionaries who visited the mineral districts, and derived the facts which they detail from personal observation. Reluctant to credit the reports in circulation as to the quantity of gold, the officer commanding the United States' forces in California visited the district in July last, and reported to the War department what he had witnessed. Mr. Polk, in laying the document before Congress, stated that at the time the report was written, the number of persons engaged in gold digging and sifting amounted to about 4000, but that since July it had been very greatly increased. He added that there was reason to believe that the supply was very large, and that gold was to be found at various places in an extensive district of country. As might be expected in this new El Dorado, where labour is the best of capital, labour for ordinary purposes is not to be had at all; the richest man must make his own bed and clean his own boots. All other pursuits are abandoned except that of gold hunting. The whole male population, and a large number of women and children, have gone to the gold country. Ships arriving on the coast are immediately deserted by their crews; and the American officer commanding the troops in the new territory finds it no easy matter to fill the soldiers in the allegiance of the State, when that mighty potentate, King Mammon—mightier than any King or President that ever lived and reigned—summons them away to do him service. The region where the gold is found is between the Sierra Novada range of mountains and the ocean, and is watered by the river Sacramento, with its tributaries, the Consumnes and the San Joaquim. The following extract of a letter from Monterey, of a month or six weeks later date than the official despatch communicated to Congress by President Polk, gives some interesting, and, it is believed, authentic accounts of the social consequences of this "golden madness:"—

> Monterey (says the writer) is nearly deserted; all the male portion of the inhabitants, with very few exceptions, has gone to dig for gold. Thus far, all who have returned have brought back two, three, four, and some as much as ten thousand dollars each in gold dust. It is now so abundant, and coin so scarce, that it can be bought at 9 dols. per ounce. Some has been sold for 7 dols the ounce. Thirty and forty dollars per day are considered a poor day's gains. One man found over 800 dols. in one day. I have seen many persons from there, and all agree that from 50 to 100 dols. per day can be made by any person who is willing to work.

Another letter of a later date states "that up to the middle of September the quantity known to be gathered is to the value of £550,000, and this does not include considerable amounts of which no account could be obtained. It is confidently believed by the best informed that the outskirt only of the great gold region has been touched on: more than one instance has happened of men who had encountered the shining substance in their passage westward across the mountains, and viewed it with indifference as some valueless substance, but who quickly retraced their steps, on hearing it to be gold. The Mormons, driven by persecution from their native country, have been among the most considerable gainers. The entire extent of country abounding in this amazing wealth is considered to be considerably underrated at 500 square miles, and the depth to which it extends is of course entirely unknown."

All this is very wonderful; and Brother Jonathan is very lucky. It is not always that an unjust war is the means of enriching its perpetrators to such an extent as this. The Anglo-Saxons are a great race; and notwithstanding the Mexican war, we are half inclined to believe that they deserve the Dorado for having discovered it. Under the stagnant rule of the Spanish race in Mexico, the riches of California were unknown and unsuspected. It was no sooner ceded to Brother Jonathan, than his keen eyes discovered its secret, and his nimble fingers turned it to account. California is indeed a splendid acquisition. Independently of its gold, which, plentiful as it now appears, may soon be exhausted, the country and the climate are admirable; and in a few years California promises to be one of the most flourishing states of the Union, and the emporium of a magnificent trade with all parts of the world, especially with the East. We had thought that in this age of revolutions the stories to be told by the Old World would have surpassed those of the New; but California seems destined to rival even Europe in the romance of its history.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

n Tuesday (Boxing) night, so great was the rush of people on the ing of the gallery door of the Victoria Theatre, that the stairs gave way, and ads, of 18 and 14 years of age respectively, were killed, either by suffocation by the fall from the stairs to the ground. Several others sustained severe ries, such as concussion of the brain, contused wounds, from being trampled n, &c.

he Baths and Washhouses in St. Martin's-in-the-Fields were opened Tuesday, under the presidency of the Rev. Sir H. B. Dukinfield, late vicar, delivered an address congratulating the company on the occasion he Austrian Government have introduced some modifications into law respecting recruits for the army. The exemption of the nobility from ary service is abolished, and the age for serving is fixed from 20 to 26 years burglary was committed on Sunday night at the house of Count Pepello, at Kensington. The robbery is supposed to have been committ- ing time the family were at dinner. The property stolen consisted of jeweller, gun coins, and in Bank of England notes, numbered 90,117 to 90,134 inclusive amounted to upwards of £500.

number of masons employed by Messrs. Thomas and William Smith, nbuilders, at their new dock at North Shields, are out on the strike. The firm refused to comply with certain deductions in the rate of wages proposed by employers.

he Durham papers state that the excavation of the interesting ns at Kepshead will shortly take place. The investigation cannot fail to be ing valuable to the science of geology.

he Military Commission, over which the Quartermaster-General of the s, General Sir W. Gordon, Bart., G.C.B., is President, pursues their labours great zeal and efficiency; they hold their meetings at his office at the e Guards, and the daily ration of the soldier is one subject under considerat a recent meeting of the guardians of the Cleobury Mortimer Union, y Tudor, a resident in the parish of Wheathill, voluntarily came and paid the amount of relief advanced to him while unable to work from the cation of his arm. The guardians present immed.ately subscribed the nt and returned it to Tudor, and expressed their admiration of his sterling ity.

Chartist leader, named James Frankland, Secretary to the Preston Society, has, by means of aiding figures in his book to sums lent, and inums at last which were more than all, defrauded the society of £300, which he has got clear off to America. He was a professing teetotaller, and dent Chartist.

Yeo, Cockburne, Esqs., is appointed Stipendiary Magistrate in the Hies; and John Hare, Esq., is appointed Clerk in the Treasurer's office, Kong.

Salisbury butchers last week were selling meat at 3½d., and prime- at 4½d. per pound.

r Clydesdale, of Glasgow, Thomas Auld, master, laden with cotton, Charlestown or Glasgow, was totally wrecked on the island of Colonsay on night of the 16th. The crew, including the wife and infant son of the mas, consisted of of that number, 15 were taken on shore, and the rest drowned.

se of the first grand soirées for the winter season at Paris was given Monday night week by the Countess of Elgin, in the Rue de Varennes, at i more than 500 of the élite of Paris were present. The evening was ed by a concert, to which Madame Sabatier, Madame Ledru, and M Gerald he lead of their talent, and concluded by a grand ball. A collection was for a charitable purpose, which produced a sum of 8000f.

consequences of the re-examination of the insurgents of June, on ch the Duke of Aumale, the Minister of War, and the Prefect of Police, of the Invalides, he said, "The Emperor has given us at his last re- and I am happy to pass you by the hand at my first!" It was General who received the salute of the late ex-Emperor Napoleon at Fontainbleau.

e remains of a pavement, considered to be Roman, were discovered e below the surface of the ground at Eastbourne, a few days since, by the men employed in constructing the sea-wall between the Wish and the Sea ese are said appears to have depend on the strenuous exertions and activity of every class he work has been damaged, probably by the operation of the p.ough. The as been visited by many persons.

he proceeds of the Jenny Lind Concerts for the Royal Infirmary at ester amount to £2772 7s. 6d., to which must be added the handsome do- of £105 from Mr Alexander Glendenning, per Mr. J. C. Harter; so that ther amount is £2877 7s. 6d. This is not exactly the sum we wished for, £400, leaves a net sum of £2477 applicable to the erection of a new wing to the ester Royal Infirmary week a publication was given at the Son Inn, Cockermouth, electors of that borough to their two members, Messrs. Aglionby and am, in compliment to them for their uniform consistency and unflinching ion, gentlemen, friends, and members of the Legislature. John Steel, fficiated as chairman.

e Mormonites have recently received several accessions to their in the neighbourhood of Carnarthen, from which place a numerous intend setting out for New Jerusalem early in the spring. Several of the patriotars have purchased supplies of clothing to take with them, and in instance a farmer has sold off the whole of his property in order to pay the es of the voyage

e Communal Council of Antwerp proceeded last Saturday to the ion of a member of the commission to be instituted for the restoration of dintings by Rubens. M. C. Leys was chosen by the council. This con- will be formed of five members, of which two will be appointed by Go- one by the province, one by the city, and one by the bench of the wardens of the parish of Notre Dame an inquiry held on Thursday, before the Sheriff of Surrey, to compensation to the firm of Rowe, Gordon, and Dunn, reading in Gravel- Newmark, for premises required for the purposes of the London and western Railway Company's extension to London-bridge, the claimants compensation to the amount of £14,742 6s. 10d., and the Jury returned a of £12,804 19 tractarian disputes in Devonshire have caused a degree of ex- nt which seems not likely to abate. A meeting took place at Plymouth ek, at which a memorial to the Archbishop was adopted, and a resolu- ssed, to the effect that the tractarian evil "receives encouragement from ed Bishop." The cases of the Rev. James Shore and the Rev. Mr. Gorham ferred to.

r men, masked and disguised, broke into the house of Mr. John a few ti, at Colchester, near Newcastle, on Friday morning se'night, o'clock. Two of them stood over the inmates with pistols cocked, the other two ransacked the house, whence they took a bank receipt- money from the servant girl, a gun, a sword, and some finger rings and a regulation established at the Post-Office, some months ago, it be remembered that money orders issued in October must be presented before the end of the ensuing month December, otherwise their payment fall on the holders additional expense and trouble. The rule in question n that orders issued during any calendar month should be presented for ment by the end of the second calendar month therefrom.

Dublin Company's steamer, on arriving in Kingstown harbour on ulight, ran foul of one or two of the vessels with which the basin is . The night was both dark and foggy, and no blame can be attached to on board the steamer. One brig was injured in her bulwarks, as also the to her paddle-box and figure-head.

brig Margaret, of and from Stockton, coal laden, and bound for Ayre, was wrecked on the morning of the 30th, in attempting to make the . The mate and crew got on shore by means of life buoys The of the master, who was washed overboard, was recovered the same following appointments have been made in the Order of the Bath: el Duncan MacGregor to be K.C.B.; Lieutenant-Colonel Rowan to be Lieutenant-Colonel George Bulle to be C.B.

Bonnie Mary, from France, corn-laden, was wrecked near Round- Galway, in the late gales—captain and three men saved, and the William of Cumberland, Lyons master, for Liverpool, with timber from Nova was at the same time wrecked at Inch Island. The crew and cargo were

Burnard, a Devonshire artist, has been authorised to execute a f Mr Richard Lander, the enterprising traveller in Africa, who was a of Truro. The figure will be placed on the Lander column at the top of Truro; Truro; its height will be about eight feet, and the material will ss, either Portland or magnesian limestone, of which the new Houses ament are built, and the design will be as simple and effective as readers of Jeremy Taylor will be interested in learning that the hitherto attributed to him, entitled "Contemplations on the State of ss been ascertained to be from another hand; a recently published by Archdeacon Churton, having shown it to be taken from a work by erg, a Spanish writer contemporary with Taylor. The "Contempla- ill, therefore, not be included in the Rev. R. P. Eden's edition of Jeremy Works now in course of publication in ten volumes

Tuesday night, shortly after six o'clock, a woman named Mary was murdered in Abingdon-street, Northampton. She was walking sister, when the assassin approached and stabbed her several times with the party suspected is a shoe maker st the troops were filing off at the review in Paris on Monday, ge form of an eagle was thrown up most in front of which the Pre- The author of this demonstration, which might have caused nance, was a dou ie named Red, Rue du Berlin, 26. Proceedings have ituted against him

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

IRELAND.

MR. DUFFY'S TRIAL.

On Friday se'nnight the court gave judgment on the plea of abatement, which had been argued on the previous days. Judge Perrin, at considerable length, went into the law of the case, and expressed his opinion that the plea was bad. Baron Richards fully concurred in the judgment of Mr. Justice Perrin, stating that in his opinion the plea was bad both in form and substance. The clerk of the Crown then called on Mr. Duffy to plead to the indictment; upon which Mr Butt applied to the court to quash the indictment against the prisoner in the county before he was called on to plead to the present case, which was in the city. The court refused to do so. Their intention was not to allow the prisoner to be harassed by both; but as soon as he pleaded to the one in the city, to quash the other. The prisoner being again called on to plead, Mr. Butt handed in the general demurrer to every count in the indictment. The Attorney-General immediately joined in a demurrer, and said he was ready to argue it, and was determined, if it should in argument be ruled against the prisoner, to press for final judgment upon it.

The indictment is similar to those previously preferred against Mr. Duffy, and charges him, in nine distinct counts, with having compassed and imagined the determinment of her Majesty from the Imperial Crown of the United Kingdom, and with having intended to levy war against her, in order to compel her by force and constraint to change her measures and counsels. The prisoner is charged with having manufactured those two intents by certain publications in a newspaper called the Nation, of which he was the registered proprietor, and which were published on various days between the 3rd of June and the 29th of July, 1848, the titles of which are the following:—"The Uses of Union" "Ireland's Capacity to assert her Independence" "Value of an Irish Parliament" "Letter from Thomas F. Meagher in the Dublin Clubs"—"Cause Bell!" "The Hour of Destiny"—"The Tocsin of Ireland" "Jacta Alea est."

On Saturday, the arguments on the demurrer continued, when Sir Colman O'Loghlen was heard against the sufficiency of the indictment. Having concluded his argument, the Crown was afforded some time for consultation; and it appearing impossible to terminate the argument by Christmas, it was decided by the Court, both sides according, that the case be adjourned until Thursday last.

THE ORDER AGAINST THE PUBLICATION OF MR. DUFFY'S TRIAL RESCINDED.—On Friday morning (se'nnight), at the sitting of the Commission Court, Judge Perrin (in the face of repeated refusals at one time even to listen to argument upon the order of non-publication, and who, on Thursday se'nnight, had made a formal decision on the point, confirming and abiding by his order, now announced that the Court had come to the conclusion that the order prohibiting publication should be rescinded, and that publication of the proceedings might take place as usual in ordinary cases His Lordship intimated that this resolution had been come to in consequence of the course the proceedings had taken. Doubtless, the learned Judge advanced to the fact that for several days the Court had been occupied with preliminary matter, and that the same would probably prevail for some days; and, therefore, that no disadvantage could arise from publication of mere law argument, and their judgments thereon.

CONGRATULATORY ADDRESS TO THE LORD-LIEUTENANT.—On Saturday last the Lord Mayor and corporation of Dublin proceeded in full regalia to the Castle, to present his Excellency with the address of congratulation on the state of Ireland preliminary agreed to on the 9th by the Legislature sole y for the maintenance of public order, and not alone to protest the peaceable subjects of her Majesty, but to abstain from all unnecessary severity against those by whom the safety and well-being of society were endangered. I am, therefore, much gratified that the corporation of Dublin should now record their opinion that the duty which devolved upon me has been performed with moderation and has been attended with success. On the part of her Majesty's Government, and my own I can assure you that there exists a sincere desire carefully to investigate the causes of discontent in Ireland, and, as far as possible, to remove them by improved legislation. To reply, however, upon legislation alone as a cure, or even a palliation, for evils that are chiefly social in their character, would be to foster a vain delusion, and to neglect those remedies which are within the reach of individuals, and must depend on the strenuous exertions and activity of every class in the community, rather than on the wisest enactments of Parliament. That which, above all things, Ireland now stands most in need of, as the basis of her future improvement, is internal tranquillity. No progress is possible a country ever did, or can, prosper under a system of political agitation which arrays against each other men who should be united for their common good, and which is at war with the first principles of industry and the enjoyment of wealth; and to that scale order upon which public confidence depends This system has long been practised in Ireland. I need not dwell upon the results it has produced, but I will venture to express my earnest hope that the warnings of experience may not be disregarded, and that the ingenuity and talent by which Irishmen are pre-eminently distinguished may henceforward be devoted to the true interests of this country, and to the improvement of those great social relations which might long since have rendered Ireland a land of comfort and prosperity."

THE "LONDONDERRY" STEAMER.—Mr. Brewster, Q.C., applied on Saturday in chambers to the Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench to admit the captain of the Londonderry steamer to bail. His Lordship, after hearing counsel upon the affidavits on which the motion was grounded, and on consideration of the whole of the circumstances, granted the application. An order to the Derry magistrates to take bail in the case was accordingly issued on the same evening.

INTRODUCTION OF THE OMNIBUS IN DUBLIN.—Dublin, which has been hitherto "the most car-driviest city in Europe," is about to lessen her proportion of "shanties." An omnibus company, understood to have become convinced that London is overdone in the way of omnibuses, is about to transfer its stock in trade to Ireland. The Dublin "Jarvies" have, therefore, thought of revising their fares and the mode of charging them Heretofore the practice was to charge a fare of 10d., practically 1s., for "a set down" or drive, which in some cases probably was not of greater extent than a street or two. Henceforth this charge will be limited to 6d., and the whole list of charges and distances will be revised for the advantage of the public. To do the "Jarvies" justice, they are not so much to blame as the divisional magistrates, who, having had always the power of revising these charges, neglected to do so.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE IN BELFAST.—On Saturday morning the most destructive fire that has occurred in Belfast for many years, broke out on the premises of Messrs. Ferrar and Co., silk mercers, Donegal-place, a short time before two o'clock. Before the engines were on the ground, the flames were raging furiously. They speedily communicated to the adjoining buildings, forming a portion of one of the finest ranges in Belfast, which were quickly an entire mass of flame. The destruction of property is very large, calculated at from £70,000 to £71,000. The whole of Messrs. Ferrar and Co.'s stock was consumed, and nearly all the goods warth was saved from any one of the other premises Great delay took place before a supply of water could be procured—fully an hour, it is stated, and even then the supply was very deficient. The heat was so intense that it was impossible to approach within thirty or forty yards of the burning pile; and the shutters on the opposite side of the street, one of the broadest in Europe, were blistered for one hundred yards up and down. Several persons received severe injuries, and some appear to be seriously hurt. How the fire originated is unknown, as everything appeared safe when the premises were locked up at a late hour on the previous night

THE Belfast Chronicle reports a few more cases of Asiatic cholera in that town.

DISTANCE FROM THE UNITED STATES TO ENGLAND.—Frequent disputes as to the distances sailed by the Atlantic steamers has led to the compilation of the following table, for reference now and hereafter:—

By Mercator's Sailing	Miles
Boston Dock to Liverpool Dock	3251
Battery, New York, to Liverpool Dock	3161
Boston Dock to Southampton Dock	3164
Battery, New York, to Southampton Dock	3046
By Mercator and Great Circle
Boston Dock to Liverpool Dock	2945
Battery, New York, to Liverpool Dock	2863
Boston Dock to Southampton Dock	2849
Battery, New York, to Southampton Dock	2767

These calculations allow for the détour made by the British steamers in touching at Halifax.

THE CHIPPEWA INDIANS. The St. Louis Republican has the following:—"The steamer Monchonis arrived at St. Louis on the 13th (Nov.), from the Upper Mississippi, with a delegation of twelve Chippewa Indians, six of whom are chiefs, and from the Lake Superior country. This delegation are on their way to Washington, for the purpose of interceding with the President to secure, either by grant or purchase, a portion of the lands sold in the Government survey since, and thus to retain possession of their villages These noble men of the forest bring with them three bark canoes, of exquisite workmanship, besides a full supply of implements for hunting and for war. They are dressed in Indian costume, with a profusion of trinkets, feathers, claws, porcupine quills, snake rattles, &c., and on the breast of the principal chief we noticed, suspended by a massive gold ring, a silver medal, presented by the younger Adams, as a token of peace and friendship, in the year 1825. They are all fine-looking men—tall, erect (a characteristic of the race), appear to possess much of the dignity and haughty bearing peculiar to the half civilised or savage Indian. Nevertheless, they are said to be peaceable and well-disposed men—warm friends of the Government for many years past, and profess to think a great deal of their great father, the President. We are informed that this delegation embarked in their canoes about six weeks since, from La Pointe, on the river Bois Brule, and traversed this great inland sea to the straits of Ste Marie. They then disembarked, packed their canoes, war and hunting implements, entire wardrobe and provisions, on their backs, and travelled on foot across the country several hundred miles, for the purpose of seeing and presenting in person their petition to the head of the nation."

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

SIR C. NAPIER'S SQUADRON.—This squadron, whose departure from Portsmouth we noticed last week, it is understood, is to take the following course. It first touches at Lisbon, and then goes to Gibraltar, where Sir C. Napier will find Polyphemus, st. sl., and take her under his command, pro tem, and proceed to Tangiers with all his force; and having settled matters there, Penaz Regent will go to Naples, to join Sir W. Parker's squadron, calling at Palermo on her way. Sir C. Napier will next return to Gibraltar, and it will then depend upon his despatches from home whether he will proceed on his previous-determined cruise. If he receive no instructions to the contrary, he will sail to Madeira, and thence to Santa Cruz, where Greetze will leave him for the Cape of Good Hope, Mauritius, &c. The squadron will then return to Gibraltar, and after remaining a short time there will return to Lisbon, where Sir Charles will most likely find Railney, 92, Vanguard, 80, and Sidon, st. fr., from the Mediterranean; all these ships being ordered to be detached from under the command of Sir W. Parker, and to be placed under the orders of Sir C. Napier. In the meantime he will have sent home Regent from Gibraltar, and have despatched Powerful to Sir William Parker. At Lisbon he will send home Plantagenet.

THE COMMAND-IN-CHIEF IN THE MEDITERRANEAN.—It is stated that Vice Admiral Sir W. Parker will retire very shortly from the Command-in-Chief of the Mediterranean, which he has now held for more than three years and nine months.

ROYAL ARTILLERY. There is now no doubt that a considerable augmentation of this branch of the service will take place, as it is intended that in one of the Royal Horse Artillery, the field batteries, and the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the battalions are to take the routine of duty in the East Indies, in lieu of any part of the world where their services may be required.

IMPROVED KIT FOR THE SOLDIER.—A proposition is now under consideration by the military authorities for the adoption of a new great-coat and knapsack for the army. The great-coat is to be of a lighter and superior texture to the one at present furnished by the Ordnance Department, and the knapsack will, it is said, be made in construction and shape, have the further advantage of not being made by five or six pounds the weight now carried on the infantry soldier's back. Hitherto the great-coat has been fastened by straps outside the knapsack; the plan proposed is that the new great-coat shall be carried inside when not required for the soldier's use BARRACK CANTEENS. The following circular relates to the new regulation prohibiting the sale of spirits in barrack canteens:—"Horse Guards, Sept. 27. Sir,—I have the honour to express the Commander-in-Chief's desire that you report to me, for his grace's information, the result of your observation of the working of the system which prohibits the sale of spirits in regimental canteens. You will be pleased to state distinctly your opinion as to the effects (prejudicially or otherwise) of that measure upon the habits and dispositions of the men, and, generally, upon the health and vigour with which last-mentioned point you will, of course, obtain the opinion of the medical officer of the battalion under your command. (Signed) J MACDONALD, Adjutant-General. To the Officer commanding the Regiment." Answers to the foregoing circular have been forwarded to head-quarters. The following opinion comes from one of the most aristocratic commanders of a highly distinguished regiment:—"My opinion is, that no real benefit, either as regards health or habits of the soldiers, has been gained by prohibiting the sale of spirits on regimental canteens; and I am further of opinion that it tends to induce the soldiers to resort to the public-houses in the neighbourhood where spirits are sold, and the men are thus thrown more into the society of the civilians. Crimes resulting from drunkenness have not decreased since the introduction of the new system, and the medical officer has found no difference in the health of the men."—Observer.

A NEW FIELD FOR EMIGRATION.—Under the auspices of Admiral Grenfell, the Brazilian consul at Liverpool, a considerable number of respectable farmers, from whom, indeed, intend shortly to embark on that part to Rio Grande, a tract of country lying to the south-west of Rio Janeiro, with assistance from the Brazilian Government, sanguine hopes are entertained of the ultimate prosperity of these adventurers, who will, it is said, be followed by other parties of their countrymen

THE REALISATION OF COMMUNIST DOCTRINES.—It is generally known that a well-known Frenchman landed some time ago at Galveston, in Texas, in the "far west" of America The Paris Constitutionnel this week throws some light on the results of the undertaking, by quoting a letter from the Courrier de Vendôme, written by M. E. Dubuisson, late chief, formerly of the Rue Royale, 103, Paris, who formed part of the second advanced guard sent by M Cazot to Icaria This letter gives a deplorable account of the cab ition. It says that it is not true, as had been represented, that a million acres had been conceded to the Icarians; that one of the establishments destined to receive women was not fit for a stable; that on arriving in Icaria, after a long and difficult navigation, the emigrants found that the expedition had to run part of severe privations, they found nothing but corpses, and no cultivated land. The letter adds, that the day after arriving the exiles unanimously resolved to abandon Icaria, which they did, leaving their effects behind; and M. Dubuisson gives a detail of his pecuniary losses, and of his having failed to obtain assistance from the agent in Icarian society at New Orleans. The Constitutionnel also publishes a letter on the same subject, dated Paris, the 24th inst., from a M. Lemaire, who communicates a letter from another member of the expedition, in which a similar woeful account is given. The unfortunate Communist—a young man who had given the greater part of his fortune to Cabet—writes that, on arriving in Icaria, where both water and air are pestilential, nine men out of seventy died, and the rest fell dangerously ill He says that, though suffering from fever and want, he succeeded in reaching New Orleans, after walking 120 leagues through the forests, and that he was there received in the hospital. He speaks in strong terms of what he calls the deception of Cabet.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

SPAIN

The struggle with the Carlists in Catalonia still draws its slow length along. Twenty-five thousand men are on the march at the date of our latest advices from the other provinces to reinforce the army of Catalonia.

PRUSSIA.

Our advices this week from Berlin state that the preparations for the elections were being carried on actively, the ministerial party already dividing the city into electoral districts, of which there were to be twice as many as at the last election, a circumstance of which the democrats complained; they stated that it divided their strength, and weakened their opposition. The ministerialists intended to start a new Conservative paper on the 1st of January. M. Arago, the French Minister at Berlin, it was reported, would be replaced by M. Crémieux.

AUSTRIA

There is no intelligence of interest this week from Vienna

The young Emperor has not yet visited the capital, in which the state of siege stands still as unabated, though in a mild form.

The San Jellachich has been appointed Civil and Military Governor of Dalmatia.

ITALIAN STATES

PIEDMONT.—At Turin, on the 19th, the Chamber of Deputies voted a monthly subsidy of 600,000 lire in favour of Venice during its struggle with the Austrians

ROME.—Our Intelligence from the "Eternal City" states that the conditions which the Pope has laid down before returning to the capital, are, that the present Ministry should be dismissed, the Chambers dissolved, the Charter of the press temporarily suspended, the National Guard dissolved, and the clubs suppressed These terms were considered inadmissible by the leaders of the movement, and His Holiness, it is understood, refuses to return until he shall have received answers to a letter which he has addressed to all Catholic European Courts, requesting their aid in his present difficulties. It was understood that the Pope intended immediately to remove from Gaeta to Gerita Vecchia, which was perfectly tranquil, but an earnest wish was universally expressed to see a Constituent Assembly convoked

HUNGARY.

The long-threatened campaign has begun, and so far the Imperialists have had the best of the contest.

An army bulletin, from Presburg, under date December 18, announces the entrance of Windischgrätz and the second army corps into that town (the second town in Hungary Proper), which had been wholly abandoned on the previous day by the Hungarian troops, after they had removed the bridge of boats. On the 18th, also, Windischgrätz removed his head-quarters to Carlburg (a town on the Leitha, between Presburg, in the direction of Pesth), and Wiesselburg was taken by the Imperialists of the first army corps, after a fierce contest, which lasted during several hours On the same day, also, Jellachich marched towards Neuhausel, a town situated within a few miles of Raab, in which latter place the Magyars, it is said, will make a grand stand

The armed working men of Presburg had abandoned that town before the arrival of the Imperialists. It was impossible of making any lengthened defence, and before the commencement of the insurrection the Magyars never contemplated making a stand therein. The post has been re-established between Vienna and Presburg.

According to intelligence from Lemberg and Pancsowa, the Magyars had attacked the camp of the Servians, and taken it by storm. They were also preparing to bombard Legrade. The Hungarian forces had quite abandoned Siebenburgen (Transylvania).

The Imperial troops suffered greatly from cold and privation, many picquets having been found frozen to death.

The ultimate success of the invasion was considered by many in Vienna as extremely problematical.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, December 27th, 1848.

Before my last letter could have left Paris, the unexpected mouvement it announced had been accomplished, and the President de la Republique had passed by my windows on his way to the Elysée Nationale, where his Ministers awaited him The short speech he had made at the Assembly was entirely written by himself, and merely shown to these gentlemen for their approval The details of this event must be long since known to you through the papers; but the following circumstance, for the authenticity of which I can vouch, has not, I believe, found its way into print. On the evening of his installation the President wished to retain his Ministers to dinner. The invitation was particularly pressed, but one more frank than the rest—one whose especial functions rendered him quite au fait on this point—respectfully observed that it would be indiscreet to accept dinners from one whose limited revenue necessitated the practice of economy, rather than the indulgence of hospitality. The lesson, though accepted at the moment, does not seem to have been very effective in its results; for the President is mounting his establishment with princely magnificence. Ten coupés de pied, ten hommes de peine, and ten postilions are already engaged. The kitchen appointments are also en règle in the same style and proportion of expense.

LOUIS NAPOLEON, THE PRESIDENT OF THE FRENCH REPUBLIC, TAKING THE OATH OF OFFICE.

The review on Sunday was very imposing. It appears that many are dissatisfied with the uniform chosen on that occasion by the President. But, it may be asked, when did any man ever succeed in pleasing every one? The hat worn by the Prince was similar in form to the one worn by his uncle when First Consul. During the day there were some "few and far between" cries of "Vive l'Empereur!" It is wonderful how this gay-hearted people persifler on the gravest questions: I heard it observed, "Il n'y a rien plus facile à faire qu'un Empereur. I would engage to make one with a cornet de dragées." We really are to have divorces, which great fact was long doubtful; and after the day, so big with hope and expectation to all classes and all ages in this country, has passed, I will tell you some of the many pretty conceits and quaint devices which will no doubt be brought to light by the ingenious Parisians.

The entertainment given last week by Lady Elgin might really be termed a soirée monstre. It began with a concert; then followed some admirable recitations by Madame Charles Ledru; then a quête for the poor, which realised, it is said, 8000 francs; and then a ball, which did not terminate till six o'clock the following morning.

Nature's voice is seldom heardin vain; and it seems so natural for the ashes of the dead to be confided to some near relative, that the appointment of Jerome Bonaparte to the Invalides finds a certain degree of favour with all parties. The strangest and most contradictory feelings and opinions are every day to be remarked. When the ex-King's residence at Neuilly was destroyed, in accordance with what was then called popular opinion, who would have believed that, before the close of the year, a project would be on foot for rebuilding it by public subscription? And yet so it is; and so popular is the idea, that the subscription already amounts, it is said, to 900,000f.

The succès of the new Ministers yesterday, I am told, was very petit; and both last night and this morning the advent of M. Thiers to office is freely spoken of.

FRANCE.

The new President, whom all accounts concur in representing as having, on his election, become suddenly very popular with the Parisians, without any apparent cause save that of his name and the possession of some of those advantages of person and manner which might be expected as a matter of course in a Bonaparte, held a grand review of the National Guard on Sunday, at which he met with a very enthusiastic reception from all classes. Between seven and eight o'clock in the morning, the rappel was beaten in all the quarters of Paris, for the National Guard to turn out for the Grand Review of the President of the Republic. Notwithstanding the coldness of the weather, the rappel was generally responded to, and by half past eight all the legions were assembled in the positions previously set apart for them. The troops collected in their respective positions at a somewhat earlier hour. All the officers were en grande tenue, and the men were provided with their campaigning kit. Each regiment was preceded by its band, and had its flag. The regular troops consisted altogether of 40,000 infantry, 3000 cavalry, and eight batteries of artillery. There were also a squadron of the horse Garde Républicaine, another of the gendarmerie of the Seine, another of the gendarmerie Mobile, a division de Gardes, and a detachment of the Garde Républicaine on foot. There was, moreover, a detachment from the Invalides, carrying the lances employed only on great occasions. The Invalides were headed by General Petit and other officers. The Garde Mobile was assembled on the Place de la Concorde.

Amongst the early arrivals at the residence of the President, the Palace of the Elysée National, were the Minister of War with his staff, M. Pierre Napoleon, cousin of the President, in the uniform of a chef d'escadron of the foreign legion, and a considerable number of other officers, who were to accompany the President to the review. At about ten o'clock, the President, who had until then been in conference with his Ministers, entered the saloon, and after a few minutes' conversation, he prepared to leave the Palace for the review.

The following was the order of the cortège: a picquet of Lancers, of the horse National Guard; the President of the Republic, in the uniform of a general of the National Guard, wearing the grand cordon of the Legion of Honour, on horseback, having at his right hand the Minister of War, and on his left M. Pierre Napoleon Bonaparte. He was attended by all the general and other officers, who had arrived for that purpose at the Palace. An immense crowd had assembled round the Palace, and when the President appeared there were loud and enthusiastic shouts of "Vive Napoleon!" "Vive le Président!" "Vive la République!" The President, who is described as exhibiting a very graceful and commanding figure on horseback, appeared to be much gratified at his reception, and bowed repeatedly. He arrived at the Arc de Triomphe, by the Rue du Colysée, and then rode, with his staff and General Changarnier, down the entire line of troops in the Champs Elysées, the Place de la Concorde, the Rue Royale, the Boulevard de la Madeleine, the Rue de la Paix, and Place Vendôme, the Rue de Castiglione, and the Rue de Rivoli.

Along the whole line he was received with an enthusiasm which it is impossible to describe by the National Guards and the people generally. The air resounded with cries of "Vive Napoleon!" There were also cries of "Vive l'Empereur!" At the Place de la Concorde the President took his position to witness the filing off at about twelve o'clock. The Minister of War, General Changarnier, General Lebreton, Questor of the National Assembly, and the Prefect of Police were at this time close to his person, as were also several representatives of the people. The filing off was the signal for new and loud acclamations; and the weather being at this time very fine, the effect was beautiful. During the filing off of the National Guard, several National Guards, of different legions, abandoned the ranks to present petitions to the President, all of which he received with great courtesy. When General Petit was passing, the President advanced and shook him warmly by the hand. Throughout the day he appeared to feel considerable emotion. The presence of a great number of veterans of the old Imperial Guards, wearing their ancient uniforms, figured in the review, and were the "observed of all observers." At one o'clock, the filing off had terminated. Everything passed off in the most admirable manner.

The Socialist-Democrats continue to cause apprehension from the boldness and violence with which they labour to propagate their pernicious doctrines at their frequent réunions. They had several banquets on Sunday and Christmas day, in various localities of Paris. Among the latter was one of French, German, and other foreign Socialist-Democrats at the Barrière du Maine. 480 persons were present, and among them 80 ladies. No representative attended. There were inscriptions to Barbès, Blanqui, Massenhauser, Albert Blum, Raspail, Louis Blanc, Caussidière, and Courtais. Toasts and speeches of the usual wild, ultra character were delivered, and among them, one to Robespierre, Coulhon, and St. Just. The banquet passed off without any disturbance of order.

The following is given as the result of the votes in the three provinces of Algeria:—Louis Napoleon, 36,314; Cavaignac, 20,854; Lamartine, 3024; Ledru-Rollin, 5404; Raspail, 142.

On Tuesday the National Assembly resumed its sitting, when M. Odillon Barrot made a ministerial statement, something in the nature of a programme, and a debate was raised by Ledru-Rollin, and the ultras, on a charge (facetious enough when coming from them) of unconstitutional conduct on the part of the new President, in conferring extraordinary military powers upon General Changarnier, who is not only allowed to retain the command of the National Guards of the department of the Seine, but also has been appointed General Commanding the First Military Division, which places the whole garrison of Paris, together with the Garde Mobile, under his command. The Republicans declared that that was an excess of power which had never, at any former period, been conferred on any officer, and that it was dangerous to the liberties of the State—conveniently forgetful of the history of the past six months.

The debate is noticed below at some length.

The question of an amnesty to the prisoners of May and of June has been taken into consideration by the Cabinet, but no decision has been come to.

THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY.

TUESDAY.—At half-past 2 o'clock, M. Marrast, President, took the chair.

M. Odillon Barrot, President of the Council, having entered the tribune, said: The Assembly had learned the declaration of principles made by the President of the Republic, in which the new Cabinet fully concurred, and he now came forward to repeat the same engagements, in presence of France and new Chamber. He did not intend to lay before the Assembly an exposé of the situation of the country; but would give some explanations relative to the principle on which the Cabinet had been constructed, and the political course it intended to pursue. The Cabinet was composed of men belonging to the different political shades that had united in the election of the 10th of December. The nation had evinced such an accord, such a spirit of union, that the Cabinet would respond to it. It would neither be patriotic nor wise to disregard such a manifestation. The country wished for order, for maternity and moral order; order in the streets, and in the Administration and Government. That order could only be firmly established on the day when the period of revolutionary agitation should be closed. In strongly concentrating the national force it had given the best guarantee of its determination to maintain order, and it had thereby put it out of the question that it could be disturbed in future. Security was the first want of all. It was indispensable that calmness and confidence in the future be restored, so that otherwise manufactures and trade would not revive. Symptoms already perceptible showed that the resumption of affairs was not a mere hope, but a reality. Agriculture, trade, and manufactures had of late considerably suffered, and cruel sacrifices had been required from the first (the 45 centimes). The new Cabinet would exert itself to introduce the severest economy in the public expenditure, and to impart a salutary impulse to public works, which was far preferable to their direct execution by the State. Its efforts would tend to encourage individual activity. M. Odillon Barrot then added that he would not enter on any exposé of the foreign affairs of France. Negotiations were pending which imposed great reserve on the Government. All he could say was, that the Cabinet would not rashly engage the word of France, and that it would exert itself to preserve peace as the interest of France and Europe. In conclusion, he declared that he and his colleagues would do everything in their power to restore security, consolidate the Republic, and pro-danced. The vapour thus obtained from the perchloride in the tubular chamber A, passes through the pipe No. 2 into the second cylinder D; and, after exerting its elastic force upon the piston, it escapes through the pipe No. 4, is condensed, and, by means of a force-pump, returned in a liquid state to the vapouriser A. The perchloride is in this way worked over and over again, without material waste, being alternately vapourised and condensed, as already described. The steam, after having performed its work in the cylinder C, escapes through the pipe No. 3 to the condenser, and is thence pumped into the boiler.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE FRENCH REPUBLIC ON HIS WAY TO THE PALACE OF THE ELYSEE NATIONAL.

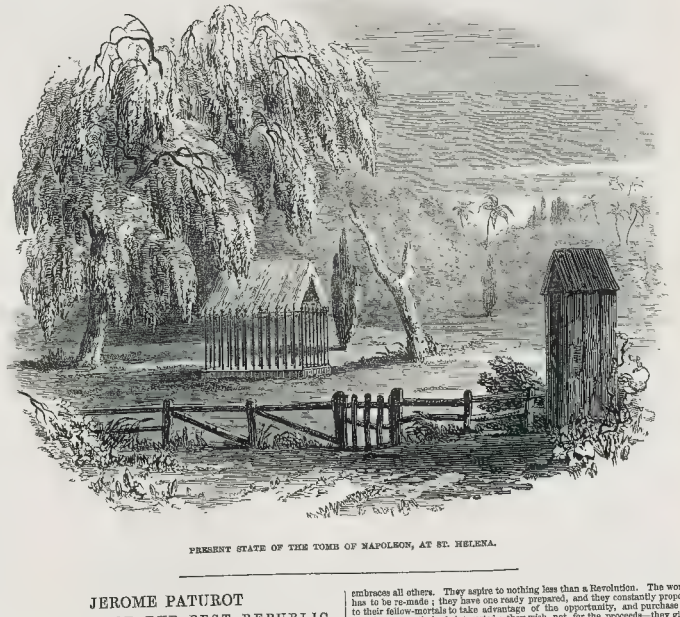
The first engine on this principle was exhibited at Paris in 1846, and one of 35-horse power is now employed at a glass manufactory at Lyons. The invention is said to have the approval of the French Government, and to be sanctioned by the authority of M. Arago. The perchloride is an agent free from all danger of combustion or explosion. The great saving attributed to this engine arises from the small quantity of fuel required for the generation of steam, diminished space, and the cleanliness of the boiler, distilled water only being used. The perchloride* is an expensive fluid, but it is stated that the tubes once charged will last a considerable time, the alternate vapourisation and condensation occasioning but a trifling waste. The quantity employed in working the above engine is about forty pounds.

PRESENT STATE OF NAPOLEON'S GRAVE.

We have been favoured by a Correspondent (John Moore West), who has just returned from the East Indies, with the accompanying Sketch of the resting-place of the remains of Napoleon, at St. Helena. The vessel in which our Correspondent sailed having touched at the Island, he seized the opportunity of visiting the "narrow home" of the exiled Emperor.

Our informant says:—"After ascending a long and tiresome road up the steep side of a mountain, I found myself near a pretty building, called 'The Alarm House.' From this elevation the breeze was a grateful relief to the burning air; the shipping in the roadstead dwindled to mere boats; whilst James Town appeared up from the deep vale beneath like a range of huts. My route now lay through plantations, the road edged with the sharp aloe, and here and there brightened with the wild blushing geranium and other flowers in tropical luxuriance. A short turn soon opened to a gentle slope, leading to Slane's Valley, in the depth of which the remains of Napoleon were interred, according to his own special request. Having paid the fee demanded at the entrance to the ground, an old pensioner led me to the site of the vault, around which a few cypress trees displayed their sombre foliage. The place is inclosed with iron railings, upon which is placed a thatched roof, to prevent the rain from filling the vault during the season of heavy rain. The descent into the tomb is by a short ladder kept for the accommodation of visitors, hundreds of whom have scribbled their names upon the stone; the sunken space at the bottom, in which the coffin was deposited, still remains. The willow beneath which Napoleon used often to sit, in consequence of so many persons carrying away portions of the relics, has become a leafless and decayed stump. The willow that still droops over the opposite end of the grave is a scion of the above tree. The sentry-box is here; but the "beat" of the sentinel has long been grass-grown, and adds the solitude and desolation of the scene."



PRESENT STATE OF THE TOMB OF NAPOLEON, AT ST. HELENA.

THE LATE M. ROSSI.

Pellegrino Rossi (the Premier and Minister of Finance, who was assassinated during the late insurrection in Rome) was born, in 1787, at Carrara. After having obtained the degree of a Doctor at the University of Bologna, he, in 1806, received an appointment from the Attorney-General, practised for some time as a barrister, and, in 1809, became Professor of Jurisprudence at the University of Bologna. In 1814 he was engaged organising a tribunal, and acting as a commissioner, in the three legations occupied by King Gioachino (Murat).

THE LATE M. ROSSI, PREMIER OF THE PAPAL STATES.

After Murat's fall, Rossi, in order to avoid persecution, retired to Geneva, where he lectured privately on history and jurisprudence, with such success, that, in 1819, he was appointed Professor of Criminal Law at the academy of the latter place. Brilliant oratorical powers, conjoined with an accomplished mind, and friendly relations to the very best Genevese society, soon rendered Rossi an influential member of the political and literary circles of the Republic; and he distinguished himself by opposing with much spirit and energy the doctrines of De Candolle, who constantly advocated the exclusive study of mathematics and natural history, to the great detriment of the respect with which philosophy and polite literature ought to be regarded by the student. In consequence, however, of the resistance of many of the professors, Rossi's position at the Academy of Geneva became daily more untenable, and he gladly availed himself of the friendly services of Broglie and Guizot to obtain employment at Paris. The commencement of his career in France was anything but satisfactory: great difficulties were thrown in his way, and even endeavours made to interrupt his lectures. However, he defeated the sinister designs of his enemies, and a brilliant career was opened before him, when, in 1839, he was created a Peer of France. Not much is known regarding his participation in the labours of the Chamber of Peers; in the debates on the instruction of factory children he certainly did not give satisfaction to his friends. Rossi entertained the same views of life and science as his friend Guizot; he was, however, distinguished by a more graceful style, and a certain poetical turn of the mind. As a writer he is an eclectic philosopher, who treats most elegantly and with much refinement the great questions of political economy. In 1844 he was sent by the French Government on a political mission to Rome; and having given great satisfaction, went there in 1845 as French Ambassador.

The abrupt end of his career and his untimely death are soon told. A few months ago he was appointed Premier by the Pope, whose entire confidence he possessed. During the late insurrection he fell under the hand of the assassin, while he was ascending the staircase leading to the Chamber of Deputies. A curious incident connected with his foul murder is related. A monsignor, who generally acts as confessor in the Church of the Jesuits, was, on the fatal day, urgently requested without delay to meet, in St. Mary's Church, a person who, it was stated, had important disclosures to make to him. When he arrived there, he was accosted by a stranger, who told him Count Rossi was doomed to die on that day, and that he ought not to lose a single moment, as he might still be saved. The priest lost no time in joining Rossi, who was on the point of leaving the Quirinal for the Chamber of Deputies. When apprised of the plot laid against him, Rossi stood musing for a minute or two, but rallied immediately, and exclaiming, "The Pope's cause is God's cause! I go to fulfil my duty!" entered his carriage. A quarter of an hour afterwards he was a corpse!

* Perchloride is another name for chloroform.

JEROME PATUROT
IN SEARCH OF THE BEST REPUBLIC.
ILLUSTRATED BY GAVARNI.

CHAPTER VIII.
THE EMPIRICS.

There are predestined people whom Nature, at their creation, devoted to invention: and they would in vain endeavour to escape from the laws of their origin. If this faculty bears upon material objects, you will see them spend their whole life in the search of an impossible machine—of a combining power for foreign substances—of a means of aërial navigation, or the analysis of a gas which does not even exist. It was such men as these who, in the middle ages, practised (in the mysteries of their alembics) infallible means of changing lead into gold; and who, in our days, submit charcoal to ingenious treatment, in the hope of extracting diamonds therefrom.

Their pride and their joy is to create; they invent for the sake of inventing; and they would gladly destroy themselves, to have the pleasure of reconstructing themselves.

Beside these Prometheuses, and upon a more ambitious pedestal, are ranged other inventors, who have only one idea, but an immense an universal idea, which embraces all others. They aspire to nothing less than a Revolution. The world has to be re-made; they have one ready prepared, and they constantly propose to their fellow-mortals to take advantage of the opportunity, and purchase it. But they are entirely disinterested; they wish not for the proceeds—they give them. If their work pleases, they will be paid in glory, in reputation, and even by statues. They impose no limits to the gratitude of generations. It is the same to them whether it comes during their life or after their death—whether they be paid in money or in produce. What they do, they do for the honour of human kind, and for their own satisfaction as artists.

This constitutes a mission to which they are faithful until death. Their faith is firm and deep; it is not cooled by success, nor does it shrink from persecution. They would, if necessary, become martyrs for their opinions; only our century does not accord them that honour.

In ordinary times these beings live on, far from fame or noise. A few adepts or enthusiasts, perhaps, gape round the inventor and aspire to a reflected importance, while they create a mysterious celebrity for him. They admire each other among themselves, and there the matter rests. If some details transpire, the public generally takes them in ill part: tranquil society cannot entertain these exaggerations of pride; it despises unfounded pretensions.

Thus matters go on in ordinary times, but it is not the same in agitated years. Then minds are unsettled; the individual is stirred up by the same confusing power as the social body. He vainly seeks a support in the vacillating ground; he falls against everything on his way, and catches at every object he sees. His mind is affected by it; he doubts everybody and himself. A little while since he had his gods, whom ages of respect endeared to him; but now these gods have vanished and he does not know what to believe.

THE ATHLETÆ.

When society is at this point it is open to quackery. Its reign may be short, but it is absolute; even those who most guard against it submit in some measure. All the monstrous, mad ideas which have lain concealed in the catacombs of contempt or neglect are reproduced; they usurp and dispose of power. What can be more natural? Is not the desideratum to find a theory fit to cure all inflictions? Of course, there is a crowd; few customers, but many lookers on: these are the believers, listen; that is a point gained. The success would be greater, were it not for the struggle which ensues between hand and hand. The nose of one drowns the sound of the other; there is a conflict of systems, and the public can only escape under cover of this rivalry.

I knew all these masks, and none of them deceived me. I knew what to think of the efficacy of their recipes and the virtue of their ointments. Therefore I had to fear danger and no excitement, and could safely defy the public attacks of the social nostrum.

But my curiosity was strong; all Paris had only five or six men on their lips; and they were mentioned in the salons and in the ateliers, to be cursed or exalted. Some called them angels, others imps from below. It was long time before I could get a sight of them. Berlin and Vienna in open revolt, Venice free, Milan emancipated, had scarcely deprived them of a few hours' popularity. Every morning the population asked what they would do with France, and to what régime it would submit it. One point particularly interested them, and that was to know if they would empty the pockets of some to fill those of others, for the public instinct goes straight to the result of every system.

This great notoriety acted like a magnet; for all willingly follow the crowd. "Suppose we go to see these people," said Isaac Oscar; "I am told it is a curious sight."

"And gratis! But it is not amusing every day."

"Let us try our luck. What do we risk?"

"A squeeze or two. It would not do to dress in lace there. But we can see."

That same evening the painter and I took our way towards one of the most famous clubs in Paris, an original, characteristic club. They did not discuss the forms of the Constitution, or the errors of Government. Politics occupied only a very secondary place with them. They thought of cutting up society by the roots, and making it young again at a single baste. Heads, arms, busts, feet all were accepted to furnish the elements of this new amalgamation. Nothing was no distinction between the organs, no difference in the functions, but only the most absolute equality before the civilising fire which kept the world at the boiling point.

This amiable doctrine was called the doctrine of the community; and if it was not new, it was far from consoling. The object of the club to which we had gone was to demonstrate the benefits of this system. But it must not be thought that discussion was allowed; the club did not admit of such follies. There was a high priest there; the initiated admired no others. The pontiff spoke; the followers listened; everything was quite private. Politics reached only from whence fell these revelations were grouped tall athlete, impassable as the Praetorians. The pontiff had taken off his shoes them from among men accustomed to rough work, and whose muscles gave evidence of it. That was a certain mode of ensuring respect. At the sight of this martial legion the orators felt themselves silenced, and scarcely ventured now and then to indulge in a sarcastic smile.

The name of the above-mentioned pontiff has made some noise. Before I saw him I had formed a terrible idea of him; I imagined a sombre hero, a vehement orator, with the ferocious eye of a Muncer, or the emphatic posture of a Babeuf. The first glance undeceived me. The pontiff was at the tribune, lavishing the eloquences of his words on an attentive and affected audience. I thought him a Benedictine, and his speech a homily. There was nothing harsh in his features, nothing bitter in his words. He was describing his golden age. There should be no more forced separations, no arbitrary distinctions; fraternity rules the world. All acknowledge only one title, that of virtue; and have only one care, the common weal. All try who can most forget himself to serve others. Killing and punishment are abolished; crime having ceased, the law no longer needs a sword. The armies are disbanded for want of work: there is no struggling but against nature, and science discerns and conquers it. Prisons disappear; venomous animals are blotted from creation; the most ferocious of beasts claim the honour of domesticity. The sons of Adam at last enjoy their laboriously-gained heritage; they are the kings of earth, and raise their chant of victory to Heaven.

This communist hymn was so long that it disturbed Oscar's equanimity, and jarred upon his nerves. We were standing, and surrounded by all ows which wounded our sides. The excitement of the orator excited gestures of approval from the crowd, which compromised the integrity of our persons. It would have been dangerous to complain, for our manners are not tolerant. Besides, the Praetorians were there, and their swimming eyes showed a feeling approaching to intolerance. I saw it, and as a true Spartan, I concealed my griefs. The painter was less resigned.

"I see it is tiresome as flies," he said to me, with an audible yawn.

A noise instantly arose, and a circle of indignant eyes stared at us on all sides.

"Silence!" cried a powerful voice near the platform

"Be quiet," I said to Oscar, so as to be heard only by him; "they will do us some harm."

"Silence!" repeated the voice

"Turn him out!" echo'd other voices.

We were forced to be quiet, but not without a last protestation on the part of the artist

"Cramp in my legs," he said. "A stiffness in the loins—fearful spasms a horrible headache; and this call this a regimen favourable to humanity! suppose we were to go, Jerome?"

I was intending to do so, when the sitting became more animated. The pontiff had continued his sermon, and passed from duty towards to dialectics.

"What do we see in the world?" he said. "Rich and poor? Men who have a surfeit of everything, beside men who want the commonest necessaries? Shall I, who have only one stomach, two arms, one head, have wherewithal to feed a thousand? Is that just?"

"Yes," called a voice from the audience.

This was certainly a day's incidents of revolts. The assembly was not accustomed to them, and uttered a long murmur. The cohort of Praetorians had already advanced to annihilate interruption and interrupter with the same blow, when a deep silence made it fall upon the platform fell again.

"It is a workman," said the pontiff; "admit the discussion."

At these words the crowd divided as the Red Sea before the Jews, and the opponent could advance to the pulpit. A guard of safety was formed round him, and two hands large and red as legs of mutton were kept on his shoulders The honour of the principle had to be kept intact; perhaps there was some wish to test neglecting any means of influence. Yet the orator did not seem abashed; though he was of slight make, the flash of his eye showed that he had energy and spirit. The attention of the Assembly was aroused, and mine also; Oscar, even, deigned to forget the state of his nerves.

"Was it you, brother, who interrupted me?" asked the high priest, with the air of a superior, conscious of his generosity.

"It was I, citizen," replied the man firmly.

"You do not want equality?"

"I want it where it is possible."

"You don't admit equality in fortune an I station?"

"No more than in height, citizen! Nature has indicated it, and man must obey her. Trees are poor and rich, as trees are tall and short people."

A declaration so unorthodox offended the convictions and prejudices of the assembly; some murmurs were heard. Oscar alone ventured to express his approbation.

"That fellow has some pluck," he said to me; "the square cap must lock about him. We shall have some fun!"

Indeed, the labourer's words had conveyed a little of his interlocutor's majesty and aplomb. I myself felt myself on high. He feared that the schism might then and there be made; it was dangerous, and he endeavoured to let it short.

"What brother," he cried, "you refuse to feel the charms of our community—its harmonious order, in place of the d fective classes whom interest and ambition expose to perpetual disagreements? And yet it is a very affecting sight Do you see this union of brethren, equally clad, having but one table and one table, drinking from the same cup, and cutting from the same loaf? No more boundary walls, no signs of distance. The sheep will mingle on the meadows, the grain in the fields. Equality, my equality! that is the code of humanity, and the new evangelium promised to the earth."

The pontiff here began his advance, the words of feeling were more persuasive in his mouth than those of chemistry. An electric pleasure ran through the assembly; the Praetorians were moved even to tears. They only waited for a sign to annihilate the contradictor. The latter was impassible, and seemed not to feel the pressure on his shoulders.

"That is pretty, citizen," he said, with evident irony, "very pretty, but that is all."

The guards made a significant gesture. The pontiff restrained them by a glance.

"Explain, brother," he resumed, with a cunning mildness.

"Explain, citizen? How could I? You build a world of air, and you want me to follow you. I am a labourer, and nothing more: I look at things as a labourer, and not as a genius. Have you workmen in your machine?"

"Have we! Of course we have."

"And work?"

"What question!"

"And are there wages, then?"

"Oh: they are entirely suppressed."

"Suppressed! Wages suppressed! And you want workmen!"

"One moment, brother. You go to the root of the system. Work is gratuitous with us; but every thing else is gratuitous. You give your share, and your community gives theirs, that is exchange. Can you not understand that the fruits of the earth are to be in common? There is to be no thine and mine; all is one, mine ed!"

"All the same dish; I know," replied the labourer. "That is scarcely cleanly, and not very comfortable. Now, when I work, I know what I do; if I gain a farthing, very well; that is so much for food and so much for other things: I try to manage. If there is plenty of work, I indulge a little; if it slackens, I economise. I get to the end of the year often without savings, but without debt. Suppose I were idle as I am industrious. I must work, for necessity forces me. No work no bread; that is the law of the world. As soon as you give bread to the work an ow will work. I s it because for that result."

"But, brother, [illegible]"

"That is all very [illegible] as it is. Do you think it is pleasant to roast one's ace all the day before a forge, and to strain one's hips by striking the anvil? The pleasure is not so very great; one could easily do without it. If the country were to provide for smiths, it would have none. It would have no more miners, nor glass-makers, nor slaters re We are d all be equal—all bourgeois, and would all promenade about. That is the history of your invention, citizen."

"How you take it, brother," said the pontiff, who felt himself thrown out.

"I can't help it. You want equality. Will you ever get it? Can labour be equal? or can intelligence? These two will dig, the other will idle, and they are to be treated alike. That would vex a lamb There will only be equality in silence, and all will join that. And how will you establish equality in the condition?"

"By free choice"

"Tush, you. Then every one would be an emperor! If there are no emperors, then king, or judge, or general, or representative; who would be forced carrier and labourer for Mr. Estafil?"

"What details!"

And where will be the equality in the distribution? Will the rations be the same for all appetites? That would be starvation for some, and indigestion for others. One will have too much, and another not enough. The same with the clothes; the wearing out is different, and the size as well. And how will you equa. all the little luxuries? Will you decree the pipe, coffee, the glass, the pot of beer at night for all for some? Then it is evident you will have to build all the Louvres over again. If I seem I a hundred steps to my room, and you only twelve. There is no equality; if your ceiling is fifteen feet high, and mine only six, there is no equality. If your bed is of horsehair, and mine of deal, there is no equality. You may say what you like, citizen; your skein is not easy to unravel."

"You have no faith, brother," cried the pontiff, seeking to save himself by sent ment. "All these obstacles disappear with faith; faith removes mountains."

"I will believe it when I have seen it," said the ouvrier. In the meantime let us speak of your kitchen. How will you arrange that? Must everybody have beef on the same day? And, suppose I don't like beef? Will the cooks be the masters of France? Then one will intrigue to get into their favour for the sake of legs of mutton, fillets of veal, and loins of beef. I would rather hear of it than experience it."

"The man proves troublesome," said Oscar to me.

So the pontiff thought. He signed to his guards. The opponent was at their mercy: two vices of iron pressed on his shoulders But, by a second sign, the execution was suspended, for the retreat must at least be covered.

* * * *

An appeal was now made to the generosity of the public, when a considerable clearance took place in the assembly First the lookers-on left; then the members; even the Praetorians were moved; and at last the pontiff stood alone in an empty hall! How enthusiasm dies half-way, and never reaches the pocket!

"NOTHING LESS THAN A REVOLUTION."

"This is all very inferior," said Oscar, as we walked home. "We did not make our excuses, Jerome."

"And when one thinks, Oscar, that the nation is reduced to such teachers! Certainly, it is not me I should come forward!"

"You, Panurge?"

"Yes, I, Oscar; I need only be in the vein some day. You know I only want seven or eight little clauses."

(To be continued.)

THE THEATRES AND CHRISTMAS PIECES.

DRURY-LANE.

This house, having been fitted up as a circus since the bal masqué which concluded Mr. Jullien's season, was opened on Boxing Night by M. Dejean, under whose direction the splendid equestrian troupe of Franconi, from the Cirque Nationale, in Paris, have now commenced their performances for the winter. All the favourites of last season are engaged, together with several new artistes; and the reception awarded to all of them, as they entered the arena, was very warm and friendly; and most of them were recalled after their separate acts.

OLYMPIC

After "She Stoops to Conquer," on Tuesday evening, in which Mr Leigh Murray, Mr. Compton, and Mrs Stirling vainly essayed, by their excellent acting, to keep the gallery quiet, the new pantom me called "William the Conqueror; or, the Sack of the Saxons," was produced, with entire success. The opening, which is a burlesque on the invasion of Eng and by the Normans, is very cleverly written, far more so than we usually look for in pieces of this kind, and every well-known incident is turned to humorous account, even to the battle of Hastings, in which there is a terrible combat between Harold and William the Conqueror. The change from this scene to the fairy temple, in which the transformations for the harlequinade take place, was most elaborate and beautiful, and rewarded with long-continued rounds of applause Then follow hits at everything The Sea-serpent and the National Guards, Louis Philippe, M. Soyer, emigration, gutta percha, the state of the drama, the baby-jumpers, our national defences, and many other topics, were all introduced in rapid succession The scenes and tricks worked very easily for a first night's representation; and when the entire pantomime comes to play closer, there will be nothing to be desired.

The pantomimists were mostly new to a British public, being from America. Mdlle. Valsie is a graceful Columbine, but lacks the buoyancy of action required in the part. At times she was standing quite still for several minutes, which a Columbine ought never to do when on the stage. Mr Barnes is scarcely at home yet as the Clown: what may be very funny in America is rather different when presented to an English audience, and as much action as he indulged in was somewhat out of the question. Herr Cole was a famous Pantaloon, and Mr. Chapino more appeared as the Sprite, and performed some really astonishing feats of posturing and tumbling, which were much applauded. The gods would not let Mr. Barnes get off from singing "Hit Coddle," and he at once established himself in their favour by his compliance Miss Rosina Spiller (a débutante, we believe) will be an acquisition to the company. She played the Genius of Fun very effectively.

The scenery is admirably painted, and we must especially praise the music of Mr. Alexander Lee. It is always appropriate, and the "bits" are selected with a care and judgment that contributed in no small degree to the success of the piece. If Harold is killed as often at the Olympic as his body is "found" by painters, the pantomime will have a long run

MARYLEBONE

Determined to keep up the reputation which this elegant house has acquired, not only was a splendid new pantomime produced on Boxing Night, but Mr Barkstone and Miss Fitzwilliam also appeared in the "Flowers of the Forest" to the enormous delight of the holiday makers. The pantomime is found upon Monk Lewis's old romantic drama of "One o'clock, or the Knight and the Wood Demon" a piece which was last year made the subject of a burlesque at the Lyceum theatre at the close of the Keeley management.

We may be excused for following the plot: it was never of the clearest in the original drama, and now it is perfectly incomprehensible; but it answers its purpose admirably: the audience roar at what they understand, and what they do not they roar at just the same. The piece has been put on the stage with that extreme care and liberality which has characterised everything done at this theatre. The scenery is most beautiful; the properties superb; and all the tricks evidenced extreme ingenuity. Mr Moreland is a capital Harlequin, and Miss Healy a very pretty and active Columbine. Mr. Morris made up for a good, feeble-minded, always injured Pantaloon; and Mr. Jeffcrini was the Clown; and he bustled and grimaced, inflicted severe and excellent-for-injuries upon everybody he came in the way of, stole, pocketted, and told fibs, in the most approved style The principal members of the stock company performed in the opening, by which arrangement all the parts were carefully performed; and the applause of the audience was thrown out very general and hearty, except during one of the animal scenes in an hearing some particular song or dance in this case, a hornpipe, not announced in the bills. With some curtailment, which has possibly been made, the pantomime is certain to have a long and merry life; and we don't know that we can do better than recommend all the inhabitants of the Regent's Park and St. John's Wood districts of London to go and see it, with all their olive-branches, as soon as they can.

SADLER'S WELLS

"Venice Preserved" was chosen for a first piece, on Tuesday evening, but it shared the usual fate of a tragedy with a holiday audience, passing almost in dumb show, the "immortals" being all impatience for the pantomime. This is called "Harlequin and the World turned Upside Down; or, the Number Nine and the Enchanted Fountain;" and its title has been suggested by the numerous roads and revolutions which have upset every part of Europe this year, with the exception of still merry England. The pantomimes at Sadler's Wells have been remarkable, for the last few years, for their never-failing attraction, and that the present one forms no exception to the rule. It runs over with fun and laughter from beginning to end, and from the National Guards and Louis to Jenny Lind and London, everything and everybody is shown up. Mr. Still is again the clever Jack Shore, in which character the ordinary elements of flesh and bone appear to be supplied by gutta percha and counterfeit. Mr. Fenton is a lively Harlequin, and Miss Emma Horne one of the best Columbines in London. Mr. G. Still is the Clown, and a very good one. They all work together quite as well as the company at Drury-Lane were unsuccessful, and the stage of Jerusalem was an exciting conclusion, in which the catapults and other engines of ancient warfare were brought into full play. Mr. Fredericks was at the head of the serious interest; and Mr. Artaud sustained the comic portions. After this novelty, there were some very good scenes in the circle; and the pantomime wound up the holiday bill of fare It is called "Bold Robin Hood, or, the Pretty White Horse and the Elves and Fairies of Sherwood Forest," and has the advantage over other pieces of its kind, of introducing the whole of Mr Batty's beautiful stud, especially the "heroine" of we may so term the "pretty white steed"—of the plot. The opening is the best part of the pantomime, the "comic business" being rather deficient in fun and situations. There was nothing, either, remarkable in the way of machinery, and what there was did not work satisfactorily. A few nights' wear and a little rehearsal will, however, remedy the latter fault. Of course we had a tiny National Guard produced from a bottle of French capers; and the Derby Sweeps, the Sea Serpent, and a few other topics, were introduced. The last scene—a brilliant Grand Hall of Revolving Light—brought down loud applause; and, on the whole, the pantomime was perfectly successful.

HAYMARKET.

The Messrs Brough of whose "Enet anted Isle," at the Adelphi, we have had occasion more than once to speak in terms of high praise—have written the Christmas piece at this house, and with an equal y happy result. It is taken from the "Arabian Nights Entertainments," and called "Camaralzaman and Badoura, or the Peri who Loved the Prince" The subject has been very cleverly treated for in its original state it is somewhat elaborate to far drown into a dramatic form, although one of the most graceful in all of the wondrous chronicles from which it has been taken The opening is exceedingly pretty, and represents a view of the heaven by night, in which several fair spirits are floating about. Mon ssone, the Peri (Mrs. Keeley), arrives, and is directed by the Danaich (a "djinn" the genii of our old loved book before Mr. Lane made its mythology foreign and uncomfortable). Monsuone is boasting of the beauty of a certain Prince Camaralzaman (Miss P. Horton), whom she has seen, and fallen in love with, on her travels; and Ianaich insists that a favourite he has discovered, Badoura (Miss Reynolds), is the most fair beome. To decide the dispute, the good-looking pair are brought together, whilst asleep, and disappoint the respective views of their champions by falling in love with each other. Monsuone tries to prevent the union, whilst Danaich, out of spite to her, does all he can to forward it. The father of the Princess is Bang, Emperor of China (Mr J. Bland), and he has promised Badoura to the King (Mr. Caulfield). Prince of Japan; but Badoura raves about Camaralzaman, whom she saw by the Peri's power, and will listen to nobody else. No one knows Camaralzaman, so she is pronounced to be dead, and her hand, all the unlucky ones are to be beheaded, and this she awaits them. All until the arrival of Camaralzaman in disguise. He, of course, cures the Princess, upon which the Japanese Prince says that it is his doing. Fresh dilemmas arise, when Monsuone, touched by the faithful love of the young people, brings about their union

The words, perhaps, be impossible to collect a better burlesque company together than appear in this piece; and they have very good materials to work upon. The jokes and allusions are well turned, although, as generally happens in our pantomimes, the very best enjoyer the heads of the audience. But they are put into mouths that can give them with all the point intended. Keeley's genius djinn was delicious; and we all know what his clever wife can make of anything, when she determines to go in and win." Mr. Bland was grand as ever in his tyrant monarch, and Miss P. Horton and Miss Reynolds were decidedly effective. Nor should we omit to mention Mr. Mitchenson, one of the most active gentlemen we have seen in Wieland's line. The piece has been mounted in first-rate style, and will have a long run, which it fully deserves.

PRINCESS'.

As far as general report can be relied upon, the pantomime of "Blue King Hal; or, Harlequin and the Charmed Arrow," is the best of its class this year. And it quite deserves this honourable position, for it is very cleverly concocted the tricks are apt and fast; the fun is continuous; and it is very liberally put on the stage. A well known portion of English history is capitally burlesqued for the opening; and in the harlequinade not a topic of the day has been at owed to escape notice. Thus, we have the Quadrant, before and after its alteration; the new electric light; Houdin's "Suspension Chandelier;" Mr. Fuller's Drum Polka, by sixteen pretty girls, in dashing dresses, and everything else that can possibly afford any attention during the last six months. The scenery is capital, and the general appointments and properties are neatly and artistically constructed.

We must, however, devote an especial notice to Mr. Flexmore. He is beyond all chance of comparison, the best Clown at present on the boards. Almost the others go on, year after year, in an old, traditionary routine of business—doing only what they have been accustomed to do, without or heard of, and rarely scoring many laughs off their own bats—Mr. Flexmore trusts entirely to his own original humour, and it never fails him. He is the true embodiment of the reckless, mischievous, sly, fiery spirit we must ought to characterise the Clown. All his nonsense—and very good nonsense it is—has a visible object. No one can there like him; no one can so well exhibit the superb contempt in which he holds the Pantaloon, except as a butt or scapegoat.

The other pantomimists at the Princess' are, at the same time, very good, and work well together. Mr. Bologna is a lively Harlequin, and Mr. Paulo a genuine Pantaloon; whilst Miss Fawcett, as Columbine, is graceful and very active—as was also the harlequinade is—has a visible object. No one can there like him; no one can so well exhibit the superb contempt in which he holds the Pantaloon, except as a butt or scapegoat.

The other pantomimists at the Princess' are, at the same time, very good, and work well together. Mr. Bologna is a lively Harlequin, and Mr. Paulo a genuine Pantaloon; whilst Miss Fawcett, as Columbine, is graceful and very active—as was also the harlequinade is—has a visible object. No one can there like him; no one can so well exhibit the superb contempt in which he holds the Pantaloon, except as a butt or scapegoat.

The other pantomimists at the Princess' are, at the same time, very good, and work well together. Mr. Bologna is a lively Harlequin, and Mr. Paulo a genuine Pantaloon; whilst Miss Fawcett, as Columbine, is graceful and very active—as was also the harlequinade is—has a visible object. No one can there like him; no one can so well exhibit the superb contempt in which he holds the Pantaloon, except as a butt or scapegoat.

The other pantomimists at the Princess' are, at the same time, very good, and work well together. Mr. Bologna is a lively Harlequin, and Mr. Paulo a genuine Pantaloon; whilst Miss Fawcett, as Columbine, is graceful and very active—as was also the harlequinade is—has a visible object. No one can there like him; no one can so well exhibit the superb contempt in which he holds the Pantaloon, except as a butt or scapegoat.

LYCEUM.

The fairy lore of the Countess d'Aulnois has again furnished Mr. Planché with a subject for his Christmas burlesque; and the Lyceum management has placed it upon the stage with a gorgeous eyesance and perfection of detail that eclipses even the previous entertainments at this beautiful theatre. "The King of the Peacocks," as the new piece is called, is taken from the story of "La Princesse Rosette." It is not one of the best constructed tales, in a dramatic point of view, which has also the advantage of great simplicity. Prince (Miss Rosa Ward) has determined upon marrying nobody but the King of the Peacocks (handsome Peacocks). His exact beauté is not known, but her two brothers Floribel (Miss Kathleen Fitzwilliam) and Jessamy (Miss Jane Coleman)—set forth to discover him, taking their sister's portrait with them. Argus (the King) is delighted with the resemblance, and sends for the original, keeping the two brothers as hostages, and intending to kill them if the King Fratilon (Mr H Marston), the fairy Farigul, however, at last settles everything satisfactorily to the lovers and the decree

(Continued on page 432.)

RAILWAY INTELLIGENCE.

LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN MUTUAL ASSURANCE FUND.—The circumstances of some few cases of defalcation having lately occurred amongst the officers of this company, has led the directors to determine on establishing a mutual assurance fund for their officers, superintendents, clerks, and other servants, who hold situations of trust; and whereby it is proposed that each party shall contribute out of his salary 2d. in the pound to constitute a guarantee fund. If at any time the fund in hand shall be found insufficient to meet any default, then each is to increase his contribution to the extent of 4d. in the pound, until the deficiency is supplied; the contribution so thereafter to be reduced to 1d. It is also to be provided that one shall not be liable for any individual property in this mutual assurance fund, but that it shall belong to the guard at any approachable only to its specific purpose. Great dissatisfaction is said to exist amongst all the officers of the company at the proposed impost, and a meeting is to be held to memorialise the directors on the subject.

RAILWAY SIGNALS.—A very important discovery has just been made by Mr. W. D. Wills, and John Broadfield, surveyor, of Kidderminster, of a new and successful mode of communication, to be attached to every description of railway carriage; so that in case any one of them breaks away from the rest, on the line, it immediately communicates the same to the engine-driver, by blowing the steam whistle on the engine, and also the same can be done by the guard at any moment. In principle it is self-acting, and entirely removed from the control of the passengers, simple, efficacious, and cheap in its application and construction, can be attached together with great facility and saving of time; and in case of breakage can immediately be restored to its proper action again by the guard in the moment, and at the simple cost of a few pence.

RAILWAY LAW FOR THE CONVEYANCE OF TROOPS.—A correspondence has lately taken place between the railway companies and the Secretary of State, who, together with the Railway Commissioners, are of opinion (the decision of the law-officers of the Crown having first been obtained) that the proper mode of the act 5 and 6 Vict., relating to the conveyance of the military force by cheap trains, also applies to the duties of the police body, in such a way as to entitle them to be conveyed at the rate, like soldiers, of 1d. per mile, by any train that starts, in order that they may execute their warrants.

NORTH BRITISH.—Some 300 men on the North British Railway have struck for an increase of wages, and the works at the central station in Newcastle are at a stand-still from the same cause.

MARKET TRAINS.—The Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company have resolved on running, for the convenience of the agriculturists and farmers, "market trains" between Manchester and Rochdale.

THE RAILWAY BRIDGE OVER THE TWEED.—An entire stoppage has been put to the further progress of the railway bridge over the Tweed, at Berwick, in consequence of the men in a body having refused to work any longer for the contractors without wages. On Saturday night the arrears amounted to nineteen weeks.

CARRIERS' DISPUTES.—One carrier alone seeks to recover from the Great Western £9000 and £1200 for "over-charges." These continual refundings, though carried to capital or working account, must absorb profits, and the shareholders as to the real traffic. The North-western Company are also in litigation with a small parcel collector, Mr. Crouch, of London, an action having been recently brought by Mr. Lewis, solicitor, of Parliament-street. This will open the whole question of small parcel charges.

DUBLIN AND DROGHEDA RAILWAY AND THE POST-OFFICE.—In the arbitration case respecting the amount of payment to be made to the company for the mails between Dublin and Drogheda, a sum of ten guineas a day, or £3832 10s. per annum, has been awarded to be paid by the Post-office to the company for the conveyance of the mails.

THE RICHMOND AND STAINES RAILWAY late; presented a rare instance of neglect and mismanagement, of which complaints are not uncommon on this line of railway. A letter paraes, conveying intelligence of sudden and dangerous illness, was despatched at noon, on Saturday last, from the Staines Station to town, for immediate delivery; it reached its destination at the expiration of 23 hours, at the rapid rate of something less than one mile per hour, and cost of rather more than 4d. per mile.

THE SOUTH-WESTERN EXTENSION OF THE LONDON AND SOUTH-WESTERN. At the recent meeting of the Waterloo-bridge Company, it was stated that, although the Waterloo Station of the South-western Railway had been opened for only about five months, the tolls on the bridge had increased by more than £700, as compared with the corresponding period of last year; and the receipts were even in the unprecedented wet season. The directors of the Bridge Company very fairly anticipate a still further increase hereafter

THE South-western Company has served notices on the landed proprietors on the Basingstoke and Salisbury Railroad of their intention of going before Parliament for an extension of time to complete the works, the stoppage of which has caused much dissatisfaction, as great inconvenience and expense are experienced from the loss of a direct conveyance between Basingstoke and Salisbury.

THE necessary instruments, after considerable delay, are now being prepared for the transfer of the line, about fifty miles in length, which runs from the Great Grimsby and Boston Railway to the Great Northern, which will commence paying on it the six per cent. dividend from the 1st November last RAILWAY READING-ROOM.—A reading-room has been opened at the Bishopsgate station, adjoining the Midland sheds, on the "up" side, to which passengers may obtain access by the payment of 1d., and thus have an opportunity of reading the London daily and weekly newspapers, the country journals, and the principal periodicals; a much pleasanter recreation than walking up and down the long, dull, and cold platform at this inclement season, for those persons who are obliged to wait two or three hours before they can proceed on their journey. In this case since the alteration in the time of running the trains along the different lines that join at this station.

RAILWAY POST-OFFICE.—Passengers arriving at the Rugby station are not generally aware that a letter-box has been fixed in the window of the ticket collector's room, under the verandah, on the left hand side. Letters posted here by nine o'clock in the evening will be forwarded the same night to the metropolis and all parts of the country, without any extra charge

CHRISTMAS TRAFFIC ON THE METROPOLITAN RAILWAYS.—On Christmas-day and during Sunday, the termini of the various metropolitan railways presented an unusual scene of bustle and activity, in consequence of the influx of Christmas fare from the provinces. Extra accommodation, on almost every description, that special preparation and extra accommodation had to be made in the shape of temporary store-room, and clerks, to accelerate the arrangement and delivery. On the arrival platform of the London and North-Western, at Euston, there was an extensive temporary shed, covered with tarpaulin, was constructed, and through this at various intervals there passed upwards of 12,000 packages and parcels of different descriptions. At the Bishopsgate station, which is the metropolitan terminus of the Great Western, where upwards of 10,000 hampers, packages, and parcels were distributed for delivery in London, besides, as was also the case with the London and South-western, an almost equal amount of poultry the week of outward-bound consignments. The Eastern Counties Company, at the Bishopsgate station, had also an extensive temporary shed in front of the Shoreditch station, and the consignments of turkeys and all descriptions of game and poultry, besides packages of provisions, &c., amounted to several thousands. The number of parcels at other railways was proportionately great. For the convenience of the public, tickets available for three days, at one fare, were issued by the London and North western, South-western, and Eastern Counties Companies. The Great Western Company discontinued this Christmas custom. The Eastern Counties had a rather novel notification, "by order," namely, that, for the accommodation of parties visiting the metropolitan theatres and places of amusement, a special train would leave the Shoreditch station every night during the week for Stratford, Romford, &c., at half-past 11. The South-western also issued a similar notice for their Richmond line.

EASTERN COUNTIES RAILWAY.—On Tuesday last no less than seventy-six different articles of luggage were found at the station only. It is quite time some regulation should be made to prevent this immense loss to passengers; at present they may be robbed and plundered without getting the least redress

CREDITORS OF THE ORLEANS FAMILY.—M. Vavin, liquidator-general of the ex civil list of France, has addressed a letter to the newspapers of Paris to recommend the creditors of the ex-royal family not to cede their claims on favourable terms, because, he says, he is convinced that they will eventually be discharged in full. He adds that he shall shortly be able to pay a rather large sum on account. M. Duplin has also written to the journals to declare the same thing. He says that all the members of the Orleans family have granted the power of mortgaging their properties, and that even the Princesses consent to give up certain privileges with respect to their marriage settlements in favour of creditors. M. Vavin adds that he has passed at the disposal of the liquidator-general all the funds and bills when were in the treasury of the private domain; and that he will pass to-day the bills to be given for the ordinary cattings of wood in 1848, in order to effect a payment to the creditors.

APPOINTMENT OF WELSH INSPECTORS OF SCHOOLS.—A number of memorials have been signed and transmitted to the Lords of the Committee of Council on Education, praying that any gentleman appointed to the office of inspector of the Welsh schools may have a thorough acquaintance with the vernacular idiom of the country. In answer to the memorial from the Cambrian Institute, the following reply was forwarded:—"Committee of Council on Education, 19th December, 1848.—Sir Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated the 14th instant, with the enclosures. I am directed to inform you that my Lords are fully sensible of the importance of the subject referred to in the memorial. Their Lordships have reason to expect that one of the gentlemen who have been recommended to her Majesty for appointment as inspectors of schools will be found fully competent to the inspection of schools in Wales. I am to add that a knowledge of the Welsh language will be considered by my Lords to be an indispensable qualification in the inspector to whom the Welsh district will be entrusted. I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant, HARRY CHESHAM. The Rev. W. H. Owen, St. Asaph" John Williams, Esq., M.P for Macclesfield, transmitted a letter on the same subject to Lord John Russell, and the following is the Premier's reply:—"Woburn Abbey, Dec. 16 1848. Sir,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 14th inst., on the subject of the in-pectors of schools in Wales. I entirely concur with you in the opinion that no one sould be appointed to this most important office who is not a good Welsh scholar; and I have no doubt this will be the principal qualification insisted upon by the Committee of Council on Education, when seeking a fit person to superintend the schools in Wales. I will transmit your letter, and that of Mr. Owen to Lord Lansdowne, but I do not think there need be any apprehension on this point amongst your countrymen.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant, J. RUSSELL.—John Williams, Esq., M.P., Bron Wylfa, St. Asaph.

NATIONAL SPORTS

Go, fetch me a quart of sack; put a toast in't Merry Wives of Windsor

CHRISTMAS IS our peculiar social carnival—the only season in which all classes seek and make good-will and good cheer their commerce. During the festival, all business whether worldly or otherwise, is suspended, and the heart celebrates a goodly Christian holyday; and while it retains a little characteristic features of olden jollity, the hand of time has smoothed the roughness that once mingled with its pastimes, and it is all the more alluring. The coarse and cruel sports that used in every district to occupy Christmas-tide have all but universally died away, and made room for others more suited to the spirit of the age.

The historian of the nineteenth century might find a text for a homily in the disappearance of bull-baiting and badger-drawing from the catalogue of our popular amusements. The occasions wherewith a people recreate their leisure furnish not the least trustworthy guides to the national character- to the social ills in its more important relations. The country gentleman may no longer be the conspicuous figure character he was in the drama of our insular life—he has not on the scene with him the merchant and the manufacturing prince. But it is at the playing, and not at the loom, that the true representative of John Bull is still to be sought -and found. National idiosyncrasy has a home in the humble long affair is has bade adieu to the city.

Our sports have become mainly the hotbeds of art and science, of capital and luxury; but it is on the fresh hill side, in the valley and the cottage, that thews and sinews are born and nourished. We are still in a year eloquent of the mutability of worldly things—an epoch which has shown that Princes and Powers, Kings and Kingdoms

> May diadems and may fade
> But the heart throbs on, as a breath Ass made
> We should not forget the point of the moral—
> But a bold peasantry, their country's pride,
> When once destroy'd, can never be supplied.

Those who passed the Christmas holydays in the country if they went abroad to take their pleasure, were made aware that we need not fear the denunciation against the land

> Where wealth accumulates, and men decay

If they did not find gold as plenty as it is said to be in California, they fell in with a race of peasants at their recreations, whose lowly annals spake of peace and competence. The relaxation of the Game Laws may have done but little for the "sports of wood;" but the effect it proclaims is wholesome, and fosters feelings that bring forth good fruit . . .

The National Sports of the last five days partook of the character of the season. There was no battling or boxing—but there was a spirit in the air more the hour the frost went, and every village green was a little gymnasium. You did not even hear gossip about the future, the present was so full of contentment. It was a fair finale of the year—may it be prophetic of the promise in store for its successor!

TATTERSALL'S.

THURSDAY.—The following were the market prices this afternoon

CHESTER CUP.

50 to 1 agst Great Western (t)	66 to 1 agst Satchell (t)		1000 to 10 agst Limestone (t)
50 to 1 — Eagle's Plume (t)	1000 to 12 — Kelsedik (t)		1000 to 10 — Escape (t)
50 to 1 — Geraldine (t)	1000 to 12 — Lugar (t)		1000 to 10 — Miss Taft (t)
	50 to 1 against Lugar

DERBY.

33 to 1 agst Mecaldo (t)	25 to 1 agst Stronghow (t)	50 to 1 agst Old Dan Tucker t

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

Christmas Day and the festivities of the season materially reduced the attendance of the members of the Stock Exchange during the last few days. The business transacted has been, consequently, unimportant. Consols having opened on Tuesday at 88¾, declining on Wednesday to 88¾ upon a fall in the French funds of one per cent., and resuming the former quotation on Thursday, which is still maintained. Exchequer Bills are scarcely fluctuated, and the market, generally has not been so tranquil for some months past. Notwithstanding this, there is among the public an indisposition to invest, the present quiescence being regarded as a temporary lull previous to the settling return to tranquility. The closing quotations of absolute dealings are, for Bank Stock, 189; Three per Cent. Reduced Annuities, 88¾; New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cent. Annuities, 89¾; Long Annuities, to expire Jan. 1860, 8 15-16; Ditto, Oct. 1859, 8¾; India Bonds £1000, 40 p; Consols for Account, 88; Exchequer Bills, £1000, March, 11 p; Ditto, £500, March, 38 p; Ditto, Small, March, 39 p; Ditto, Small, June, 43 p.

Attention was directed, in the last Number of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS to the sudden and rapid advance in Peruvian Stock. So great was the speculation early, in Stock Exchange parlance, "a rige." This has since improved in the estimation of some Gnomes announced to the Committee of Spanish American bondholders the following day it was offered at 75, for the principal of the debt, of Active Bonds, bearing 4 per cent. interest for two years from the 1st June next, afterwards to increase 4 per cent. per annum, until it reaches 6 per cent. For the arrears, Deferred Bonds, at a rate of 75 per cent., commencing interest five years hence at 1 per cent., then to increase 1 per cent. until 3 per cent. is attained. One half the proceeds of the grance to be hypothecated for the payment of "arrears." Since the publication of these proposals, the stock, which had risen to 50, has receded to 44. No doubt can exist that influential parties had notice of its intended proposition, making it avail able to their own and the Peruvian Government purposes. The holders of Peruvian Bonds will doubtless, at the first meeting of the South American bondholders make some urgent inquiries upon this shameless act of private information. It is, however, quite in the character of the leaders of the proceedings, here and abroad, in connexion with Peruvian stock to keep the suspense on the dividends. With regard to the Foreign Market generally, although much business has been done, the tone is not satisfactory. Under circumstance of 10,000 dollars on account of the overdue Mexican dividend has prevented any better markets for the stock. Spanish Three per Cents are a shade in advance of last week; the other fluctuations are trifling. Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 49¾; Ditto, Four per Cent., 74¼.

Shares continue firm. Thursday was Ticket-day; and the Account-day will be on Saturday. The state of the railroad trade is an impression that the Surrey operations have been frequent since the last settlement-it: a rise after the close of this Account is therefore probable. The closing prices are:—Bristol and Exeter, Thirds, 16½; Caledonian, 21½; Ditto, Half Shares, 3½; Ditto, New, £10 Pref., 7½; Chester and Holyhead, 24; Ditto, Pref., 13½; Eastern Counties, 1¾; Ditto, New, Guaranteed or Preferred, 2¼; East Lincolnshire, 26½; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 39; Great Northern, 8½; Ditto, Half, A, Deferred, 5½; Ditto, Half, B, 6 per Cent. Guaranteed, 42; Great Western, 78½; Ditto, Quarter Shares, 17½; Ditto, Fifths, 18; Ditto, New, £17, 10; Lancashire and Yorkshire, 63½; Ditto, Thirds (Reg.), 5; Ditto, West Riding Union, 1½; Ditto, Guaranteed, 96½; Leeds and Thirsk, 20¾; London and Blackwall, 4¼; London, Brighton, and S. Coast, 3.½; London, Chatham, and Dover, 2¼; London and North-Western, 123; Ditto, New, 8¾; Ditto, Fifths, 6¼; London and North-Western, 123; Ditto, New, 8¾; Ditto, Fifths, 6¼; London and Southwestern, 84¼; Lunenburg, 2¼; North-British, 2¼; Ditto, Consolidated, Preference, £50 shares, 2; Midland Great-Western (Irish), 1¾; North British, Half Shares, 1¼; Ditto, Fifths, 6¼; Ditto, Quarters, 8¾; Ditto, Thirds, 14; North Staffordshire, 10¼; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 39¾; Paris and Rouen, 19¼; Sambre and Meuse, 2¾.

SATURDAY MORNING.—Consols opened yesterday at 88¾; but on the news of the French funds having declined, prices receded to 8 8 ⅞, which was the closing quotation. Shares were about the previous day's quotation, the jobbers being occupied with the approaching settlement. In the Foreign Market, Peruvian was flat upon sales

THE MARKETS.

CORN (LAST WEEK).—Since this day se'nnight the arrivals of English wheat for our week's supply have been extremely small. Although the quantity of wheat for sale was very large, the demand was extremely dull. Although the quantity of wheat for sale was very large, no on offer to day was there any briskness, and scarcely a sale was effected, and prices remain, at about last week's quotations. The imports of foreign wheat have been very large, and the demand has been very dull, although by no means brisk, demand for the article free of duty. In bonded parcels and floating cargoes no sales took place. During the week arrival from abroad the barley trade ruled exceedingly heavy, and prices had a downward tendency. The show for the week was very large, and the supply of malting barley seems to nothing was doing, at almost nominal currencies. The last samples of oats were quite a failure, but all other kinds were supported. In a other articles we have no change to notice.

ARRIVALS.—English: wheat, 1220; barley, 326; oats, 220. Irish: wheat, —; barley, —; oats, —. Foreign: wheat, 3010; barley, 18,030; oats, 8010. Flour, 1670 sacks; malt, 250 quarters.

AVERAGES. Wheat, Essex and Kent, 52s. 4d.; Ditto, 42s. 4d.; Barley, 32s. 8d.; Malting Suffolk, new, 45s. 6d.; Ditto, ditto, old, 47s. 1d.; Oats, 22s. 5d.; Rye, 32s. 5d.; Beans, 34s. 6d.; Peas, 36s. 6d.; Ditto, Grey, 37s. 6d.; Ditto, Maple, 38s. 6d.; Ditto, White, 38s. 6d.; Ditto, Boilers, 38s. 6d.; Ditto, Tick, 36s. 6d.; Ditto, Winter, 38s. 6d.; Ditto, Harvest, 38s. 6d.; Ditto, Chevalier, 40s. 6d.; Ditto, Yorkshire and Lincolnshire, 38s. 6d.; Ditto, Scotch, 38s. 6d.; Ditto, Irish, 38s. 6d.; Ditto, Egyptian, 38s. 6d.; Ditto, White, 38s. 6d.; Ditto, Black, 38s. 6d.; Ditto, Red, 38s. 6d.; Ditto, Grey, 38s. 6d.; Ditto, Maple, 38s. 6d.; Ditto, Boilers, 38s. 6d.; Ditto, Tick, 38

THE CYCLORAMA AT THE COLOSSEUM.

NEW THEATRE, ERECTED FOR THE EXHIBITION OF THE CYCLORAMA, AT THE COLOSSEUM.

THE CYCLORAMA.

The Proprietors of the Colosseum, in the Regent's-park, have just made a tasteful addition to their truly artistic Exhibition, which deserves to become very popular. A private view of the novelty was given on Saturday evening; and the Exhibition has since proved very attractive to holiday visitors.

After passing through the Albany-street corridor of the Colosseum, you ascend a staircase to what is named "the Rustic Armoury," in which refreshments are served ds in "the Swiss Cottage," in another part of the Establishment. This "Armoury" is built of wood, panelled, and rudely carved; and upon its sides are grouped weapons of the chase, and warlike implements. It is, altogether, a very interesting apartment, and serves as a sort of anti-room to a magnificent Saloon, or Theatre and Music Hall, in which is shown the scenic novelty—the Cyclorama, or Exhibition of Moveable Paintings.

The arrangement of the building, in every respect, corresponds with that of a theatre—with its range of boxes, parterre or pit, and stage; altogether giving the idea of the vestibule of a regal mansion, fitted up for the performance of a masque, or play—an arrangement which formed a feature of royal palace or noble mansion of old. The spectatory, or saloon, in front of the picture, is divided into two parts by a deep entablature, extending the whole width. That portion of it nearest the picture, and which forms the proscenium, is supported, on each side, by six large Roman-Ionic columns, two feet nine inches diameter, of Sienna scagliola; between which are pendent and standard or-molu gas lustres. Parallel with the floor of the stage are four couchant lions, upon a flight of steps, adown which the spectators see the picture pass. The walls on either side bear copies of Raffaelle's "School of Athens" and "Constantine Delivering up his Authority to the Pope;" on the ceiling is painted "Minerva with Prudence Directing the Arts;" these pictures being executed by Mr. Horner: and, on the frieze of the entablature is a bold relief of "the Triumph of Alexander;" the figures white upon a red ground.

In the spectatory, or second division of the building, is a tier of boxes in a waved line, the panels on the fronts of which are ornamented with a bacchanalian procession in relief, richly gilt, and formed into panels by alabaster-like figures holding cornucopiæ; whilst white and gold columns support a frieze enriched with corresponding designs in gold and maroon, from which are suspended gas lustres. On the ceiling are painted figures and groups of "Jupiter Demanding a Solemn Council of the Gods." The effect of the whole—designed and erected by Mr. W. Bradwell—is very splendid; and is certainly an advance upon the decorative taste displayed in our theatres, if we except Her Majesty's.

The Cyclorama, which the company assembled in this saloon or theatre to witness, is a moving picture of the most striking scenes and incidents in the terrific spectacle of the great earthquake of Lisbon, in 1755. First, we have the mouth of the Tagus, with Belem Castle. This is succeeded by two further views on the river; and then the city, rising from the harbour, with its churches, convents, castles, and public buildings, in one vast amphitheatre:—

> What beauties doth Lisbon first unfold!
> Her image floating on the noble tide,
> Which proits vainly paws with sands of gold,
> But now whereon a thousand keels do ride,
> Of mighty strength, since Albion was allied. BYRON.

The Grand Square of the City is next introduced, so as, in the entireness of its gorgeous palaces and noble streets, to give effect to the approaching scene of desolation—a massive fragment of a palatial building, with a group of the affrighted people, and the sea tossed with frightful violence—

> Under the water it rumbled on,
> Still louder and more dread;
> It reared the ship—it split the bay—
> The shi[illegible] went down like lead. COLERIDGE.

Then we have a fearful picture of "the Tagus during the earthquake, when it rose 50 feet above Belem Castle, and inundated the city" with floating wrecks, despairing mortals, and other afflicting episodes.

Then the City in Ruins, with palaces and mansions overtopplied—theatres burnt, or in grim destruction—conflagration raging, and the stately column and sculptured arch overthrown in one common scene of devastation! When these events are exhibited with all the aid of scenic and mechanical effects, the painter and the machinist achieve a great triumph in their arts. Messrs. Danson and Son are the artists, and Mr. Bradwell the designer of this very clever work.

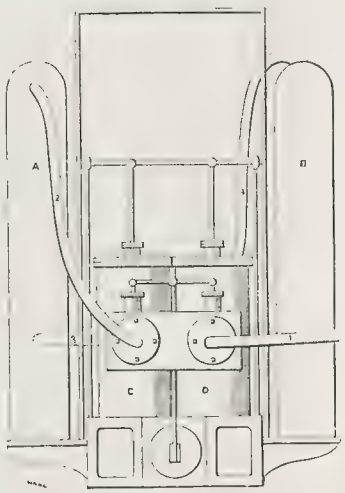
The progress of the Panorama is accompanied with musical illustrations, performed by Mr. Pittman on the new instrument described as "a grand apollonicon." This instrument is well calculated to give effect to the intentions of a good performer, is of great power, and rich in solo and orchestral effects. The music performed by Mr. Pittman opened with the overture in "Masaniello;" followed by the first movement of the Beethoven "Pastorale," with selections from "Don Juan," "Masaniello," with selections from "Mose in Egitto," &c. All these were skilfully given by the player; and the orchestral passages were portrayed by a combination of tones which spoke well for the taste of the builders and the judgment of the organist. The latter excels in that which is rather rare among organ players—a clear and uniform style; and in the attack of the passage, and the withdrawal of the finger from the key, by means of which the true expression is given to an organ, Mr. Pittman has, perhaps, no superior.

SWISS ARMOURY, OR REFRESHMENT ROOM.

The apollonicon, built by Messrs. Bevington and Sons, of Greek-street, Soho, is an instrument of great compass and variety of effect, containing contra-bass, violoncelli, violini, corni, trombas, fagotti, hautbois, clarionetti, flauti, piccolo, flageolet, &c. It has four distinct organs, and has nine composition, with three coupling movements, sixteen pedals, fifty-three stops, and two thousand four hundred and seven pipes.

TREMBLEY'S COMBINED VAPOUR ENGINE.

A Combined Vapour Engine, of ten-horse power, the invention of Mr. Trembley, a Frenchman, may now be seen on the premises of Messrs. Horne and



TREMBLEY'S COMBINED VAPOUR ENGINE.

Co., High-street, Whitechapel; in which, by a combination of the power of steam with that arising from the vapour of perchloride, a motive force is said to be obtained at one-half the cost of the ordinary steam-engine.

By the aid of the annexed diagram the modus operandi of this invention will be understood by our readers. On the right and left of the engine are two large chambers, in one of which (A) the perchloride is vapourised, and the used steam condensed; in the other, marked B, the vapour of the perchloride is condensed. Steam is admitted from a boiler through the pipe No. 1 to the steam cylinder C; the vapourised perchloride being at the same time admitted to the cylinder D. The combined force of these two agents acting in unison, raises the pistons, cross-heads, &c., and gives motion to a crank shaft and fly-wheel in the usual manner.

An eccentric on the crank-shaft gives motion to a pair of slide valves, by which the steam and perchloride are admitted alternately above and below the pistons. After the steam has exerted its expansive force in the cylinder C, it passes into the vapouriser A, which contains a number of small flat tubes, charged with perchloride (or some other easily vapourised liquid), penetrates the space between them, and comes into contact with the entire surface of the tubes. The faculty of absorbing caloric possessed by perchloride is so powerful, that, immediately upon the steam coming in contact with the surface of the tubes containing it, nearly the whole of its caloric is absorbed by the perchloride, which then becomes vapourised and the steam is at the same time con-

NEW YEAR'S CUSTOM AT QUEEN'S COLLEGE, OXFORD.

The singular custom of giving a needle and thread to each member of Queen's College, Oxford, is still carried out on New Year's Day. The Bursar of the College—having as many needles threaded as there are members staying in the College (many, as may be imagined, being absent during the Christmas vacation)—when dinner is ended, goes to each member in succession, and gives a needle, with its accompanying thread, addressing him with the pithy sentence, "TAKE THIS, AND BE THRIFTY."

This custom is supposed to have its origin in one of those conceits, or jeux-de-mots, so prevalent during the middle ages; conveying, under the French words "aiguille et fil," a fanciful allusion to the name of the founder of the College, Robert de Eglesfield.

Hollinshed mentions that when Henry, Prince of Wales, afterwards Henry V., who received his education at this College, repaired to his father's Court to clear himself from some charges made against him, he wore a blue silk dress, full of eilet-holes, and from each eilet a needle hung suspended by a thread. Some writers have, from this, supposed the original dress of the members of Queen's College to have been thus singular and allusive in character.

THE NIMROUD SCULPTURES.—We regret to find that we were guilty of an implied injustice to Mr. Layard, in our strictures upon the removal of the cuneiform inscriptions from the Nimroud Sculptures. In noticing a fact obviously so important, it certainly did seem incredible to us that a gentleman who has pursued his researches with such untiring zeal, and who is actually applying himself to the study of cuneiform writings, should be a party to the destruction of anything that might assist his labours. We are glad, however, that we called attention to the subject, as it has elicited the information that there has been no omission or error on Mr. Layard's part, but that the portions removed were so much injured on exposure to the action of the air, as to yield little available material, and that they would have been entirely obliterated but for his precautions in taking careful papier maché castings immediately upon exhumation, and with such success that nothing was lost which time had spared. We are informed that the whole of these castings are in the British Museum, there deposited by Mr. Layard before he left this country to resume his researches at Nimrond.

AMERICAN TONNAGE.—The following from an American journal shows the tonnage in the United States built during the year ending June 30: Ships, 141; brigs, 158, schooners, 689; sloops and canal boats, 392; steam-boats, 198; forming a total tonnage built that year of 243,782 67-95. The return which will be made for the fiscal year ending June, 1849: ships, 254; brigs, 174; schooners, 701; sloops and canal boats, 547; steam-boats, 176.

THE MIDDLESEX HOSPITAL.

This excellent Establishment, which has now flourished in good works for upwards of a century, has just been very considerably enlarged, so as to enable the supporters of the Charity very materially to extend the sphere of its usefulness. The Hospital will be re-opened on Monday next; and, before we direct public attention to the details of the important improvement which the establishment has altogether undergone, it may be interesting to glance at the history of its origin and progress.

The Middlesex Hospital, situated in Charles-street, facing Berners-street, was instituted in the month of August, 1745, for sick and lame patients; and in 1747 a new ward was opened for the reception of lying-in married women.

The Right Honourable Hugh, then Earl, afterwards Duke, of Northumberland, to whose unwearied exertions and personal influence the accomplishment of this great object is principally to be ascribed, laid the first stone of the present structure, on the 5th of May, 1755.

Unfortunately, causes, not now very distinctly known, interrupted the favourable progress of the Hospital. The merit of having retrieved it from ruin is prominently due to the late Lord Robert Seymour. It was his Lordship who obtained for the Hospital the patronage of the Prince Regent, afterwards King George the Fourth, whose example was followed by his late Majesty King William the Fourth; and our present gracious Queen has likewise declared herself the patron of the Middlesex Hospital, and to assist it with her annual bounty.

After a variety of minor alterations, the Hospital still remained defective in many essential points. But, in 1847, a Committee was appointed to consider the best means of rendering this old Institution equal in every respect to the most recent and approved buildings of similar nature. It was at first supposed that nothing short of an entire rebuilding could give the desired result; and although this idea was strongly advocated by many Governors, it was ultimately abandoned on the ground of economy, the estimated outlay being £30,000.

After a careful and anxious consideration of the subject, it was resolved by the Board that a report should be laid before the Governors, recommending a plan suggested by Mr. Wyatt (the architect of the Hospital), involving an outlay of about £19,000. By this plan, which was approved and adopted in February last, the following results were aimed at:

1. To improve the general accommodation and comfort of the patients.
2. To afford the means of increasing the number of patients from 230 to 285.
3. To improve the light and ventilation of the Hospital.
4. To afford security against fire.
5. To provide a new ward for patients suffering under diseases peculiar to women.
6. To afford accommodation for sisters (superior nurses), and for the resident officers and servants—points in which the Hospital had previously been lamentably deficient.

These objects have been effected partly by a reconstruction of a considerable portion of the original building, and partly by an additional story. Several of the old wards have been heightened, and all the new ones have considerable elevation. Spacious and well-ventilated corridors of communication have been formed throughout the Hospital. Rooms for (14) hot and cold bath, scullieries, closets, and nurses' rooms have been arranged in connexion with the several wards. Separate wards for noisy or delirious patients are provided. A new and powerful steam-boiler has been erected in connexion with the hot baths, the steam cooking apparatus, the laboratory works, ventilating shaft, and the wash-house and laundry. In the hope of effecting a considerable annual saving, the plan of "home washing" (which has been found very advantageous in some hospitals) has been adopted, and this department has been fitted up with the most recent and approved appliances. Considerable improvements have been made in the "out-patient" department, tending to the additional comfort of the patients and the convenience of the officers. Excellent accommodation for the resident officers and domestic servants is now obtained in central situations of easy access. Great attention has been paid to the minor details; such, for example, as the construction and means of opening the ward windows, the sinks, closets, &c.; and we were much struck with the complete and convenient arrangements in connexion with the operating theatre, post mortem examination-room, &c. A new clock, to strike the quarters, has been fixed in the pediment of the building—a most useful convenience to every hospital.

The works have been executed in a very sound and appropriate manner—under the direction of Mr. Wyatt, the architect to the hospital (of the firm of Wyatt and Brandon) by Mr. Holland, the builder. They were commenced in May of this year; and the building will be re-occupied by patients and officers on Monday next, the 1st of January—the day named in Mr. Holland's contract for its completion.

The steam-boiler, baths, cooking and roasting apparatus, have been fixed by Mr. Jeakes, of Great Russell-street.

NEW YEAR'S CUSTOM AT QUEEN'S COLLEGE, OXFORD.—"TAKE THIS, AND BE THRIFTY."

THE MIDDLESEX HOSPITAL, ENLARGED.

NATURE AND HER LOVER.

I remember the time, thou roaring sea,
When thy voice was the voice of Infinity—
A joy, and a dread, and a mystery.

I remember the time, ye young May flowers,
When your odours and hues in the fields and bowers
Fell on my soul, as on grass the showers.

I remember the time, thou blustering wind,
When thy voice in the woods, to my dreaming mind,
Seem'd the sigh of the Earth for human kind.

I remember the time, ye sun and stars,
When ye raised my soul from its mortal bars,
And bore it through heav'n in your golden cars.

And has it then vanish'd, that dreamful time?
Are the winds, and the seas, and the stars sublime,
Dead to thy soul in its manly prime?

Ah no! ah no! amid sorrow and pain,
When the world and its facts oppress my brain,
In the world of spirit I rove—I reign.

I feel a deep and a pure delight
In the luxuries of sound and sight—
In the opening day, in the closing night.

The voices of youth go with me still,
Through the field and the wood, o'er the plain and the hill—
In the roar of the sea, in the laugh of the rill.

Every flower is a lover of mine,
Every star is a friend divine:
For me they blossom, for me they shine.

To me are joy, the oceans roll,
They breathe their secrets to my soul.
With me they sing, with me condole.

Man cannot harm me if he would;
I have such friends for my every mood,
In the overflowing universe.

Fate cannot touch me: nothing can stir
To put disunion or hate of her
'Twixt Nature and her worshipper.

Sing to me, flowers; preach to me, skies;
Ye landscape, glitter in mine eyes;
Whisper, ye deeps, your mysteries.

Sigh to me, winds; ye forests, nod;
Speak to me ever, thou flowery sod:
Ye are mine—all mine—in the peace of God.

CHARLES MACKAY.

LITERATURE.

THE STOWE CATALOGUE, PRICED AND ANNOTATED. By HENRY RUMSEY FORSTER. Bogue.

The dispersion of so valuable an assemblage of objects of art and curia as were lately contained in the princely mansion of Stowe, merited some more permanent and tangible record than the newspaper which, from day to day, detailed the "sorry breaking-up." To the highest rarities of the collection, the Artists of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS paid special attention early in the Sale, and the result was the appearance of a series of Engravings illustrative of the picturesque localities of the estate, as well as of the costly gems of art which had for a long period rendered Stowe one of the most attractive "show-houses" in the kingdom.

This Catalogue is not only a more copious record of the Sale in an utilitarian point of view—i. e. priced—than has hitherto appeared; but it must, also, be considered as a tasteful commemoration of the event. It is very properly prefaced by a memoir of the family of Buckingham and Chandos, and an historical notice of Stowe.

Then follow the results of several days' sale, with the price, and the name of the purchaser affixed to each lot; and, wherever the historic or artistic interest of the lot called for an annotation, it has been introduced in good taste. The ascertaining of the names of actual purchasers has been a matter of great difficulty, increased by the cupidity of the inferior class of agents, at which we are not surprised, taking into account the pecuniary or fanciful value of many of the articles.

At the end of the last day's auction the amount realized on each day is given, and the total of the forty days stated at £75,502 4s. 6d. The largest amount was on the twenty-fourth day's sale, when the more valuable of the pictures brought £10,821 16s. 6d.; and the sale, on two days, realized £11,836 11s. 2d. The value of the Catalogue, in this department, arises from the pains taken to verify purchases, which could not be done to save the railway train on the day of sale.

The Appendix to the Catalogue is interesting in a genealogical point of view. It contains some illustrative documents on the Lock of Queen Mary's Hair (lot 280), and the celebrated Chandos Portrait of Shakespeare (Lot 349); and to the whole is affixed the names of the principal purchasers. There is, by the way, a memorial frontispiece of "The Unmerciful Servant," by Rembrandt, sold on the twenty-fourth day for £2300, and now the property of the Marquis of Hertford.

The publication of this catalogue will be highly serviceable to all collectors of Majolica or Raffaelle ware, and Dresden and Oriental china, as well as of wrought silver, especially of the periods ages: the Cellini and Flamingo specimens were rare. The pictures (with some rare exceptions), the marbles, and bronzes were not of so important a character as might have been expected.

We have only to add that great indulgence has been used, and unsparing care taken, to ensure accuracy in the fiscal portion; while the annotations evince great anxiety to arrive at the truth. All this must have been an arduous labour; and we hope to see it liberally remunerated. The work has been published by subscription: and we are glad to find the list includes the names of many distinguished collectors of objects of art and curia.

THE CHRISTIAN LIFE: A MANUAL OF SACRED VERSE. By the Rev. R. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Hall and Co.

This volume, published mainly in behalf of the Hospital for Consumption, at Brompton, is dedicated, by permission, to her Majesty. It consists of a series of poems, mostly brief, illustrative of the exercises and duties of the Christian life; or, as the author describes it, an attempt to portray, in a poetic form, "some of the most characteristic, the entire and dangers, the hopes and fears, the faults, privileges and final destinies of a believer in the religion of Christ;" whilst, in humility, personality, and devotion of the Spirit, and the sacramental privileges of the Church" are not the least of the author's sacred themes. There is, likewise, a set of poetic illustrations of the service of the Book of Common Prayer, from the calling for the service, to the subjects, all powerfully appealing to the sensibilities of the reader, are the leading characteristics of this volume. One of the poems, "The Dying Girl," tearfully depicts the sorrows of Consumption, and the benevolent object of abating which affliction the book, we repeat, has been published.

MUSICAL REVIEW.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE ON MUSICAL COMPOSITION. By G. W. RÖHNER. Longman and Co.

We receive frequent applications from amateurs and students, to mention the best standard works on composition, and we have recommended the theoretical writings of Albrechtsberger, Schneider, G. Weber, Abbé Vogler, Charon, Reicha, Cherubini, Crotch, Logier, &c., to no applicants; but, for a lucid compilation of the principles of the great theorists, we have searched in vain. The appearance of the volume now before us will be of the greatest service to the teacher, and of immeasurable value to the student. The work has the signature of a German; but, in his preface, he acknowledges the assistance "of an English gentleman, who was not only a sound musician, but of literary attainments." Mr. Röhner regrets that he is not permitted to publish his coadjutor's name; and I am sure the great will be shared by those readers of the work who will participate in the value of its principles, as much for acquiring as for imparting knowledge. The work is not yet completed: the first volume treats of Musical Composition, as set in respect to counterpoint, fugue, and canon; and these branches are to form the subject of a second volume, now in preparation.

Mr. Röhner commences with scales and intervals; and then treats of melody and its accentuation according to time and measure. The third chapter, on harmony and chords, is extremely well treated. The hints on the construction of elaborate instrumental compositions are admirable; and the supplementary chapters on harmony, in two, three, and more than four parts, and on the composition of vocal music, are clear and full in explanation, and the examples well chosen and illustrative. The musical world is indebted to the pupil who carefully studies this new treat so, wh ch will be an easy introduction to the more voluminous works of the great theorists. The work has been got up with great care, and is printed in large bold type.

THE CONSTITUENCY OF ENGLAND. On Monday next (Jan 1), the new Act passed in the last session (11th and 12th Vict., chap. 90), to regulate the time of payment of rates and taxes by Parliamentary electors, will take effect. It is provided that after the 1st day of January, 1849, no person shall be regd red, in order to entitle him to have his name inserted in any list of voters for any city, town, or borough in England, to have paid any poor-rates or assessed taxes, except such as shall have become payable from him previously to the 5th day of January in the same year; and that no person shall be entitled to be on such list of voters unless the poor-rates and assessed taxes payable from him previously to the 5th day of January shall be paid on or before the 20th day of July following.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS

"H. Y. X." A player moving a Piece to a particular square, and crying "Check," is not obliged to abide by that move, provided he retains his hold of the Piece; he must, however, play that Piece

"A. H."—Get some rudimentary work on the game—the "Chess-Player's Handbook," or any other—and learn the rules

"Sazar."—He occupies the square of the captured man

"X. Y. Z." Your diagram and solution are quite irreconcileable

"Mizzy" —It should be, "A Pawn can advance two steps, only on its first move"

The Problems, or rather "Croidets," with which you have favoured us, are quite deeper of understanding. What can we possibly make of a position in which the combatants are that "White is to move and mate in any number of moves required"

"A. L." Tadcham. They are always acceptable, and the best shall have an early publication.

"Constantinus." The amended version shall be duly examined

"H. W.," Isle of Wight. A private acknowledgment has been forwarded. The game we are reluctantly compelled to defer from the next Number

"G. S. J." Our notice to you on the Number for Dec. 2 should have spared us any further trouble respecting your Problems; but as you persist in denying that there is any such glaring error to be found among them, as that pointed out, we must refer you to your own diagram, which shall be returned to you by post, on your address being sent

"Hon. Sec."—Our last intelligence of the contest betwixt Captain Kennedy and Mr. Lowe gave each party 5 games The conclusion of the match is, probably, postponed till after the holidays

"P. T.," "R. G." "Preuss," and others The publishers of the two exquisite engravings from Frank Stone's pictures, called "The Impending Mate" and "Mated," are Messrs. Gambard, wholesale printsellers, of 25, Berners-street, Oxford-street. We hope to give the story of the pictures in our next. In the meanwhile we cordially commend every amateur of Chess to possess himself of these beautiful Illustrations of his favourite game.

"G. M."—We can ill afford space to allude again to the very unimportant subject of your letter. It must suffice to say that the second solution of Problem 254 was discovered by the author, and above fifty other correspondents, before your communication reached us, and was acknowledged to be correct among the usual notices.

"J. K." Look again, attentively.

"W. L." They shall all be reported on shortly.

"H. L. B." The solution of Mr. A. G. McC.'s clever little Problem was duly given in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS for December 23.

"Margaret"—Yes. A player can deviate from a proposed game by perpetual check, provided his opponent cannot (as in the case given), or does not choose to prevent him.

"An Inquirer."—The play you suggest will not avert the mate, because White would interpose his Bishop, and thus terminate the move.

"Dr. M., Nova Scotia"—It is not forgotten

"Hercules."—There is too much ado about nothing in the question. One half the pieces are not wanted, and the other half very badly arranged.

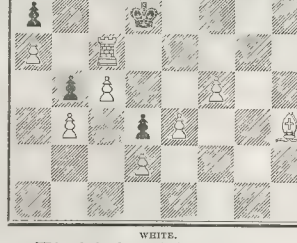
Solutions by "P. G. R." "Jordan P." "W. L." "G. A. H." "Dr. M." Nova Scotia, are correct. Those by "Legal Diary," "G. W. P." "R. H. T." "W. M." "S. S." "A. C. R." "T. S., a Novice," are wrong

PROBLEM NO. 258.

By Mr. H. J. C. ANDREWS

BLACK.



WHITE.

White, playing first, to checkmate in four moves.

GAME IN THE MATCH BETWEEN CAPTAIN KENNEDY AND MR. LOWE.

(Irregular Opening.)

BLACK (Mr. L.)	WHITE (Capt. K.)	BLACK (Mr. L.)	WHITE (Capt. K.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 3d	18. Q to Q 2d	Q to K 5th
2. P to Q 4th	P to Q 4th	20. P to K R 3d	Q to K B 4th (d)
3. P to K 5th	P to Q B 4th	21. K to Kt sq	P to K B 3d
4. P to Q B 3d	Q Kt to B 3d	22. B to K B 4th	P takes P (e)
5. K B to Q 3d	Q to her Kt 3d	23. B takes P	K Rt to bis sq
6. K Kt to B 3d	Q B to Q 2d	24. B takes K Kt P	K Kt to Kt sq
7. P takes P	K B takes P (a)	25. R to K 5th	Q to h 3rd (f)
8. Castles	P to Q R 4th	26. B to K R 6th.	Q Rt to Q B 5th
9. P to Q R 4th	K Kt to K 2d	27. Q takes Q P	Q R to Q B 3d
10. Q to her B 2d	K Kt to his 3d	28. Q takes Q R P	P to Q Kt 3d
11. K B takes Kt	K R P takes B	29. Q to Q R 8th (ch)	Q Rt to B sq
12. B to K Kt 5th	K Kt to K 4th (b)	30. Q to her Kt 7th	Q to K 2d
13. K R to K sq	Q Rt to Q B sq	31. Q takes P	Q R to Q B 3d
14. Q Kt to Q 2d (c)	B takes K R (c) (c)	32. Q to K 3d	K Rt to his sq
15. K to R sq	B takes K R	33. Kt to Q 4th	R to Q B 4th
16. R takes B	Kt to Q 5th	34. B to K Kt 5th	Q to Q 3d
17. Kt takes Kt	Q takes Kt	35. B to K B 4th	And in two moves
18. Kt to K B 3d	Q takes Q R P	and in two moves or two White resigned.

(a) Already, owing to Black's want of knowledge and skill in the conduct of the opening, Capt. to K has got an indisputable advantage of position.

(b) The commencement of a fine attack.

(c) An ill situation we presume, since it costs "the exchange" and two Pawns, without affording even the semblance of an equivalent.

(d) White has "too much gaming;" he is positively embarrassed by the choice of ways to victory His best course possibly was the simple one of

29. R takes P (ch) 31 P takes R Q takes Kt (ch) &c.
30. Q takes Q P

(e) The commencement of a series of perfectly celestial moves

(f) Better even to have given up Q than to have had such a retreat.

BETWEEN THE SAME PLAYERS.

(Queen's Gambit refused.)

WHITE (Capt. K.)	BLACK (Mr. L.)	WHITE (Capt. K.)	BLACK (Mr. L.)
1. P to Q 4th	P to Q 4th	18. P to K 6th	K Rt to B sq
2. P to Q B 4th	P to K 3d	19. K B to K Kt 4th	P to K R 4th
3. P to K 3d	K Kt to B 3d	20. P takes Kt	P takes B
4. Q Kt to B 3d	P to Q B 3d	21. P takes B, be-	K takes 2nd Q
5. K Kt to B 3d	K B to Q 3d	comes a Q (double
6. P to Q Kt 3d	Q Kt to Q 2d	check)
7. Q B to Q Kt 2d (a)	P to K R 3d	22. Q takes K Kt P	K to Kt sq
8. K B to K 2d	P to Q R 4th	(check)
9. Castles	P to K Kt 4th	23. Q takes K R P	B takes Q B P
10. P to K 4th. (b)	P takes P	24. B to K 5th.	B to Q 4.
11. P to K Kt 3d	Q to Q B 2d	25. B takes B	Q takes B
12. P to K Kt 3d	P to K 4th	26. Q Rt to Q sq	Q to Q B 4th
13. K B to Q 3d	K B to K 2nd	27. P to Q Kt 4th (d)	Q to K B 4th
14. Q Kt takes P	Kt takes Kt	28. Q Rt to Q 5th (ch)	K to Q B 2nd (e)
15. Kt takes Kt	P to K B 4th	29. Q takes Q	R takes Q
16. K B checks	K to Q sq	30. R takes R
17. Q P takes P (c)	K takes Kt	(check)	And White wins

(a) This is a move that will, upon a close examination, be found to be a mistake.

(b) The winning move. Black must now vacate the square and the only [illegible]

(c) The position is now a clear Book manœuvre. Black, however, had no chance of redeeming his game—he was paralyzed at all points.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 401.—By Mr. ANDREWS.

White: K at K 2d, Q at Q B 4th, B at K R sq, Kts at Q 2d and 6th, P at Q R 3d.
Black: K at Q 5th, Q at her R 2nd, R at Q R 3d, B at Q Kt 4th, Kts at Q B 7th and Q Kt 3d; Ps at Q 2d, Q Kt 7th and Q R 4th.
White to play, and mate in three moves.

No. 402.—By E. L. J.

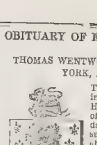
White: K at Q 3d, B at K 2d, Kts at K 5th and Q B 6th; Ps at K B 6th, Q 4th and Q Kt 3d.
Black: K at Q 4th, Kt at K R 7th, P at Q 2d.
White to play, and mate in four moves.

No. 403.—By Mr. A. G. McC.

White: K at his 6th, Bs at K 2d and 7th, Kt at K 5th.
Black. K at his 5th, P at K 4th.
White to play, and mate in five moves.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

THOMAS WENTWORTH BEAUMONT, ESQ., OF BRETTON PARK, CO. YORK, AND OF BYWELL, NORTHUMBERLAND



This gentleman, one of the most opulent landed proprietors in the empire, died at Bonniemouth, on the 20th instant. He was the eldest son and heir of the late Colonel Beaumont, of the Oaks, M.P for Northumberland, by Diana his wife, daughter of Sir Thomas Wentworth Blackett, Bart., and succeeded, in right of his mother, to the magnificent mansion at Bretton (the ancient seat of a branch of the Wentworths), the Abbey of Hexham, and various estates, including productive coal mines in the counties of Northumberland and Durham. Mr Beaumont, whose death we record, represented Northumberland for several years in Parliament. He was born 31st November, 1792, and had consequently completed his fifty-sixth year. He was married to Henrietta, daughter of J. Adams, Esq., of Maple Hayes.

COL. WILLIAM TYRWHITT DRAKE, OF LITTLE SHARDELOES.

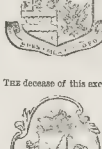
The death of Colonel Drake was awfully sudden. On entering the Burlington Arcade, on the 21st inst., he fell down and immediately expired. The complaint was a disease of the heart.

The gallant officer, formerly in the Royal Horse Guards, was second son of the late Thomas Drake, Esq., of Shardeloes, Bucks, who assumed, in 1776, in accordance with the testamentary injunction of Sir John de la Fountain Tyrwhitt, Bart., the surname and arms of Tyrwhitt; but afterwards, upon inheriting the estates of his father, he resumed, in addition, his paternal name, and became Tyrwhitt Drake

The Shardeloes family is a branch of the very ancient Devonshire house of Drake, of Ashe.

Col. Drake married Emma, daughter of the late Joseph Halsey, Esq., of Goddesden, Herts, and by her leaves issue.

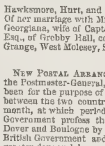
WILLIAM GREAVES, ESQ., M.D., LATE OF MAYFIELD HALL, COUNTY STAFFORD.



DR GREAVES, a Justice of the Peace for the counties of Stafford, Derby, and Gloucester, died at Cheltenham on the 19th inst., in the 76th year of his age, highly esteemed and sincerely lamented. He was the eldest son of John Davies Greaves, Esq., of Burton-on-Trent, and grandson of William Greaves, Esq., of Mayfield and Ingleby, whose ancestors were seated at Bexley and Greave, in Derbyshire, as early as the reign of Henry I. The deceased gentleman married twice to his first wife, Ann Lydia, daughter and co-heir of Robert Charles Greaves, Esq., of Ingleby Hall, he has left one daughter and one son, Charles Spranger Greaves, Esq., M.A., a very learned and very able member of the bar; and by his second wife, several sons and daughters.

MRS DYMOKE WELLES.

The decease of this exegent and esteemed lady occurred on the 26th instant.



She was widow of the late Dymoke Welles, Esq., of Grebby Hall, and Kexby Grange, in the county of Lincoln, who, as great-great-grandson of Edward Dymoke, Esq., of Grebby Hall (elder brother of John Dymoke, ancestor of the present Sir Henry Dymoke, Bart., the Queen's Champion), preferred a claim to the Barony of Marmion in 1819.

Mrs. Welles was herself of very ancient lineage, being daughter and co-heir of Thomas Waterhouse, Esq., of Beckingham Hall, High Sheriff of Notts, in 1747, by Anne, his wife, co-heir of her uncle Eastland Hawksmore, Esq., and daughter of Charles Hurt, Esq. She was thus descended from the ancient houses of Hawksmore, Hurt, and Rosell, and connected with the noble family of Byron. Of her marriage with Mr. Dymoke Welles there is surviving issue one daughter, Georgiana, wife of Captain Bowyer Edgington, and two sons, Dymoke Welles, Esq., of Grebby Hall, county Lincoln, and Edmund Lionel Welles, Esq., of the Grange, West Molesey, Surrey.

NEW POSTAL ARRANGEMENTS WITH FRANCE.—The Marquis of Clanricarde, the Postmaster-General, has lately returned from Paris, where his Lordship has been for the purpose of arranging the mode in which the postal communications between this kingdom and France should be carried on after the expiration of this month, at which period the present convention will terminate. The French Government profess themselves unable to perform the mail service between Dover and Boulogne by their packets; but, as it would be unjust towards the British Government and to our seamen to impose upon them exclusively the greater danger, labour, and expense of that route, it is intended to despatch both the day and night mails to Folkestone. The arrival at Paris of the night mail from London This will doubtless be a serious inconvenience to the commercial community of that metropolis, but the blame must fall upon the French Government. During his stay in Paris the Marquis had several interviews with the Post-office authorities of France, and discussed with them the expediency of reducing the present rates of postage on the letters passing between the two countries. This subject is still under consideration, but there is every reason to believe that the liberal offers made by her Majesty's Postmaster-General will be accepted by the French Government, although, as the Minister of Finance had not been consulted, it was impossible to ascertain positively that the views of our Government were satisfactory to that of France. At present the cost of a letter to or from France, if it is paid in this country, is tenpence, of which fivepence goes to each Post-office. This rate is obviously too high when compared with the inland rate of England, and with that of Prussia, which will be the inland rate of France on and after the 1st of January.

CURIOUS ANALOGY IN THE PERIODICAL VISITATIONS OF SWEATING SICKNESS AND ASIATIC CHOLERA.—The average visitations of new fatal exotics have been calculated as recurring at each revolution of forty years, and there is none on record which has been in this country less fatal than Asiatic cholera. After the first appearance of an exotic epidemic, falling of naturalisation, it has a tendency to repeat its visit once in each revolution of sixteen years. Thus, the sweating sickness, which was said to have been brought over along with the army of Richmond, afterwards Henry VII, first appeared at Milford Haven in the year 1483, when, meeting with no apt epidemical condition, it soon disappeared. It repeated its visitation under epidemic influence in 1485; and it re-appeared altogether five times, with an average interspace of sixteen years; not until its fourth visitation reaching the court, and proving mortal to many of the courtiers in six hours. Henry VIII. owing his succession from a severe attack to the well-known vigour of his constitution. At its fifth and last return, or sixth visit, in 1551, it carried off 120 in a day in the precincts of Westminster alone, where the two sons of Charles Brandon, both Dukes of Suffolk, died of it. 1551 + 16 = 67 = 4 = 164, which agrees with the interspace between the two visits of Asiatic cholera. From Dr. Collier's "Code of Safety: or, Causes, Effects, and Aids."

ABD-EL-KADER.—The Journal de Paris paper) publishes the following letter as having been addressed by Abd-e.-Kader to the President of the Republic:—

"To Prince Louis Napoleon Bonaparte, President of the Republic—The Emir Abd-el-Kader, detained with his family at the Château of Amboise. 'I will die in prison if unexampled rigours condemn me so to do, but never will I be brought to lower my character.' PRINCE LOUIS NAPOLEON, et Ham. "God is great, and Mahomet is His prophet. God of clemency, under whose protection the National Assembly has placed the French Constitution, inspire the chiefs of the Republic with an act of justice and humanity, which will give to all the nations of the globe a high idea of the hospitality of France, which country is already renowned by her bravery and chivalrous spirit at all times! When, guided by my confidence in the bravery and the probity of the French, I came to place myself and make myself under the protection of France, by giving myself up to General Lamoricière, at that time Commandant of the Province of Oran, I received the formal promise that I should be sent to the noble land of France, and be afterwards conveyed to Brousa, and from thence to Syria, near the sacred tomb of the Prophet, that I might enlighten myself with new light, and say days be wholly devoted to the happiness of my family, and far from the hazards of war, the theatre of which I abandoned for ever to the domination of France, in execution of the will of the Almighty, who lowers or raises empires as He pleases. Far from these sacred promises having been fulfilled, I and mine have been subjected to captivity, without being able to cause justice to be rendered to me. Napoleon, after his abdication in 1815, went to seek himself at the British hearth, and, notwithstanding the sympathies which his great defeat inspired, English policy inflicted on him torture on the rock of St. Helena. One of his noble nephews has also been subject to exile and imprisonment. But moral tortures have an end. God so wills it, and enlightens the temp ral Governments. If the misfortunes with which I have been assailed in my family, which has been decimated since my captivity, if the sufferings of my poor mother, old and infirm, can excite some interest in the hearts of the French people, and especially in those of wives and mothers, I demand of the Chief of the French Government to fulfil the promises that were made to me by the ~~enemies~~ friends of Africa, and to accord me the liberty of going, on parole, with my family into Syria, to follow the precepts of our religion. Grateful for such an act of clemency and justice, I would pray our God to bestow on France and her chiefs all his great consolations and blessings. I rely on the wisdom of the President of the Republic and of the National Assembly.—The EMIR ABD-EL-KADER.—Amboise, 27th Moharrem, 1265 (Dec. 23, 1848)

BATHS AND WASH-HOUSES.—On Wednesday the committee of the free baths and wash-houses, in Glass-house-yard, held their third annual meeting. During the last twelve months the numbers who had availed themselves of the baths had been 23,595; washers and dryers, 34,643; and 12,6.0 dressers. The receipts for the past year were £367 9s. 11d., which the expenditure exceeded by £193 19s. 11d.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

TO ADVERTISERS.—As we restrict the Advertisements to one Page only, to prevent disappointment two or three days' notice is necessary to ensure the insertion of an Advertisement. The Exhibition will be found on page 472

The New Volume of Mr. G. P. R. JAMES'S Works for January, being the Nineteenth, will be

ARABELLA STUART, A Romance from English History. With Portrait. In 3 vols. 8vo., 8s. each lettered

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and Co.

MR. AINSWORTH'S NEW ROMANCE.
Now ready, at all the Libraries, in 3 vols.,
THE LANCASHIRE WITCHES.
By W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, Esq.

ANEW AND USEFUL WORK FOR THE PEOPLE, BY THE AUTHOR OF NEAR HOME; or, the Countries of Europe described to Children, with Anecdotes. By the Author of "Peep of Day," "Light in the Dwelling," &c. With Engraved Map and coloured Wood Engravings.

THE GENIUS of SHAKSPERE!!!—
LOVERS of SHAKSPERE, go to SHARPE'S LONDON MAGAZINE, for 1849, and read the Articles on SHAKSPERE, and the Beautiful Engravings to which they refer. Also, the Articles on Music, and the Exquisite Music Engravings, which are published in no other Work, and which alone are worth the price of the Volume. Also, the Articles on Art, and the Beautiful Engravings from the Sculptures of the Great Masters, which are published in no other Work. Also, the Articles on Literature, and the Exquisite Engravings from the Paintings of the Great Masters, which are published in no other Work. Also, the Articles on Science, and the Beautiful Engravings to which they refer, which are published in no other Work. Also, the Articles on Natural History, and the Beautiful Engravings to which they refer, which are published in no other Work. Also, the Articles on Geography, and the Beautiful Engravings to which they refer, which are published in no other Work. Also, the Articles on Biography, and the Beautiful Engravings to which they refer, which are published in no other Work. Also, the Articles on Poetry, and the Beautiful Engravings to which they refer, which are published in no other Work. Also, the Articles on Fiction, and the Beautiful Engravings to which they refer, which are published in no other Work. Also, the Articles on Miscellaneous Subjects

CHRISTMAS BURLESQUES AND PANTOMIMES.

(Continued from page 430.)

Amongst the minor characters—minor, however, only as regards their relation with the plot, for they are the most effective in point of humour and effect—are, the captain of the Chinese Junk, Poo-lee-As-ke (Mr. Harley); the cook, M. Soyez Tranquil, (Mr. Selby), O' don't-know-who, an Irish fisherman, (Mr. H. Hall); and a Mog Ayn, (Mr. John Reeve). As may be supposed, all these parts were capitally acted. Miss Louisa Howard is the pearl of fairy Princesses; and Miss Kathleen Fitzwilliam's fresh and lovely voice was heard to great effect in some operatic morceaux—too elaborate, perhaps, for the vehicle that introduced them. Madame Vestris sang the "Piff-paff" from "Les Huguenots," the "Brindisi" in "Lucrezia Borgia," and a ballad from "Haydée," most admirably.

The costumes are brilliant beyond description. Where Mr. Planché's taste has the latitude always allowed to it under the Vestris managements, something unusually elegant is looked for. This year the dresses are surpassingly beautiful. And the same remark will apply to Mr. W. Beverley's scenery, in which he has excelled himself. The deck of the Chinese junk is very clever; and the concluding piece of scenic effect one of the most elaborate and gorgeous ever seen.

SURREY.

This theatre, having been entirely reformed and redecorated, a new stage laid down, and several most important and comfortable alterations effected in the auditory, opened, under the management of Mr. Shephard, on Boxing-Night, with great éclat. The first piece was a new three act drama, by Mr. Webb, called "The Secretary," of which we must postpone a notice until next week, as not a word could be heard of it, in consequence of the uproar which prevailed during the three hours taken up in its performance, amongst the gods, who cared for nothing but the pantomime. This is called "Harlequin Lord Lovel; or Lady Nancy Bell and the Fairies of the Silver Oak," the story of which is taken from the old ballad, which has lately, in a comic shape, obtained considerably in convivial circles. If we had seen more of it, we should have been delighted to have given some brief account of it; but the theatre was so densely crowded, that it was only by occasionally jumping up and catching a glimpse over a triple row of heads occupying the "standing room," that we could get a glimpse of the stage: but we could hear the explosions of laughter and the uproar of applause that followed so quickly upon one another; and so we can with confidence state that the pantomime threw all those of the dense audience who could see—and these must have amounted to many hundreds—into ecstacies of delight. Mr. T. Matthews (who fortunately, both for himself and the Surrey habitués, found a corner vacant there upon the break-up of Covent Garden, at which theatre he was engaged) experienced a most triumphant reception; and everything, indeed, passed off wonderfully well for a first night. We shall take the earliest opportunity of noticing the Surrey more at length, and under more favourable circumstances than those of a transpontine boxing-night. It is the intention of the new lessee to pay greater attention to high-class melodrama than has as yet been the custom; and of his success, should he adhere to this plan, there cannot be a doubt. He has one of the finest theatres in London as regards construction, to carry out great effects in; an unusually deep stage, and an auditory so admirably designed that everybody, under ordinary circumstances, can see. Add to this, a situation at the junction of several great thoroughfares; and if fortune does not attend the enterprise, the blame can only be laid in one quarter.

SCENE FROM "CAMARALZAMAN AND BADOURA," AT THE HAYMARKET THEATRE.

SCENE FROM "BLUFF KING HAL," AT THE PRINCESS' THEATRE.

SCENE FROM "THE KING OF THE PEACOCKS," AT THE LYCEUM THEATRE.

SCENE FROM "HARLEQUIN LORD LOVEL," AT THE SURREY THEATRE.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, of 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, December 30, 1848.

GETTY CENTER LIBRARY
3 3125 00604 3885